"To this humiliation Chatham would not stoop. To the American people, whom he loved and honoured, he would concede everything, but to have America, which he had rescued from France, again torn away from us by the rival whom he had crushed—this was a sacrifice to which he could not submit. His old dread and jealousy of the House of Bourbon, which had become almost a monomania with him, blazed up with all its ancient fire. In this, the ardent patriot extinguished in him the far-seeing statesman. We can see to-day how far passion had misled him. Burke, Rockingham, Fox, the Duke of Richmond—some of the best brains of the Whig party—urged the immediate recognition of American independence. Chatham died in the act of protesting against it. And a cloud hung over the sun of his renown as he sank to rest."

Mr. Harrison, we may add in conclusion, does thorough justice to Chatham's efforts in the cause of internal freedom, as in his support of Wilkes, whom he abhorred personally, and in his advocacy of Parliamentary reform, which, empirical though it may have been, was much in advance of his age.

NEW NOVELS.

Shining Ferry. By Q. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

WE have, if we mistake not, more than once expressed the view that, delightful as Q.'s work almost always is, and excellent as are his short stories, something has hitherto held him back from obtaining that rank as a writer of fiction on a larger scale which from his many qualifications for the work of a storyteller seemed to lie within his reach. He can draw human nature as he sees it for himself, not as it appears to the collector of "materials," with his attention concentrated on some small section of mankind or some abnormal social conditions, and relying for the rest on what he finds in the books of other specialists. Q. writes at first hand; no man is freer from "common form." What he conveys to his readers he has, as the Germans say, "lived." We do not mean either that his manner never reminds one of any other writer or that he never invents an incident. But his style is the straightforward diction of a cultivated man who knows the English language and respects it, and the ultimate matter of his stories, the scenes and people—those, at any rate, with which he is most successful—show as plainly as did George Eliot's the mark of keen personal observation. He has besides the large and humane tolerance which goes with this faculty. Never having met—who of us has?—with absolute evil, whether in men or circumstances, he does not attempt to depict it. He comes as near to it in the present story as he has ever done; but even here the last paragraphs leave us free to indulge a hope that the chastening which the offender has undergone will bear fruit. Indeed, the revolt against "poetical justice" has perhaps gone far enough. It is doubtless true that in real life it often seems as if to command success worked out better than to deserve it, and that the gentle, dutiful Bennys stand a poor chance against the hard, self-approving Rosewornes. But somehow that has not, at all events until very recently, been the view taken by the masters of fiction; nor will it be a good day for the world when it loses the conviction that, in the long run, character is bound to tell. For this, we take it, may be regarded as the short summing-up of Q.'s theory of life. We seem to be handling a charming story as if it were an ethical treatise. It is true that Q., more than any other writer of stories at the present day, seems to have a note of thoughtful seriousness under the inexhaustible store of humorous and pathetic fancies with which, almost in the same sentence, he can set his reader chuckling, or make the page momentarily dim before his eyes. "Aunt Hannah," otherwise Mrs. Purchase, in the present book, provides plenty of occasions for the former emotion—the genial seafaring lady who took charge of her brother's household on his sudden death, and "kept the house of mourning re-echoing," in the words of the dairy-maid, "whose speech derived many forcible idioms from her father, the mate of a coaster.....'like a labouring ship with a cargo of tinware.'" Some will understand the feelings of the young woman from Warwickshire when first introduced to the "strange land" where "every one talked about the weather, and every one addressed every one else as 'My dear.'" But with little touches such as these all of Q.'s readers have long been familiar. What we wish to note is that in this book he seems, for the first time, to have achieved a novel really complete in character, incident, and construction, which ought to take a high place in the esteem of those who like what is, after all, the most congenial class of English fiction, that based on the vicissitudes of every-day life.

The Dryad. By Justin Huntly McCarthy. (Methuen & Co.)

MR. MCCARTHY has one great equipment for fiction, which is a highly romantic imagination. The author of a history of the French Revolution might not be suspected of a bias towards the province of the unreal; yet his novels show that leaning, and his latest most of all. 'The Dryad' has been inspired by the fascination of Greek mythology. When Pan died and the gods took flight they left some traces behind, and these Mr. McCarthy has discovered in the forests of Eleusis. There was once a dryad who fell in love with a mortal man, and though she died with her oak tree, the gods, who were then on their thrones, took pity on the daughter and gave her the gift of immortality. In the fourteenth century Argathona, who seems to have kept herself aloof from mere mortals all those hundreds of years, decided to present herself to some one no more important than a common soldier of fortune, on his way to take service with the Duke of Athens. In those adventurous days French gallants ruled the Greek States under the ægis of the Cæsar at Constantinople. It was a period that invited doughty deeds. And Argathona went the way of her mother, for she fell in love with Rainouart, the Duke's son. But there was a certain lady, the Duchess Esclaramonde, who also took a fancy to Rainouart, and succeeded in bewitching him for a time. This is the story of Argathona's recapture of him, and a bright and sparkling story it is. Mr. McCarthy must be congratulated on having so deftly handled the supernatural that one hardly feels the impossibility of Argathona. Also he has brought his romantic tale to a picturesque and natural conclusion. The fighting, the intrigues, and the scenic effects are all admirably rendered.

Amanda of the Mill. By Marie van Vorst. (Heinemann.)

HERE is a long story, which, viewed as a whole, is not a strong story, though it shows in places the wish, if not the power, to say something vital about love and life and death. The fight between labour and capital in the cotton factories of South Carolina and the question of child labour are also part of the theme. It is impossible to doubt the author's sincerity or her nationality. We were aware that South Carolina was "a sultry clime," and 'Amanda of the Mill' confirms the impression. There is a lot of "drink" in it. Amanda, a beautiful girl of the backwoods and a mill hand, loves a leader of revolt, also a mill hand. Nearly half the dialogue is written in the language of the "white trash" folk. To keep on reading page after page of talk something like the following is an effort: "Ih dew hev tew hev tu wait thayr twell Ih git newse suh." As this sort of thing grows intelligible the somewhat hampered reader meets another difficulty in the author's own inflated, laboured, indirect manner. Specimens taken at random show how little simplicity and the art of pruning appeal to her:—

"It is unusual that success crowns the feminine enterprise when a barren woman seeks, by the introduction of another child into her heart, to find consolation."

"Nondescript specimens of mill labourers out of whose bodies toil had evidently not unravelled the last fibre of animation."

Or this:—

"Her impulses, should she give them rein, were strong enough to shatter her life.....The first months of her marriage she discovered certain moral biases in the character of her husband. ....She was too intense a temperament, too sincerely feminine, to be satisfied with the routine of women's clubs and intellectual sterile interests which, like baits temptingly hung to a modern rod, threaten to land the little maiden-fish high and dry for ever on the shores of spinstorandom."

When there is something to be said (as appears to be sometimes the case here) it is well to call attention to the uses of suppression, and again suppression, till the essential is allowed to be visible.

The Vicissitudes of Evangeline. By Elinor Glyn. (Duckworth & Co.)

THE vicissitudes in the career of Evangeline—Mrs. Glyn's newest exponent of smartness—take place, as shown in the young lady's journal, between November 3rd and December 21st, A.D. 1904, so we are, as it were, in the very "latest seed of time." There is no long tarrying in the telling. An hour and a half will easily take a reader through the story, and make, we imagine, no perceptible difference in his or her mental or moral equilibrium. The book is vivacious in the way Elizabeth was vivacious, though not in the same degree. Evangeline is the naïve yet knowing type of young person one expects and, as we implied, gets—the sort of girl who says an odd thing with one eyelid up and the other down, so to speak. The frontispiece purports to be her medallion-portrait set in pearls suspended by a facsimile of an emerald-green watered silk ribbon. She has orange hair, emerald eyes, and genuine black lashes, a sufficiently rare combination where the eyelashes need no "treatment." This, as it is an important point, for it is rarely found in this physique. When it is found, beware! The qualities supposed to go with such colouring are here very much taken for granted. The writer of the journal, aged twenty, begins by stating in it (and elsewhere) that she is about to become "an adventuress," as somebody else might say an omnibus conductor or a washerwoman. Other statements or suggestions she also makes with that part-innocent, part-brazen air of the modern minx. She has, of course, an instantaneous fatal attraction for every man she meets, and they permit themselves to make her aware of what she knew all the time—as crudely as you please. A certain Lord Robert, a guardsman—with "an air and a grace and a shape and a face," as an old verse has it—the "shape" especially (as she confides to the journal)—wins over all their heads. Several men and women of the smart or "unco guid" kind and their respective jargons are rather cleverly hit off, though at times one has one's doubts about sundry touches. Evangeline's own mode of speech is very much what Elizabeth's was, only slacker.

The One who Saw. By Headon Hill. (Cassell & Co.)

HEADON HILL shows no sign of faltering in his wild career. His invention of criminal possibilities shows no diminution of fertility, nor does his ingenuity in devising "situations" seem to abate. He does not attempt the more subtle analysis of a Sherlock Holmes or a Lecoq; Wilkie Collins might have ate his part in him on Friday, and ne'er broke his fast. In fact, the author's favourite motive is not so much the detection of the criminal as the process by which he is brought to his deserts. As to the first, he usually takes his readers into confidence at the outset, and invites them to observe with him the various hindrances which beset the course of retribution, and enjoy the final triumph of the skill which surmounts them. There is no pretence of high art about his stories; none of your "problems," in the more recent acceptation of the term; no subtle casuistries. They are, one may say, frankly "early Victorian" in treatment, and to those whose youth was passed in those spacious and comparatively unquestioning days they come like memories of the past. At the same time, we must admit that, so far as we have observed, the relish for them has by no means been blunted by the "higher education" which, as we all know, is the privilege of the generation now rising. So long may Headon Hill live to thrill us with smugglers' caves on iron-bound coasts, with furtive crawls on the footboards of express trains, with "Long Medicos," benevolent burglars, bogus telegrams, and all the hundred-and-one properties of his time-honoured repertory!

Lord Eversleigh's Sins. By Violet Tweedale. (John Long.)

LORD EVERSLEIGH—handsome, fascinating, generous—chooses to pass the best years of his manhood among the swine-troughs. Satiety alone brings him, at the age of forty-nine, into the haven of a mariage de convenance with Marcia Murray, widow of an honoured Scottish laird. The glamour of an amazing personality soon transforms this apparently highly satisfactory and practical union into a tragedy. Marcia succumbs to her husband's fascination, and is finally consumed by an overwhelming and unrequited passion for the man she had married solely for wealth and position, and this in spite of the fact that some of the bitter harvest of Lord Eversleigh's sowing is reaped by her own son, who falls in love with the daughter of one of his stepfather's victims. Of Grace Gore, Eversleigh's cousin and one-time betrothed, we are told, "The love she bore him often appeared to her as a divine ordination." Maybe; but that the lifelong devotion of a noble woman should be poured out at the feet of so worthless an idol is pitiful, if not altogether beyond the bounds of probability. The book interests and holds the reader, and if the subject is not altogether pleasant, it affords scope for Mrs. Violet Tweedale's undoubted powers of construction—in fact, it is a distinct advance on 'The Honeycomb of Life.'

La Lueur sur la Cime. By Jacque Vontade. (Paris, Calmann-Lévy.)

'LA LUEUR SUR LA CIME' has given much trouble to the hardened writer of this notice, who has, indeed, been forced to read it twice. It obviously contains many dull pages, and at least two naughty scenes, and it obviously also fails to present the reader with clear-cut character. The heroine is a lady of the kind sometimes described as "a desperate flirt," and she takes up and drops a whole series of temporary heroes, who are thrown off the stage like broken puppets. On the other hand, condemnation is made difficult by the necessary recognition that the novel contains the result of much close observation and also a certain amount of almost perfect dialogue, which strikes us as being as good as any that modern France has produced. The subjects dealt with have close bearing on a matter which has recently been discussed by a legal sub-commission sitting at the French Ministry of Justice, as a branch of the commission engaged on the reform of the Civil Code. The French Code is the basis of so many others, not only in foreign countries, but even in the British Empire, that the whole world is interested in changes which the French may introduce. We doubt, however, whether the lawgivers of Canada will soon follow the change in the matter of the marriage law which has been carried, on the motion of the dramatic writer M. Paul Hervieu, by the sub-commission engaged in dealing with that difficult and dangerous branch of the law. The Code has always insisted that each of the parties to a marriage owes fidelity to the other, and M. Hervieu's successful amendment consists in the introduction of the word "love" before "fidelity" as the first of the mutual duties of each member of a recognized human pair. The discussion which has followed the sudden and unanimous adoption of the amendment has raged in every newspaper in France, but has hardly at present crossed the Channel. The novel which we notice discusses the common case of two persons both given to flirting, but having a considerable attachment to one another, which lasts, but changes in its character. It is difficult to know what interpretation would be given by the courts to M. Hervieu's word. On this side the Channel, as a rule, we are impatient of abstract discussions of the kind inaugurated by M. Bourget, and it is possible that the latest of the books of that strange Academician, M. Lavedan, 'Baignoire 9,' recently published by Flammarion, and containing a number of short pieces of that gay writer, will find more readers in this country than do any of the novels which contain studies of the French married state.

BOOKS ON JAPAN.

The Awakening of Japan. By Okakura Kakuzo. (Murray.)—In still more magnificent language than that of 'The Ideals of the East' (reviewed in The Athenæum of March 21st, 1903), Mr. Okakura Kakuzo in the present volume asks the world to share his fervid admiration of his own country and her doings past and present. As we have more than once pointed out, the real merit of modern Japan—which the West has surely already sufficiently appreciated—is that she should have spontaneously adopted what may be termed the mechanical side of Western civilization. Other peoples, even Asiatics—our Indian fellow-citizens, for instance—have shown equal capacity for Western industrial and administrative methods; but they have been more or less compelled to follow European ways. The problem in Japan is to understand how it came about that, in the early sixties, the middle-class Samurai of some of the daimiates set to work, with the concentration of purpose and persistence of endeavour they exhibited, to acquire a practical knowledge of those Western methods which had been found so much more efficacious than their own. The full answer we shall never know—the data for such an answer probably do not exist in any available form—but one principal cause was the absence of the religious fanaticism which has kept back the nearer and middle East, and of the curiously modern examination bureaucracy that has maintained the millions of China in the bondage of a philosophy which regards the very idea of progressive development as immoral. The movement, as Mr. Kakuzo justly remarks, originated from within. In some measure it was due to an admiration of Western methods, handed down from the seventeenth century, which the repressive government of the Bakufu could not wholly destroy. But it was a change effected per saltum, not by natural development, and was brought about by an army of foreign instructors to whose work due justice has not been rendered. Even now, what we on this side of the globe understand as civilization is, so far as it really exists in Japan, the almost exclusive property of not many thousands of Japanese, who constitute a nation within a nation; the bulk of the people are very much what they were a century ago—submissive, even to death, to the powers that be. The real condition of the country is hidden from the West by an impenetrable veil of undecipherable scripts, just as the true history of the war is concealed in dispatches which will never be made public. If we are to estimate the position of a country by its literature, even modern Japan cannot be said to stand high, for Baron Suyematsu has lately told the world that the "Chiushingura" (Story of the Forty-eight Ronin) of the Tokugawa period has not yet been surpassed, and it is but a fourth-rate work.

With Mr. Kakuzo's views on the older civilization of Japan we entirely disagree. Even his chronology is wrong by a thousand years. The "ideals of the East" have never been the ideals of either China or Japan—in the sense in which the "East" is understood in Occidental literature. China is Asiatic geographically, but not morally; Japan is not Asiatic in either sense, and has always been isolated in position and policy. In the seventh and following centuries her indigenous civilization (which had attained considerable development) was arrested by that of China, which, however, was never thoroughly understood. To this day by far the best literature of old Japan is that which shows the fewest traces of Chinese influence. The philosophies and theologies of Japan, so far as they have been studied, are empty logomachies or trivial discussions of dogmas founded upon no sufficient study of nature or man—all derived from China, or if from India, through China. The science of old Japan was equally modelled upon that of China. Nothing original of any importance has yet been found in the Sinico-Japanese literature of the last millennium.

Finally we must protest against Mr. Kakuzo's absolutely baseless assertion that the full self-sovereignty of Japan was impeded by the action of the Treaty Powers. It is notorious that the delay was wholly due to the inability of Japanese parties to agree upon a body of civil and criminal law. Japan possesses such a code now—a curious and awkward hotch-potch of German and French law and procedure, with unexpected bits of native custom showing here and there. In the seventies Japan was ready enough to exert extra-territorial sway over Korea, a country which has suffered far more at the hands of Japan than Japan ever has under any policy of the Western Powers.

It is necessary to add that the exaggerated complacency of this book is confined to very few among known Japanese writers, and is entirely foreign to the thought and practice of the men who are doing the real work of Japan by sea and land, in the departments of the Government, in factory and office. The volume has an introduction by the publisher—a growing practice which is not to be commended—is printed in America with American spelling, and apparently published there as well as in London.

More Queer Things about Japan. By Douglas Sladen and Norma Lorimer [with various additions]. Illustrated partly in colour. (Treherne.)—This stout volume of some 500 thick pages is an olla podrida of literature about Japan, dating from the seventeenth century to the twentieth—Cock's 'Diary'; Will Adams's 'Letters'; Japanese nineteenth-century accounts of Napoleon, Peter the Great, Alexander, Aristotle, France, and Greece; Miss Bacon's silken descriptions of the unutterable inanities of Japanese girl-life; and the late Lafcadio Hearn's various books upon the country and people he loved so well and idealized so charmingly. The most original thing about the volume is this very collocation. All that Miss Lorimer and Mr. Sladen have to tell us about the people we have heard before, and accept very little of it as new, or even as essentially true—at all events, more true than the obiter dictum that English communities in the Far East are unimaginably stupid, and consider it a point of etiquette to take no interest in Japan—in other words, in the views and experiences, we may suppose, of the authors of this volume. The account of the Yoshiwara from within—which is not from within at all, but is taken from a well-known native book which owes most of its interest to its short biographies of Yoshiwara women, and is called 'Pictorial Description of the Famous Places in Tokyo'—is interesting, but not in the least "shocking," and we see no need for the caution that those who choose can buy the present volume without that chapter. The reprints and translations make up about half the book, and by far the more interesting moiety. The 'Letters of Will Adams' are well known, but they deserved to be reprinted; one cannot doubt that, had his advice been taken by Capt. Saris, the opening of Japan to foreign intercourse might have been antedated by a couple of centuries. What is interesting in the histories of Napoleon, Alexander, and the rest—taken, it may be added, from a well-known book, in five volumes, called the 'Kaigai Jimbutsu Shōden' (Short Account of Oversea Personages), one of a series of three works dealing with foreign matters, the other two treating of the Anglo-Chinese war of 1842, published somewhere about 1850—will be found in the curious illustrations, some of which are admirably reproduced. One of these depicts the British ambassador being roasted alive, tied horizontally to three posts, over a fire of faggots. The ambassador, it should have been stated, is named Herutobu, and probably the scene refers to Napoleon's famous dismissal of Lord Whitworth. In another Napoleon is represented sitting on a stool under a sort of shed, watched by halberdiers in a travesty of mediæval armour. A little further on the story of Alexander and Diogenes is quaintly told. Diogenes (Diogenes) turns his back upon the hero, Rekisan, who, sceptre in hand and dressed in fifteenth-century costume, approaches the philosopher humbly, and is on the point of entering into the rays of the sun, which are shown by lines darting from that orb directly upon the cynic's back. There are some thirty illustrations altogether, taken from Japanese familiar books, all of them interesting and capitally transferred. Among them are ten after Hokusai, most of which are wrongly explained. 'Travelling in Japan in Will Adams's Day' is a Hokusai woodcut of a common scene in his own day (early nineteenth century); 'The Meeting of Two Servants' is a roadside event—asking the way; 'Samurai in the Olden Time' is nothing but a company of ordinary travellers in a shower of rain. The frontispiece represents, probably, a nobleman's ceremonial visit; the woodcut called 'Fujisan' is Fujisawa, not the mountain at all. What 'Washoka - Mebal - Bunko' represents we have not the least idea. The translations, with these illustrations, would have made a good volume of themselves; they give interest and value to a book which otherwise cannot be rated high in its class.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Return of Sherlock Holmes. By A. Conan Doyle. (Newnes.)—Having, by special request, recalled Sherlock Holmes to life, Sir A. Conan Doyle has now finally disposed of him. We leave him, however, not in Westminster Abbey, but in rustic retirement on a bee farm. Nothing, we understand, will induce him to reappear in a world which mourns him. It had mourned him previously, ever since it was understood that he had perished in the company of the celebrated Prof. Moriarty. But the first of these new tales lets us into the secret of his escape. Moriarty perished, certainly, but others of the gang were left, and so the astute Holmes determined to lie low and allow his death to be inferred. But he reveals himself to the faithful Watson in time to unriddle a mystery; and thenceforward we are presented with a fresh baker's dozen of mysteries, all unravelled by the same skilful brain. There is the adventure of the Norwood builder, which, however, makes us purse our lips; there is the ingenious adventure of the dancing men; there is the adventure of the Priory School, in which the heir of a great duke is abducted; there is—well, a Prime Minister and a Secretary for Foreign Affairs are obliged to consult Mr. Holmes on a ticklish question. He ought to have made a dozen fortunes. No wonder he was able to retire. But, if we may say so in criticizing so great a person, his methods seem to have become a little off-hand. He has grown a little careless. Once upon a time Dr. Watson and we, the eager readers, were able to follow him step by step to the final unravelling. Now he is inclined to toss the solution at us and Dr. Watson, without letting us have any of the fun. We do not get the proper run for our money, if we may put it in sporting lingo. Mr. Holmes is so interesting that he might easily be more so. Moreover, he is not so accurate as of yore. Perhaps, on the whole, it was time that he retired. For example, Mr. Holmes is called in by an examiner for the Fortescue Scholarship at one of our great universities, who has incautiously left about in his rooms the proof of a Greek unseen in three long slips. A student has spied the paper, entered, and copied out the first slip, which takes him a quarter of an hour! The slips contain half a chapter of Thucydides, we are told—an oddly long chapter, by-the-by. But whatever this Greek unseen was, the classical student with decent brains would not have been so foolish as to copy out the whole of it, or attempt to do so; he would simply have glanced at the first rare word and its context, fixed the result on his mind, and retired from the don's room at once. This process would take, perhaps, a minute, not a quarter of an hour. He would then have sought the privacy of his own room and studied the whole unseen at his leisure, after identifying it by means of looking up the aforesaid rare word in Liddell and Scott's Greek Lexicon. All this is, to the university man, pretty clear, though not, perhaps, so obvious as the fact—also ignored by Mr. Holmes—that Cambridge is a town, not a city like Oxford. So the impeccable one presents us with the unexpected moral that you should not meddle with things you know little about.

De Profundis. By Oscar Wilde. (Methuen & Co.)—In the publication of this book Mr. Ross has not only rendered an essential service to his dead friend's memory—he has added to our literature a work which from its intrinsic value is sure to command the attention of thinking men, from its style the admiration of literary artists, from the tragedy of which it records a part the pity of human hearts.

The attempt to delineate the feelings of a prisoner, innocent or guilty, is no new thing; the situation is one which attracts writers from its simplicity and effect. Books have been written by prisoners in their captivity, and some of them rank among the great things of the world's literature. But none of them has exactly the quality of the work before us. The writer is sustained by no feeling of injustice in his punishment, of revolt against his fate. No circumstance was wanting to make his disgrace terrible. Society, which makes artists its playthings and puppets for a space of time, turned in a moment into his executioner. Yet after enduring it all he set himself to a mental balance sheet, to put down what his disgrace and punishment had made of him, to describe himself to his friend with all the skill of which he was capable.

It is this skill, indeed, which raises the question, "How far is all this true?" It is not alone "narrow natures and hectic brains" who have been forced to hesitate before this fine piece of work. All the old characteristics of the writer's style are here with a new one superadded. He had always been a writer of surface impressions; his art cherished the mud-bank for the iridescence of its slime; his wit struck a subject, and glanced off in a shower of dazzling sparks; his genius was original in treatment, but derivative as to subject-matter, and, to the day of his fall, he had never, perhaps, met a criticism which he had not provoked and expected. He was a voluptuary of the moment, an experimentalist in sensations, an artist of impressions, and his true bent was as much hidden from himself as from the world. But that underneath it all lay a true man the writing of this book is an indubitable proof to any reader of imagination.

The truth is (and any one who cares to analyze Wilde's work may prove it readily) that his mental processes were in great measure unconscious. As he himself says, expression is the only mode of life to the artist. It must be remembered that the book, though dealing with the whole two years, was written in the last few weeks. The long weary months dragged on, outwardly turning him to stone, holding him still and lifeless, but inwardly each day worked its effect, till when opportunity occurred and he sat down in his cell to take account of himself he found it difficult to come to close quarters with the new man he met. The early part of the book has been called artificial; it is not, but it is written from the outside: the emotions of the writer—

"wild despair; an abandonment to grief that was piteous even to look at; terrible and impotent rage; bitterness and scorn; anguish that wept aloud; misery that could find no voice; sorrow that was dumb"— have ceased for him, they are past and gone. Unravelling his thoughts, he sees one by one the lessons he has learnt: Humility, the Beauty of Sorrow, something of the inner meaning of life—"the Mystical in Art, the Mystical in Life, the Mystical in Nature,"—and these he seeks to express in something of their relation to himself, and what they have made of him. His suffering was great and heartbreaking: that cannot be doubted. But when the depths were reached and fathomed, a new hope came to him, a hope that, sustained by friendship, he could extract from his sorrow the sympathy necessary for the highest artistic creation:—

"For the last seven or eight months, in spite of a succession of great troubles reaching me from the outside world almost without intermission, I have been placed in direct contact with a new spirit working in this prison through man and things, that has helped me beyond any possibility of expression in words: so that while for the first year of my imprisonment I did nothing else, and can remember doing nothing else, but wring my hands in impotent despair, and say, 'What an ending, what an appalling ending!' now I try to say to myself, and sometimes when I am not torturing myself do really and sincerely say, 'What a beginning, what a wonderful beginning!'"

No other hope could have sustained him, conscious as he was of high powers misapplied and wasted. He had to bring his projected essay, 'The Artistic Life considered in its Relation to Conduct,' to a triumphant close.

It will be observed that up to the present we have considered only the psychological side of this work, for on this depends its permanent value. It matters little that from the point of view of style the writer is at his best, and that the incongruous ornament which every now and then used to disfigure his finest writing is here reduced to a minimum. If the writer was able to fulfil his intention, and tell the truth about himself and his mental processes during those dark months, his work will endure. If he deceived himself and us, it will still be a document studied by criminologists, like the graffiti of prisoners on their cell walls. But it seems to us that the book is true. Prison and reflection had wrought a marvel on him. And this, again, is part of the tragedy. Every thinking man has entertained grave doubts of the efficiency of our prison system as a means of bringing about its ostensible aims. Here it was to all appearance justified—and what was the outcome?

We have already said that this book represents the author at his best. When he had rid his bosom of the gnawing burden of bitterness which had harboured there so long, the repressed imagination burst into one of the most delightful improvisations he has ever written, 'Christ as the Precursor of the Romantic Movement in Life.' Too long to quote, too delicate to dismember, it is as near perfection as such an essay could be. With it we may mention a passage dealing with "Christ as a poet," full of tender writing and beautiful simplicity. But it is useless to single out in detail the merits of this book. It appeals to the artist, the moralist, the psychologist, the student of social science. Our only regret is that it did not appear in the lifetime of its author. He has passed away, but this cry from the depths to his faithful friend remains, an enduring monument to his best qualities.

M. RÉGINALD KANN gives us through Calmann-Lévy, of Paris, a French volume on the war, which is to be commended—Journal d'un Correspondant de Guerre. The writer has pro-Russian sympathies; but, while he runs down the Japanese generals, he presents a truthful picture of the patriotic courage and the excellence of their troops. M. Kann was sent away by the Japanese, and relates the circumstances in which he left them. There is nothing in them that is detrimental to either party to the transaction.

MESSRS. PUTNAM'S SONS issue a translation, by Mr. Walter Littlefield, of a book on the German Emperor, by M. Henri de Noussanne, called The Kaiser as He Is. We are not enamoured of the volume. It is sensational journalism in all its horror; and the names of well-known ladies are introduced in a disgraceful manner. The only redeeming feature of the chapter to which we allude is that the ignorance shown in it of the exact facts of the careers referred to deprives the libel of the slightest weight. In the less objectionable portions of the book there is a mixture of readable gossip, more or less well founded, with mere padding. In French it is allowable to put "M. de Bismarck," but in English not allowable to write, as we here find, "Herr von Bismarck" for the Chancellor.

The Real New York. By Robert Hughes. Drawings by H. Mayer. (Hutchinson & Co.)—Mr. Hughes is clearly of opinion that no city in the world can compare with New York for beauty, dignity, wealth, and general fascination. But he has not been kind to his favourite city, for the book he has written about it is marred by an obsession of vulgarity. He can wax facetious over ugly and paltry forms of vice. His would-be smart materialism is the materialism of the bar-room. An Englishman figures in the book, an "Honourable," of course, and the author's handling of this character does not suggest verisimilitude. The story is but the merest thread of a narrative, upon which are strung Mr. Hughes's descriptive jewels—pictures of New York by day and by night, but mainly by night, its churches, drinking saloons, and less reputable haunts. The illustrations, though mostly ugly, are in many cases clever, and have character.

MESSRS. P. S. KING & SON publish Industrial Conciliation and Arbitration, by Mr. Douglas Knoop, with an introduction by Prof. Sydney J. Chapman, a volume which contains a good bibliography and index and most useful references to all that exists upon the subject, but does not in itself greatly please us, inasmuch as we fail to find in it a clear, well-arranged, and well-written exposition of a subject on which a good many treatises exist. More attention is paid to the New Zealand than to the New South Wales law; but the cases which have been decided recently under the latter form the most interesting body of modern facts and law upon compulsory arbitration. They are passed over in this book.

Hymns from the Greek Office Books, together with Centos and Suggestions. Rendered by the Rev. John Brownlie. (Paisley, Gardner.)—Mr. Brownlie deserves credit for the zeal which he shows in the endeavour to translate the hymns of the Greek Church into English. His versification is fairly good, and a reverential feeling pervades his renderings. But his hymns often deviate very much from the original. Thus, a literal translation of one of them is as follows:—

"Our Saviour visited us from the height, the dawn of dawns, and we who were in darkness and shade found the truth: for indeed from the Virgin was born the Lord."

Mr. Brownlie's rendering is considerably different:—

The early dawn awakes,
The morn triumphant breaks,
See, see! the brightening sky,
The Saviour from on high
Is with us here.

And we who sat in night,
Rejoicing see the Light;
The shadows now are past,
The Dayspring come at last
And day is near.

For we have found the Truth;
The Son of Virgin youth,
The Saviour hath been born
This glorious festal morn,
And joys appear.

This is a favourable specimen of the amount of fidelity with which Mr. Brownlie adheres to the originals.

Mr. Brownlie excites doubts as to his capacity for the work he has undertaken by the extraordinary number of blunders that appear in the limited amount of Greek printed in the book. He begins with a dedication to the Scotch people, in which he omits the iota adscript, contrary to the invariable practice of inscriptions and early uncial MSS. He prefaces the work with an index of the first lines in Greek of all the pieces. The lines abound in every kind of error, and the errors are repeated at the head of each hymn, where the lines are again printed in Greek. He also inaccurately cites one of the books from which he has taken a hymn as Maenon, instead of Menaion or Menæon.

The English Catalogue of Books for 1904 (Sampson Low) is just out, and deserves our warm recognition as an admirably full and accurate record of the year's books. Our only suggestion is that, in all cases, new editions should be noted, even if publishers do not supply the information. One of the most prolific caterers of the year for the public must be L. T. Meade, who is credited with no fewer than nineteen items. The late Adeline Sergeant supplies twelve, and Florence Warden eleven. We think it hardly likely that any mere male has reached such fluency. Editions of and books about Shakspeare are very numerous, occupying more than two pages.

We have the Four Gospels in the "Oxford Bijou Edition" (Frowde), which represents a triumph of successful condensation. These four wonderful booklets, clearly printed and prettily bound, are held in a case which is two inches by one and a half.

THE "Cameo Classics," in which we have A Tale of Two Cities, are certainly cheap at the price, but we think the type is too minute for reasonable comfort. The Library Press are the publishers.

WE have on our table Pathfinders of the West, by A. C. Laut (Macmillan),—The Local Examination History of England, by T. J. Walker and G. Carter (Relfe Brothers),—Facts and Ideas, by P. Gibbs (Arnold),—Useful Instruction, by Motilal M. Munshi, 3 vols. (Bombay, Gujarati Printing Press),—Belinda the Backward, by S. Hocking (Fifield),—Thoughts of a Fool, by E. Gladys (Rosenthal),—The Vacillations of Hazel, by Mabel Barnes-Grundy (Simpkin),—The Root, by Orme Agnus (Ward & Lock),—The Castle of the Shadows, by Mrs. C. N. Williamson (Methuen),—A Mayfair Magician, by G. Griffith (F. V. White),—The Sirdar's Sabre, by Louis Tracy (F. V. White),—Sophy Bunce, by T. Cobb (Nash),—Caprice, by Constance E. Jones (Nisbet),—The Garden of Years, and other Poems, by G. W. Carryl (Putnam),—Songs and Poems, by L. Twigg (Longmans),—Thoughts concerning Omnipotence, by W. Harris (Rivingtons),—The Divine Travail, by J. Coutts (National Hygienic Company),—Biblical Criticism, by the late W. Stubbs, D.D. (S.P.C.K.),—The Early Christian Conception of Christ, by O. Pfeiderer (Williams & Norgate),—and Les Obsédés, by L. Frapié (Paris, Lévy).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Abraham (W. H.), Church and State in England, cr. 8vo, 5/Aked (C. F.), The Courage of the Coward, and other Sermons preached in Liverpool, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Harper (W. R.), Religion and the Higher Life, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Jerdan (C.), Gospel Milk and Honey, cr. 8vo, 5/
Mason (A. J.), The Historic Martyrs of the Primitive Church, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Rosadi (Giovanni), The Trial of Jesus, translated, 6/ net.
St. Baldhelm, First Bishop of Sherborne (Life of), by W. B.
Wildman, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net; large-paper edition, 10/6 net.
Tells (H.), Bible Characters, and other Addresses, 3/6

Law.

Barlow (C. A. M.), The Licensing Act, 1904, 8vo, 3/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Fletcher (H. P.), The St. Louis Exhibition, 1904, 4to, 5/ net.
Kendrick (A. F.), English Embroidery, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Old Testament, illustrated by J. J. Tissot, 2 vols. 12s/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Shakespeare: Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies, reproduced from the Edition of 1664, folio, 84/ net.
Shakespeare's Marriage, and other Incidents in his Life, by J. W. Gray, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Specimens of the Elizabethan Drama from Lyly to Shirley, edited by W. H. Williams, cr. 8vo, 7/6

Music.

Walker (E.), The Music of the Masters: Beethoven, 2/6 net.

Political Economy.

Hatfield (H. R.), American Commerce and Finance, 6/ net.

History and Biography.

Birt (F. B. Bradley), The Story of an Indian Upland, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Dellenbaugh (F. S.), Breaking the Wilderness, 8vo, 15/ net.
Duff (Sir M. E. G.), Notes from a Diary, 1896-1901, 2 vols.
cr. 8vo, 18/
Fish (C. R.), The Civil Service and the Patronage, 8vo, 10/6
Goodspeed (G. S.), A History of the Ancient World, 7/6 net.

Maude (A.), A Peculiar People: The Doukhobors, 6/ net.
 Murray's History of England, by M. A. Tucker, cr. 8vo, 3/Sellincourt (B. D. De), Homes of the First Franciscans, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
 Sullivan (T. D.), Recollections of Troubled Times in Irish Politics, cr. 8vo, 5/
 Terry (C. S.), The Pentland Rising and Rullion Green,
 cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
 Tlghé (H.), A Queen of Unrest, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Trow (C. E.), The Old Shipmasters of Salem, 8vo, 10/6 net.
 Tuckwell (W.), Reminiscences of a Radical Parson, 9/ net.
 Vitelleschi (Marchesa), The Romance of Savoy, 2 vols. 8vo, 24/ net.
 Webster (Daniel), the Expounder of the Constitution, by E. P. Wheeler, roy. 8vo, 7/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

Hughes (R.), The Real New York, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
 Waddell (L. A.), Lhasa and its Mysteries, 8vo, 25/ net.

Sports and Pastimes.

Bull Dogs and Bull-Dog Breeding, by H. St. J. Cooper; and Toy Dogs, by C. F. C. Clarke, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Education.

Ashmore (S. G.), The Classics and Modern Training, 5/ net.

Philology.

Bruce (M. S.), Grammaire Française à l'Usage des Éléves de l'Enseignement Secondaire, cr. 8vo, 3/
 Herding (A.), Petit à Petit, roy. 8vo, boards, 3/
 Hossfeld's Advanced German Reader, by D. Thiems, 3/6 net.

Science.

Bauer (Dr. G.), Marine Engines and Boilers, translated by E. M. and S. B. Donkin, 8vo, 25/ net.
 Blair (C.), Errors of Refraction and their Treatment, 2/6 net.
 Hanke (V.), The Treatment of Diseases of the Eye, translated by J. H. Parsons, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
 Harman (N. B.), The Conjunctiva in Health and Disease, 8vo,
 10/6 net.
 Henry (James) and Hora (K. J.), Modern Electricity, 5/ net.
 Howorth (Sir H. H.), Ice or Water, Vols. 1 and 2, 32/ net.
 Moorhead (T. G.), Surface Anatomy, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
 Scales (F. S.), Elementary Microscopy, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
 Sedgwick (A.), A Student's Text-Book of Zoology, Vol. 2, roy. 8vo, 21/
 Smith (A. B.), Poisonous Plants of all Countries, 2/6 net.
 Turner (G. R.), Clinical Lectures on Appendicitis and Perforating Gastric Ulcer, 5/ net.
 White (G.), A Practical Course of Instruction in Personal Magnetism, Telepathy, and Hypnotism, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

General Literature.

Beard (D. C.), The Outdoor Handy Book, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
 Burland (J. B. H.), Dr. Silex, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Carpenter (E.), Prisons, Police, and Punishment, 2/ net.
 City of London Directory, 1905, roy. 8vo, 12/6
 Colonial Office List, 1905, 8vo, 10/6 net.
 Confessions of an Ambitious Mother, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
 Croker (B. M.), The Old Cantonment, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Espenshade (A. H.), The Essentials of Composition and Rhetoric, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Foreign Office List and Diplomatic and Consular Handbook, 1905, 8vo, 6/
 Fotheringham (J.), Sir Valdemar the Ganger, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Glanville (E.), A Rough Reformer, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Graham (W.), Wickedness in High Places, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Grenfell (W. T.), The Harvest of the Sea, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
 Hamilton (C.), Duke's Son, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Ingram (J. K.), The Final Transition, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
 Knoop (D.), Industrial Conciliation and Arbitration, 7/6 net.
 Lamb (C. and M.), Works, Vols. 6 and 7, edited by E. V.
 Lucas, 8vo, 7/6 each.
 Law List, 1905, 12mo, 10/6 net.
 Leaf (A.), A Maid at Large, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Leys (J. K.), The House-Boat Mystery, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Marsh (R.), A Spoiler of Men, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Moore (F. F.), The White-Causeway, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Rawson (M. S.), Tales of Rye Town, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Roosevelt (F.), The Siren's Net, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Sell's Dictionary of the World's Press, 1905, roy. 8vo, 7/6
 Tales from Spain, by J. G. P., cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Bergner (H.), Handbuch der kirchlichen Kunstatertümer in Deutschland, Parts 5 and 6, 8m.
 Montelius (O.), La Civilisation Primitive en Italie depuis l'Introduction des Métaux, Part 2, 275m.

History and Biography.

Kruseh (B.), *Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum: Iona Vitæ
 Sanctorum Columbanii, Vedastis, Iohannis*, 5m.
 Waddington (A.), Le Grand Électeur Frédéric-Guillaume de Brandebourg: sa Politique Extérieure, 1640-88, 8fr.

Geography and Travel.

Demangeon (A.), La Picardie et les Régions Voisines, 12fr.

Science.

Gautier (É.), L'Année Scientifique et Industrielle, 1904,
 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Brète (J. de la), L'Impossible, 3fr. 50.
 Rabusson (H.), Les Colonnes d'Hercule, 3fr. 50.

NOTES FROM CAMBRIDGE.

THERE is but one topic which has engrossed the attention of Cambridge during the past term—and that is Greek. It is, in fact, a matter for surprise that the work of the University can go on at all during a term devoted to one of these exciting questions, which periodically attack us like some epidemic. The "lues Hellenica" resembles the mediæval plague in this respect, that it recurs at intervals. The first known outbreak was about 1824, when Greek was made compulsory for the Little Go, and it appears likely to crop up at intervals for some time to come. The recent attack was very serious, and deprived Cambridge of its senses for some weeks. Since the women's degree controversy there has been no such outbreak. Now, however, it is over; and being more or less convalescent, we can discuss our symptoms with a certain degree of calmness. The two ancient universities appear to go mad by regular stages—for Oxford also has its times of insanity, only, as Voltaire says, "C'est une autre espèce de folie." First, a few individuals in authority declare that something must be done. Next, the outside world hear of wars and rumours of wars on the Council, which has decided to appoint a syndicate to report "what alterations, if any," &c. In selecting those who are to serve, the party with a majority on the Council, whilst professing impartiality, generally manages to secure a numerical advantage, and to keep out its most dangerous opponents. This is not always a wise policy, as the object of a reforming syndicate should be to bring out not so much an ideal as a workable scheme. Once, however, the syndicate is nominated, and the Senate has given a somewhat grudging sanction to the choice of the Council, all interest in the matter slumbers for a while. At last, however, the report appears, and with it the first symptoms of the epidemic. It runs its course through debate, fly-sheets, letters to The Times, personal recriminations, and rises to its height in the appeals to the non-resident voters. Circulars, lists of those who have decided for or against the scheme, private appeals urging friends to come up and vote, are issued with reckless profusion. The colleges provide luncheon for all members who vote with absolute impartiality. Cambridge fills and empties, a good many old friends meet, the votes are counted, and all is over. Nothing remains but for the Placets and Non-Placets to appeal piteously to their supporters to pay the bill.

It may well be asked whether the whole affair is not a monstrous waste of time, temper, and money. It ought to be perfectly evident to those who legislate for Cambridge that no proposals of a startling character can ever pass the Senate. The constituency is essentially conservative. The man who keeps his name on the books after he has ceased to reside does so as a rule out of a sentimental regard for his old college. Such a man is seldom an educational reformer. He was probably very happy in Cambridge, and he would like to see the University carried on much as it was in his day. He will consequently, if properly appealed to, nearly always vote in favour of the status quo; and in the general conduct of the University the less he is called upon to intervene the better. As a matter of fact, considerable changes are made, which no one outside Cambridge realizes. The late vote on compulsory Greek, for example, made the Senate pronounce on a question which was in process of being decided without any particular disturbance. There are many men who receive a Cambridge education without having to pass in Greek. Advanced students and men from affiliated colleges come into residence, do their work, receive degrees, and are even admitted to fellowships without any knowledge of Greek; and in a few years the system of leaving certificates would inevitably have tended to exempt more students from the necessity of learning that language. But instead of letting things take their natural course, the doctrinaire party, who have a majority on the Council, forced the Greek question into prominence, and, after nominating a syndicate of men unfitted by experience to deal with the question of pass examination, have received a decided rebuff. It is rumoured that the "rump" of the syndicate have been able to vote that their labours should continue, and that it will be reinforced by the nomination of four new members who voted "non-placet"; but it is to be hoped that they may still consider the propriety of retiring after the fiasco of the voting on March 3rd and 4th.

Reform in the pass examinations is urgently needed, and there seems little doubt that a few moderate and sensible men who understand the business could produce proposals which the Senate would have no hesitation in sanctioning.

A long Lent term, though Lent actually occupied but two weeks of it, can never be particularly interesting; but three events of importance deserve to be recorded. The sudden death of Mr. Austen Leigh, Provost of King's, was a serious blow to the University. It was hoped that he had many years of useful work before him, and his place, both in the College and University, will be hard to fill. He took an active part in the administration of affairs, and his unfailing courtesy, fairness, and uprightness won him the confidence of men of every school of thought. It was generally felt that the Provost would neither by act nor word cause ill-feeling among those associated with him, and that the attitude he would take in every question would be thoroughly high-minded and disinterested. The services rendered by a Head to his college can never be rightly appreciated save by those who are actually members of the society; but the general impression is that King's College has lost a Provost whose influence in promoting loyal co-operation among its members was no small factor in its success in recent years. His place will not be an easy one to assume.

The presentation of a congratulatory address to Prof. Mayor on attaining his eightieth birthday had a special interest, as the recipient is one of the last survivors of a "learned age." The Professor of Latin was a true pupil of Dr. Kennedy at Shrewsbury, and Cambridge is proud of his constitutional vigour and his immense and varied store of learning. He is certainly a striking proof of the virtues of the vegetarian creed, to which he is devotedly attached; and long may he remain to vindicate the excellence of his dietary!

A not very numerous meeting of the Conservative party early in the term selected Mr. J. F. P. Rawlinson, K.C., and Commissary of the University, as a candidate to represent us at the General Election. Sir Richard Jebb and he will stand together as Conservatives, and Sir John Gorst will probably take an independent line with the electors. A good many residents will, I believe, support him; but the majority of the party will probably regard his claim to fight for his own hand in the House of Commons with but little sympathy. It is to be hoped that a contest may be avoided.

The fiscal question will have very little to do with the election, and it seems that the less University members involve themselves in such matters the better. After all, their presence in Parliament is chiefly desirable in order to secure a proper representation for education; and I am glad to say that Mr. Rawlinson is not only a successful barrister, but has also had experience as a teacher of law in the University.

The Cambridge Review has been doing good service in securing a series of articles on 'The Professions.' The last, if I recollect aright, was on engineering, by Prof. Hopkinson—an indication of the change which is coming over the University curriculum. Perhaps the most interesting articles were those on 'Medicine,' by Dr. Clifford Allbutt, and on 'The Church,' by Dr. Cunningham.

JULES VERNE.

THE death yesterday week of Jules Verne will be mourned by old and young of all nationalities, for his books have enjoyed a wide popularity in all civilized countries. In the course of time a literary masterpiece permeates all quarters of the globe, but the process is usually slow, and the full fruition only comes long after the author has himself, in the words of Shelley, "solved the great mystery." Jules Verne was a happy exception to this rule. His books cannot, perhaps, rank as great, for did not the Académie Française refuse to "immortalize" him? Yet how many—or, rather, how few—of these immortals, singly or combined, can claim to have given so much healthy enjoyment as this man, who created whole worlds, and struck an entirely new vein in fiction? As a concession, apparently, the Académie "crowned" several of his works, and in speaking of them in 1872 the then Secrétaire Perpétuel, M. Patin, fully recognized their merits in the following words:—

"Les merveilles usées de la féerie y sont remplacées par un merveilleux nouveau dont les notions récentes de la science font les frais. L'intérêt habituellement excité et soutenu, y tourne au profit de l'instruction. On en rapporte, avec le plaisir d'avoir appris, le délice de savoir, la curiosité scientifique."

What, it may be asked, was the true secret of Verne's extraordinary success in a literary enterprise in which the grotesque bordered so closely on the impossible, and even the ridiculous? It was, I think, the verisimilitude of his stories, and the apparently profound faith of the author in his own creations. He has left us no characters, no individualities, like Dickens, Thackeray, or Zola, for nearly all his personages are the merest puppets in his hands; and yet with what breathless interest one reads story after story, each surpassing the other in vivid movement! Both to instruct and to amuse was the gift of Jules Verne, and his work will be remembered with gratitude and affection by countless thousands.

Jules Verne's career has been one long series of successes, and the painful, often sordid struggles of the literary beginner—of Zola, for instance—were unknown to him. Born at Nantes on February 8th, 1828, he was intended for the law, a profession in which many members of his family had succeeded. After leaving school he settled in Paris with a view to studying for the Bar, but it seems that he had not progressed very far on this road when he became acquainted with the two Dumas, and made various friends among the literary and theatrical and musical celebrities of Paris. In 1850 a comedy in verse, 'Les Pailles Rompues,' was produced at the Gymnase, and was quickly followed by another piece at the Vaudeville, 'Onze Jours de Siège'; and after these came others in rapid succession, in which he secured the help of skilled collaborators.

But Verne's work as a dramatist has long since taken its place among the antiquities of literature. The first work which brought him a widespread popularity, and which achieved an immediate success, was 'Cinq Semaines en Ballon,' which appeared in 1863. He had found his line. The work was the result of his wide reading of the discoveries of explorers and men of science. Jules Verne's "easy reading" books were the outcome of a really comprehensive study, and were not published until after they had been revised and recast many times; in one instance he himself has told us that he wrote his story six or seven times before he was satisfied. The success of his first romance, 'Cinq Semaines en Ballon,' was so great that by 1877 it had run into thirty-three editions in French alone, and, after 'Le Tour du Monde en Quatre-vingts Jours,' remains his most widely read book. In 1864 the publishing firm of Hetzel started the Magasin d'Éducation et de Récreation, and there can be no doubt that Verne's stories, beginning with that of Capt. Hatteras at the North Pole, were the making of the magazine. Between 1864 and 1880 the following, among others, appeared chiefly in its pages, the figures in parentheses indicating the number of editions which had been called for up to the commencement of the year 1877: 'Les Aventures du Capitaine Hatteras' (19), 'Le Voyage au centre de la Terre' (22), 'De la Terre à la Lune' (21), 'Les Enfants du Capitaine Grant' (16), 'Vingt Mille Lieues sous les Mers' (18), 'Une Ville Flottante' (14), 'Le Tour du Monde en Quatre-vingts Jours' (36) (which was published en feuilleton in Le Temps), 'Le Pays des Fourrures' (14), 'Le Docteur Ox' (16), 'Le Chancellor' (16), 'Michel Strogoff' (16), 'Hector Servadac,' 'Les Indes Noires' (this also was published in Le Temps), 'Un Capitaine de Quinze Ans,' 'Les Cinq Cents Millions de la Bégum,' 'Les Tribulations d'un Chinois en Chine,' &c.

The inspiration of his most popular book, 'Le Tour du Monde en Quatre-vingts Jours,' is said to have occurred to him in a café, where he read in one of the journals a statement that a man could travel round the world in eighty days. He worked out the problem, and found that the traveller would by the difference of meridian gain or lose a day on the journey. This problem was the foundation of his story, and the manner in which he worked it out is too well known to need comment. In May, 1901, M. Marcel Hutin published an interesting interview with Jules Verne in the Écho de Paris, and, among many other interesting details, gave the following anecdote:—

"Lorsque Jules Verne publia le 'Tour du Monde en 80 Jours'.....le monde entier s'intéressait à ce point aux péripéties du voyage de Philéas Fogg que les correspondants des journaux américains et anglais allaient jusqu'à câbler à leurs journaux, chaque jour, la traduction de ses feuilletons. A la fin, Philéas Fogg, obligé de brûler le pont du bateau pour activer la vitesse, afin de pouvoir rentrer le jour convenu, fait chauffer à blanc les machines du bateau. Savez-vous que Jules Verne reçut des compagnies de navigation françaises, anglaises et américaines les propositions les plus alléchantes pour l'engager à faire choix d'un de leurs steamers qui ramènerait son héros en Europe? Jules Verne resta inébranlable devant ces offres plus magnifiques les unes que les autres et ne répondit pas. Ce trait d'honnêteté littéraire ne montre-t-il pas sous son vrai jour le caractère incorruptible de l'écrivain?"

Jules Verne has published over a hundred volumes. It is said that he contracted with Hetzel the publisher, at the beginning of his career as a writer of fiction, to supply two volumes every year, and he so far kept in advance of the arrangement that he had finished this extraordinary task up to five years hence. At times he would have several books on hand at once. The first dozen or so of his books will rank as his best. Many readers will place his 'Twenty Thousand Leagues under the Sea' first of all, for its admirable wealth of incident no less than its striking anticipation of the submarine boat. But his astonishing versatility up to the last showed very few signs of flagging. A few of his famous works have been dramatized. The 'Tour du Monde en 80 Jours' was produced at the Porte Saint Martin Theatre in 1874, and afterwards at the Châtelet, and enjoyed an immense success. In this M. d'Ennery collaborated with the author. 'Les Enfants du Capitaine Grant,' 'Michel Strogoff,' and 'Le Docteur Ox' have also been placed on the stage; the last named, in the form of an opérette, was produced at the Variétés in 1877. 'Un Neveu d'Amérique,' a comedy in three acts, was brought out at the Cluny Theatre in 1873.

Verne travelled very little for one who had both the means and the taste. Beyond one or two visits to England, and an excursion to the United States in the Great Eastern, he appears to have contented himself with an autumnal yachting trip round the coasts of his own country. His appetite for reading was omnivorous, and among his favourite authors were Dickens and Fenimore Cooper. He was an exceedingly kindly and amiable man, and found sufficient diversion at Amiens, where he had lived for many years, in taking part in the municipal affairs of the place. W. R.

A LYKE-WAKE DIRGE.

THE editor of 'The Oxford Book of English Verse' has included in his collection that fine poem which opens and closes with the verse:—

This ae nighte, this ae nighte,
Every nighte and alle,
Fire and sleet and candle-lighte,
And Christe receive thy saule.

This Yorkshire dirge is printed in Brand's 'Popular Antiquities' (ed. 1877), p. 465, where the third line appears in this form:—

Fire and Fleet and Candle-Light.

I believe the true reading is to be found in Brand. The word "sleet" occurring between the words "fire" and "candle-light" conveys no possible sense. The editor, seeing this, explains in a foot-note that "sleet" means "salt." It is uncertain whether the editor intends to say that "sleet" in this passage is a local synonym for "salt," or that the one is a phonetic variation of the other. In neither case could the statement be supported by any satisfactory evidence. The phrase "Fire and fleet," or "Fire and flet," is sufficiently illustrated in the 'English Dialect Dictionary,' where we find that it was a technical legal term well known in the North Country, meaning "fire and house-room." The Icelandic flet (a house, house-room) is found in law phrases; it is the same word as Old English flett, the floor of a house, a dwelling.

With this explanation of the phrase "Fire and fleet," the meaning of the verse becomes perfectly clear. The dirge is sung the night before the burial. The dead man enjoys for one night the familiar comfort of house-room, the warmth and light of fire and candle; the next night he will be wandering far away over the dark, desolate moor, then across the "Brig o' Dread"—which, like "Al-sirat's arch," "totters o'er the fiery flood"—on, on to "Purgatory fire." A. L. MAYHEW.

CHARLES II. AND THE TREATY OF DOVER.

2, Cheyne Gardens, S.W., March 21st, 1905.

IN the course of the very flattering review of my book which appeared in your paper for March 18th, your reviewer took occasion to condemn my reading of Charles II.'s policy from 1662 to 1672. I had, unfortunately, laid myself open to this by the statement that in the secret Treaty of Dover,

"Louis promised money and soldiers to Charles to enable him to establish the Catholic religion in England, apparently on much the same terms as those which he had proposed to the Pope in 1662-3."

This is verbally incorrect, and therefore indefensible as a full account of the secret clauses of the Treaty of Dover, which only stipulate for the public reconciliation to Rome of Charles himself. I can hardly apologize enough for misrepresenting the words of a treaty the text of which I had read again and again. But a question even more interesting than the words is the meaning and intention of the treaty. On this point I am ready to maintain the view held by Ranke and by Acton—that the treaty was regarded by Charles as the chief means of his design to Romanize the doctrines and practice of the Church of England as by law established, while granting toleration to Protestants and Dissenters.

"He wished," says Ranke, describing Charles's motives for concluding the Treaty of Dover, "to attach himself and his kingdom to the great confederacy of the religion and Church to which it had once belonged." And at the bottom of the same page (495 of vol. iii., translation 1875):—

"In the web of political entanglements in which he was now involved, the king himself thought that the time for it was come. But for that also he needed the support and protection of France. For if already, on the introduction of the Act of Uniformity, disturbances had been feared, how much more were those to be dreaded the moment he took steps towards a restoration of Catholicism."

Lord Acton's account of the Secret Treaty of Dover (Home and Foreign Review, vol. i. pp. 169-74) is the nearest thing we yet have to an authoritative analysis of the evidence. I must refer the reader to those pages. I make here only two quotations:—

"Charles opened his mind to the French ambassador, the brother of the great Colbert, on the 12th November, 1669. It was, he said, the most important secret of his life, and he would probably be considered mad, and all those with him who were undertaking to restore Catholicism in England. Nevertheless he hoped, with the help of Louis, to succeed in that great work."—P. 170.

Again, as Acton quotes, Charles

"ended by saying that he was urged by his conscience, and by the confusion he saw increasing daily in his kingdom, to the diminution of his authority, to declare himself a Catholic; and that, besides the spiritual advantage he would derive from it, he considered also that it was the only way of restoring the monarchy."—P. 171.

This bears out the theory that Charles longed to be a despot, and if possible, in the congenial atmosphere of Roman Catholicism.

In 1673-4, as Acton says, "Charles relinquished the design," and "James took the lead in all schemes for the restoration of the Church."

This view is substantially adopted by Prof. A. W. Ward in his article on Charles II. in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' Speaking of the Treaty of Dover, he writes: "The reconciliation of England to the Church of Rome, and the overthrow of the Dutch republic, became the two hinges of the proposed alliance."

It is almost unnecessary to refer to the authoritative passage in Clarke's 'Life of James II.' (i. 442), where the consultation of Charles and his Catholic ministers in January, 1669, is described. They consulted, we are told,

"about the ways and methods fittest to be taken for the settling of the Catholic Religion in his kingdoms, and to consider the time most proper to declare himself.....The consultation lasted long, and the Result was that there was no better way for doing this great work, than to do it conjunction with France.....and in pursuance of this resolution, Mons. de Croissy Colbert, the French Ambassador, was to be trusted with the secret in order to inform his master of it, that he might receive a power to treat about it with the king.....The Treaty was not finally concluded and signed till about the beginning of 1670."

Now I maintain that this passage, taken with the evidence cited by Acton, and read in the light of the negotiations with Rome in 1662-3, fully justifies the conclusions of Ranke and Acton, that one object of the Treaty of Dover was to establish Catholicism in England.

Charles's scheme in 1662-3 was not to put down all Protestants by Smithfield fires, but to alter the character of the English Church (which in itself already contained certain elements of Catholicism), and to tolerate Dissenters. Such, almost certainly, was his idea in 1669-70. It was afterwards tried by James II. The words of the Treaty of Dover fit in exactly with this hypothesis: Charles there represents himself as desiring "de nous reconcilier avec l'église Romaine, donner par là le repos à nostre conscience, et procurer le bien de la religion catholique."

Further, "Le Seigneur roy"

"à tout sujet d'espérer et de se promettre de l'affection et de la fidélité de ses sujets qu'aucun d'eux, mesme de ceux sur qui dieu n'aura pas encore assez graces pour les disposer par cet exemple si auguste à se convertir, ne manqueront jamais à l'obéissance, &c.....neantmoins comme il se trouve quelques fois des esprits brouillons," &c.,

we will therefore have over the French troops! In the words of the treaty, where your reviewer sees an argument for his view, I can only see an argument for mine. The text shows that the king expected many of his subjects to imitate his example. Charles's plan is, in fact, exactly that afterwards adopted by James II., except that James tried to enforce the lesson of his royal example by means of his own troops (the victors of Sedgemoor and the Irish) instead of by those of Louis XIV. According to the words of the Treaty of Dover, there are to be three classes of previously Protestant subjects, after the king has declared himself a Catholic: (1) those who follow the king's example; (2) those who remain Protestant, but remain also loyal, and who will be tolerated; (3) those who rebel, who will be kept down by French troops. The exact degree and rapidity of the change to be made in the doctrine and practice of the Church of England will depend on circumstances; it will depend on: the numbers of class (1); the passivity of class (2); the weakness of class (3). As all these are unknown quantities, the exact scheme of counter-reformation is not detailed in the treaty. And after all there were limits even to Charles's subservience to France. He would hardly put the terms of his own Church settlement into a treaty with Louis.

What is there incredible in this scheme? Even after the fearful experience of the strength of Protestant prejudice in the days of Oates, James II. actually attempted to execute it. In 1670 the temper of the English people was more of an unknown quantity than in 1685: after the strange vicissitudes of 1642-62, anything seemed possible in England. "We had changes in the late times of rebellion," said Sir Thomas Meres in Parliament ('Grey's Debates,' vi. p. 138),

"and now we have a Church of England again, if we can keep it. We are a mutable people, and the Papists' number is great.....I am really afraid that when such a day comes two-thirds of the nation will stand neuters, and so about one-third part will engage for the Protestant religion."

That real fear of our ancestors proved to be exaggerated, but it was based on an opinion common to Protestants and Catholics. Charles II., being one of the cleverest men in his kingdom, saw the real facts sooner than most other people, and dropped his Catholicizing designs in 1673-4. But the Protestants, the Jesuits, and James went on till 1688, all fearing or hoping a Catholic reaction. Charles, meanwhile, turned to making himself a despot by the help of Anglicanism, instead of by the help of Catholicism. In this pis-aller he succeeded completely, partly because the Whigs, like your reviewer, would not take Charles seriously as a politician. I am, however, extremely obliged to him for taking my book seriously as a history.

G. M. TREVELYAN.

SALE.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE sold on the 23rd to the 25th ult. the following important books and MSS.: Seymour Haden's Études à l'Eau-forte, 25 large etchings, Paris, 1866, 159l. Thackeray, Two Humorous Drawings in Colours, "M. Solomons," 41l.; Four Original Drawings by R. Doyle, with Text by Thackeray in MS., 49l. Paradise Lost, on vellum, Doves Press, 1902, 30l. Dresser's Birds of Europe, 9 vols., 1871-96, 51l. Morley's First Book of Ballets, 1598, 36l. Nelson Letters (5), 1804-1805, 45l. 15s. Harrison, The Arches of Triumph erected in honour of King James I. at his entrance into the City of London, 1603, 50l. Thomas à Kempis, De Imitatione Christi, editio princeps, 1471, 125l. Purchas his Pilgrims, 5 vols., a very fine copy in original vellum, 1625-6, 110l. A series of J. E. Ridinger's Engravings of Wild Animals, &c., 64l. Supplement to Johnson and Steevens's Shakespeare, 2 vols., 1780, Malone's copy, with numerous MS. additions and corrections, 91l. Isaac Watts's Hymns and Spiritual Songs, first edition, 1707, 43l. Chaucer's Works, Kelmscott Press, 1896, 45l. Chas. Reade's Novels, original MSS. and Correspondence (22), 320l. Alex. Dumas on Shakespeare's Othello and the Great Exponents of the Character, original MS., 49l. Allot's English Parnassus, 1600, 50l. Herrick's Hesperides, &c., 1648, 75l. Milton's Poems, 1645, 86l. More's Utopia, 1551, 49l. Coverdale's Bible, 1535 (imperfect), 80l. Shakespeare's Works, 1632 (slightly defective), 108l. Grolier Club Publications (41), 115l. Burlington Fine-Art Club Portrait Miniatures, 20l. Kelmscott Press Publications, all printed upon vellum (31), 926l. 7s. 6d. (Chaucer 300l.). Sir T. Percy, Seventh Earl of Northumberland, original MS. Book of Private Devotions, circa 1555-70, 120l. Thackeray's Original Notes for his Lectures on the Four Georges (13 pp.), 199l.; Original MS. of part of Penderennis (18 pp.), with 13 original sketches, 290l. Enchiridion Ecclesiæ Sarum, on vellum, 1528, 51l. John Keats's Holograph MS. of Isabella, &c., 1816-19, 215l. Shakespeare's Poems, first edition, with portrait (wants 2 ll.), original binding, 1640, 205l.

Literary Gossip.

NEXT week Messrs. Constable will publish Mr. Laurence Binyon's new poem 'Penthesilea.' In blank verse, with a dedication to Mr. Sidney Colvin, the first canto treats of the coming of the Amazons, the reception of Penthesilea by Priam, and the secret visit of Andromache to the new-comer. The second part of the poem deals with the battle, the late arrival of Achilles on the scene, a duel, and the death of Penthesilea at the hand of the conqueror, in whom she has inspired a deathless love.

THE same firm will publish in the course of this month Gustav Freussen's Holstein novel of 'Jörn Uhl,' which took Germany by storm in 1902. The author, who woke up to find himself famous and his small congregation of Lutheran peasants elbowed out of their tiny church every Sunday by literary pilgrims curious to see the Primitif who had so touched the sophisticated heart of modern Germany, is the son of a village carpenter, and was born within the sound of the North Sea, in the remote village of Barlt, in 1863. The novel has been translated by Mr. F. S. Delmer, of Berlin University.

MESSRS. SMITH, ELDER & Co. are beginning a new series, "The Waterloo Library," which will comprise some of the best works of modern authors. The series will be well printed, in many instances illustrated, and issued in a cloth binding of special design. The first six volumes will be 'The Cruise of the Cachalot,' 'The Tragedy of the Korosko,' 'The Green Flag, and other Stories of War and Sport,' 'The White Company,' 'Rodney Stone,' and 'Jess.'

BEFORE 1903 the only account of the insurrection of Robert Emmet was that by Dr. R. R. Madden in his 'Lives of the United Irishmen.' But since 1903—the centenary of the insurrection—there has been a remarkable output of books on the subject: 'The Emmet Family,' in two volumes, by Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet, of New York; 'Life of Emmet,' by Mr. D. J. O'Donoghue; 'The Footprints of Emmet,' by Mr. J. J. Reynolds; and 'The Viceroy's Post-Bag'—half of which is devoted to Emmet — by Mr. Michael MacDonagh, which was recently reviewed in these columns. Two new lives of Emmet are to appear in the autumn. One is by Mr. R. Donovan, of The Freeman's Journal, Dublin; the other by Mr. Stephen Gwynn.

NEW novels by Mrs. Craigie, Mr. Clark Russell, and Miss Florence Roosevelt will shortly be added to "Unwin's Library," the collection of English books for continental readers which Mr. Unwin issues. Since its inception at the end of 1902, the series has met with remarkable success, and it now contains some forty volumes, mostly works of fiction, though a few books of a more serious character are also included. The volumes, of which the price is 2 francs or 1 mark 50, are all printed in England. They are to be had at the chief continental booksellers' and bookstalls.

A WORK entitled 'The Faroes and Iceland: Essays on their People and Fauna,' by Mr. Nelson Annandale, is to be published very shortly by the Clarendon Press. It will contain an appendix on 'The Celtic Pony,' by Mr. F. H. A. Marshall.

The Scottish Historical Review for April will open with a large and fully illustrated paper on 'Judicial Torture,' by Mr. R. D. Melville. The Master of Peterhouse deals with James VI. and the Papacy. Mr. G. Neilson identifies the Scottish poet Rob Stene. Mr. F. C. Eeles transcribes and annotates a sixteenth-century rental. Col. Lumsden refutes Motley's imputations against the Scots at Leffingen in 1600. Dr. T. H. Bryce advances a new theory for Scottish ethnology, and Mr. W. R. Scott treats of the national textile industries prior to 1707.

WE record with deep regret the death on March 23rd of the Hon. Oliver Borthwick. He had a considerable gift for journalism, and at the early age of twenty-two edited The Morning Post for a whole year during an interregnum. More recently he had taken a principal part in its management, and his courtesy and care for the welfare of those who worked with him gained for him the respect and goodwill of the entire staff. He was born on March 2nd, 1873, and was the only son of Lord Glenesk. Mr. Borthwick was to have presided at the News-vendors' Dinner last year, and worked heartily to secure its success; but illness prevented him, and his father himself took his place. The large attendance at the funeral included representatives from the News-vendors and the Correctors of the Press, in both of which bodies he took great interest. He will be missed by a host of friends who appreciated his geniality and thoughtfulness for others.

It will be welcome news to most people who have to do with books that the Committee of the London Library have decided to undertake an exhaustive subject-catalogue of the library. The high standard of the published alphabetical catalogue leads us to expect something more than the perfunctory 'Classified Index' issued in 1888. A good subject-catalogue can only be produced by a careful and intelligent examination of every book dealt with, for many books deal with several subjects, or, at all events, fall within several categories.

The subject-catalogue of the London Library will probably occupy three or four years in compiling and printing.

THE interesting monument of Sir Richard Fanshawe, Bart., poet and ambassador, which was erected to his memory in St. Mary's Church, Ware, by his widow Lady Anne Fanshawe in 1671, has just been restored at the expense of the present branches of her husband's family. The monument bears the Fanshawe arms, with the augmentation specially granted in 1649, impaled with those of Sir John Harrison, of Ball's Park, father of Lady Fanshawe. It is the intention of the family also to erect a memorial brass to Lady Fanshawe. We understand that a reprint of her Memoirs from the MS. written under her direction in 1676 will be published in the autumn by the De La More Press. The text of the existing printed Memoirs, published in 1829-30, is extremely defective.

THE annual report of the Selden Society for 1904 notes a steady increase in the membership, which now stands at 319. A first volume of 'Borough Customs,' edited by Miss Mary Bateson, was issued in November last, and a further one is promised for 1906. Vol. ii. of Prof. Maitland's 'Year-Books of Edward II.' was issued as a bonus volume at the end of last year. Vol. iii., already well advanced, is promised for 1905, and later volumes in the next two years, if, as we hope, the editor's health does not delay his work.

THE copy of The Philanthropist, with Charles Lamb's essay on 'The Confessions of a Drunkard,' to which reference was made in The Athenæum of March 4th, and also in the issue of March 18th, only realized 18 dollars at Anderson's Rooms in New York. Curiously enough, in Part 2 of the late Judge Arnold's sale, held in New York a month ago, there was a very interesting letter from Lamb concerning the appearance of the essay in Basil Montagu's miscellany, 'Some Enquiries into the Effects of Fermented Liquors' (1814). This letter, which realized 33 dollars, is to "Dear H.," and runs as follows:—

"I understand you have got (or had) a snivelling methodistical adulteration of my Essay on Drunkenness. I wish very much to see it, to see how far Mr. Basil Montagu's Philanthropical scoundrels have gone to make me a Sneak. There certainly was no crying 'Peccavi' in the 1st draught.

"Yours, though I seldom see you,
"CH. LAMB."

At the monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, held on Thursday, March 23rd, the sum of 100*l.* was voted to fifty-seven members and widows of members. Two members were elected and six fresh applications for membership were received.

THE annual meeting of the German Shakespeare Society will take place at Weimar on April 29th.

THE Comtesse de Beaulaincourt de Marles (née de Castellane), who died recently, has bequeathed to the Bibliothèque Nationale two documents which ought to prove of high interest. Her will is dated November 14th, 1903, and the bequest is made in the following words:—

"Je lègue à la Bibliothèque nationale les originaux du journal du maréchal de Castellane et ses 'mémoires ou bagatelles sur mon temps,' à condition qu'il n'en sera pas fait usage avant cinquante ans de ce jour."

A CENTRAL lending library for the blind has been opened at Hamburg. The volumes will be placed at the disposal of the blind in all parts of Germany, and no fee is to be charged. The library contains books on all subjects—devotional works, general literature, science, history, &c.—and includes works in English, Greek, Latin, French, &c.

A SUMMER meeting will be held in Amsterdam in August next. It is to be open to Dutch, British, and Danish visitors, and is intended for members of the teaching profession and others. The programme is to include morning lectures by Dr. Hoogvliet, Dr. Johanna de Jongh, of Utrecht University, and others on Dutch subjects of an artistic, literary, and scientific nature. The lectures will all be delivered in English. The meeting is being organized by Mr. de Vries, a teacher of English at Hilversum. Arrangements for this country are in the hands of Miss Scriven, Northwold Road School, Clapton, from whom particulars may be obtained.

It is announced that the proposed School of Journalism, for the endowment of which Mr. Pulitzer has handed over a million dollars to Columbia University, is not to be founded until after his death.

THE Parliamentary Papers of the week include an Appendix to the Report of the Commissioners of National Education in Ireland, 1903, which contains Reports on the State of National Education (11½*d.*); Report for 1904 on the Royal Scottish Museum, Edinburgh (1½*d.*); Scotch Education, Report for the Southern Division for 1904 (1½*d.*); and a Report which we have noted under 'Fine-Art Gossip.'

SCIENCE

India. By Col. Sir T. H. Holdich. "The Regions of the World" Series. Edited by H. J. Mackinder. (Frowde.)

THAT geography is now receiving more attention in England than it has ever before commanded is confirmed in many ways. The Royal Geographical Society was never more flourishing nor better supplied with candidates, whilst its advocacy for recognition of the science by teaching in schools and by inclusion as a subject of examination for appointments to the public services has never been nearer realization. And this is well, for too often representatives of this country have failed to protect her interests, which escaped observation chiefly from ignorance of geography and inability to read a map and appreciate what they were asked to cede or resign. The results were concessions, more or less graceful, but generally prejudicial to British interests. The concern awakened is, therefore, a matter of congratulation, provided that the requisite study and the necessary tests of proficiency be secured. There should be no great difficulty in bringing this about, for the subject is full of fascination. No literature appeals more strongly to young people than tales of adventure and exploration, and with their aid the dry bones of the grammar of the science may be made to live. When sufficient proficiency is acquired, surveying follows, and no course would be more popular if the inducements offered were equal to those in other branches. For there are the attractions of pleasant field work with the mysteries of compass and instruments; the record made on the spot to be transferred in the house to paper; and, finally, the finished map, which, when well drawn, has some of the charms of a picture.

Again, when school days are over the pleasures of travel for purposes of art, exploration, or sport, are greatly enhanced by even a slight acquaintance with geography. Intelligent records can be kept, and valuable additions made to existing knowledge—results which, sooner or later, are likely to meet with adequate recognition.

We know that when surveying has been learnt and travel is obligatory, as in the navy and in some branches of the army, leading geographers are supplied from both services, the corps of Engineers furnishing, as might be expected, the chief experts. Take a few names. James Rennell, the father of our modern geography, who died in 1830, the year the Geographical Society was founded; Sir Richard Strachey, past president of the Royal Geographical Society, who has travelled far and acquired much knowledge; and Henry Yule, the eminent scholar, whose reputation as an historical geographer is world-wide, all belonged to the Bengal Engineers; whilst Sir T. Holdich, whose book has given rise to these reflections, though appointed to the Royal Engineers, began his education for that branch of the service at Addiscombe, auspicio regis et senatus Angliæ.

Mr. Mackinder, editor of the series, may be congratulated on his choice of an author, it being far from easy to find a qualified person. "The aim," we are told,

"is to present a picture of the physical features and condition of a great natural region, and to trace the resulting influences upon human societies, especially in their economic and political aspects."

To do justice to these subjects special qualifications are required, and they are possessed by Sir T. Holdich to a remarkable extent. For early in his career he was appointed to the Indian Survey Department, whence he had the good fortune to be sent on many military expeditions. Thus he served in Bhootan and Abyssinia, in the Afghan war of 1878-80, and in various frontier campaigns; but even more useful to him for the purposes of this book were his work and journeys on the Afghan Boundary Commission, on the Pamir boundaries, and on the demarcation of the frontier between Persia and Baluchistan. His latest service of this kind in Chile and Argentina is fresh in men's minds, but need not now be further mentioned.

In preparing the book he was warned to avoid statistics and detail, a difficult matter in dealing with India, where the records of administration take the form of tables and reports; but it may at once be said they are not unduly prominent, readers who want more being referred to the 'Imperial Gazetteer of India.'

The region dealt with comprises more than is ordinarily included under the name India, for on the north, Afghanistan and Kashmir; on the east, Burma; on the south, Ceylon; and on the west, Baluchistan, are described. The author says:—

"India must be accepted as the whole of Southern Asia over which British political influence now extends, whether strictly within the limits of the red line of 'British' India or beyond it. As a geographical expression it cannot be dissociated from the frontier which binds it, or from the wide border mountain lands of the west and north-west, wherein are to be found the gates of it. No geographical description of the peninsula of India would be complete without reference to the strange wild hinterland which has exercised such a profound influence on its destinies through all past ages."

In accordance with these correct sentiments the frontiers of Baluchistan, Afghanistan, and Kashmir are examined, a chapter being devoted to each country; on the whole, they form the most interesting part of the book, because within these States lie the lines of possible invasion, and also by reason of the singular grandeur and beauty of their mountains.

Baluchistan, formerly famous as containing the route of the departure and partial destruction of Alexander the Great's army, and afterwards having the evil reputation of being a den of thieves, is now, thanks in great measure to the late Sir Robert Sandeman, and to the civilizing effect of railways, a bulwark of strength to the British Empire. Its inhabitants, of mixed origin—Arabian, Ethiopian, Persian, and Dravidian towards the south, and Pathan in the north—though second to none in courage and soldier-like qualities, are much more easily managed than their republican neighbours further north. The author accounts for this chiefly because the Sulaimán range, held by us, closes for them the back door of escape from punitive expeditions. He justly remarks:—

"It is this (and the same principle holds good for all the Baluch frontier), rather than any wide distinction between the warlike characteristics of one tribe of Pathans and another, or between Baluch and Afghan, that renders our southern frontier safe from periodic eruptions, such as have lately convulsed the north. Doubtless the conditions which govern Baluch existence, the system of tribal confederation approaching the feudalism of the Middle Ages, and the influence of the chief rather than that of the Mullah (which is a marked characteristic amongst Baluchis as compared with Pathans), have much to say to the apparent readiness with which they have accepted British control, with all the advantages of mutual inter-tribal toleration and goodwill."

Passing northward, we cross the southern boundary of Afghanistan, a land of much importance to British India both from a military and political point of view; also, as now defined, it has great geographical interest, for it contains the Hindu Kush, has the river Oxus and one of its chief tributaries as the boundary with Russia for a great distance, and stretching east forms a narrow wedge between Russian and British spheres of influence, till it reaches the dependencies of Kashmir and touches China. These facts and many more are adequately treated by the author. He briefly alludes to the source of the Oxus, confirming generally the view expressed in the review of Lieut. Olufsen's second Danish Pamir expedition (Athen. No. 4029, January 14th, 1905), and concludes "that the glaciers of the Nicolas range in about East longitude 74 become the sources of the main affluents of the Oxus, excepting the southern head of the Wakhan. Whether the glaciers of Nicolas or those at the head of the southern affluent of the Wakhan are the mightiest is another question. It is one which, at any rate, cannot be decided by a comparative estimate of the capacity of the various channels through which the glacial streams work their way to the great river."

Besides the geography of Afghanistan, its people and their trade, and the involved question of their independence, situated as their country is between two great and expanding powers, are all carefully considered. Next, in similar fashion, Kashmir and the Himalayas are described, Tibet is mentioned, and the Indian hill stations are noticed; after which we are introduced to the Indian peninsula, which includes everything south of the Himalayas, and is subdivided into the plains of the Punjab, the United Provinces, and Bengal, which form the northern part; the southern part being made up of the highlands of Central India, Madras, and Bombay. Much information is given about the river systems, the railways, the chief cities, and the people. Assam, Burma, and Ceylon are described, and chapters are devoted to the people of India, its political geography, agriculture and revenue, railways, minerals, and climate; but space forbids detailed examination. Sir T. Holdich has much to tell about the various races, and asks which of them has shown most aptitude for higher development. He appears to select Bengalis, Mahratta Brahmins, and Parsees, but wisely adds that "education so far has apparently conduced far more to political agitation and discontent than it has to social and moral improvement or material strength. One hears far more of the screams of agitators than of any satisfactory witness to a full and just appreciation of the advantages of British rule in India. Yet the appreciation undoubtedly exists, and exists widely, and with most strong vitality, but it does not advertise its existence in the native press, nor air itself in the British Parliament. The fact is that political discontent is a profession in India just as it is elsewhere—men live by it, and advertisement is necessary to provide for its support."

In a work of this sort, covering ground so extensive, some errors are inevitable, and where so much is trustworthy and accurate it seems ungracious to dwell on minor defects; yet a few corrections may be suggested in the hope that they may be useful for future editions of what promises to become a standard work, rather than from their intrinsic importance. On p. 1 the population in 1901 is evidently misquoted; p. 7, l. 17, "exists" should be exist; p. 49, l. 3, for "lead" read led; p. 102, and elsewhere, the distinguishing name of a Sikh is Singh=lion, not "Sing=horn"; p. 114, l. 12 from the foot of the page, for "are" read is; p. 121, and elsewhere, for "North-West Provinces," United Provinces should be substituted (the MS. was probably written before the change of name was made); p. 131, l. 11, "is" (twice) should be are; and, finally, p. 296, l. 6, "Sardar" melons should be sardā. Some of the maps set in the text are on so small a scale that the names can scarcely be read, see, e.g., pp. 29 and 32. Nevertheless, as we hope is abundantly evident from this review, the book and its maps are creditable to all concerned, and will unquestionably prove of great value to seekers for information about the region of British India and its dependencies.

Animal Autobiographies: The Rat. By G. M. A. Hewett. (A. & C. Black.)—In face of the immense amount of rubbish which in the name of "nature study" has been foisted on a public ignorant alike of "nature" and of education, not only in this but also in another hemisphere, we are bound to say that we took up this book with positive aversion; not that "little aversion" which is said to be the beginning of a happy union, but a great deal of it. And we have to own that we have read the whole of the book once, and a great deal of it twice, while it still stands on an elbow-table by our side. It breathes of the country-side, and the story, though slight, is never ridiculous or impossible; the language might, at times, have conceivably been simpler, and one and the same rat (not cat) should not have died two different deaths; but these are slight blemishes in a work which we commend to young and old alike.

Essays and Addresses by the late John Young. (Glasgow, MacLehose.)—Prof. Bower, who was chairman of the Prof. Young Memorial Committee, tells us that the publication of these papers was one of the three objects which it set itself. It is not stated whether they have been published before, but they give a very good idea of the versatility of the late professor, while a charming biographical sketch of him by Dr. Yellowlees is prefixed. It is much to be wished that the lives of many whom their friends wish to commemorate were written on lines such as are here followed; we have had a surfeit of comprehensive biographies.

Small Destructors for Institutional and Trade Waste. By W. Francis Goodrich. (Constable & Co.)—This is a useful supplement to the author's larger work on 'Refuse Disposal and Power Production,' already noticed in these columns. In hospitals, workhouses, hotels, and in works of all sorts the necessity for promptly and safely getting rid of dangerous waste is as great as it is in towns; but although the danger of neglect is now recognized far more fully than in time past, the methods in use for meeting the evil are still often of the most primitive and imperfect description. It is but a year or so since a workhouse master was reported in the newspapers as having fed seven pigs on linseed poultices from the fever hospital. When such horrors are possible books like this one of Mr. Goodrich should be welcome, especially as the smaller forms of destructor have not received the same attention on the part of engineers as the larger and more costly ones. Such small incinerators have often been carelessly constructed on faulty lines, and still more often they have been ignorantly worked. It thus happens that these invaluable germ-killers and general helps to cleanliness and health have become unpopular in many quarters, and in some cases institutions provided with them have even discarded them as nuisances. From the point of view of public welfare this is a great pity, and we trust Mr. Goodrich's little book will be read and studied by all who, as governors or otherwise, are interested in the management of large institutions. In a few clearly written and well-illustrated pages he gives an account of the latest and best methods in use. He enables one to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of each process, and thus to select that which best suits any particular case. We are glad to note that whilst those systems are described which, by means of digesters, &c., preserve and sterilize those portions of the refuse which may be of value, such, for instance, as fat in the case of carcasses, the author points out that these so-called economical adjuncts to a crematory require somewhat complex machinery and additional care. For small destructors the only function to be considered should be the hygienic, and this is best performed by mere combustion with every provision for as nearly automatic action as possible, for absence of noxious fumes or smell, and for cheap working.

The Book of the Rose. By the Rev. A. Foster-Melliar. (Macmillan & Co.)—It must be a great pleasure to all rose-growers to read through this the third and latest edition of the excellent work of one of the greatest living authorities on roses. It is all sound, and all intelligible and useful to the most modest amateur. The famous twelfth chapter, on 'Manners and Customs,' has been brought up to date, and cannot fail to strike every reader or re-reader as full of that observation, patience, resource, and love of the flower which are always, and have been markedly in the writer's case, the secret of success. Mr. Foster-Melliar is very modest about his "Sproughton" hoe, but we happen to know from experience what a useful tool it is, and recommend it, as well as this book, to all rose-growers.

MR. MURRAY has just published Darwin's great book on The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication, 2 vols., edited by Francis Darwin. This is a further instalment of the admirable "popular edition," which gives Darwin's latest corrections and results at a very moderate price.

ANOTHER interesting enterprise of the same publisher is the reissue, at a cheap price, of Smiles's Lives of the Engineers. These volumes are well printed and illustrated, and form excellent summaries of lives full of interest.

Natur und Arbeit. Von Prof. Dr. Alwin Oppel. Vol. I. (Leipsic and Vienna, Bibliographisches Institut.)—We have received the first volume of Prof. Oppel's book, which he describes in the sub-title as "eine allgemeine Wirtschaftskunde," a term for which there is no very satisfactory English equivalent. The relation between geographical environment and human occupation, with the reflex influence of both on human organization, though one of the most fruitful subjects for geographical research, has only in recent years begun to receive the attention it deserves. The investigations of Ratzel and his pupils, Hahn, Le Play and his school, Shaler, and others, though often highly suggestive, have dealt only with partial aspects of the subject, and there is, so far, no really comprehensive scientific work available. It is difficult to judge from a single volume of Prof. Oppel's book how far he has succeeded in his attempt to supply the deficiency, and we think it better, therefore, to reserve our judgment till the complete work is before us.

EARTHQUAKES.

Earthquakes in the Light of the New Seismology. By Clarence Edward Dutton. (Murray.)—By the "new seismology" Major Dutton means the modern development of the science of earthquakes, which represents the work of a devoted band of physicists and geologists during the last thirty years. Initiated in Japan by the energy of Prof. Milne and Prof. Ewing, it has been taken up by a number of investigators in various scientific centres and now forms a branch of terrestrial physics of no mean importance. It is not an easy subject for the casual reader of science; Major Dutton is, therefore, to be congratulated on having contributed to "The Progressive Science Series" a volume in which it is treated in such a way as to be intelligible to those who are unversed in mathematical physics. It is only rarely that he is led to introduce any formulæ. Narratives of famous catastrophes, such as formed the bulk of the older works on earthquakes, are not to be expected here; yet there are some interesting descriptions of notable earthquakes of recent years, accompanied by illustrations from photographs. With regard to the great Charleston earthquake of 1886, it should be noted that Major Dutton was charged officially with its investigation on behalf of the Geological Survey of the United States.

Before about 1870 the study of seismic phenomena was lacking in quantitative exactitude, and there were few, if any, trustworthy instruments of precision for the measurement of terrestrial disturbances. When the physicist joined hands with the geologist, with the view of joint investigation, it came to be seen that an earthquake was a case of elastic wave-motion. The crust of the earth is elastic, and whatever suddenly excites its elasticity, whether of internal or external origin, causes a vibration which is really an earthquake, be it a gentle tremor or a violent disturbance. By means of the refined seismographs in use to-day, the wave-motion is analyzed and resolved into its components, and the results duly registered.

The most interesting question which is popularly asked about an earthquake relates to its origin. What natural operation is responsible for the sudden and violent shaking of the earth-mass? To this fundamental question seismology is still unable to return a decisive answer. All earthquakes are not referable to the same cause, but Major Dutton points out that great disturbances are probably connected with the dislocation of large masses of rock underground, by means of earth-movements, the causes of which are at present but dimly understood. But whilst the most powerful and destructive disturbances are of this tectonic character, many other earthquakes are no doubt connected with volcanic phenomena; and in saying this the modern seismologist merely supports a view at least as old as the days of Aristotle. Yet it is noteworthy that in an earthquake-shaken country like Japan seismic phenomena seem independent of volcanic activity.

Seismic geography, or the distribution of earthquakes over the surface of the earth, is adequately dealt with by Major Dutton; and his final chapter is devoted to "seaquakes," or those crustal disturbances which occur in submarine areas.

A Study of Recent Earthquakes. By Charles Davison, Sc.D. (Walter Scott Publishing Company.)—This volume of "The Contemporary Science Series" is not intended to be a textbook of seismology: it is merely a description of certain typical earthquakes which have occurred in various countries within the last half-century. Yet in describing these disturbances, and in drawing inferences from the observations here recorded, Dr. Davison manages to introduce an outline of the general principles of the science. It is true there is little or nothing about seismographs and other instruments, which nowadays are usually described in much detail in books on earthquakes; but, what is of far more interest to the general reader not intending to become an observer himself, there is a clear statement of the results of the modern study of earthquakes, with special regard to their origin.

The seismic disturbances selected for description in this volume are as follows: the great Neapolitan earthquake of 1857, which is memorable for Mallet's elaborate report, the first attempt to study such a catastrophe in the light of modern science; the Ischian earthquakes of 1881 and 1883, investigated by Dr. Johnston-Lavis and others; the Andalusian earthquake of 1884; the Charleston catastrophe of 1886; the Riviera earthquake of 1887; the terrible Japanese earthquake of October 28th, 1891; the Hereford earthquake of 1896; the Inverness earthquake of 1901; and the great Indian disturbance of 1897, which was thoroughly investigated by Mr. R. D. Oldham. It is pleasing to note that the author is generous in his recognition of the value of the work of Robert Mallet, who—withstanding certain defects in his methods—must be regarded as a pioneer who laid the foundation of the scientific study of the subject.

Dr. Davison is well known for the great attention which he has bestowed on the study of the earthquakes which have occurred in recent years in this country. Special interest consequently attaches to his discussion of the Hereford and Inverness earthquakes, embodying the results of his own investigations, which have been published in detail elsewhere. The origin of both earthquakes he refers to movement along faults in the strata. In the case of the Herefordshire disturbance, the dislocation seems to have occurred along a fault between the anticlinal areas of Woolhope and Mayhill—two inliers of Silurian rocks which are brought up through the Old Red Sandstone. In the Inverness earthquake, which occurred in one of the most unstable regions of Britain, the slip must have taken place along the great line of dislocation which marks the direction of the Caledonian Canal. Geologists have become convinced that many of the faults, representing fractures due to crustal crumpling, are in process of growth, so that slips may be expected from time to time. In the great Japanese earthquake of 1891, a fault, or rent, with displacement of rock, was formed along a line running across plain and valley and mountain for something like seventy miles. In Scotland the forces are less active, and Dr. Davison remarks that

“the changes in surface-structure are now taking place with almost infinite slowness, and hundreds or thousands of years must elapse before Loch Ness makes any visible progress in its march towards the sea.”

Of the nine earthquakes described in this work, only one is referred by the author to volcanic activity, all the others being regarded as tectonic. The exception is the Ischian earthquake, or rather series of earthquakes, which seems to have been clearly connected with the dormant volcanic centre of Epomeo.

Dr. Davison's work is an excellent outline of the seismic phenomena of recent times, but it seems a pity that it does not include a description of the Essex earthquake of 1884—a disturbance more notable in some respects than the other British earthquakes described here.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

THE importance of anthropometric and medical observations on children attending school is apparent from the recent report of the Dundee Social Union, referred to in The Athenæum, No. 4036. Five schools, with 517 boys, and 5 girls' schools, with 521 girls, and a school of 18 infants (7 boys and 11 girls) were selected for examination, which was carried out by Dr. A. P. Low for the boys, and Dr. Emily C. Thomson for the girls and infants. Specialists also examined the eyes and ears of the children. Only 185, or 37 per cent., of the boys, and 251, or 50 per cent., of the girls were classified as normal as regards eyesight; and only 215, or 43 per cent., of the boys, and 196, or 39 per cent., of the girls, as regards hearing. These results show the urgent necessity that physical care and training should accompany other education.

To Man for February Mr. Henry Balfour contributes a photograph of a double-headed club from Fiji, which appears to be unique. The division of the head into two must tend to weaken the weapon, and render it liable to split. Mr. A. C. Hollis, local correspondent of the Anthropological Institute in East Africa, contributes a drawing of a stone earring, weighing 46 oz., worn by a Masai boy of about fourteen years of age for the purpose of distending his ear-lobe. The boy, after selling it to Mr. Hollis, appeared the next day with one precisely similar; but the earrings usually worn by boys and girls are of wood and not stone. Mr. Ernest B. Haddon contributes a note on the peoples of Borneo, in which he compares the anthropometric observations of Dr. A. W. Nieuwenhuis in Netherlands Borneo with those of Dr. A. C. Haddon in Sarawak, and shows they agree that in Borneo there are dolichocephalic peoples of probably Indonesian stock, and a group of low brachycephalic peoples for whom Dr. Haddon has adopted the term proto-Malay.

Recent communications to the Society of Anthropology of Paris include a translation by Dr. Deniker from the Russian of a paper by M. W. Bogoraz on the religious ideas of the Tchouktchis, a people of the extreme north-east of Asia, near Behring's Strait. The author induced some of the natives to make drawings of evil spirits, which are variously represented as human or animal forms, including birds, fishes, and insects. Another drawing shows three concentric circles, representing the three worlds, and in the centre figures of huts, men, and animals, with representations of the sun, moon, and stars. In another the family of the artist are engaged in the worship of the god of the sea, who with his wife appears in the upper corner of the picture. A shaman strikes a tambourine to summon his familiar spirits, who are shown approaching the tent from the other side. Dr. P. R. Joly read a paper on the ethnography of the New Hebrides, the inhabitants of which he describes as low in the scale of human races, little susceptible of progress, and hastening to extinction under the influence of contact with white civilization. Mr. T. Sakhokia exhibited ethnographic objects from Mingrelia, including a curious terra-cotta vessel employed to drive bees from a hive.

Folk-Lore for December continues to give evidence of the stimulating influence of Mr. Frazer's 'Golden Bough.' Mr. A. B. Cook furnishes a second instalment of his learned study on the European sky-god, and Dr. Rendel Harris supplies notes from Armenia on rain-charms, fire festivals, animal sacrifices, sin-eating, foundation sacrifice (of which a recent instance occurred at the laying of the foundation of a Protestant church, when a lamb was decapitated and its head placed in the building), the offering of the first fruits, the placing of rags on holy trees, and other customs. Mr. E. S. Hartland describes a votive offering of an animal figure of cast-iron, supposed to represent a tiger, found in Korea. Mr. H. W. Underdown testifies to a harvest custom witnessed by him recently in East Kent, where the carrying of the last waggon-load of corn from the last field was celebrated by the waving of a large green bough from the top of the waggon, and by cheering. Mr. E. Peacock quotes an instance of the survival in Yorkshire of the belief in witchcraft, exercised by boiling eggs and mashing them.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE ATOM.

IN your criticism last week of new theories of the Structure of the Atom, referring to Mr. Whetham's 'Recent Developments of Physical Science,' your critic writes:—

“Of these [groups of corpuscles] he declares..... 66 [to be the model of] ‘an atom, monovalent, and strongly electro-positive.’” (Italics mine.)

I have not seen Mr. Whetham's book; but I assume that the chapter criticized is derived from Prof. J. J. Thomson's investigations. If so, Mr. Whetham has slipped, and with him Prof. Larmor, who, your critic says, has revised the chapter. For Prof. Thomson writes (Phil. Mag., March, 1904, pp. 261-2):—

“The group of 66 would be the most electro-negative of the series..... This group of 66 would therefore act like the atom of a monovalent electro-negative element.”

Your critic adds, “63 is, for some reason, left without qualities assigned.” Surely that reason was merely the economy of language; for Prof. Thomson, after explaining the operation of 68, 67, 66, and 65, adds, “Similarly the group of 64 would act like the atom of a trivalent electro-negative element, and so on.” (Italics mine.)

If these mistakes (Mr. Whetham's, I suppose) are corrected, your critic's objection on that score falls to the ground.

I am unable to follow the rest of your critic's difficulties; but they must speak for themselves with persons better qualified to judge than I am. Prof. Thomson has made public all his calculations, and to those surely, if to anything, criticism must be directed.

As I have pointed out (Athenæum, April 30th, 1904, and more fully and correctly in the Hibbert Journal for January last), Prof. Thomson's investigations tend well to harmonize with certain rhythmic lines of the atomic table, with the rhythms of organic life, with the sensations of comparative concord and discord in music, and perhaps (but this is less clear) with the numbers and distances of planets and satellites. This is, however, on the understanding that, as he finds 4 corpuscles will at certain velocities tend to be stable at the corners of a tetrahedron, so in the promised extension of his calculations he is likely to find that, under certain conditions, relative stability will, by 12 and 20 corpuscles or corpuscular outside rings, be obtained at the angles of a dodecahedron and icosahedron. It is in itself a very striking fact—and one, I believe, nowhere else pointed out—that, whereas the limits of regularity in the third dimension are reached in a figure of 20 faces, and another of 20 angles, it happens that of all the myriad arrangements of negatively electrified corpuscles in a positively electrified sphere, an arrangement with 20 outer rings—that arrangement and no other—gives exactly the same phenomena of valency as those observed in the chemical elements. If matter is fundamentally electrical; if Prof. Thomson has rightly calculated these laws of electrical motion and stability; if, lastly, geometry correctly calculates the degrees and limitations of regularity in the third dimension—we should naturally expect confirmation precisely where, as I have pointed out, we find it.

Nature cannot disregard these central twin laws of motion and of regularity in the third dimension, however men of science may. But I quite agree with a hint of your critic that this by no means proves the truth of Herbert Spencer's philosophy; and that hasty conclusions, in the manner of modern journalism, are to be strongly deprecated.

NEWMAN HOWARD.

THE N RAYS.

I HAVE not read Mr. Burke's letter to Nature of February 8th, 1904, because that number does not exist. Nature appeared on February 4th last year, and again on the 11th, each time without any communication from Mr. Burke. There is, no doubt, some misprint or other mistake in the date. Mr. Burke's letter in Nature of June 30th, 1904, is, however, fairly plain, and will, I think, leave no doubt on the minds of the unprejudiced as to the nature of the experiments from which, in his own words, "I have found no evidence of the existence of these rays." In his communication to the Académie des Sciences (C. R. 22 Février, 1904), as reproduced in 'Rayons N,' pp. 53 sqq., M. Blondlot gives full details of the means by which his photographs of the electric spark, alternately reinforced and unaided by N rays, were produced. He used, he tells us, what is here known as a "sledge" coil, free to move in the direction of its longitudinal axis to the extent of its own length. A sensitized photographic plate, twice the length of the coil and 13 centimetres wide, was laid on the table, and to the frame containing it a plate of lead wrapped in wet paper was attached, and bent twice upon itself at right angles in such a way that it formed a screen covering half the plate, under which screen the coil could pass. Attached to the side of the coil, and moving with it, was a cardboard box containing the spark-gap, which consisted of a pair of wooden tongs, the jaws of which were only kept apart by a micrometer screw. These jaws were armed with two blunt points of iridium-platinum, carefully polished, and washed in alcohol and rubbed with paper before each experiment. In M. Blondlot's words:—

"Le réglage de l'étincelle est la partie délicate de l'expérience. Il faut d'abord régler le courant induit, en modifiant, d'une part le courant inducteur, et d'autre part, la position de la bobine induite, jusqu'à ce que l'étincelle soit très faible..... Par des tâtonnements méthodiques, qui demandent parfois beaucoup de temps et de patience, on parvient à obtenir une étincelle à la fois régulière et extrêmement faible; elle est alors sensible à l'action des rayons N."

Nothing is said as to the distance of the spark from the plate, but as in the accompanying diagram it is shown to be equidistant from the plate and the leaden screen, it may be supposed to have been about half the diameter of the coil, or probably some 8 cm.

This is the way in which Mr. Burke describes in Nature his attempt to reproduce the above experiment "as closely as I could":—

"I have used a spark of about 1/10th mm. between two brass spheres, each of about 1 cm. radius. The effect on a photographic plate 2 cm. away is that of a luminous band."

Whether he used any trustworthy means of adjusting the spark, or of ascertaining before exposure if it were sensitive to the N rays, he does not say; but it is plain that he placed it at about a quarter of the distance from the plate that M. Blondlot did, and I think this would in great measure nullify the effect of the rays. But the use of brass electrodes, particularly of such relatively large capacity as spheres of 2 cm. diameter would possess, is quite enough by itself to account for the failure of the experiment. Every electrician knows that the passage of the spark under these conditions involves the tearing off and deflagration of small pieces of metal at each discharge, and as these vary in size, the light of the spark is constantly varying both in luminosity and in actinic energy.

As regards Prof. Wood, it is plain from his letter in Nature of September 29th, 1904, that he went to Nancy equipped with pieces of wood resembling steel files, and that he surreptitiously withdrew the aluminium prism during the deviation experiment, and otherwise interfered with the apparatus without the permission of the demonstrator. French notions of the courtesy due to a foreign scholar—or perhaps their inability to express themselves in English—may have prevented the personnel of the laboratory from conveying to him their appreciation of his manoeuvres; but to suggest, as Mr. Burke seems inclined to do, that these were a serious test of M. Blondlot's or his assistants' eyesight, in the sense in which Mr. Hackett and others have declared such a test desirable in other cases, is, to me, merely juggling with words.

THE WRITER OF THE ARTICLE.

SOCIETIES.

LINNEAN.—March 16.—Prof. W. A. Herdman, President, in the chair.—Miss E. M. Berridge and Mr. F. H. Capron were admitted Fellows.—Mr. Johannes Gossweiler and Miss E. R. Saunders were elected Fellows.—The President announced that the Council had appointed a committee to consider the question of zoological nomenclature discussed at the last meeting; also, in view of the interest displayed at a previous meeting on the subject of oecology, a discussion had been arranged for May 4th, to be opened by Mr. A. G. Tansley.—Mrs. D. H. Scott exhibited animated photographs of plants taken by the kammattograph, showing the natural movements of the plants accelerated so as to be readily followed by the eye.—A discussion followed, in which Dr. Scott, the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing, Mr. E. M. Holmes, Mr. J. Hopkinson, and the President took part.—Mr. Rupert Vallentin showed a series of thirty lantern-slides, from photographs taken by himself, of bird-life in the Falkland Islands.—The President, the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing, Mr. A. O. Walker, and Mr. A. D. Michael engaged in the discussion.—Dr. Otto Stapf presented a paper entitled 'Contributions to the Flora of Liberia,' being descriptions of 3 new genera and 56 new species, in a collection of about 260 species, gathered by Mr. Alexander Whyte in the neighbourhood of Monrovia, in three different localities. The flora shows a specific likeness to that of Sierra Leone, and the new genera are not endemic: Atroxima, a genus of Polygalaceæ, with 3 species; Urobotrya, Olacaceæ, also with 3 species; and Afrodaphne, Lauraceæ, with 17 species, 2 being new to science, the others transferred from Beilschmiedia and Cryptocarya. The characters of these genera were illustrated by drawings, and described by the author.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—March 15.—Mr. F. Merrifield, President, in the chair.—Señor Don Ignacio Bolívar, of Madrid, was elected an Honorary Fellow; and Mr. F. P. Dodd, Mr. C. Floersheim, Mr. J. L. Hancock, and Mr. H. C. Robinson were elected Fellows.—Mr. C. O. Waterhouse announced that the late Mr. Alexander Fry, a Fellow of the Society, had bequeathed his large and important collections of Coleoptera to the British Museum.—Dr. F. A. Dixey exhibited some butterflies from Natal which had been presented by Mr. G. A. K. Marshall to the Hope Department at Oxford, and read a note upon certain experiments conducted with a view to ascertaining whether the assumption of the wet- or dry-season form of various African butterflies can be controlled by exposure in the pupal state to artificial conditions of temperature and moisture.—Mr. W. E. Sharp exhibited a specimen of the North American longicorn, Neoclytus erythrocephalus. He said the species had been discovered in a sound ash-tree seven inches from the bark, grown in the neighbourhood of St. Helens, Lancashire. Some palings of American ash in the vicinity suggested the origin of the progenitors of the colony; but it was not known how long they had been erected. The beetles were taken in their galleries in the summer dead, which seemed to indicate a weakening of the species under the conditions in which they found themselves. Mr. Sharp also showed examples of Amara anthobia, Valle (new to the British list), from Leighton-Buzzard, where they occurred not infrequently at the roots of grass in sandy places, and a series of A. familiaris, Duf., and A. lucida for comparison.—Mr. M. Burr exhibited a number of mutilated Stenobothrus from the Picos de Europa, Spain. He said that these grasshoppers were taken at a height of about 1,300 metres, on turf ground exposed to north wind from the Atlantic, and covered with tufts of a short, dense, tough, and spiky shrub, together with heather. Of the grasshoppers occurring on this spot, almost every specimen had the wings and elytra more or less mutilated, sometimes actually torn to shreds, entirely altering their appearance. A notable exception was St. bicolor, of which no single specimen was found mutilated.—Mr. F. W. Pierce exhibited drawings of the genitalia of Noctuid moths, and also with the lantern a number of slides showing the respective peculiarities of many members of the genus. Among other things he drew attention to the fact that in the case of the Tæniocampidæ the genitalia were widely dissimilar, while his investigations had led him to conclude that Ashworthii, at present ranked as an Agrotis, should more properly be included in the Noctua group.

MICROSCOPICAL.—March 15.—Mr. A. D. Michael in the chair.—The following were elected as Honorary Fellows: Profs. W. Gilson Farlow, Herbert S. Jennings, Edmund B. Wilson, and R. W. Wood.—Mr. J. E. Stead delivered the second part of his lecture on micro-metallurgy, entitled 'A Review of the Work done by Metallographers.'

Over 120 lantern-slides were shown upon the screen by means of the epidiascope. The series commenced with the earliest work of Dr. Sorby, followed by illustrations of the microscopic characters of iron and steel, silver, lead, copper, tin, and antimony, and of the changes produced in metals by strains. The effect of continued heating of an alloy of copper and tin in boiling mercury, and also that produced by immersion in liquid air, were demonstrated. Slides were also shown to illustrate "surface flow" in antimony, and the microscopic structure of the new silver standard.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—March 28.—Sir Guilford L. Molesworth, President, in the chair.—The paper read was 'Coolgardie Water-Supply,' by Mr. C. S. R. Palmer.

PHYSICAL.—March 24.—Prof. J. H. Poynting, President, in the chair.—Mr. W. C. Clinton read a 'Note on the Voltage Ratios of an Inverted Rotary Converter.'—A paper 'On the Flux of Light from the Electric Arc with Varying Power Supply' was read by Mr. G. B. Dyke.—A paper 'On the Application of the Cymometer to the Measurement of Co-efficiencies of Coupling of Oscillation Transformers' was read by Dr. J. A. Fleming.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Royal Institution, 5.—General Monthly.
- Society of Engineers, 7½.—'Statistics of British and American Rolling Stock,' Mr. W. Pollard Digby.
- Aristotelian, 8.—'Some Controverted Points in Symbolic Logic,' Mr. A. T. Shearman.
- Society of Arts, 8.—'Telephony,' Lecture IV., Mr. H. Laws Webb. (Cantor Lecture.)
- TUES. Royal Institution, 5.—'Tibet,' Lecture I., Mr. Percival Landon.
- Faraday, 8.—'Alloys of Copper and Antimony and Copper and Bismuth,' Mr. A. H. Horns; 'Refractory Materials for Furnace Linings' (Discussion), Mr. E. Kilburn Scott; 'Electrically Heated Carbon Tube Furnaces,' Part I., Messrs. R. S. Hutton and W. H. Patterson.
- Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'Coolgardie Water-Supply.'
- WED. Archaeological, 4.—'Somerset Church Towers: their Characteristics and Classification,' Mr. R. P. Brereton.
- Entomological, 8.
- Geological, 8.—'On the Divisions and Correlations of the Upper Portion of the Coal-Measures, with Special Reference to their Development in the Midland Counties of England,' Mr. Robert Kidston; 'On the Age and Relations of the Phosphatic Chalk of Taplow,' Messrs. Llewellyn Treacher and Harold J. Osborne White.
- Society of Arts, 8.—'Ancient Architecture of the Great Zimbabwe,' Mr. Richard N. Hall.
- Dante, 8½.—'Italian Architecture in Italian Cities,' Rev. Newton Mant.
- THURS. Royal, 4½.
- Society of Arts, 4½.—'The Prospects of the Shan States,' Sir J. George Scott. (Indian Section.)
- Royal Institution, 5.—'Synthetic Chemistry,' Lecture I., Prof. R. Meldola.
- Chemical, 8.—'The Basic Properties of Oxygen at Low Temperatures: Additive Compounds of the Halogens with Organic Substances containing Oxygen,' Mr. D. McIntosh; 'Note on the Interaction of Metallic Cyanides and Organic Halides,' Mr. N. V. Sidgwick; 'The Chemical Dynamics of the Reactions between sodium thiosulphate and Organic Halogen Compounds: Part II., Halogen Substituted Acetates,' Mr. A. Sator; 'The Chemical Kinetics of Reactions with Inverse Reactions: The Decomposition of Dimethylcarbamide,' Mr. C. E. Fawcitt; 'The Tautomerism of Acetyl Thiocyanate,' Messrs. A. E. Dixon and J. Hawthorne; 'A Method of determining the Specific Gravity of Soluble Salts by Displacement in their own Mother Liquor, and its Application in the Case of the Alkaline Halides,' Mr. J. Y. Buchanan; and eight other papers.
- Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'The Report to Council on the International Electrical Congress at St. Louis,' Mr. W. Duddell; 'Systems of Electric Units,' Profs. Ascoli, G. Giorgi, H. S. Carnahan, and G. W. Patterson, and Dr. F. A. Wolff.
- Linnean, 8.—'Intra-axillary Scales of Aquatic Monocotyledons,' Prof. R. J. Harvey Gibson; 'A Further Communication on the Study of Pelomyza palustris,' Mrs. Veley.
- Antiquaries, 8½.
- FRI. Geologists' Association, 8.—'The Relative Ages of the Stone Implements of the Lower Thames Valley,' Messrs. Martin A. C. Hinton and A. S. Kennard.
- Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Cofferdams for Dock Use,' Mr. R. G. Clark; 'Bath Corporation Waterworks Extension,' Mr. J. R. Fox.
- Philological, 8.—'On the "M" Words I am Editing for the Society's Oxford Dictionary,' Mr. H. Bradley.
- Royal Institution, 9.—'American Industry,' Mr. A. Mosely.
- SAT. Royal Institution, 3.—'Some Controverted Questions of Optics,' Lecture II., Lord Rayleigh.

Science Gossip.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON write:—

"We shall issue very shortly a new, enlarged, and rewritten edition of 'The Living Races of Mankind.' As we are anxious to make this the most trustworthy work of its kind, we shall be much obliged if any of your readers able to help us, either with information or photographs, will communicate with us."

WITH commendable promptitude the Royal Society's Malta Fever Advisory Committee, whose chairman is Col. Bruce, F.R.S., have issued a brochure which embodies a series of valuable reports of the Mediterranean Fever Commission appointed twelve months ago, and working in collaboration with the Civil Governments of Malta and the Admiralty and War Office. This commission derived its authority in the first instance from the Colonial Office, which drew attention to the prevalence of a particular fever in Malta among the naval and military forces and civil population, and proposed an inquiry. Studies on the isolation, growth, and cultural characteristics of the micro-organism concerned, Micrococcus melitensis, have been assiduously pursued at Malta for some time by (among others) Major Horrocks, Staff-Surgeon R. T. Gilmour, Dr. Zammit, and Staff-Surgeon E. A. Shaw, and the results of the investigations of these observers are now presented. The last-named remarks that no definite relation can be established between any given stage of the disease and the presence of M. melitensis in the blood of patients. It has been found as early as the seventh day, and as late as the ninety-fifth and ninety-eighth day. The organism is able to live for eighty days on dry fabrics, such as blanket, khaki serge, and khaki cotton. Further reports are to be issued soon.

WE regret to announce the death of Prof. Pietro Tacchini, for many years Director of the Observatory of the Collegio Romano, which occurred on Friday the 24th ult., a few days after completing his sixty-seventh year. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Astronomical Society of London in 1883. The Royal Society's Catalogue of Scientific Papers enumerates no fewer than 170 by him up to that date, the greatest part of which relate to solar phenomena, of which he was a most assiduous observer. Until his retirement from active work a short time ago, he edited the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani, which is now in its thirty-third annual volume. He was, in fact, a joint founder of that society with Secchi (who died at Rome in 1878), and pursued spectroscopical research in all its branches. Tacchini also took part in many scientific expeditions, observing the transit of Venus on December 8th, 1874, in India, and subsequently several solar eclipses. Born at Modena on March 21st, 1838, he was in charge of the observatory there from 1859 to 1863, and afterwards for sixteen years Director of that at Palermo, where he was also Professor of Astronomy until transferred to the Collegio Romano at Rome, on leaving which he retired to his native Modena. Had he lived, he intended to take part in an expedition to the east coast of Spain to observe the total eclipse of the sun next August.

THE moon will be new on the night of the 4th inst., and full on the afternoon of the 19th. The planet Mercury will be at greatest eastern elongation from the sun on the 4th, and at inferior conjunction with him on the 23rd. Venus will be visible in the evening until about the middle of the month, to the north-east of Mercury; she will be at inferior conjunction with the sun on the 27th. Mars is in the constellation Libra, and increasing in brightness; he will be in conjunction with the moon on the morning of the 21st. Jupiter will cease to be visible this month, setting too soon after sunset. Saturn rises about 4 o'clock in the morning, situated in the western part of the constellation Aquarius.

MR. MICHIE SMITH, Director of the Kodaikanal and Madras Observatories, has issued Bulletin No. 1 from Kodaikanal, which contains observations of widened lines in the spectra of solar spots, a branch of research recently taken up there. The observations here published were obtained between January, 1903, and February, 1904, and relate to fifty-three spots, most of which were repeatedly observed. They were made with a grating spectroscope attached to the Lerebour and Secretan equatorial during the first six months of 1903, and afterwards to the Cooke equatorial. It should be mentioned that up to the end of January, 1904, the work was done by, or under the charge of, Mr. C. P. Butler, Acting Director.

A NEW comet ( $\alpha$ , 1905) was discovered by M. Giacobini at Nice on the evening of the 26th ult., in the northern part of the constellation Orion, moving in a north-easterly direction towards Gemini. The last comet of last year ( $\epsilon$ , 1904) was discovered at Marseilles by M. Borrelly on December 28th, and passed its perihelion on January 1st, so that its permanent reckoning will be comet I., 1905. It is now in the constellation Auriga, not far from the bright star Capella; but its light is less than a quarter as great as at the time of discovery, so that it is out of the reach of any but very powerful telescopes. M. Giacobini's new comet is a very faint object.

Two new small planets were discovered at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, on the night of the 13th ult., one by Prof. Max Wolf and the other by Dr. Götz.

FINE ARTS

Auguste Rodin. By Camille Mauclair.
(Duckworth & Co.)

THIS is an authorized account of Rodin, both as man and sculptor, and has received the imprimatur of the artist himself. Its value is increased by a chronological list of Rodin's statues, "made in his house, and according to his advice." How few of the great artists of the past had critics at their call, thus to note down for posterity the details of their life-work! Yet, even in such exceptional circumstances, the list is admittedly incomplete, and we doubt not that the connoisseurs of a future generation will have sufficient points left for the exercise of style criticism.

M. Mauclair has long been regarded as Rodin's literary mouthpiece. When, for instance, the Balzac reared its shaggy head amid the derisive laughter of the habitués of the Champ de Mars, he interposed to explain the motives which had induced Rodin to adopt his peculiar treatment, and therefore we may look upon this work as the apology of the master himself for his life's work. Indeed, the best parts of it are, we think, those in which Rodin's æsthetic philosophy is given in his own words, for the artist occasionally expresses himself in language with something of the terse incisiveness of his style as a sculptor. We take a few examples of Rodin's sayings:—

"I invent nothing, I rediscover. And the thing seems new because people have generally lost sight of the aims and means of art; they take that for an innovation which is nothing but a return to the laws of the great sculpture of long ago."

Throughout Rodin insists on the continuity of the tradition he has rediscovered with that of the art of Greece and the Renaissance. Curiously enough, however, he does not in these pages allude to Donatello, who, one imagines, has been the dominant influence in his work. Nor is it less surprising to find that, while Rodin professes to have penetrated the essential principles of Greek sculpture, he admits that to some extent the Gothic sculpture of his own country baffles him. "I feel it, but I cannot express it," he says;

"I cannot analyze the Celtic [sic] genius to my own satisfaction. We do portraits, but what we do is not so great. These kings and queens, on the cathedrals, were not portraits. The fellow-workers stood for one another, and they interpreted; they did not copy."

His references to nature are always somewhat difficult to understand, and often apparently contradictory. For in another place he is made to say:—

"Young artists compose instead of following their models and understanding that therein lies infinity.....When you follow nature you get everything.....A woman, a mountain, a horse, in conception they are all the same thing, they are made on the same principles."

On the other hand, he maintains that geometry is essential to the work of art, "that a group ought to be contained in a cube, a pyramid, or some simple figure," which seems to let in the whole problem of composition again. Elsewhere he says pregnantly, and, as usual, somewhat mysteriously, that "cubic truth, not appearance, is the mistress of art." "I went to Rome to look for what may be found everywhere: the latent heroic in every natural movement." What seems to underlie all this is not that art is a literal representation of the forms of nature, but that nature contains latent in it and discoverable by the artist the principles of æsthetic unity, and that this unity must not be preconceived and imposed on natural forms, but elicited from them.

Beside these general ideas, which are always expressed in suggestive and sometimes almost mystical language, we get a few very interesting and definite indications of Rodin's methods of technique—such, for instance, as his practice of working by successive contours, considering only these and not the relief within the contour, leaving that to be dealt with when it in turn becomes a contour. This he claims, whether rightly or not we do not know, to have been the great secret of a Greek sculpture. Then we have an account, unfortunately by no means clear, of his theory of "deliberate amplification of surfaces":—

"In sculpture the projection of the muscular fasciculi must be accentuated, the foreshortening forced, the hollows deepened; sculpture is the art of the hole and the lump, not of clear, well-smoothed figures."

It is a view intelligible enough if we think of Giovanni Pisano and Michelangelo, but astounding from one who professes to follow the sculpture of Greece and Egypt, wherein the rhythmic sequence of untroubled planes is surely the dominant idea. Rodin's statement about the hole and the lump is clear enough, but M. Mauclair's explanation of the purpose of the "deliberate amplification of surfaces" seems to us very fanciful. He says that Rodin amplifies in this way in order to get atmosphere. "The thing," he says,

"was to amplify, with tact, certain parts of the modelling, the edges of which were swept by the light, so as to give a halo to the outline."

Now, as Rodin insists particularly on the unity of sculpture seen from all round, these edges might, as the figure was turned, cease to be those swept by the light, and what would give a halo from one point might conceivably lead to a hard unatmospheric contour in another. That Rodin does succeed in an extraordinary way in giving atmosphere to his figures cannot be denied, but this, we suspect, is rather by the morbidezza of his surface-modelling—a morbidezza which he has carried in some of his later works to too great an extreme.

M. Maclair, it seems to us, throughout accepts vague generalizations, suggestive hints thrown out in the conversations of the studio, too readily and too uncritically to enable him to give us a profound appreciation of Rodin's work. There is, indeed, no modern artist about whom it is more difficult to write—his work has the peculiar power of arousing in the spectator various and often conflicting overtones of feeling. It seems to go beyond its creator's intention, and to suggest ideas which were no part of the artist's original scheme. Of this Rodin himself seems perfectly conscious when he insists that he knows of no ideas but technical ones, that with him the plan and the successive contours are everything. The symbolism he leaves to his interpreters. The statue 'L'Age d'Airain' was in fact a purely realistic rendering of an accidental pose of the model, and the name, to which it owes not a little, was one of many interpretations suggested by Rodin's literary friends.

Still, though M. Maclair is rather the advocate than the critic, his book, if only for the many quotations from the master's conversations, is of genuine interest.

THE WHITECHAPEL ART GALLERY.

MR. AITKEN has accustomed us to expect great things of his annual exhibitions at Whitechapel. He brings pictures together in such a way as mutually to enhance their value, and makes his collections both instructive and interesting. This year he has surpassed all his former efforts, and, by collecting pictures executed within fifteen years on either side of the date 1855, has given us a clearer idea of the central movement of nineteenth-century art in England than most of us have ever had before. There are, of course, plenty of people living, like Sir William Richmond, who gave the inaugural address, who knew these pictures intimately when they first appeared; but even such may well get a new impression after all these years. To most of us, however, the camp followers of the Pre-Raphaelite movement are but little known, and Mr. Aitken has done well in accentuating their work rather than multiplying examples of Millais, Rossetti, and Holman Hunt. Perhaps the most general impression that these pictures will arouse is of their absorbing interest as illustration. The effect of the Pre-Raphaelite theory was to make the artist interested in things themselves, to give him a naïve and childish delight in their exact portrayal. The result is, of course, not at all realistic in the modern sense of the word. The emphasis on detail was altogether disproportionate to the artist's power of maintaining a unity, so that these literal renderings of Victorian interiors look strange and fantastic, and we gaze with wonder at such an interior as that of the Awakened Conscience, as at some delightful and improbable fairy tale, though we may be able to remember rooms that were similarly furnished. It is a result of this characteristic that precisely those qualities which, judged from a purely æsthetic standpoint, must be regarded as faults—for very few of the pictures here can be considered as completely unified wholes—give them a peculiar fascination as illustration. We become, like the artists themselves, childishly interested in the belongings of these whiskered dandies of the fifties and sixties, and in the fashions of the ladies whose hearts they fluttered. Here, too,

Mr. Aitken helps us out with some show cases of bonnets and skirts striped in violet and white, and waistcoats embroidered in magnificently bad taste.

It is altogether delightful to live back into the times when Meredith's heroes were young and people lived by Tennysonian sentiment, and one wonders whether we are preparing any such delights for the next generation. One fears not; our realists are so much more artistic, so much more grown up. People will look at Steers and Rothensteins as pictures and not as illustrations.

Another thing that strikes one is the chance that the theory which prevailed gave to the second-rate men to produce work that has a certain, though perhaps a slight, permanent interest. If an imitator of Sargent does not achieve a striking and complete unity he misses altogether—the parts of his picture have no meaning—but a Deverell, a Houghton, or a Smetham achieves something definite and personal. Where so much attention was focussed on the things represented, the mere choice and arrangement of these become significant of the artist's personality, and even if the picture as a whole is incomplete, there will be passages expressive of this intimate feeling for the significance of objects.

Still, few works here, regarded from any severe æsthetic standpoint, can be regarded as complete achievements. Such are one or two Rossettis—especially the superb Beatrice in Paradise and Dante meeting Beatrice. Burne-Jones's greatest masterpieces, the Sidonia and Clara von Borck, are among them. Millais's Mrs. Bischoffsheim is the most consummate piece of painting here, and makes one once more regret the mistake that placed at the service of such a mind the highest specific talent that any English artist ever had. Beside these we may perhaps put Madox Brown's Autumn Leaves, from a technical point of view one of the most remarkable, as it is also, we believe, the earliest of Pre-Raphaelite pictures. If, as is said, this picture was painted when Madox Brown was in Antwerp under Wappers, it is really the archetype of the whole school. It shows, indeed, that the term Pre-Raphaelite was a misnomer, for these artists did not really go to the Italian primitives, but to the Flemish. The technique of 'Autumn Leaves' is a wonderful rediscovery of the methods of Gerard David and his kindred, and this Flemish technique with the Flemish love of actuality dominated the whole work of the school until Burne-Jones began seriously to study the Italians. Even Rossetti derives, as his work here shows, rather from Gothic miniatures and Flemish painting than from the Italian. In any case, neither Madox Brown himself nor any of his followers ever surpassed this early effort in the certainty and solidity of the painting; only already we find here a fault which to some extent beset the whole school. The artist, in his intense desire to keep exactly to the outlines of his design, does not bring the background up to the contour in its full strength. The result is a kind of halo round the figures, which destroys the idea of relief. This was a fault for which he could not have found any precedent among the Flemish primitives, in whose work the edges, however firm, are never really hard.

Among the men of secondary importance Windus stands out as a remarkable colourist. We find him here, both in the intensely Pre-Raphaelite phase of the Too Late, one of the most successful pieces of Tennysonian painting, and in his later phases, where the love of colour for its own sake has led him to develop in the direction of Monticelli and Matthew Maris. Of the Liverpool School, of which a good deal is being made, he seems to us to be the only important artist. We ought, perhaps, to include also W. Bond, whose Car-narvon is a sound and vigorous piece of handling.

After Windus and Walter Deverell—whose one celebrated picture, A Lady feeding her Bird, is here—one of the most interesting men is James Smetham. His Hymn at the Last Supper is a notable composition. It scarcely suggests great technical skill, but the design is impressive in its direct simplicity and dramatic earnestness.

Among painters who preceded the Pre-Raphaelite movement proper we find here Etty, whose Venus is one of his best works, and Dyce, by whom there are several little-known pictures. His Madonna and Child has genuine feeling, in spite of its archaism, and his peculiar cold, dry colour scheme is carried through with real mastery. His Gethsemane is another beautiful and imaginative composition. Dyce surely deserves a better recognition of his powers than he has yet received.

But, indeed, besides those we have mentioned, there are a number of minor artists brought again to light by this interesting exhibition.

SARGENTS AT THE CARFAX GALLERY.

THE Carfax Gallery, which has moved into new premises in Bury Street, opens with a small show of Sargent's work. There are only three oil paintings, but these are remarkable. They are all comparatively early work. The portrait of Mlle. Gautreau has not, we think, been exhibited in England before. It shows Sargent as he was when the influence of Carolus Duran was still upon him, though already with powers which Carolus never possessed. It is, we think, Sargent's masterpiece. In no other work can we find a silhouette so subtly expressive, so tense and nervous throughout its whole course, as is the sweep of the arm seen in strong light against a dark background. And not only is the contour finely placed, the varying quality of the edge is also exquisitely expressive of the modelling of the planes. The hand, too, is masterly; it has an atmosphere and morbidezza which suggest Rubens and Vandyck. The head, with its hard cutting profile, strikes one at first sight as less satisfactory; but it is a wilful and intense interpretation of the outward character, and the verve with which the accents of eyebrow and nostril are inserted is amazing. Mr. Sargent has, no doubt, gained in the facility and certainty with which he places his contours; but they are no longer followed with the same flexibility; compared with this they are summary and inelastic.

The other two oils are also early works, exhibited, if we remember right, at the New English Art Club. One, The Egyptian, is a splendid "Academy," hardly more. The artist seems to have approached it with no parti-pris but that of pure accomplishment; the thing is done as well as it may be done, but it is passionless and coldly disinterested.

Something more comes out in the slighter rendering of the Javanese dancer. Not only has Mr. Sargent always had an astonishing eye for recording movement—as witness the 'Jaleo,' and, in this exhibition, the gondoliers in No. 24—but also movement seems to stir him to a more imaginative grasp of the subject; he accentuates and interprets more freely; something besides the mere power of realization seems to come into play. Here, certainly, in the strange flatness of the figure, in the mysterious rhythm of the head and hands, we get a glimpse of something more than mere actuality. We wish that Mr. Sargent would attempt some great theme in which his power of interpreting rapid movement could find expression.

For the rest, the water-colours of Spain and Venice scarcely bring out the finer aspects of Mr. Sargent's talent. They are amazingly brilliant; the certainty of his construction, even of complicated architectural forms, by means of a few rapid indications is almost miraculous; but the choice of the point of view and of the colour, always based on a crude opposition of blue and orange, appears to us to be wanting in distinction. What a place Queluz must be! and yet Mr. Sargent's rendering would do equally well for some scenic effect at Earl's Court.

MR. JAMES'S WATER-COLOURS AT VAN WISSELINGH'S.

MR. FRANCIS JAMES has a somewhat similar technique in water colour to that of Mr. Sargent, and, like him, his colour-sense seems sensitive only to the most positive notes. The strident crimson of a petunia, the morbid brilliance of zinnias, or the pink of a primula he understands, and renders with surprising accuracy, both as regards colour and texture; but his eye seems dazzled by these notes, and when he comes to the half-tones and shadows and the duller shades of green he is too easily satisfied with an uncertain tint. He does not lead up to his strongest notes and keep them precious. It would seem as though he stated these first, and then filled in with diminished interest the more neutral shades. Like Mr. Sargent, too, he renders his forms by a dexterous and rapid notation of the main masses, and in this difficult method he shows great facility. It is not one which allows of any very deliberate and searching design, or any cherishing and refining of the forms; but in exchange there is a freshness and spontaneity which is sometimes delightful. Mr. James shows in these studies a highly trained observation; he records the main characters of shape, colour, and texture with intimate knowledge. One guesses that he loves flowers, but his love has nothing poetical or meditative about it; he gives none of the atmosphere to his pictures that Fantin-Latour did, and his flowers have something of the air of being on show.

'THE TRUE PORTRAITURE OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.'

MAY I be allowed to offer a few remarks on Mr. Cust's letter in your last issue, and the difference of opinion it reveals between him and your reviewer? I leave the question of the identity of the jewels described in the 'Inventaires' with those in Lord Leven's picture to be further dealt with by your erudite reviewer, if he thinks fit. I may observe, however, that resemblances can be found between some of the jewels and their arrangement in Lord Leven's portrait of Mary and those in a work at Chantilly considered by M. L. Dimier to be a portrait of Henri III. when Duke of Anjou, and ascribed by this excellent authority to Jehan de Court (though I believe it is still labelled Janet). Coming then to the intrinsic merits, or otherwise, of Lord Leven's piece, the Keeper of the National Portrait Gallery says it was the opinion formed by the late Sir G. Scharf which led him (Mr. Cust) to omit this picture from those "worthy of serious consideration" in the work which he himself has published on 'The Authentic Portraits of Mary Stuart.' But, if the judgment of his predecessor is to be the criterion, it is easy to prove, from Mr. Cust's own book, that it does not always carry conviction with it: e.g., Sir George Scharf wrote to The Times in 1880 a long account of the small full-length called 'Mary Stuart,' added by the late Prince Consort to the Royal Collection, and now at Buckingham Palace. Sir George described this without hesitation as genuine, but Mr. Cust says (p. 130) he "cannot under any circumstances accept this as a true likeness." Again, on p. 125, I note that whilst the late Keeper was willing to accept the Hardwick portrait (that in a crespine and hat), Mr. Cust has been "compelled to reject the portrait altogether as that of Mary Stuart."

It is to be regretted that Mr. Cust does not state the grounds of his own opinion that Lord Leven's picture "cannot be the work of Jehan de Court, or that of another painter of the French School," since any light thrown upon a somewhat shadowy personality would be welcome. At present very little work by this Court painter is identified. I recall but one example attributed to him in this country, viz., that of Mary at Graystoke; and even in France, besides the portrait in the Musée Condé to which I have already referred, there are only two or three drawings in the "Cabinet des Estampes" assigned to him, according to M. Dimier.

But however unfamiliar his work may be to most of us, it was probably well known to Mary Stuart, and your reviewer has reminded us of the interesting fact, which he quotes from Teulet, that there was a Jehan de Court attached to Mary's household, and that he was better paid than her secretaries. As to when Lord Leven's picture was painted, Mr. Cust will pardon my saying that he is wrong in asserting that I "suppose" it to be contemporary. I have never said so. I termed it "worthy of attention, and technically a good picture," an estimate which a fresh examination of the original has confirmed. The suggestion that it "was made up in the seventeenth century," which would date it at the very earliest from thirty to forty years after Mary's flight from Scotland, sounds improbable, in view of the intimate and personal knowledge requisite to paint this elaborate piece, which is so different from the recognized posthumous portraits of her. Mr. Cust concedes that it is "carefully painted, the work of an expert artist, and, moreover, an undoubted likeness of Mary Stuart"—a handsome tribute indeed to Lord Leven's picture.

J. J. FOSTER.

In reply to the letter of Mr. Lionel Cust, I would gladly enter into details concerning the identity of the jewels in the Leven and Melville portrait with those in the Queen's Inventories. But this demands a good deal of space, and I am in hopes that new light may soon be thrown on the subject. Meanwhile, if the painting is decidedly not contemporary, I take it to be a good copy of a contemporary original. The historical objections to the theory of an archæological reconstruction of the seventeenth century, based on reminiscences not later than 1567, are too numerous to be stated at present.

THE REVIEWER.

SALES.

AT Messrs. Christie's on the 25th ult. the following pictures were sold: Lucas de Heere, Lady Jane Grey, in black velvet dress with pink sleeves, jewelled cap and ornaments, 115*l.* Hogarth, Portrait of a Lady, in brown dress, with white cap, 110*l.* A. Ramsay, Lady Catherine Hamner, in brown dress, with blue robe, 168*l.* Dutch School, An Astrologer, 105*l.*

The same firm sold on the 28th ult. the following engravings after Lawrence: Lady Acland and Family, by S. Cousins, 94*l.*; Marchioness of Exeter, by S. W. Reynolds (lot 44), 44*l.*; another copy (lot 45), 94*l.*; The Masters Antrobus, by G. Clint, 28*l.*; Sir Francis Baring with Mr. Charles Baring and Mr. Wall, by J. Ward, 58*l.*; Countess of Blessington, by S. Cousins, 43*l.*; The Calmady Children, by the same, 36*l.*; Lady Harriet Clive, by the same, 31*l.*; Miss Rosamund Croker, by the same, 90*l.*; John Philpot Curran, by J. R. Smith, 31*l.*; Lady Dover and Child, by S. Cousins, 157*l.*; Miss Farren, by F. Bartolozzi, 79*l.*; Countess Harriet Gower and her Child, by S. Cousins (lot 51), 162*l.*; another copy (lot 52), 110*l.*; Lady Grey and her Children, by the same, 120*l.*; Elizabeth, Countess Grosvenor, by the same, 81*l.*; Mrs. Jessop, by G. Clint, 42*l.*; Master Lambton, by S. Cousins, 231*l.*; Miss Macdonald, by the same, 26*l.*; Miss Julia Peel as a Child, by the same (lot 103), 65*l.*; another copy (lot 104), 49*l.*; Lady Peel, by the same, 86*l.*; The Right Hon. William Pitt (1), 54*l.*; Mrs. Stratton, by C. Turner, 42*l.*; Richard, Marquess Wellesley, by the same, 26*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

TO-DAY we are invited to view water-colours by Mr. Hubert Medlicott at the Doré Gallery, where Mr. Shapland has also paintings and water-colours on view. Other exhibitions open include water-colours and 'Wanderers,' a painting by Mr. G. H. Swinstead, at the Mendoza Gallery; the Radley Art Club at the Grafton Galleries; and small panels by Mr. W. F. Gaunt at the Applied Arts.

NEXT Saturday the Royal Society of Painters in Water Colours hold the private view of their summer exhibition.

IN view of the fact that, up to the present, about 40,000 persons have visited the Whistler Memorial Exhibition, and that the attendance shows no sign of falling off, the promoters have arranged with the Directors of the New Gallery to keep the exhibition open until the 15th of April.

THE death of Edward Dalziel, the celebrated engraver, at the great age of eighty-eight, on Saturday, brings back memories of a host of famous artists. The brothers Dalziel, he and George, engraved the work which may fairly be said to represent the golden period of book illustration. They commissioned many splendid things in wood-engraving which have become classic, though their renderings did not always please the artists they employed. The history of all this admirable activity may be found in a 'Record of Fifty Years' Work in conjunction with many of the Most Distinguished Artists of the Period 1840-1890.' For many years they were the engravers of Punch, The Cornhill Magazine, Good Words, and The Sunday Magazine. Edward Dalziel was the fifth son of Alexander Dalziel, who was himself a portrait painter; and three other brothers were engravers and draughtsmen. Details concerning the notable career and influence of the family may be found in our notice of his brother George (August 9th, 1902).

THE Report of the Director of the National Gallery for 1904, with Appendixes, has just been published as a Parliamentary Paper. The price is 2*d.*

FRENCH art has scored another triumph. Some two years ago the city of Barcelona offered a prize of 35,000 francs to the architect who submitted the best scheme for the embellishment of the city, and this prize has been won by a Toulousain, M. Jaussely, who won the Grand Prix de Rome in 1903. The other competitors were a German, an Italian, and two Spaniards.

M. ANTONIN PROUST, who died recently, was born at Niort on March 15th, 1832, and was partly English by descent. He was a versatile journalist, and was for many years connected with the fine-art administration of France. He was "commissaire général" of the Great Exhibition of 1889, and held a similar post for the French section at the World's Show at Chicago. He published many books, one of the most important of which was 'L'Art sous la République,' 1892, which was, in effect, a résumé of his administrative career.

WE are sorry to hear of the death, which occurred this week in New York, of Mr. Charles B. Curtis, in his seventy-eighth year. Mr. Curtis devoted a large portion of his life to the compilation of his book on 'Velasquez and Murillo,' which was published in 1883, and is not likely to be superseded as a reference work. The value of the book is its "descriptive and historical," rather than critical, catalogue of the works of the two greatest Spanish masters, and every detail that could be obtained is presented with an accuracy that was unusual in such books twenty years ago. Mr. Curtis occasionally contributed to our pages, and a very interesting communication from him concerning Mr. Huth's Velasquez portrait of Isabel de Bourbon appeared in The Athenæum of April 25th, 1896. He also wrote a work on 'Rembrandt's Etchings.'

MESSRS. AGNEW & SONS have been entrusted with the engraving of the State portrait of Her Majesty the Queen, painted by Mr. Luke Fildes, R.A., which will be placed in the forthcoming exhibition of the Royal Academy.

IN connexion with the reopening of Aberdeen Art Gallery, the Senatus of Aberdeen University propose to confer the degree of LL.D. on Prof. Alberto Galli, of Rome, Lord Reay, Prof. Bury, Mr. Francis John Haverfield, Mr. Edward Robinson, Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities at Boston, and Mr. Martin Maartens.

MUSIC

Musical Gossip.

THE Quatuor Capet (MM. Lucien Capet, L. Bailly, A. Turret, and Louis Hasselmans) from Paris made a first appearance in England at the eleventh Broadwood Concert last Thursday week. In their readings of Mozart in D minor and Beethoven in F, Op. 59, No. 1, they displayed thorough understanding of the music, and admirable ensemble. And yet in the Mozart we missed that naïveté and quiet charm which, when fully revealed, make that master's music so attractive. With Beethoven they were more successful; the slow movement, indeed, was rendered with marked feeling and fervour. Miss Ella Správka's performance of César Franck's 'Prélude, Choral, and Fugue' left much to desire.

DR. RICHTER had not sufficiently recovered to conduct the concert announced in his name at Queen's Hall last Monday evening. His place was taken by Herr Franz Beidler (of Bayreuth). The change naturally created disappointment, but the audience gave a hearty welcome to the deputy recommended by Dr. Richter himself. Herr Beidler knows exactly what he wants, and how to obtain it. But he showed at times too much storm and stress in his conducting; and one could not help thinking of the great effects which Dr. Richter produces with little outward effort. Herr Beidler, in his position as deputy, may naturally have felt nervous, a state of mind which easily leads to exaggeration both of tone and tempi. The programme included familiar Wagner excerpts and Beethoven's 'Eroica.'

THE last concert of old chamber music given by Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton took place at Messrs. Broadwood's rooms on Tuesday afternoon. The programme was one of considerable interest. At the previous concert was performed a Rondo for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Mozart, and this was repeated on Tuesday. The music, clever and delightfully fresh, was only discovered last year by Mr. W. Barclay Squire, while examining the works by Mozart in the British Museum for the new edition of Koechel's 'Thematic Catalogue.' The manuscript, consisting of an Allegro, incomplete, and the Rondo in question, had been catalogued many years ago as "Two movements in D for two pianos (eight hands)." The programme likewise included two Mozart Sonatas, each of one movement, for organ, two violins, and 'cello, performed (so it was announced) for the first time in this country. They are pleasing, though certainly not great. Bach was represented by his Concerto in A for harpsichord, with quartet accompaniment, and a Sonata in C minor for flute, violin, harpsichord, and 'cello. Since the concert-givers play so much old music, it seems a pity that they do not have a harpsichord. The scheme of the concerts is excellent, and many interesting works have been brought forward; we therefore hope they will be continued in the autumn.

RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF'S 'Antar' Symphony, performed a few years ago at the Queen's Hall under Mr. Henry J. Wood, was given at the third Philharmonic Concert on Wednesday evening; the work itself was produced in Russia close on a quarter of a century ago. As a specimen of modern programme-music, for the most part of a realistic kind, it is undoubtedly a curiosity. There is a fine 'Antar' theme, and some of the orchestral colouring is interesting, but it is unsatisfactory music. The Haydn Symphony, performed at the previous concert, with its bright, honest music thoroughly pleased the audience; the 'Antar' Symphony, with its fantastic programme, puzzled them, for in spite of much detail, the analyst had to confess that the connexion between story and music was frequently vague. The concert commenced with Mr. Arthur Herve's clever and effective tone-poem, 'In the East.' It was admirably played under the direction of Dr. Cowen, and as at the Cardiff Festival, where the work was produced, the composer met with a cordial reception. Señor Pablo Casals was heard in Saint-Saëns's 'Cello Concerto in A minor, and by his refined playing created a most favourable impression; while his performance of Bach's seldom-heard 'Cello Solo Suite in C was distinguished by commanding technique, and by a piquant, yet dignified reading of the music. His tone is beautiful, if not big; in a smaller hall it would be most delightful.

THE Worcester Musical Festival will commence on Sunday, September 10th. There will be on that day, as usual, a special service, with orchestra and with festival choir. On Tuesday the Festival proper opens with Elgar's 'Gerontius,' followed by a new work by Mr. Ivor Atkins and Brahms's Fourth Symphony. In the evening the programme includes Bach's 'Sleepers, wake,' Mozart's 'Requiem,' a Motet by Cornelius, and a Beethoven Symphony. On Wednesday morning will be given Parry's 'De Profundis,' a selection from César Franck's 'Les Béatitudes,' the 'Hymn of Praise,' and Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung.' Thursday morning will be devoted to Elgar's 'Apostles,' Thursday evening to 'Elijah,' and Friday morning to 'The Messiah.' In the evening there will be a grand closing service by the Three Choirs. The usual miscellaneous concert in the Public Hall will take place on the Wednesday evening.

THE Bristol Festival will be held under the conductorship of Mr. George Riseley, October 11th-14th. The draft programme is as follows:—'The Messiah' (complete), 'Elijah,' Mozart's Mass in C minor (first time in England), 'Engedi' (i.e., Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives'), 'Lohengrin' (complete opera without cuts), 'Edipus at Colonus' by Mendelssohn, 'The Dream of Gerontius,' Brahms's 'Gesang der Parzen' (which was once performed at a Richter Concert, May 5th, 1884), and for the first time Richard Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel' for chorus, soli, and orchestra. The instrumental works will be: Berlioz's 'Fantastic Symphony' and 'Lelio,' Beethoven's Violin Concerto, and Mozart's Concerto for Two Pianofortes.

THE prize of 100*l.* offered by Messrs. Chappell last April for the best comic opera libretto has been awarded to Mr. H. D. Banning, who was educated at Shrewsbury and Trinity College, Oxford. He is only twenty-eight years old. No composer as yet has been commissioned to write music to it.

THE operatic season at the Waldorf Theatre is to open on May 22nd under the management of Mr. Russell. Among the works promised are: a new one-act opera, 'Fiorella,' by Mr. Amherst Webber, Paer's 'Maestro di Capella,' Pergolesi's 'Serva Padrona,' Cilea's 'Adriana Lecouvreur,' Gluck's 'Orfeo' (with Miss Giulia Ravogli), and Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale.' The last two works, as we have announced, are to be revived at Covent Garden.

DURING the forthcoming exhibition season at Venice, Signor Sonzogno will give performances of various works, including Giacomo Orefice's 'Mosè' and Wolf-Ferrari's oratorio, 'Vita Nuova.'

M. ALBERT CARRÉ will shortly produce Gabriel Dupont's prize opera, 'La Cabrera,' at the Paris Opéra-Comique.

THE death is announced at Weimar of Emilie Merian Genast, a gifted vocalist, in her seventy-third year. Her grandfather Anton, her father Eduard, and her mother Christine, née Böhrer, all belonged to the Weimar Theatre, and were held in high esteem by Goethe.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |   |
|--------|---|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.                           |
| —      | Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.                                       |
| MON.   | Mr. Jacques Thibaud's Orchestral Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.            |
| —      | Subscription Concert, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.                             |
| —      | Miss Dora Bright's Orchestral Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.          |
| TUES.  | Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus's Orchestral Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.           |
| —      | Miss Clara Blumenthal's Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.                |
| WED.   | Miss Agnes Nicholls and Mr. H. Harty's Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall. |
| THURS. | Mr. Manuel Garcia's Vocal Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.                   |
| —      | Broadwood Concert, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.                                |
| FRI.   | Hallad Concert, 3, Bechstein Hall.                                    |
| —      | Messrs. A. Jonson and E. Lemare's Wagner Lecture, 5, Aeolian Hall.    |
| SAT.   | Miss Susan Strong's Song Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.                  |
| —      | Miss Chaplin's Children's Concert, 3, Steinway Hall.                  |

DRAMA

THE 'TROADES' IN ENGLISH VERSE.

The Trojan Women of Euripides. Translated into English Rhyming Verse by Gilbert Murray. (Allen.)

THE 'Troades' was the third play of a trilogy, of which the two earlier members were the 'Alexander' and the 'Palamedes.' Contrary to the custom which by the time of its production (B.C. 415) was well established, the three plays must have formed a connected series, after the fashion of the Æschylean trilogies; nor, in the light of the one surviving drama of the three, is it difficult to discern the main purpose running through the whole. It is, in effect, a moral criticism of the event which, to the Greeks of the fifth century, was the basis alike of their history and of their literature, the Trojan War. The first play of the series set forth the guilt of the Trojans—of Alexander (Paris) in the abduction of Helen, and of the Trojan people in her retention. This guilt vitiated the whole of their defence of their country, and involved, in the moral order of the universe, their final overthrow; but over against it was set, in the second drama, the crime of the Greeks in the judicial murder of Palamedes, the representative of inventive genius, made the victim of the jealousy and treachery of Odysseus, and the blindness and malevolence of the Greeks in general. The 'Troades' gives us the outcome of these sins; not, however, by a general distribution of poetical justice, but, in a more truly poetic spirit, by showing the utter ruin of one of the parties to the struggle, while at the same time we see plain indications of the punishment about to overtake the triumphant conquerors. We are left with the sense that the guilt of Troy has been purged by suffering, and that the Greek leaders have still to learn, in their own proper persons, the lesson which they have inflicted on their victims.

Dramatic, in the sense of containing a striking conflict of actions and passions, or unexpected inversions of fortune, the 'Troades' is not; but in all Greek literature, perhaps, no such accumulation of pathos is attempted as is comprised in the first 800 lines of this play. It is the morrow of the great catastrophe, and all that is implied in the siege and fall of Troy—the deaths of a great king like Priam, a noble-hearted warrior like Hector, the ruin of a queenly town, the captivity and shame of the helpless women, great and small, who are involved in the overthrow of their cause—is set poignantly before us in the lamentations of Hecuba, Cassandra, Andromache, and the chorus. The climax is reached, just when the reader thinks that the cup of suffering must be full, by the brutal decision of the Greek leaders, inspired by Odysseus, to tear Astyanax, the child of Hector and Andromache, from his mother's arms and hurl him from the walls of Troy, that no possible avenger may be left. In the scene where Talthybius reluctantly announces this irrevocable doom the self-restrained passion of the bereft mother is one of the highest moments of Greek tragedy. From this point, in accordance with the law of Greek drama, the strain is somewhat relaxed, and though gloom hangs over the whole action till the end, when the walls of Troy crash down in fire and smoke, the note of personal suffering is less poignant, the expression of grief carries with it a sense of resignation, though it be only the resignation of exhaustion.

But through all this scene of accumulated suffering runs a note of moral purpose, of the moralization of pain, which must be taken to represent the poet's philosophy. In accordance with the principles of Greek art, the note is not forced, the theme is nowhere developed at length; but it appears in such passages as ll. 400-4:—

Would ye be wise, ye cities, fly from war!
Yet if war come, there is a crown in death
For her that striveth well and perisheth
Unstained: to die in evil were the stain!
Therefore, O Mother, pity not thy slain,
Nor Troy, nor me, the bride:

or Hecuba's words (ll. 1240-45):—

Lo, I have seen the open hand of God;
And in it nothing, nothing, save the rod
Of mine affliction, and the eternal hate,
Beyond all lands, chosen and lifted great For Troy! Vain, vain were prayer and incenseswell

And bulls' blood on the altars!.....All is well.
Had He not turned us in His hand, and thrust
Our high things low and shook our hills as dust,
We had not been this splendour, and our wrong
An everlasting music for the song
Of earth and heaven!

It is no wonder that this play, with its dramatization of one of the great tragedies of history, its pathos, its characteristic moral purpose, has appealed to so sympathetic a student of Euripides as Mr. Murray, and has led him to select it for his next essay in translation, and likewise for his next venture in placing a Greek play upon the English stage. His version has the same characteristics and the same striking merits as we noticed in his previous translations of the 'Bacchæ' and 'Hippolytus.' It is the version not only of a scholar, but also of a poet; and, as we said before, we could place it in the hands of a reader unacquainted with Greek, without feeling that the spirit and poetry of the play suffer material loss in the metamorphosis. Of hardly any other translation from the Greek can this be said. Greek scholars may object that the style is too florid, and, to some extent, their objection would be justified. The colouring is unquestionably heightened throughout. Ideas and images latent in the original are made prominent in the translation; and sometimes (but less often than the casual reader, who does not take the trouble to compare the English with the Greek, would suspect) ideas are introduced for which there is no direct justification in the original. But this is due to Mr. Murray's deliberate theory of translation. Mr. Murray holds, in effect, that a literal version of the words of a poem is not a true translation of it. Tone and colour are lost by its transposition into another language; and they must be replaced by the tone and colour appropriate to the language into which it is transposed. As a matter of theory we agree, and always have agreed, with this principle; and, as a matter of practice, we hold that Mr. Murray justified his theory in his previous volume of translations, and has justified it again in his new volume. There is no translation from Greek poetry on any extended scale which we rank above his, and we look forward with the greatest hope to the remaining plays of Euripides which he promises us.

The two quotations given above are fair specimens of Mr. Murray's handling of the iambic passages of the original. The heightened colouring of which we have spoken appears most markedly in the second passage, where the Greek of the first six lines runs:—

οὐκ ἦν ἄρ' ἐν θεοῖσι πλὴν οὔμοι πόνοι Τροίᾳ τε πόλεων ἔκκριτον μισομένη, μάτην δ' ἐβουθυτοῦμεν.

As an example of lyrics, we will take the second strophe of the ode which intervenes between the first half of the play and the second, and which serves the dramatic purpose of relaxing the strain which the preceding scene between Andromache and Talthybius has strung to the uttermost (ll. 819-38):—

In vain, all in vain,
O thou, 'mid the wine-jars golden
That movest in delicate joy,
Gaunymedes, child of Troy,
The lips of the highest drain
The cup in thine hand upholden:
And thy mother, thy mother that bore thee,
Is wasted with fire and torn;
And the voice of her shores is heard,
Wild, as the voice of a bird,
For lovers and children before thee
Crying, and mothers outworn.
And the pools of thy bathing are perished,
And the windstrewn ways of thy feet:
Yet thy face as aforetime is cherished
Of Zeus, and the breath of it sweet;
Yea, the beauty of calm is upon it
In houses at rest and afar.
But thy land, He hath wrecked and o'erthrown it
In the wailing of war.

This is English poetry, the poetry of a disciple of Swinburne; yet there is no word in it for which there is not the amplest warrant in the Greek. The same may be said of the lines which describe the last happy evening of Troy, after the rejoicings over the supposed flight of the Greeks (ll. 542-50):—

A very weariness of joy
Fell with the evening over Troy:
And lutes of Afric mingled there
With Phrygian songs: and many a maiden,
With white feet glancing light as air,
Made happy music through the gloom:
And fires on many an inward room
All night broad-flashing, flung their glare
On laughing eyes and slumber-laden.

With these samples, taken almost at random, we commend the book to all lovers of poetry. It will repay a scholar to compare it carefully with the original, and note how skilfully, yet poetically, the meaning of each turn and phrase has been expressed; while the reader who is inexperienced in Greek may understand from this version what Aristotle meant when he called Euripides the most pathetic of poets. Mr. Murray's introduction and notes, it may be observed in conclusion, add all that is necessary for the comprehension of the play and the explanation of particular points in the translation.

THE WEEK.

HIS MAJESTY'S.—Revival of A Man's Shadow.
Adapted from the French of Mary and Grisier by Robert Buchanan.

ON its first production at the Haymarket on September 12th, 1889, 'A Man's Shadow' was greeted as something like a triumph of adaptation. A more qualified estimate is now formed. Judged as melodrama, in which light only the piece can be regarded, 'Roger la Honte,' from which it is taken, is inferior in most respects to 'Les Deux Gosses,' while the task of Buchanan did not extend far beyond the indispensable process of abridgment and the alteration of a singularly inept termination. Such gain, purely theatrical, as attends the English version, consists in assigning to the same actor the two characters Laroque and Luversan, the resemblance between whom constitutes the motive of the play. This process, of course, assigns to the work a suspicious resemblance to 'The Lyons Mail'—a fact displeasing, it may be presumed, neither to the dramatist nor to the actor entrusted with the principal rôle. The most effective scene, that of the examination by the President of the Court of the child who has witnessed the murder and believes herself to have recognized in the assassin her father, whom she is naturally reluctant to convict, belongs to both pieces. A scene in which, through zeal for his client, an avocat persists in his defence, though in so doing he puts the seal on his own unhappiness and establishes his wife's infamy, remains excellent from the point of melodrama. The two principal parts are in the hands of the original exponents. Mr. Tree plays with much earnestness and picturesqueness the part of the unjustly oppressed man, with which he couples that of his relentless double. Mr. Fernandez also repeats a powerful presentation of the counsel who dies in an heroic attempt to discharge professional functions which bring with them intolerable shame and smart. Miss Constance Collier gives valuable assistance as a woman of passionate temperament and morbid jealousy. The revival is interesting and stimulating, and will doubtless serve the temporary purpose for which it is intended.

COMEDY.—Lady Ben: a Comedy in Four Acts. By George Pleydell Bancroft.

'LADY BEN' is the most considerable work yet given us by Mr. Bancroft, whose contributions to the stage have, indeed, not been numerous. It is rather bald in dialogue, is not free from artifice, and is guilty of the singular indiscretion of setting off the audience full cry on what proves to be a false scent. On the other hand, it is fresh in motive, bright, and thoroughly sympathetic; it is fairly successful in respect of characterization, and leads to one or two novel and powerful situations. Its chief motive is paternal affection for a not very worthy object. With this is coupled, however, boyish adoration for a woman of ripening years, an affection on the part of a youth for a married woman which approaches passion, and is for a while mistaken for it, but which cannot stand the strain of absence. That the story of the amours of Henry Ballantyne with the so-called Lady Ben is wholly edifying will not be maintained. No serious harm attends, however, the dalliance of the pair, while its existence gives rise to some interesting and amusing complications. Success was assisted by a fine performance by Mr. J. D. Beveridge, one of the soundest and most trustworthy actors our stage possesses; Miss Darragh struck firmly a true note as the heroine; and Mr. Frank Cooper, Mr. Charles Fulton, and others were seen to advantage. One or two young actors created a highly favourable impression. Mr. Charles Maude joined to a really juvenile appearance much genuine power, and Miss Betty Callish gave a performance of a French maid which, though a little restless and exaggerated, was of singularly high promise. One or two noisy dissentients tried to wreck the fortunes of a piece which was, in fact, a genuine success.

THEATRE OF THE WALSINGHAM CLUB.—A Man's Love: a Play in Three Acts. Translated from the Dutch of Jan C. de Vos by J. T. Grein and C. W. Jarvis.

A LITTLE sordid and wholly commonplace is the short piece which Messrs. Grein and Jarvis have translated from the Dutch, and produced in English. It shows the reciprocal passion between a Dutch hero and his wife's sister, and, while giving an animated picture of illicit relations, succeeds in extracting from the subject an unexceptionable moral. Miss Frerike Boros, who played the heroine, exhibits unusual command of our language, and is a competent artist. Other parts were well played by Miss Dorothy Drake and Mr. Acton Bond.

Dramatic Gossip.

'A SCRUPULOUS MAN,' given for a benefit at the St. James's on the 23rd ult., is an adaptation by Mr. Max Hecht of 'Scruples,' by Octave Mirbeau. It depicts an abortive attempt on the part of an amateur "cracksman" and his valet to steal the treasures of an art connoisseur, their interruption in their task by the owner resulting in a pleasant interview and a half-implied promise of a future intimacy based on similarity of tastes. The amusing trifle was well played by Mr. Alexander as the burglar, and Mr. Eric Lewis as his victim and protector.

'THE BIRD AT THE NECK,' a one-act play by X. L., which is being played on tour by Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, and has been given at the King's Theatre, Hammersmith, has a romantic but needlessly miserable story, in the course of which Mrs. Kendal, as the heroine, commits virtual suicide. The title is said to be derived from a passage in the Koran that "the bird [or fate] of every man is bound about his neck." The strongest situation is that in which one of two men condemned to die, and refused a priest, confesses to the other an act of adultery, only to discover that it is the wronged husband he has chosen as the recipient of his avowal.

AT Mr. Tree's two recent presentations at His Majesty's Theatre of 'Hamlet,' Miss Beatrice Forbes Robertson won deservedly high recognition for her performance of Ophelia, a part in which she had also supported Mr. Tree in Oxford.

SIR HENRY IRVING, who is staying at Torquay, has been compelled to abandon his arrangements for appearing during the "Shakspeare week" at Stratford, but still proposes to fulfil his Easter engagement at Drury Lane.

SIR SQUIRE BANCROFT repeated at His Majesty's Theatre, before the students of the Academy of Dramatic Art, his address 'Dramatic Thoughts: Retrospective—Anticipative.' This he has issued in printed form, in which shape it repays attentive perusal.

THE one hundred and fiftieth and final representation of 'Peter Pan' for the present takes place at the Duke of York's this evening.

THE run at the Criterion of 'The Freedom of Suzanne' will be suspended on the 5th inst., and the theatre will then pass into the hands of Miss Ethel Irving, who will open with a rendering by Mr. Brookfield of 'Chou,' a new comedy by Madame Gressac and M. Pierre Veber.

WE learn of the death of Maurice Barrymore, an excellent actor and a successful dramatist. Born in India in 1847, he played frequently in America and occasionally in England. In his own 'Nadjesda,' a drama of Russian life, in a prologue and three acts, given at the Haymarket on January 2nd, 1886, he played Paul Devereux to the Nadjesda of Miss Emily Rigl. Mr. Tree, Miss Lydia Foote, and other well-known artists were in the cast. Mr. Barrymore was the father of Miss Ethel Barrymore. He had lived for some time under restraint. 'Honour,' his adaptation of 'L'Honneur de la Maison' of Battu and Desvignes, was given at the Court under John Clayton's management on the 24th of September, 1881.

To the Jahrbuch der Deutschen Shakespeare-Gesellschaft Mr. Charles Crawford has contributed a valuable paper, establishing on internal evidence the claim of Ben Jonson to a share in the authorship of 'The Bloody Brother' of Beaumont and Fletcher.

'L'ANGE DU FOYER,' by MM. G. A. de Caillavet and Robert de Flers, an amusing story of conjugal mistakes and reconciliations, is brilliantly interpreted at the Nouveautés by MM. Noblet and Torin, and Madame Carlux.

'LE TALISMAN,' a four-act play in verse by M. Louis Marsolleau at the Bouffes-Parisiens, is a rendering of a well-known story of Hans Christian Andersen, which has already been dramatized by Herr Ludwig Fulda.

'LES FAÇADES,' a four-act drama founded by M. Pierre Berton on a novel by M. François de Nion, has been accepted by M. Porel for the Gymnase-Dramatique.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—D. C. B.—G. G.—G. & R.—R. S.—A. W.—A. F. S.—received.
G. D.—S. H.—Many thanks.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW LIST POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

NOW READY, COMPLETE.

In 5 vols. 21s. net each; or in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

BRYAN'S DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged under the supervision of

C. G. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.,

Assisted by a Staff of Specialists.

With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates.

Illustrated Prospectus on application.

In this Edition upwards of 1,400 New Biographies have been added, and nearly 6,000 Corrections made in Articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 Lives have been partly rewritten.

"No one interested in the Fine Arts can afford to be without this comprehensive and indispensable dictionary."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Will no doubt take rank among the standard publications of the twentieth century."—Studio.

"The new Bryan reflects the greatest credit on the editor and publishers. The book, long since recognized as a classic, will be more than ever indispensable."—Magazine of Art.

CHEAPER REISSUE. 8s. 6d. net.

LORENZO LOTTO. An Essay in Constructive Art Criticism. By BERNHARD BERENSON. With numerous Illustrations.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net each; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net each.

BROWNING. By Sir Frank T. MARZIALS, C.B.
[Bell's Miniature Series of Great Writers.]

BRAHMS. By Herbert Autcliffe.
[Bell's Miniature Series of Musicians.
[Ready April 5.]

CHEAPER REISSUE. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The WAR of the SUCCESSION in SPAIN during the Reign of Queen Anne, 1702-1711. Based on Original Manuscripts and Contemporary Records. By Col. the Hon. ARTHUR PARNELL, R.E.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER. Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUMES.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE. Motteux's Translation, Revised. With Lockhart's Life and Notes. 2 vols.

EMERSON'S WORKS. Edited and Collated by GEORGE SAMPSON. Vol. IV. Containing Miscellaneous Pieces.

COLERIDGE'S TABLE TALK and OMNIANA. Arranged and Edited by T. ASHE, B.A.

DRAPER'S HISTORY of the INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE. 2 vols.

The THOUGHTS of MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS. Translated by GEORGE LONG, M.A. With an Essay on Marcus Aurelius by MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASCAL'S THOUGHTS. Translated from the Text of M. AUGUSTE MOLINIER by C. KEGAN PAUL.
[Ready April 5.]
Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

FROM MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

JOHN GRAHAM of CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT of DUNDEE, 1648-89. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"Not only well arranged and well written, but based upon an exhaustive study of original authorities."—Academy.

"On the whole it does not seem too much to say that this book promises to be the definitive biography of a man whose character has been traduced by 'prejudice founded upon wilful neglect of evidence.'"—Morning Post.

CATHERINE DE MEDICI and the FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL, Author of 'Women and Men of the French Renaissance,' 'The Household of the Lafayettes,' &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 illustrations, 15s. net.

"She has displayed in the pages before us the most excellent qualities of temper, industry, and perception, and in her treatment of an enigmatic and elusive figure she has neither ignored the complications of her material nor shrunk from solving its perplexities.....Miss Sichel's delineation of this remarkable and unhallowed woman conforms to the best standards of historical work, and will dissatisfy neither the scholar nor the less pretentious seeker of interest and entertainment."—Pall Mall Gazette.

The KING in EXILE (CHARLES II.) By Eva Scott, Author of 'Rupert Prince Palatine.' Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15s. net.

"A most welcome contribution to historical literature upon a period in Charles's life of which the average student knows comparatively little." Daily Graphic.

A HISTORY of the ANCIENT WORLD. By George STEPHEN GOODSPEED, Ph.D., Professor of Ancient History in the University of Chicago. With illustrations, Maps, and Plans. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net. [Just published.]

The RUSSO-JAPANESE CONFLICT. By K. Asakawa, Lecturer on the Far East at Dartmouth College. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

A REGISTER of NATIONAL BIBLIOGRAPHY. By W. P. COURTNEY. In 2 vols. demy 8vo, 31s. 6d. net.

GENERAL LEE'S LETTERS and RECOLLECTIONS. By Capt. ROBERT E. LEE. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

FAR and NEAR. By John Burroughs. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

BITS of GOSSIP. By Rebecca Harding Davis. Reminiscences of the famous "New England" School of Writers. Fcap. 8vo, 5s. net.

The SUN and the SERPENT. A Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy 8vo, with 33 Full-Page illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

NATURAL HISTORY in ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS. By FRANK E. BEDDARD, M.A., Oxon, F.R.S. F.Z.S., &c. Illustrated by GAMBIER BOLTON and WINIFRED AUSTEN. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE: the Doukhobors. By Aylmer MAUDE, Author of 'Tolstoy and his Problems.' Demy 8vo, illustrated, 6s. net.

POETRY.

PENTHESILEA. A Poem. By Laurence Binyon, Author of 'The Death of Adam,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

A ROBIN'S SONG, and other Poems. By Mary Scott. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"Very melodious and pleasant little poems."—Gentleman.

ST. FRIDESWIDE, and other Poems. By Florence HAYLLER. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

"Invested with a weird and magical atmosphere, such as Coleridge knew well how to produce.....The suppressed intensity of the feeling and the strong, bold touches are not unworthy of him."—Athenæum.

READY ON APRIL 17.

FREE OPINIONS

FREELY EXPRESSED.

By MARIE CORELLI. Crown 8vo, 6s.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

The JAPANESE SPIRIT. By Okakura-Yoshisaburo. With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

JOHN FLETCHER'S MADONNA. By Mrs. Comyns CARR, Author of 'Cottage Folk,' &c.

"Mrs. Comyns Carr has very cleverly worked out an original idea, contriving her picture in a perfect mosaic of picturesque detail.....The Baron strongly recommends it to those capable of enjoying a good novel when they get it."—Punch.

CRITTENDEN. By John Fox, Author of 'The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come.'

"'Crittenden' will be found worth reading, both as a story and as history.....It is written in an easy, vigorous style, and the interest never flags."—Academy.

IN SEARCH of the UNKNOWN. By Robert W. CHAMBERS, Author of 'The Maids of Paradise,' 'Cardigan,' &c.

"The stories are delightful, and highly to be recommended." Westminster Gazette.

"All who care for the fantastic or whimsical will find this book exactly fitted to wile away an hour with unusual entertainment."—Morning Post.

The STEPPING STONE. By Helen Hester Colvill, Author of 'Our Wills and Fates,' &c.

TALES of RYE TOWN. By Maud Stepney Rawson, Author of 'A Lady of the Regency,' &c.

A ROUGH REFORMER. By Ernest Glanville, Author of 'The Kloof Bride,' &c.

JÖRN UHL. By Gustav Frenssen. Translated from the German. Over 180,000 have already been sold of this remarkable Novel.

NEW EDITIONS AND REPRINTS.

The FIGHT with FRANCE for NORTH AMERICA. By A. G. BRADLEY, Author of 'Wolfe,' &c. Demy 8vo, illustrated, 3s. 6d. net.

BARTHOLOMEW SASTROW. The Memoirs of a German Burgomaster. Translated by ALBERT VANDAM. Introduction by HERBERT FISHER, M.A. Extra crown 8vo, illustrated, 3s. 6d. net.

FARTHEST NORTH. By Fridtjof Nansen. About 700 demy 8vo pages. Illustrated with a Portrait, Map, and about 20 Full-Page Plates. Cloth gilt, 6s.

CITIES of INDIA. By G. W. Forrest, C.I.E., ex-Director of Records, Government of India. With 30 illustrations. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

TRAVELS ROUND OUR VILLAGE. By Eleanor G. HAYDEN, Author of 'From a Thatched Cottage,' &c. With illustrations and Cover Design by L. LESLIE BROOKE. Extra crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE MAUDE VERSIONS OF TOLSTOY.

Uniform, small crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net each.

RESURRECTION. With a Preface and Appendix. 33 illustrations by PASTERNAK.

SEVASTOPOL, and other Military Tales. With Portrait, Map, and Preface.

PLAYS: The POWERS of DARKNESS, FRUITS of CULTURE, and THE FIRST DISTILLER.

PLEASE WRITE FOR COMPLETE CATALOGUE AND ANNOUNCEMENT LIST AND PROSPECTUSES OF ALL NEW BOOKS.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., LIMITED, 16, James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                                      | £. | s. | d. |
|--------------------------------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX,FOURTH SERIES ...  | 3  | 3  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,SIXTH SERIES ...   | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,SEVENTH SERIES ... | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,EIGHTH SERIES ...  | 0  | 6  | 0  |

For Copies by post an additional Three-pence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NORWICH UNION FIRE OFFICE.

Founded 1797.

HEAD OFFICE: NORWICH.

CHIEF 59, Fleet Street, E.C.

LONDON OFFICES 71, 72, King William Street, E.C.

Claims Paid ..... £18,065,000

Applications for Agencies invited.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

[Estab.] FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. [1835.]

Accumulated Fund over ... £6,000,000
Paid in Claims more than ... £12,400,000

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS,

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,

ACCIDENT AND DISEASE

(SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA, APPENDICITIS, &amp;c.)

BURGLARY AND FIDELITY INSURANCE.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

Established 1849

CLAIMS PAID £4,800,000

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, GOUT,

And INDIGESTION,
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

JUST PUBLISHED. BY J. J. FOSTER, F.S.A.

CONCERNING THE TRUE PORTRAITURE OF MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Sumptuously Illustrated by Large Plates, some in Colour, from ORIGINALS in the Collection of HIS MAJESTY THE KING,
MARQUIS OF AILSA, EARL CATHCART, DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE, EARL OF LEVEN AND MELVILLE, EARL OF DENBIGH, EARL OF MORTON, DUKE OF PORTLAND, &c.

The entire Edition is EXTREMELY LIMITED, namely:—

45 Copies only of an ÉDITION ROYALE, at 25 Guineas net, and 175 Copies of an ÉDITION DE LUXE, at 10 Guineas net

In the ÉDITION ROYALE, 20 of the Pictures and Drawings are Coloured by Hand from the Originals, and the Plates printed upon Japanese Vellum; in the ÉDITION DE LUXE, 6 of the Drawings are Coloured in Facsimile of the Originals.

"This magnificent folio of Mr. Foster.....A really beautiful book."—Athenæum."Mr. Foster's sumptuous and remarkable volume.....A most exhaustive, well-weighed, well-balanced study."—Standard."This is a magnificent book. Itself a work of art, it will interest and fascinate students of art and history, all who take a profound interest in the Queen of Scots."—Scotsman."The author is as careful and exhaustive as he is critical."—Glasgow Herald.

DICKINSONS, 114, New Bond Street, London.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

TWELFTH EDITION JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS:

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

THE PENNY CHRONOLOGY:

A Series of Important Dates in the History of the World from the Reign of David to the Present Time.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

DEIGHTON, BELL & CO. CAMBRIDGE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

NEW EDITION, Revised, with 2 Photogravure Plates.

THE RISEN MASTER.

A SEQUEL TO

PASTOR PASTORUM.

By HENRY LATHAM, M.A.,
Late Master of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

ELEVENTH THOUSAND.

PASTOR PASTORUM;

Or, the Schooling of the Apostles by our Lord.

Crown 8vo, price 6s. 6d.

FOURTH THOUSAND.

A SERVICE OF ANGELS.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

SECOND EDITION, demy 8vo, cloth, price 10s. net.

STUDIES OF ARIANISM.

Chiefly referring to the Character and Chronology of the Reaction which followed the Council of Nicæa.

By HENRY MELVILL GWATKIN, M.A.,
Dixie Professor of Ecclesiastical History,
Cambridge.

Extra crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

With Portrait, Map, and Illustrations.

MEMORIALS OF THE HON. ION KEITH-FALCONER

By R. SINKER, D.D.,
Librarian of Trinity College, Cambridge.
New Edition, with the subsequent History of the Mission to the Mohammedans of Southern Arabia.

Crown 8vo, cloth, pp. viii-160, price 5s.

EIGHTH EDITION.

THE ELEMENTARY GEOMETRY OF CONICS.

By Rev. C. TAYLOR, D.D.,
Master of St. John's College, Cambridge.

"The book is in many respects the best and most reliable text-book on the Geometry of Conics that can be obtained."—Mathematical Gazette.

BY THE LATE W. ALLEN WHITWORTH.

CHOICE AND CHANCE.

An Elementary Treatise on Permutations, Combinations, and Probability.

With 640 Exercises.

Fifth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

CHOICE AND CHANCE.

700 Exercises, including Hints for the Solution of all the Questions in 'Choice and Chance.'

With a Chapter on the Summation of Certain Series and a Gresham Lecture on 'Some Points in the Philosophy of Chance.'

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL & CO.
London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

MAJOR MARTIN HUME'S NEW BOOK.

NOW READY, price 7s. 6d.

SPANISH INFLUENCE

ON

ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By MARTIN HUME,
Examiner in Spanish in the University of London,
C. de la Real Academia Española y de la
Real Academia de la Historia.

PRESS OPINIONS.

TIMES.—"Major Hume's treatment of this complicated and fascinating theme is a model of illuminative compression.....Lucid and thorough chapters."

MORNING POST.—"Mr. Martin Hume has made a fascinating book—fascinating, that is, for readers of literary tastes—out of his ten lectures on 'Spanish Influence on English Literature.'"

SPANISH INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By MARTIN HUME.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"We will only say that henceforward this book will be indispensable to every student of the subject."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Critical readers will find in this scholarly volume a sound and thoroughly exhaustive study of a fascinating subject."

SPANISH INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By MARTIN HUME.

SCOTSMAN.—"Major Hume's new book will be found extremely interesting, suggestive, and stimulating."

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"An interesting and valuable book."

SPANISH INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By MARTIN HUME.

DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Hume is one of, perhaps, three men in England who have a right to speak with authority under such a title as this."

GLOBE.—"An excellent contribution to the comparative study of European literatures."

SPANISH INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.

By MARTIN HUME.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The whole book will be found exceedingly interesting and stimulating."

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Substantial, well written, erudite, and interesting."

STANDARD.—"Major Hume's volume is a most valuable contribution to literary history, and an example of English critical scholarship at its best."

London: EVELEIGH NASH, 32, Bedford Street.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

NEW 6s. NOVELS.

A SPOILER OF MEN.

By RICHARD MARSH,
Author of 'The Beetle.'

FLORENCE WARDEN'S NEW NOVEL.

On APRIL 3.

THE YOUNGEST MISS BROWN.

By FLORENCE WARDEN,
Author of 'The House on the Marsh.'

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF
'THE LEAVENWORTH CASE.'

On APRIL 10.

THE MILLIONAIRE BABY.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN
(Mrs. Charles Rohlf),
Author of 'The Leavenworth Case.'

The following Six-Shilling Novels will also be ready shortly.

THE PHANTOM TORPEDO-

BOATS. By ALLEN UPWARD.

STINGAREE. By E. W. HORNUNG.

THE ERROR OF HER WAYS.

By FRANK BARRETT.

THE MISSING ELIZABETH.

By ADELINE SERGEANT.

BALIOI GARTH.

By ALGERNON GISSING.

DILYS.

By Mrs. F. E. PENNY.

Fcap. 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

LI TING OF LONDON.

By GEORGE R. SIMS.

Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net.

MACAULAY'S HISTORY OF ENGLAND. Vol. I.

NEW VOLUME OF THE "ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY."

SHORTLY, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

THE WILD MARQUIS.

Life and Adventures of Armand Guerry de Maubreuil (the would-be Assassin of Napoleon I.)

By ERNEST A. VIZETELLY,
Author of 'With Zola in England.'

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.

ONE SHILLING MONTHLY.

Contents for APRIL.

A QUESTION of INHERITANCE. By A. Wallie.

The ORGAN of MIND. By Robert Jones, M.D.

NOTES by a VICAR'S WIFE.

OLD-TIME TRAVEL FIFTY YEARS AGO. By Percy Fitzgerald, F.S.A.

An ENGLISH VILLAGE: the Old and the New. By Rev. Prebendary Whiteford, D.D.

CHARING CROSS and its IMMEDIATE NEIGHBOURHOOD. Part IV. By J. Holden Macmichael.

THE SONG of the SEA. By Lilian Moubrey.

FANNY BURNEY. By Sylvanus Urban.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

ROUTLEDGE'S NEWEST PUBLICATIONS.

ROUTLEDGE'S NEW UNIVERSAL LIBRARY.

Printed from Accurate Texts, entirely Unabridged, and where necessary Annotated and Indexed. Pott 8vo (size of "The World's Classics"), olive green cloth extra, full gilt back, 1s. net. Olive green lambskin gilt, gilt tops, silk register, 2s. net.

JEFFREY'S ESSAYS from the EDINBURGH REVIEW: ENGLISH POETS and POETRY. 608 pp.

An interesting collection of critical essays, written in first quarter of last century, and of supreme importance in testing the judgment of posterity by the judgment of contemporaries. It contains papers on Campbell, Byron, Burns, Scott, Crabbe, Keats, Rogers, Wordsworth, Southey, Moore, Hazlitt, Hemans.

LESSING'S LAOCOON. Translated, with Preface and Notes, by the late Sir Robert Phillimore, Bart.

"Macaulay told me that the reading of this little book formed an epoch in his mental history, and that he learned more from it than he had ever learned elsewhere."

LEWES, 'Life of Goethe,' p. 57.

MILL'S DISSERTATIONS and DISCUSSIONS. I. 400 pp.

Contents:—Right and Wrong of State Interference—The Currency Juggle—Thoughts on Poetry and its Varieties—Studies at Cambridge—Civilization—Aphorisms—Armand Carrel—A Prophecy—Alfred de Vigny—Bentham—Coleridge, &c.

BRIMLEY'S ESSAYS. Edited by W. G. Clark, M.A.

Contents:—Tennyson—Wordsworth—Poetry and Criticism—Coventry Patmore—Carlyle—Thackeray—Lyttton—Dickens—Comte, &c.

PALGRAVE'S GOLDEN TREASURY of SONGS and LYRICS. With Notes and Index of First Lines.

OTHER VOLUMES RECENTLY ADDED.

MILL'S ON LIBERTY. With an Index (now first added).

MILL'S REPRESENTATIVE GOVERNMENT. With an Index (now first added).

MILL'S UTILITARIANISM. With an Index (now first added).

HOLMES'S POET at the BREAKFAST TABLE.

HOLMES'S PROFESSOR at the BREAKFAST TABLE.

Sir LEWIS MORRIS'S POEMS (Authorized Selection).

Mrs. GASKELL'S CRANFORD.

HUGHES'S TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS.

CARLYLE'S HEROES and HERO WORSHIP; SARTOR RESARTUS.

HAWTHORNE'S SCARLET LETTER. | BUNYAN'S PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.

HARRIS'S UNCLE REMUS.

HARRIS'S NIGHTS with UNCLE REMUS.

MARRYAT'S THE KING'S OWN.

POE'S TALES of MYSTERY.

GRIMM'S FAIRY TALES.

ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES.

MANY OTHERS ARE IN ACTIVE PREPARATION AND WILL APPEAR AT SHORT INTERVALS, COMMENCING WITH MAY.

NEW VOLUMES IN THE MUSES' LIBRARY.

Pott 8vo, blue cloth extra, full gilt back, 1s. net; blue lambskin gilt, gilt tops, silk register, 2s. net.

PROCTER (ADELAIDE).—LEGENDS and LYRICS. 1 vol. [This day.]

ROSSETTI (D. G.).—The EARLY ITALIAN POETS. 1 vol. [This day.]

IN ACTIVE PREPARATION.

CRASHAW. Introduction by Canon Beeching. Notes by J. R. Tutin.

CHATTERTON. Edited by H. D. Roberts.

HALL (BISHOP J.).—SATIRES. Edited by S. W. Singer. With the Illustrations of THOMAS WATSON, and a Glossarial Index. 1 vol.

The Volumes previously published include COLERIDGE, Edited by Dr. GARNETT—HERRICK (2 vols.), with Introduction by A. C. SWINBURNE—KEATS (2 vols.), with Introduction by ROBERT BRIDGES—VAUGHAN (2 vols., Canon BEECHING)—DONNE (2 vols., Prof. SAINTSBURY), &c.

POETS AND POETRY OF THE NINETEENTH CENTURY.

Representative Poems, with Critical and Biographical Notices by J. A. SYMONDS, COSMO MONKHOUSE, AUSTIN DOBSON, R. GARNETT, R. LE GALLIENNE, BUXTON FORMAN, W. B. YEATS, HALL CAINE, MACKENZIE BELL, A. SYMONS, A. H. BULLEN, R. CURLE, &c.

Edited by A. H. MILES. 12 vols. pott 8vo, red cloth binding, full gilt back, 1s. 6d. net; red lambskin gilt, gilt tops, silk register, 2s. 6d. net.

KINGSLEY to THOMSON (including M. Arnold, Patmore, G. Mac Donald, G. Meredith, D. G. Rossetti, Sir E. Arnold, Sir Lewis Morris, &c.). Over 600 pages. [This day.]

The four previous Volumes are CRABBE to COLERIDGE, SOUTHEY to SHELLEY, KEATS to LYTTON, TENNYSON to CLOUGH.

The other Six Volumes to follow at short intervals.

LIBRARY OF HISTORICAL LITERATURE.

NEW VOLS. Thick large 8vo, buckram gilt, morocco label, 5s.

RANKE'S HISTORY of the REFORMATION in GERMANY.

Translated, with the Author's Notes, by SARAH AUSTIN. Edited, with Additional Notes and an Introduction, by R. A. JOHNSON, M.A., and a Copious Index. 816 pp. [Ready.]

BACON'S PHILOSOPHICAL WORKS. Texts, Translations, and

Notes of the Famous Edition of ELLIS and SPEDDING. With Introduction, Additional Notes, and Copious Index by JOHN M. ROBERTSON. 950 pp. [Next week.]

PEPYS' DIARY. With the Notes by Lord Braybrooke. A Verbatim

Reprint of the Edition of 1848-9. With a Copious Index.

EVELYN'S DIARY. With the Notes of William Bray. The Full Text, with a Copious Index.

ALREADY PUBLISHED.

BUCKLE'S HISTORY of CIVILIZATION. Edited, with all the Author's Notes, by JOHN M. ROBERTSON. With Additional Notes, Index, and Introduction. 964 pp.

"The work is here reproduced in its entirety, with all its notes and many fresh annotations. The new and valuable foot-notes added by Mr. Robertson will enhance the worth of the volume."—Spectator.

CARLYLE'S HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. 808 pp.

with 32 fine Portraits and Plates.

DICTIONARY of SLANG and COLLOQUIAL ENGLISH. Abridged from the Seven-Volume Work by J. S. FARMER and the late W. E. HENLEY. 542 pp. half-morocco, gilt top, 7s. 6d. net.

"Full of interest and entertainment; not likely to be superseded, for a generation at any rate, as the standard work on slang in one volume. All those who aim at a small and sound library of books of reference should secure it."—Athenæum. "A most valuable work."—Speaker.

FORMING THE NEW (THIRD) VOLUME OF THE

STANDARD REFERENCE LIBRARY,

IN WHICH HAVE ALREADY APPEARED NEW IMPRESSIONS OF:—

HALLIWELL'S DICTIONARY of ARCHAIC and PROVINCIAL

WORDS, OBSOLETE PHRASES. 998 pp. 7s. 6d. net.

NARES'S GLOSSARY of WORDS, PHRASES, NAMES, and

ALLUSIONS. Edited by J. O. HALLIWELL and T. WRIGHT. 992 pp. 7s. 6d. net.

GEORGE ROUTLEDGE & SONS, LIMITED, Broadway House, London.

LIBRARY OF EARLY NOVELISTS.

Large crown 8vo, buckram gilt, 6s. net each.

The DECAMERON of BOCCACCIO. Translated, with an Introduction, by J. M. RIGGS; to which is added an Essay on BOCCACCIO as MAN and AUTHOR, by JOHN ADDINGTON SYMONDS. 800 pp.

The HEPTAMERON of MARGARET, QUEEN of NAVARRE.

Translated, with an Introduction, by ARTHUR MACHEN. 416 pp.

LIFE and OPINIONS of JOHN BUNCLE, ESQUIRE. By Thomas

AMORY ("the English Rabelais"). With an Introduction by E. A. BAKER, M.A. 474 pp. No Edition of this Book has been printed since 1825.

ADVENTURES of DON SYLVIO DE ROSALVA. By C. M. Wieland.

Translated, with an Introduction, by E. A. BAKER, M.A. 480 pp.

"Two remarkable books. Both have long been inaccessible except in old libraries, and these well-appointed new editions are sure of a wide welcome."—Scotsman.

AT PRESS ARE:—

OROONOKO, and the OTHER NOVELS of Mrs. APHRA BEHN.

With an Introduction.

GESTA ROMANORUM: Entertaining Moral Stories told by the Monks as a Fireside Recreation. Translated from the Latin by Rev. CHARLES SWAN. With an Introduction.

THE ENGLISH LIBRARY.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt tops, 2s. 6d. each.

The FOLK and their WORD-LORE. An Essay on Popular Etymologies.

By Rev. Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER, Author of 'Dictionary of Folk-Etymology,' &c. 202 pp.

"We have not space to dwell on the many merits of Dr. Smythe Palmer's essay, which...illustrates admirably the fascination exercised by the study of our dialects and their importance in relation to English philology."—Athenæum.

ON the STUDY of WORDS. By Archbishop R. C. Trench. Edited with Additions and Emendations, by Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER. 272 pp.

ENGLISH PAST and PRESENT. By Archbishop R. C. Trench.

Edited by Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER. 272 pp.

PROVERBS and their LESSONS. By Archbishop R. C. Trench.

With Notes, Bibliography, and Index by Dr. A. SMYTHE PALMER.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4041.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION,
32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly.—EVENING MEETING,
8 o'clock, April 12, 1905. The following Paper will be read:—'Folk and Weather Lore of Peterborough and District,' by C. DACK, Esq.
GEO. PATRICK, A.R.I.B.A., Hon. Sec.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)

An ORDINARY MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held on THURSDAY, April 13, at 5 p.m., in CLIFFORD'S INN HALL, Fleet Street, when Miss E. M. G. ROUTH, F.R.Hist.S., will read a Paper on 'The English Occupation of Tangles (1661-1663).'
H. E. MALDEN, Hon. Secretary.

THE ELIZABETHAN STAGE SOCIETY.

'FRANCIS OF ASSISI.'

TWO EXTRA MATINÉES

On THURSDAY and FRIDAY, April 13 and 14, at 3 o'clock,

At ST. GEORGE'S HALL, Langham Place, W.

Prices 5s., 4s., 3s. Admission 2s.

Seats may now be booked at the Hall or Libraries.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY,
No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

MESSRS. CARFAX OPEN their NEW
PREMISES, 24, BURY STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W., with an EXHIBITION of WORKS by MR. JOHN S. SARGENT, R.A.
The EXHIBITION will CLOSE on APRIL 29. Open Daily, including Saturdays, 10 to 6. Admission One Shilling.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL,
PADDINGTON, W.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN on MAY 1.
The Medical School provides complete Courses of Instruction for the Medical Degrees of the Universities of London, Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham; for the Diplomas of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons; and for the Government Medical Services.
SIX ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS in NATURAL SCIENCE, value
15l. to 52l. 10s., will be COMPETED for in SEPTEMBER. Students entering in May are eligible.
Handbook of Curriculum on application to the DEAN.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN APRIL 25, 1905.
Students can reside in the College within the Hospital Walls, subject to the Collegiate Regulations.
The Hospital contains a service of 750 Beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly 900l. are awarded annually.
Special Classes for the Preliminary Scientific and other London University Examinations, for the F.R.C.S., and for other Higher Examinations.
There is a large, thoroughly well-equipped Cricket Ground.
For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to Mr. W.
DOUGLAS HARNER, M.C.Cantab., Warden of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.
A Handbook forwarded on application.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN
(University of London),
YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

The EASTER TERM BEGINS on THURSDAY, April 27, 1905.
The College provides instruction for Students preparing for the University of London Degrees in Arts, Science, and Preliminary Medicine; also instruction in subjects of General Education.
There is a Hygiene Department and an Art School.
STUDENTS CAN RESIDE IN THE COLLEGE.
Particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL.
TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, each one tenable for Three Years at Bedford College for Women, will be offered for competition in JUNE, 1905.
Department for Professional Training in Teaching.
Students are admitted to the Training Course in OCTOBER and JANUARY.
TWO SCHOLARSHIPS, each of the value of 10l., will be AWARDED for the Course of SECONDARY TRAINING beginning in OCTOBER, 1905.
Applications should reach the HEAD of the TRAINING DEPARTMENT not later than JULY 7, 1905.

THE VICTORIA

UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS EXAMINATION.

An EXAMINATION for the awards of ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS and EXHIBITIONS in Classics, Modern Languages, History, Mathematics, and Science, will be held at the University on MONDAY,
May 15, and Following Days.
SCHOLARSHIPS, &c., tenable at the HALLS of RESIDENCE in connexion with the University are also OFFERED for AWARD on the results of the above Examination.—For particulars apply to the REGISTRAR.

THE VICTORIA

UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL is prepared to appoint a JUNIOR ASSISTANT LECTURER in CLASSICS, at a Salary of 150l. per annum.—Details of the conditions of appointment may be obtained from the REGISTRAR.

THE VICTORIA

UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in JURIS-PRUDENCE and ROMAN LAW for Three Years.—A detailed statement of the conditions of appointment may be obtained from the REGISTRAR.

F O L K E S T O N E.
WOODLANDS PREPARATORY SCHOOL.
Rev. HENRY T. J. COGGIN, M.A.Cantab.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORS in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, LONDON.

The GOVERNORS of ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL, LONDON, hereby give notice that it is their intention shortly to ELECT a HIGH MASTER, who will enter upon his duties in SEPTEMBER NEXT.

Candidates must be Graduates of some University in the United Kingdom. No person is disqualified by reason only of his not being or not intending to be in Holy Orders. The Governors and the High Master are required to make proper provision for religious instruction in the School in accordance with the principles of the Church of England.

Candidates are requested to make their application in writing, and forward thirty copies of not more than three Testimonials, together with not more than three References, to the undersigned on or before APRIL 29 NEXT.

Any further information which may be desired may be obtained from the undersigned, and Candidates may be supplied, if they desire it, with copies of the Scheme settled by the Charity Commissioners and approved by Her late Majesty in Council.

JOHN WATNEY, Clerk to Governors.

Mercers' Hall, Cheapside, E.C., March 23, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES,
ABERYSTWYTH.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the Post of WARDEN of the ALEXANDRA HALL of RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS, in succession to Miss E. A. Carpenter. Applications and 70 Copies of Testimonials to be sent by MAY 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained. T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES,
ABERYSTWYTH.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the post of REGISTRAR and SECRETARY of the COLLEGE, at a Salary of 300l.

Applications and 70 copies of Testimonials to be sent by MAY 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.
T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

THE HOLBURNE of MENSTRIE MUSEUM, BATH.

WANTED, an experienced CURATOR, single man, or married but without incumbrances, to take charge of the Museum, consisting of Antique Plate, Paintings, China, and other Works of Art. He will be required to reside on the premises. The Trustees are prepared to offer 150l. per annum, with Furnished Rooms.—Applications to be made by letter only, and sent to the Museum, Charlotte Street, Bath.

N.B.—The Trustees can only communicate with a selected number of Applicants.

BELFAST LIBRARY and SOCIETY for PROMOTING KNOWLEDGE.
(LINEN HALL LIBRARY.)

The GOVERNORS of the LIBRARY require the services of a LIBRARIAN at a Salary of 150l. per year, rising by yearly increases of 20l. to 210l.

All applications to be sent in on or before APRIL 20, 1905.
Full particulars on application to the HONORARY SECRETARY, Linen Hall Library, Belfast.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED, in LONDON or the PROVINCES by a UNIVERSITY MAN. Has had great experience as Editor and Leader Writer. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY
ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honour Man.—Address A. H. S. Box 962, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

GENTLEMAN, at liberty the end of April, late on Staff of Learned Society, London, desires to engage in PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK.—Address Box 998, Athenæum
Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

YOUNG UNIVERSITY GRADUATE, Classical
Scholar of his College, French and German (acquired abroad), SEEKS OPENING in good PUBLISHING HOUSE.—Pen-y-Graig, Tyndall Avenue, Bristol.

TO PROPRIETORS of TRADE and other
WEEKLY PAPERS.—Successful ADVERTISING MANAGER desires PARTNERSHIP, or Engagement with view to same. Small capital.—Address Box 638, Watson's Advertising Agency, 6, Boulevard Street, E.C.

ACTOR-DRAMATIST, twenty years' experience,
Master of the Art of Construction and Stage Technique, REPORTS UPON, REMEDIES FAULTS in PLAYS, and MAKES THEM ACTABLE. Novels Dramatised.—DRAMATIST, 142A, Sternhold Avenue, Streatham Hill.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH,
REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian.
Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—
Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. H., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BOR-DEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 248, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL
WORK and INDEXING—Apply Miss PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci.
Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated
Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE
TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVE-
LOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L.,
7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING promptly and accurately done.
Ten years' experience. Excellent references. 10d. per 1,000 words.
Reduction for quantity.—Miss MESSER, The Orchard, Cotterill Road, Sarbilton, S.W.

SHORTHAND and TYPE-WRITING.—
Authors' MSS., Plays, Sermons, Reports, &c., 9d. per 1,000.
Legal and General Copying Accuracy and Despatch guaranteed.—
Miss N. E. ROBINSON, 8, Westover Road, Wandsworth Common,
London, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS,
PLAYS, REVIEWS, SERMONS, &c., TYPE-WRITTEN with promptness and accuracy at 7d. per 1,000 words. Specimens and Testimonials on application.—Miss ALDENSON, 56, Boroughgate, Appleby, Westmorland.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS.,
&c., carefully and promptly executed, 8d. per 1,000 words. Unsolicited Testimonials.—Miss A. MASSIE, Strathairly, New Barn, Longfield, Kent.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptions, COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms (Shorthand or Type-writing Usual Terms.—
Misses E. B. and I. FARRAN, Denington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS,
ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BURGESS, 34, Paternoster Row.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES
BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED,
And supplied with every requisite.

Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'

The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.

Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Catalogues.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—
Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—
Engravings, Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings, Palmer, Whistler—Japanese
Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence. Wm. Waan, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 139, containing a Special Article, entitled 'SOME CON-TEMPORARY FOREIGN CHEMISTS,' by Dr M. O. FORSTER, together with an exact Bibliography of their Publications, and a Double Plate of their Portraits. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS &
NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Bel-
voir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD
BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 10 contains Manuscripts—
Dibdin—Bibliotheca Spenceriana, &c.

BOOKS.—All out-of-print and rare Books on any subject supplied. The most expert Bookfinder extant. Please state wants and ask for Catalogue. I make a special feature of exchanging any saleable Books for others selected from my various Lists.
Special List of 2,000 Books I particularly want post free.—Edw. BAKER's Great Bookshop, 14-16, John Bright Street, Birmingham

PICKERING & CHATTO'S CATALOGUES.

CATALOGUE of TRACTS and PAMPHLETS, chiefly Historical and Topographical, 238 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of 3,000 Rare Tracts and Pamphlets, including Items on Africa—America—Queen Anne—Astrology—Bedfordshire—Berkshire—Buckinghamshire—Cambridgeshire—Civil War—Charles I. and II.—Channel Islands—Cheshire—Commonwealth—Cornwall—Oliver Cromwell—Cumberland—Derbyshire—Devonshire—Dorsetshire—Durham—Economics and Trade—Queen Elizabeth—Essex—Flanders—France—George I. and II.—Germany—Gloucestershire—Hampshire—Herefordshire—Hertfordshire—Holland—Ireland—James I. and II.—Jesuits—Jews—Kent—Lancashire—Law—Leicestershire—Lincolnshire—London—Middlesex—Monmouthshire—Norfolk—Northamptonshire—Northumberland—Nottinghamshire—Oxfordshire—Popery—Popish Plot—Pretender (the Young and Old)—Printing—Prynne—Quakers—Rutlandshire—Prince Rupert—Scotland—Shropshire—Somersetshire—Spain—Spanish Armada—Staffordshire—Suffolk—Surrey—Sweden—Wales—Warwickshire—Westmorland—William III.—Wiltshire—Worcestershire—Yorkshire. Paper cover, post free, 1s.

CATALOGUE of ENGLISH LITERATURE, noted Bibliographically and Biographically, including First or Early Editions of the Writings of practically every English Author from Chaucer to R. L. Stevenson. 504 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of nearly 4,000 Rare Books, half-cloth, post free, 3s. 6d. This Catalogue has been pronounced on all sides to be the most interesting Bookseller's Catalogue on the subject ever issued.

CATALOGUE of SPORTS, PASTIMES, ARTS, SCIENCES, 222 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of nearly 2,000 Old or Rare Books upon almost every Branch of Sport, Science, or Art, paper cover, post free, 1s.

CATALOGUE of MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, 126 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of about 900 Old or Rare Books, including Works on Africa, America, Australasia—First Editions of Books Illustrated by Randolph Caldecott, George and Robert Cruikshank, Richard Doyle, Harry Furniss, James Gilray, Ernest Griset, John Leech, Hablot K. Browne (Phiz), Henry Alken, Thomas Rowlandson, and numerous Rare Works with Coloured Plates—an interesting Collection of Old Curiosa, Erotica, Facetiae, Old Romances, Chap Books, and Children's Books—numerous Topographical Works relating to most of the Counties of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales—fine Illuminated Manuscripts, with Miniatures—a valuable Assemblage of Early Typographical Specimens, including many Rare Editions Principles and Examples of the Early Printers. Paper cover, post free, 1s.

CATALOGUE of NEW PURCHASES. Books on all Subjects, including a fine Collection of Stamped and Elaborately Gilt-Tooled Old Bookbindings, and several very beautiful Ancient Illuminated Manuscripts. 578 pp. 8vo, containing Descriptions, with Selling Prices, of 4,000 Valuable Books, Illustrated with 9 Coloured and 198 Reproductions of Manuscripts and Old Bindings, cloth, post free, 6s.

It has been found necessary to make the above charges for our Catalogues, to prevent an inundation of applications from irresponsible persons. The cost of the Catalogue will, however, be deducted from the first order of £1.

PICKERING & CHATTO, Antiquarian Booksellers, 66, HAYMARKET, LONDON, S.W.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s. JUST ISSUED.
Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

W. GLAISHER'S
NEW GENERAL CATALOGUE OF REMAINDERS
(Spring, 1905)

IS NOW READY, and can be had on application.
It contains many important BOOKS, offered at a GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE by

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Wholesale and Export Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

BERTRAM DOBELL,
SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER, and PUBLISHER,
77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.

A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The APRIL CATALOGUE of valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & Son, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. Roor & Son, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

DAY'S LIBRARY, LIMITED, 56, Mount Street, Grosvenor Square, London, W.
Founded 1776.

Terms of Town and Country Subscriptions, with List of Recent Additions to the Library, post free on application.
SPECIAL CLEARANCE LIST of Surplus Library Books and others, offered in good condition for Cash at greatly reduced prices, NOW READY.

THE SECOND OLDEST ESTABLISHED CIRCULATING LIBRARY IN LONDON.

ARUNDEL CHROMOS.

Large number in Stock; many rare ones.
Send stamp for this Month's Printed List.
SAINT JUDE'S DEPOT, BIRMINGHAM.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

Sales by Auction.

Library of the late A. J. HIPKINS, Esq., F.S.A., the well-known Authority on Musical Instruments; a Portion of the Library of MACKENZIE WALCOTT, Esq., the celebrated Archaeologist; and other Properties.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on MONDAY, April 17, and following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, VALUABLE BOOKS including Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 5 vols.—Poetical Magazine, Coloured Plates by Rowlandson—the Cambridge Shakespeare, 40 vols.—Life of Napoleon, Coloured Plates—Goldsmith's Deserted Village, First Edition, fine copy—Curtis's Botanical Magazine, Complete Set to 1899—Edwards's Botanical Register, 32 vols.—Sowerby's English Botany, 22 vols.—Loddiges' Botanical Cabinet, 17 vols.—Rowell's Dorando, 1767—an interesting Musical MS. of the Seventeenth Century—Gentleman's Magazine, 192 vols.—Williamson's Oriental Field Sports, Coloured Plates, 1807—Curtis's Flora Londinensis, Coloured Plates—Horatii Opera, Venet., 1483—Racinet, Le Costume Historique, Large Paper—the Studio, 1893-1904—a long Series of Works on Folk-lore and Bibliography—First Editions of Jane Austen's Novels—Sheraton's Cabinet-Maker's Drawing Book, 1791-93, fine copy—Fanin, Royal Naples Museum, Cabinet Secret—Works on Music and Musicians—English Topographical, Architectural, and Archaeological Books—First Editions of Modern Authors—choice Illustrated Books, &c.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, April 10, PICTURES by OLD MASTERS of the late HENRY WILLETT, Esq., and others.

On TUESDAY, April 11, the COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS of the Early English School of H. G. HUGGINS, Esq.

On THURSDAY, April 13, the COLLECTION of EARLY ENGLISH SPOONS of E. E. BRAND, Esq.; OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE of the late Lieut.-Col. E. A. SHULDHAM and others.

On FRIDAY, April 14, fine ORIENTAL PORCELAIN, MINIATURES, OBJECTS of ART, and DECORATIVE FURNITURE from Private Sources, and OLD ENGLISH FURNITURE of TANCRED'S CHARITIES.

On SATURDAY, April 15, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS of the late Mrs. WORTHINGTON and others.

On MONDAY, April 17, and TUESDAY, April 18, ENGRAVINGS, ETCHINGS, and DRAWINGS by and after the Old Masters.

The Library of a Barrister.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, April 12, at 1 o'clock, the LIBRARY of a BARRISTER, comprising Gould's Birds of Europe, 5 vols.—Whitaker's History of Richmondshire, 2 vols.—Drake's Emuracum, 1736, and other Books relating to the County of York—a Complete Set of the Harleian Society's Publications, with the Register Section, 63 vols.—Privately Printed Visitation and Registers, 20 vols.—the Index Library, 32 vols.—Yorkshire Archaeological Association: Journal and Record Series, 52 vols.—Hampshire Record Society's Publications, &c., 17 vols.—Folk-lore Society, complete to 1902—Villon Society's Translations, 22 vols.—Standard Historical Works—Macgillivray's British Birds, 5 vols.—Tennyson's Poems, First Edition, boards, 1833, &c.
To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Rare and Valuable Books, including a Selection from the Library of a Gentleman.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, April 12, and Two Following Days, RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, comprising a SELECTION from the LIBRARY of a GENTLEMAN, and other PROPERTIES, including Boydell's Shakespeare Gallery, 2 vols.—Ackermann's Microcosm of London, Coloured Plates, 3 vols.—Architectural and Antiquarian Works—Armstrong's Sir Henry Raeburn—Foster's Miniature Palates, 2 vols., and other Fine Art Books—Howdler Sharpe's Monograph of Thrushes, Coloured Plates, 2 vols.—Library Editions of Gardiner, Lecky, Froude, Bentham, and others—Books and Tracts relating to America—Wordsworth's Ode to Charles Lamb, the excessively rare Privately-Printed Issue—Thackeray's Vanity Fair, Original Issue, and other First Editions—Framed Engravings by Huobury—Autograph Letters, &c.
To be viewed and Catalogues had.

WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

Without Reserve.—The Whole of the extensive and valuable Collection of Mr. HENRY LYON, of 15, King William Street, Strand, whose lease having expired, he is relinquishing business.

MESSRS. ROBINSON & FISHER are instructed to SELL, at their Rooms, as above, on TUESDAY, April 11, and Three Following Days, and TUESDAY, April 18, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely each Day, the WHOLE of the extensive and valuable COLLECTION, as above, comprising a large quantity of English and Continental Pottery and Porcelain—Books—Miniatures—Old Cut Glass—Metal Work—Nelson and other Relics—Battersea Enamel and Jewelled Boxes and Candlesticks—about 500 oz. of Old Chased Plate—Sheffield Plated Articles and Jewellery—a large Collection of Old Sporting Prints—Engravings in Mezzotint and Colours—Water-colour Drawings—Pictures on Glass—Pictures of the English and Dutch Schools—Decorative Furniture, comprising Chippendale, Sheraton, and Hepplewhite Chairs, Sheraton Card-tables and Secretaire Bookcases, a Flemish Cabinet, a Parquetier Commode, an Ivory Davenport, &c.—Marble Busts—Old French and English Bracket and Mantel Clocks—a Collection of Elizabethan Wax Models—and a quantity of Decorative Property.

May be viewed the Saturday and Monday prior in each week, and Catalogues had.

Curiosities.

MR. J. C. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of MR. CURIOS will take place on TUESDAY, April 11, at half-past 12 o'clock, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., and will include Chinese and Japanese Porcelain, Carved Ivories, and Cloisonné Ware—interesting Specimens of Native Bead Work from South Africa—a fine Specimen Brank of the Sixteenth Century—Carved and Inlaid Furniture—Pictures—Prints—and Curios from all Parts.

On view day prior 10 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Fishing Tackle and Miscellaneous Property.

FRIDAY, April 14, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C., FISHING RODS, REELS, LINES, and GENERAL TACKLE by Hardy, Farlow, Foster, Malloch, Slater, &c., all in finest possible order, &c.—Photographic Cameras, Lenses, and Accessories by leading Makers—Scientific Instruments—Tools—Microscopes and Slides—and a large Quantity of valuable Goods.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

THE HANS ANDERSEN CENTENARY. HANS ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES.

Translated from the Danish Original by H. L. BRÆKSTAD.

With over 240 Illustrations by HANS TEGNER.

In 2 vols. demy 4to, price 10s. net each.

Up to now no worthy Edition of Andersen's Fairy Tales has existed, either in the original Danish, or in one of the twenty-five languages into which the Tales have been translated. For this monumental Edition of his best work the publisher has been fortunate in securing the services of the great Danish Artist Hans Tegner, to present pictorially the dainty fancies of the fairy poet. There are altogether over 240 Illustrations, partly in line and partly in wash, the latter having been engraved on wood by the best living French, German, and American wood engravers.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

Chief Offices—SALISBURY SQUARE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telephone No.: 12282 CENTRAL.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

This Society was established in 1862 to supply Leg Instruments, Spinal Supports, Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Artificial Limbs, &c., and every other description of Mechanical Support, to the Poor.

OVER 400 PATIENTS ARE RELIEVED EVERY WEEK.

CONTRIBUTIONS EARNESTLY SOLICITED.

Annual Subscription of £0 10 6 } Entitles to Two Recommendations
Life Subscription of £5 5 0 } per Annum.

Bankers—Messrs. BARCLAY & Co., Ltd., 54, Lombard Street.

RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

Natural History Specimens.
TUESDAY, April 18, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., rare and valuable BIRDS' EGGS—Entomological Specimens, British and Exotic—fine Cabinets—Books—Heads and Horns of Big Game—fine Lion and Tiger Skins—and many general Specimens.
Catalogues and all particulars on application.

Engravings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, April 10, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS, Framed and in the Portfolio, comprising Fancy Subjects of the English School by J. R. Smith, W. Ward, P. W. Tomkins, R. Earlom, W. Pether, J. Dean, and others—Mezzotint Portraits by S. Cousins, W. Dickinson, Gainsborough Dupont, V. Green, J. Jacob, J. Jones, C. Turner, W. Walker, &c., including Jane, Countess of Harrington, by V. Green, after Sir J. Reynolds—Lady Hamilton, by W. Say, after J. Masquerier—Lord Eldon, by J. R. Smith, after Sir T. Lawrence—Earl of Dalkeith, by V. Green, after Sir J. Reynolds—and others.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Coins and Medals of the late REUBEN CULL, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 11, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, COINS and MEDALS, including a Collection of Greek, Roman, and Modern Coins, partly formed in the Eighteenth Century—Greek, Roman, English, and Foreign Coins—Proofs and Pattern Coins—rare English Medals, from various Sources; and the extensive Collection formed by the late REUBEN CULL, Esq., comprising Greek Coins—Roman Consular and Imperial Denarii—English Coins in Gold, Silver, and Copper—Coin Cabinets—Numismatic Books, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts, including a Portion of the Library of BASIL A. WOODD, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 11, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including a Portion of the Library of BASIL A. WOODD, Esq., including Jesse's Historical Works, and other Works on History—Marlborough Gens, Biography, Natural History, Sporting Books, Topography—Collins's Somerset, Alpine Works, &c.—other Properties, containing Biblia Sacra Latina, 1653, Louis XIV's own copy—Scott's Novels, 78 vols. chiefly First Editions—Racing Calendar, 78 vols 1753-1849—Rare Pamphlets relating to the French Revolution—Apperley's Life of a Sportsman, First Edition—Hewick's Birds and Quadrupeds—Oxford English Dictionary, 1884-1902—Catalogues of Important Collections—French Illustrated Works—Civil War Tracts—Architectural Works—Portraits—Natural History—Ruskin's Modern Painters, 8 vols.—Scientific Works—Blake's Illustrations to the Book of Job and Young's Night Thoughts—Hay Society Publications—Poetical and Dramatic Works—Books Illustrated by Crankshaw, Stanfield, Leech, &c.—First Editions of the Works of Esteemed Authors, &c.—Buck's Views of Cities, Towns, Castles, Abbeys, &c., of England and Wales, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

A valuable Collection of Autograph Letters and Historical Documents.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 13, at 1 o'clock precisely, a valuable COLLECTION of AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS of the Seventeenth Century, the Property of a GENTLEMAN, deceased (sold by order of the Executors). Among the Writers of the Letters will be found the names of King Charles II., Queen Henrietta Maria (and an extremely interesting Letter addressed to her Son, Charles II.), Abraham Cowley, Thomas Killigrew, the Marquis of Montrose, Henry Jermyn (afterwards Earl of St. Albans), Lord Clarendon, Sir Richard Fanshawe, Prince Rupert, William, Prince of Orange (son-in-law of Charles I.), Marquis of Ormonde, James Stanley, seventh Earl of Derby, Sir John Byron, Lord Cutts, &c.; also an extremely interesting Series of Autograph Letters of Sophia, Electress of Hanover, and Mother of George I.—Documents signed by Henry VII. and Oliver Cromwell—Letters of the Countess of Albany (wife of the Young Pretender)—Documents signed by Queen Anne, Princess Augusta (mother of George III.), James II, Duke of Monmouth, Cardinal Stuart—and a Series of Vellum Deeds dating from 1307 to 1764, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings and Drawings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, April 14, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS and DRAWINGS, FRAMED and in the PORTFOLIO, from various sources, comprising Sporting and Military Subjects—fine Mezzotint Portraits of Ladies, including Le Baiser, Envoys, Viscountess Andover Lady Langham (after Hoppner), Lady Hamilton as a Bacchante, Oliver Goldsmith (Proof), Mrs. Abingdon (Proof before Letters), Countess of Salisbury, Lady Stanhope (Proof before Letters, after Reynolds), &c.—Fancy Subjects of the English School, after Morland, Ward, Wheatley, Higg, Smith, Buck, Onslow, Ibbotson, &c.—Drawings in Water Colours, by Morland, Wheatley, Rowlandson, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

IRELAND.

Mountainstown, Navan, co. Meath.

The RESIDENCE of the late J. N. POLLOCK, Esq. D.L.—Sale (by order of the Executors) of all the Antique Furniture—about 4,000 oz. of Old Silver—Sheffield Plated Ware—Family Jewels—Engravings in Colour, Lino, and Mezzotint—Oil Paintings—Curios—Collection of Old China—Library of valuable Books—Galleries—Portfolios of Engravings—Pisnefortes and General Furniture.

MESSRS. BENNETT & SON respectfully give Notice that they will SELL by AUCTION on the PREMISES, on TUESDAY, April 18 and Following Days, the valuable CONTENTS of the MANSION, which can be viewed the Saturday and Monday preceding Sale.

Catalogues, price 1s. each, which will admit to view and Sale, can be had on application to the AUCTIONEERS, at their Office, 6, Upper Ormond Quay, Dublin.

In 2 vols. crown 8vo, with 2 Portraits, 24s.

JOHN FRANCIS and the 'ATHENÆUM.'
A Literary Chronicle of Half a Century.
By JOHN C. FRANCIS.
Macmillan & Co., Limited, London.

BOOKS and BOOK-PLATES.

The Book-Lover's Magazine.

Vol. V. Part 3, APRIL, 1905. 2s. 6d.

OSCAR WILDE, NOTES for a BIBLIOGRAPHY of. By W. R.

Sir EDWARD SULLIVAN, Bart.—HOW a BOOK is BOUND.

G. M. FRAZER.—A SCOTCH TOWN COUNCIL of the SEVENTEENTH CENTURY as PATRONS of LITERATURE.

BOOK-PLATES by A. DE RIGNER, MICHELET, HAROLD NELSON, &c.

BASIL ANDERTON.—CONCERNING the BOOK-PLATES of THOMAS BEWICK. Illustrated.

TH. A. FISCHER.—The TREASURES of the ROYAL LIBRARY, DRESDEN. Illustrated.

Otto Schulze & Co.

20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

THE UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY, ANNAPOLIS: The Workmen's Compensation Bill; Tall Chimney Construction (with Diagrams); The Planning of Cities and Public Places (Institute of Architects); Plant-Forms for Decoration; Hooped Concrete as a Form of Construction; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column); &c.—See the BUILDER of April 8 (4d. by post 4d.). Through any Newsagent, or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

BOOKS FOR THE SPRING.

BABINGTON'S BOTANY, NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

MANUAL of BRITISH BOTANY.

Containing the Flowering Plants and Ferns, Arranged according to the Natural Orders. By C. C. BABINGTON, M.A. F.R.S., &c. Ninth Edition. Edited by HENRY and JAMES GROVES. 12mo, cloth, 9s. net; Thin-Paper Edition, leather, gilt edges, 10s. 6d. net.

"Great care has been taken by the editors, with the assistance of many specialists, to bring this edition up to date, and it will be welcomed by all field naturalist."

Naturalist.

WORKS BY JOHN E. SOWERBY.

AUTHOR OF 'THE FERNS OF GREAT BRITAIN.'

BRITISH WILD FLOWERS.

Described, with an Introduction and a Key to the Natural Orders, by C. PIERPOINT JOHNSON. Re-issue, to which is added a Supplement containing 180 Figures, comprising later discovered Flowering Plants, and the Ferns, Horse-tails, and Club-Mosses. Super-royal 8vo, with 1,780 Coloured Figures, 3l. 3s.

This work gives in one large volume a characteristic figure, coloured by hand, of each species of indigenous plant, with a short description of its habit, habitat, height, and time of flowering.

An ILLUSTRATED KEY to the NATURAL ORDERS of BRITISH WILD FLOWERS.

Containing 9 beautifully executed and accurately Coloured Plates by the Author, representing 112 different Species. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

BRITISH POISONOUS PLANTS.

Illustrated by JOHN E. SOWERBY. Described by CHARLES JOHNSON, Botanical Lecturer at Guy's Hospital, and C. PIERPOINT JOHNSON. Second Edition. Containing the principal poisonous fungi, with 32 beautifully executed Coloured Plates, containing numerous Figures. 9s. 6d.

ORNITHOLOGY AND NATURAL HISTORY.

A HISTORY of BRITISH BIRDS.

By WILLIAM YARRELL, Vice-President Linnean Society, F.Z.S. Fourth and Best Edition. Revised to the end of the Second Volume (Picaie) by Prof. NEWTON, M.A. F.R.S.; the Revision continued by HOWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S. Complete in 4 vols. 8vo, 4l. 4s.

An ILLUSTRATED MANUAL of BRITISH BIRDS. By HOWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S.

F.Z.S., &c. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, with 384 fine Woodcuts, and 3 Maps, 1l. 1s.

"Excellent alike in style and matter, it ought to be in the hands of every lover of birds."—Annals of Natural History.

"The whole work forms the most concise and at the same time trustworthy book on birds of a single region that has ever been written."—Science Gossip.

The BIRDS of IRELAND. An Account of the Distribution, Migrations, and Habits of Birds, as observed in Ireland, with all Additions to the Irish List, including an Introduction and Tables showing the Distribution of Birds in the Breeding Season. By RICHARD J. USNIER and ROBERT WARREN. With a Coloured Plate, Maps, and other Illustrations. 450 pp. 8vo, cloth, 1l. 10s.

—The SAME, Large Paper (only 50 Copies printed), royal 8vo, 2l. 10s. net.

A READY AID to DISTINGUISH

the COMMONER WILD BIRDS of GREAT BRITAIN.

By DAVID T. PRICE. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net.

GURNEY & JACKSON,

10, Paternoster Row, London.

STANDARD BOOKS

ON SALE BY

JAMES THIN, Bookseller,

55, SOUTH BRIDGE, EDINBURGH.

|  | £   | s. | d. |
|--|-----|----|----|
| FREEMAN'S NORMAN CONQUEST, 6 vols. ...   | 7   | 10 | 0  |
| VON SYBEL'S FRENCH REVOLUTION, 4 vols. ...   | 6   | 6  | 0  |
| BREWER'S REIGN of HENRY VIII., 2 vols. ...   | 4   | 10 | 0  |
| IHNE'S HISTORY of ROME, 5 vols. ...  | 2   | 15 | 0  |
| GROTE'S HISTORY of GREECE, 12 vols. ...  | 1   | 16 | 0  |
| RAWLINSON'S HISTORICAL WORKS, 12 vols. ...   | 14  | 0  | 0  |
| TURNER GALLERY, India Proofs ...   | 3   | 5  | 0  |
| HALL'S GALLERY of PICTURES, 150 India Proofs, 4 vols. large folio, full morocco ...                        | 7   | 7  | 0  |
| REYNOLDS (SIR JOSHUA), 500 Mezzotint Engravings from his Works, 5 vols. folio, half-morocco ...            | 140 | 0  | 0  |
| MACKLIN'S FINE EDITION of the BIBLE, with Engravings by Bartolozzi, &c., 7 vols. full morocco ...          | 6   | 0  | 0  |
| SCOTTISH HISTORY SOCIETY PUBLICATIONS, Complete Set, 47 vols. ...  | 33  | 10 | 0  |
| BRITISH ESSAYISTS, Edited by Chalmers, 45 vols. morocco ...  | 5   | 5  | 0  |
| BRITISH POETS, Aldine Edition, 52 vols. ...  | 3   | 10 | 0  |
| BURNS (ROBERT), Complete Works, Edited by Scott Douglas, with Illustrations by Sam Bough, &c., 6 vols. ... | 2   | 5  | 0  |
| GREEN'S ENGLISH PEOPLE, 4 vols., best Edition ...  | 2   | 10 | 0  |
| MONTALEMBERT'S MONKS of the WEST, 7 vols. ...  | 3   | 3  | 0  |
| SCLATER and THOMAS'S BOOK of ANTELOPES, 4 vols., Coloured Plates ...                                       | 10  | 0  | 0  |
| YARRELL'S BRITISH BIRDS, best edition, 4 vols. ...   | 3   | 3  | 0  |
| BOTANICAL SOCIETY of EDINBURGH, TRANSACTIONS, &c., 1840-1900, 21 vols. in 18, half-calf ...                | 8   | 15 | 0  |
| SCOTTISH GEOGRAPHICAL MAGAZINE, 1885-1904, 23 vols. ...  | 4   | 15 | 0  |
| DOUGLAS PIERAGE and BARONAGE, 3 vols., half-morocco ...  | 7   | 10 | 0  |
| BILLING'S BARONIAL and ECCLESIASTICAL ANTIQUITIES of SCOTLAND, 4 vols. ...                                 | 3   | 3  | 0  |
| MACAULAY'S COMPLETE WORKS, 10 vols., half-morocco ...  | 1   | 10 | 0  |
| KNOX'S WORKS, edited by David Laing, 6 vols. ...   | 3   | 3  | 0  |
| DOLLINGER'S GENTILE and JEW, 2 vols. ...   | 0   | 12 | 6  |
| HUME BROWN'S JOHN KNOX, 2 vols. ...  | 2   | 5  | 0  |
| ANTE-NICENE CHRISTIAN LIBRARY, 24 vols. ...  | 1   | 15 | 0  |
| SMITH and CHRETHAM'S CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITIES, 2 vols. ...  | 3   | 0  | 0  |
| SCHAFF'S HISTORY of the CREEDS, 3 vols. ...  | 3   | 10 | 0  |
| SCHAFF'S CHURCH HISTORY, 12 vols. ...  | 2   | 10 | 0  |
| BUNSEN'S GOD in HISTORY, 3 vols. ...   | 2   | 5  | 0  |
| EWALD'S HISTORY of ISRAEL, 8 vols. ...   | 2   | 2  | 0  |
| ST. AUGUSTINE'S WORKS, translated by Dods, 15 vols. ...  | 9   | 10 | 0  |
| NICHOLS'S LITERARY ANECDOTES and HISTORY, 17 vols., half-calf ...  | 1   | 10 | 0  |
| PLUTARCH'S LIVES, by Clough, 5 vols. ...   | 3   | 15 | 0  |
| SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS, Edited by Dyce, 10 vols. half-morocco ...   | 2   | 15 | 0  |
| MERIVALE'S HISTORY of ROME, 7 vols. 8vo, half-calf ...   | 3   | 15 | 0  |
| ALLIBONE'S DICTIONARY of ENGLISH LITERATURE, 5 vols. ...   | 3   | 0  | 0  |
| STRICKLAND'S QUEENS of ENGLAND, 12 vols. ...   | 3   | 10 | 0  |
| STRICKLAND'S QUEENS of SCOTLAND, 8 vols. ...   | 2   | 5  | 0  |
| KINGLAKE'S CRIMEA, 9 vols. half-calf gilt ...  | 1   | 1  | 0  |
| SPENCER WALPOLE'S HISTORY of ENGLAND, 6 vols. ...  | 16  | 16 | 0  |
| SOWERBY'S ENGLISH BOTANY, Edited by Syme, Coloured Plates, 13 vols. half-morocco ...                       | 4   | 4  | 0  |
| SMOLLETT'S WORKS, Edited by Henley, 12 vols. half-morocco ...  | 2   | 10 | 0  |
| ENGLISH MEN of LETTERS, 38 vols. in 19, half-morocco ...   | 1   | 2  | 0  |
| WILSON, Prof. ("CHRISTOPHER NORTH") WORKS, 12 vols. ...  | 3   | 10 | 0  |
| OWEN'S BRITISH FOSSIL REPTILES, 4 vols., 12l. 12s. ...   | 3   | 3  | 0  |
| DIGBY'S MORES CATHOLICI, 3 vols. ...   | 3   | 3  | 0  |
| ANNALS of SCOTTISH NATURAL HISTORY, 13 vols. ...   | 3   | 3  | 0  |
| MONTAIGNE'S ESSAYS, folio, 1613 ...  | 3   | 0  | 0  |
| PUGIN'S ECCLESIASTICAL ORNAMENT and COSTUME ...  | 3   | 0  | 0  |
| PERKIN'S TUSCAN SCULPTORS, 2 vols. ...   | 1   | 4  | 0  |
| LECKY'S HISTORY of ENGLAND, Best Edition, 8 vols. ...  | 5   | 10 | 0  |
| ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA, Ninth Edition, 25 vols. ...   |     |    |    |

CATALOGUES

OF

MISCELLANEOUS SECOND-HAND BOOKS.

NEW BOOKS AT REDUCED PRICES.

THEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

WORKS RELATING TO SCOTLAND.

Post free on application.

NOW READY.

Cloth, 2 vols. royal 8vo, 948 pp., 512 Illustrations, 60 Genetic Tables, with 28 Plates, price 2*l.* 2*s.* net.

THE EVOLUTION OF MAN.

BY ERNST HAECKEL
(Professor at Jena University).

The time has come for a complete, comprehensive, and constructive presentment, in a popular form, of the now irresistible evidence for the evolution of man. This Prof. Haeckel accomplishes in the new edition, recently issued in Germany, of his 'Anthropogenie.' It is virtually a new work, and it entailed the better part of a year's arduous labour from its author. The text has been considerably augmented, the number of full-page coloured plates has grown to thirty, the number of engravings (many full-page size) to 512, and the number of genetic tables to sixty. These illustrations have all been designed and painted afresh by the author on a larger and finer scale, and are splendid examples of the artistic skill which Prof. Haeckel counts among his many attainments. It is now, both in the scientific text and the illustrations, a superb manual of human development.

No reproduction, however augmented, of the older translation could give an idea of the beauty and value of the completed edition of Prof. Haeckel's world-famed book. The new translation makes two volumes, covering 948 pages, and, with one exception, all the plates and engravings have been retained. The work of editing and translating has been undertaken by Mr. Joseph McCabe, the translator of 'The Riddle of the Universe.' The text is rendered in plain language, as far as possible, and all technicalities are made clear to the inexpert reader—a task which has not been difficult in view of the 600 illustrations and tables. The work has, in fact, been written for the general reader, though even for the student it has no rival as a comprehensive statement of the evolutionary position. The first volume deals with the history of the subject, and presents a compendium of modern embryology. It is here that the wealth of illustration is greatest. The second volume discusses the evolution of the race in the light of comparative anatomy and palæontology, and has also a series of interesting chapters on the evolution of particular organs—organs of sense, reproduction, nerves, &c. The argument and attitude are scientific throughout, and the author never quits the biological territory on which he speaks with almost unrivalled authority to-day. There is a full Index, and also an adequate Glossary.

The work has been printed from new type on the best paper, and is strongly and handsomely bound.

Agents of the Rationalist Press Association, Limited:
WATTS & CO.,

17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

FREE OPINIONS

FREELY EXPRESSED.

BY

M A R I E C O R E L L I.

ON SALE EVERYWHERE APRIL 17.

Price 6*s.*

JOHN GRAHAM of CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT of DUNDEE,
1648-89. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12*s.* 6*d.* net.

CATHERINE de MEDICI and the FRENCH REFORMATION.
By EDITH SICHEL, Author of 'Women and Men of the French Renaissance,' 'The Household of the Lafayettes,' &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, 15*s.* net.

The KING in EXILE (CHARLES II.). By Eva Scott, Author of 'Rupert Prince Palatine.' Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15*s.* net.

PENTHESILEA. A Poem. By Laurence Binyon, Author of 'The Death of Adam,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

LETTERS and RECOLLECTIONS of GENERAL LEE. By Capt. ROBERT E. LEE. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12*s.* 6*d.* net.

The RUSSO-JAPANESE CONFLICT. By K. Asakawa, Professor of Philosophy at Dartmouth College. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

The SUN and the SERPENT. A Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy 8vo, with 33 Full-Page Illustrations, 10*s.* 6*d.* net.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE: the Doukhobors. By Aylmer Maude, Author of 'Tolstoy and his Problems.' Demy 8vo, illustrated, 6*s.* net.

MR. ERNEST THOMPSON SETON'S NEW BOOK.

MONARCH, the BIG BEAR. By Ernest Thompson Seton. With many Drawings by the Author in half-tone and line. 5*s.* net.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

JOHN FLETCHER'S MADONNA. By Mrs. Comyns Carr, Author of 'Cottage Folk,' &c.

IN SEARCH of the UNKNOWN. By Robert W. Chambers, Author of 'The Maids of Paradise,' 'Cardigan,' &c.

The WEDDING of the LADY of LOVELL. By Una L. Silberrad, Author of 'Petronilla Heroven,' &c.

TALES of RYE TOWN. By Maud Stepney Rawson, Author of 'A Lady of the Regency,' &c.

A ROUGH REFORMER. By Ernest Glanville, Author of 'The Kloof Bride,' &c.

ASIA AND EUROPE.

By MEREDITH TOWNSEND.

THIRD EDITION, WITH ENTIRELY NEW PREFACE.

Crown 8vo, price 5*s.* net.

Please write for COMPLETE CATALOGUE and ANNOUNCEMENT LIST, and PROSPECTUSES of all NEW BOOKS.

A. CONSTABLE & CO., LIMITED, 16, James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

METHUEN'S STANDARD LIBRARY

MESSRS. METHUEN have now commenced the publication of the most interesting Series which they have yet issued. METHUEN'S STANDARD LIBRARY, of which Mr. SIDNEY LEE is the General Editor, is an attempt to place the best books of all nations, and particularly of the Anglo-Saxon race, within the reach of every reader. Similar attempts have been made before, but they have generally failed. The books have either been too dear, or they have been produced in a style unworthy of fine literature, or the texts have been untrustworthy, or the scheme has been partial and unmethodical. The only series which has been planned on lines so complete and methodical is the German UNIVERSAL BIBLIOTHEK of Reclam, a series which has now run into several thousands of volumes.

FOR RICH AND POOR.

It is a difficult task to produce a series of classics whose comeliness and textual accuracy fit them for the scholar's library, and whose cheapness makes them possible for the bookshelves of the poor. This difficulty Messrs. Methuen have proposed to themselves to solve. They are making a bold bid for the suffrages of the reading public by publishing at Sixpence many books which have hitherto only been published at 3s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., and they hope that a new public will be discovered which may make Marlowe and Shelley in Sixpenny volumes not only a possibility but a success. The volumes of their new Series are well printed in a beautiful and legible type upon good paper. They are not pretty toy books, but sound, practical, and workmanlike volumes.

SIXPENCE.

The cheapness of these books, containing from 100 to 250 pages, is extraordinary. The price of an ordinary volume is Sixpence net in paper. Thus you may obtain THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS, or PARADISE LOST, or the first volume of Bacon's Prose Works, or THE IMITATION OF CHRIST, or Burke's REFLECTIONS ON THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, or MARCUS AURELIUS, or White's SELBORNE, or THE COMPLETE ANGLER for Sixpence each. Gibbon's DECLINE AND FALL is being published in seven double shilling volumes, and the following names give a foretaste of what the public may buy for Sixpence:—Sir Thomas Browne, Plato, Dante, Calderon, Lesage, Joseph Butler, Sir Thomas More, Boswell, Swift, Pepys, and Adam Smith.

COMPLETE AND SCHOLARLY.

Now many of the above books have been published in cheap texts before, though scarcely any have been published at Sixpence. But Messrs. Methuen are not content with this. They are publishing in this series complete and scholarly editions of the great poets and dramatists. Thus the first volume of Shakespeare, containing Five Plays, is now ready at Sixpence; and very shortly will be published the first volume of Ben Jonson (containing Three Plays), the first volume of Marlowe, and the first volume of Massinger. Keats, edited by Mr. de Selincourt, is in the press in a double shilling volume, and Shelley, edited by Mr. C. D. Locock, will be published in Four Sixpenny volumes. You will get complete editions of these authors at a ridiculous price.

TEXTS ABOVE SUSPICION.

The inclusion of such names as these, one would think, would make the fortune of any series, but Messrs. Methuen would beg the public to understand that they are not merely flinging great names in their faces. Mr. Sidney Lee's name is a guarantee of sound and scholarly work. Each book has been edited with the greatest care. Thus every word of Massinger, Marlowe, Ben Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, Shelley, Keats, and Milton has been scrupulously collated with the best editions. These books, therefore, cheap as they are, contain texts as good as half-guinea editions of the same authors, and in many cases it is believed that they will be the best texts in existence. The whole scheme has been worked out on methodical lines. The greatest books of every nation will be printed, complete and unabridged; and, if the public support this venture, they will have in time a library of classical literature at a price which to many may seem fantastic and impossible.

THE POOR MAN'S UNIVERSITY.

The cost of an ordinary volume is Sixpence net in paper and One Shilling net in cloth. Very long books are issued in double volumes at One Shilling net in paper and One Shilling and Sixpence net in cloth. When a hundred volumes of METHUEN'S STANDARD LIBRARY have appeared the purchaser will have the beginnings of a magnificent library for under Three Pounds. Here, indeed, is the POOR MAN'S UNIVERSITY.

THE FIRST TWELVE VOLUMES ARE:—

The WORKS of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

Vol. I. The TEMPEST, The TWO GENTLEMEN of VERONA, The MERRY WIVES of WINDSOR, MEASURE for MEASURE, The COMEDY of ERRORS. 6d.

The PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. By John Bunyan. 6d.

SENSE and SENSIBILITY. By Jane Austen. 6d.

The MEDITATIONS of MARCUS AURELIUS. The Translation is by R. GRAVES. 6d.

The HISTORY of the DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE. By EDWARD GIBBON. Vol. I. Double vol. 1s.
The Notes have been Revised by J. B. BURY, Litt.D.

PARADISE LOST. By John Milton. 6d.

EIKONOKLASTES and the TENURE of KINGS and MAGISTRATES. By JOHN MILTON. 6d.

ESSAYS and COUNSELS and the NEW ATLANTIS. By Francis BACON. 6d.

The POEMS and PLAYS of OLIVER GOLDSMITH. 6d.

REFLECTIONS on the FRENCH REVOLUTION. By Edmund BURKE. 6d.

ON the IMITATION of CHRIST. By Thomas à Kempis. The Translation is by C. BIGG, D.D., Canon of Christ Church. 6d.

The WORKS of BEN JONSON.
Vol. I. The CASE is ALTERED; EVERY MAN in his HUMOUR; EVERY MAN out of his HUMOUR. 6d.
The Text has been Collated by H. C. HART.

THE THIRD FOLIO.

MR. WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE'S Comedies, Histories, and Tragedies.

Published according to the true Original Copies. The third Impression. And unto this Impression is added seven Plays, never before Printed in Folio. Viz. Pericles Prince of Tyre. The London Prodigall. The History of Thomas Lord Cromwell. Sir John Oldcastle Lord Cobham. The Puritan Widow. A Yorkshire Tragedy. The Tragedy of Locrine. London, Printed for P. C.

Reproduced in facsimile from the edition of 1664. The Droeshout Portrait is contained in this volume. 4l. 4s. net.

MINIATURES. By Dudley Heath. With 9 Plates in Colour, 15 in Collotype, and 15 in Photogravure. Wide royal 8vo, 25s. net.

This book is a history of the Art of Miniature Painting from its origin and development in the Illuminated Manuscript down to the present day. [The Connoisseur's Library.]

WILLIAM BODHAM DONNE and his FRIENDS. Edited by Mrs. BARRIAM JOHNSON. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

The POEMS of JOHN KEATS. With an Introduction and Notes by E. DE SELINCOURT, M.A. With a Portrait in Photogravure. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The WORKS of CHARLES and MARY LAMB. Edited by E. V. LUCAS. With numerous Illustrations. In 7 vols. demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. each. Vols. VI. and VII., The LETTERS.

This edition contains a large number of new Letters, and all the Letters have been collated afresh. Mr. E. V. Lucas, the editor, has attempted in the elaborate notes not only to show the relation of Lamb's writings to his life, but to account for all his quotations and allusions—an idea of thoroughness far superior to any that previous editors have set before themselves.

DE PROFUNDIS. By Oscar Wilde. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"A work which from its intrinsic value is sure to command the attention of thinking men, from its style the admiration of literary artists, from the tragedy of which it records a part the pity of human hearts. That underneath it all lay a true man the writing of this book is an indubitable proof to any reader of imagination."—Athenæum.

A REPORT on CANADA. By the EARL of DURHAM. With an Introductory Note. New and cheaper edition. Demy 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.
A reprint of the celebrated Report which Lord Durham made to the British Government on the British State of North America in 1839.

A HISTORY of the POLICE in ENGLAND. By Capt. Melville Lee. New and cheaper edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

CHESHIRE. By W. M. Gallichan. Illustrated by E. Hartley. Small pott 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net. [Little Guides.]

DAILY STRENGTH for DAILY NEEDS. By Mary W. Tileston. Tenth Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
A cheaper edition of one of the best-known and most popular of devotional manuals.

The MERCHANT of VENICE. By William Shakespeare. Edited by C. KNOX POOLER. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [The Arden Shakespeare.]

ILLUMINATED MSS. By J. W. Bradley. With a Coloured Frontispiece and many Illustrations. Demy 16mo, 2s. 6d. net. [Little Books on Art.]

TRADE UNIONS. By G. Drage. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Books on Business.]

Kindly write to Messrs. METHUEN for a copy of the APRIL BULLETIN, which gives particulars of all their New Books and is sent post free to any address.

METHUEN & CO. 36, Essex Street, Strand, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S

LIST.

VOL. III. READY SHORTLY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. FROM the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo.

Previously Published.

Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

1905 ISSUE READY NEXT TUESDAY.

THE

STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1905. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY:

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

AN ANGLER'S HOURS.

By H. T. SHERINGHAM, Angling Editor of the Field. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s. [Next week.]

THE LOGIC OF HUMAN CHARACTER.

By CHARLES J. WHITBY, B.A. M.D. Cantab. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN'S GUIDE TO

ITALY AND SICILY.

With 19 Maps and 33 Plans. Fifth Edition. 10s. net.

THE WORKS OF TENNYSON.

The POETICAL and DRAMATIC WORKS.

Complete in 1 vol. INDIA PAPER EDITION. Crown

8vo, limp leather binding, gilt edges, 10s. 6d. net.

ORDINARY EDITION. Crown 8vo, green cloth, 7s. 6d.

COMPLETE POETICAL WORKS. In 12 vols. demy 16mo, cloth, 1s. net each; or in cloth box,

14s. net.

In 23 vols. cloth, 1s. net each; leather, 1s. 6d. net; or in handsome case, cloth, 25s. net; leather, 36s. net.

POCKET EDITION. Pott 8vo, bound in leather, 7s. 6d.

net.

GLOBE EDITION. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; or with gilt back, gilt edges, 4s. 6d.

The DRAMATIC WORKS. Miniature

EDITION. 5 vols. in box, 12s. 6d.

POEMS: IN MEMORIAM, MAUD,

PRINCESS, ENOCH ARDEN, &c. With Portrait and 16 Illustrations. 8vo, gilt edges, 2s.

GOLDEN TREASURY SERIES.

Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; limp leather, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. net.

IN MEMORIAM. LYRICAL POEMS.

The PRINCESS. IDYLLS of the KING.

MACMILLAN'S NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, gilt tops, 6s. each.

FOND ADVENTURES.

Tales of the Youth of the World.

By MAURICE HEWLETT.

THE RED CRAVAT.

By A. T. SHEPPARD.

OUTLOOK—"A very clever and interesting book."

DAILY NEWS—"Distinguished by unusual vigour and vivacity.

THE BELL IN THE FOG, and other Stories.

By GERTRUDE ATHERTON.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT

beg to announce that, owing to the continued demand for Mr. PERCEVAL LANDON'S great work on Tibet, the First Impression is nearly exhausted. A Second Impression is now being prepared.

L H A S A.

By PERCEVAL LANDON, Special Correspondent of the Times. With an Introduction by Col. Sir FRANCIS YOUNG-HUSBAND, K.C.I.E. In 2 vols. royal 8vo, beautifully illustrated, 2l. 2s. net.

An Illustrated Prospectus, with Extracts from Reviews, sent free on application.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

NOW IN THE PRESS, in 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY IN THE PRESENT WAR.

By Capt. N. KLADO, Of the Imperial Russian Navy.

NOW IN GREAT DEMAND.

In 1 vol. medium 8vo, with over 250 Illustrations, 18s. net.

ANTARCTICA.

Two Years amongst the Ice of the South Pole.

By Dr. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD.

"The authors have as good a story to tell as any polar explorer since Nansen, and they have told it with spirit and enthusiasm."—Times.

MR. DOWNEY'S BOOK IS THE SUCCESS OF THE SEASON.

In 1 vol. large crown 8vo, with 16 Portrait Sketches, 6s. net.

TWENTY YEARS AGO.

A Book of Anecdote.

By EDMUND DOWNEY,

Author of 'Through Green Glasses.'

"The anecdotes are all fresh goods, and in the humour of them there is an unmistakable taste of reality which adds immensely to the flavour."—St. James's Gazette.

"Mr. Downey has an ample collection of good stories, and knows how to tell them well."—World.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.

READY IN APRIL, in 1 vol. 6s.

M A R I A N S A X.

By Madame ALBANESI,

Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One Elder,' &c.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME OF THE KING.

Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War.

By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times.

"Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST ON CHILD LIFE AND LABOUR IN OUR BIG CITIES.

In 1 vol. large crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 6s.

The CHILD SLAVES of BRITAIN.

By ROBERT SHERRARD, Author of 'The White Slaves of England,' &c.

NEW EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

In 1 vol. demy 8vo, illustrated with numerous Reproductions from Photographs and Drawings, 12s. net.

ILLUSTRATED HORSEBREAK-

ING. By Capt. M. H. HAYES, Author of 'Points of the Horse,' 'Veterinary Notes,' &c.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 182, High Holborn, W.C.

GAY & BIRD'S NOVELS.

READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND BOOKSTALLS ON MONDAY, APRIL 10th.

Size, 6½ in. by 5½ in., attractively produced, price 3s. 6d.

MISREPRESENTATIVE MEN.

ADAM—ANANIAS—DIOGENES—NERO—MARAT—ROOSEVELT—PADEREWSKI—BACON—SIR T. LIPTON, and WINSTON S. CHURCHILL, &c.

By HARRY GRAHAM (Col. D. Streamer), Author of 'Ruthless Rhymes for Heartless Homes,' &c. Illustrated by F. STROTHMANN.

* * A remarkable volume, which will provoke roars of laughter from its saddest reader.

SECOND EDITION. READY THIS DAY. 3s. 6d. net; post free, 3s. 9d.

THE CULT OF THE CHAFING DISH.

By FRANK SCHLOESSER.

Crown 8vo, pp. 224, with Decorated Title-page, Head and Tail Pieces, and Binding. Cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A racy little book, in which capital stories are blended with cookery recipes..... The author deserves our eternal gratitude."

JUST PUBLISHED. AT ALL LIBRARIES, price 6s. post free.

JACK VERSCHOYLE'S WIFE.

By "CATTIEUCHLAN."

A Society Novel of the early Victorian Era, introducing many Social and Political scenes of great interest, which have remained untouched by the novelist to this day. The author is anonymous for the present.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 2s. 6d. post free.

THE COUNTESS.

By GEORGETTE AGNEW.

PUNCH.—"Idyllic indeed are the scenes.....A more attractive character than that of Madame Lablanche it would be difficult to imagine, and at the close of the episode of her first impulsive love we are compelled to admit that she has had a lucky escape."

MISS REPLIER'S NEW VOLUME OF ESSAYS.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 4s. 6d. net.

COMPROMISES.

By AGNES REPLIER.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Delightful reading.....Addison might have written and Lamb corrected them."

A Fine Library Edition in Twelve Volumes.

A MARVEL OF CHEAPNESS.

FIELDING'S COMPLETE WORKS.

With the Author's Preface and an Introduction

By G. H. MAYNADIER, Ph.D.,

Department of English, Harvard University.

Size of Page, 8½ by 5½ in., good paper. Small pica type.

A Photogravure Frontispiece in each Volume. Tastefully bound in cloth, full gilt back. Price per volume, 2s. 6d. net.

Prospectus on application.

NOTICE.—Send 2s. 6d. for Vol. I., and if not approved we will return money in full.

Size 9 in. by 5½ in., 12 Coloured Plates and many Text Illustrations, cloth gilt, price 10s. net; postage 4d.

The ORIENTAL RUG. A Mono-

graph on Eastern Rugs and Carpets, Saddle-bags, Mats, and Pillows. By WILLIAM DE LANCY ELLWANGER.

Price 10s. net.

A LOVE GARLAND. By Francis

HENRY CLIFFE, Author of a Translation of 'The Poems of Leopardi,' &c.

SCOTSMAN.—"The poem is full of filial piety, written in the measure and, as far as may be, also in the spirit of the famous elegy in which Tennyson commemorated young

Hallam.....It is always graceful, sincere, and skilful enough to hold the attention of any sympathetic reader."

Crown 8vo, fully illustrated, cloth gilt, 4s. 6d. net.

Postage 3d.

WHITTIER-LAND. By Samuel T.

PICKARD.

This volume has been written by an old and close friend of the poet Whittier, at the instance of his many admirers.

The author has included many anecdotes of the poet, and a number of poems, now first published.

A most interesting book about London. Crown 8vo, daintily printed and bound, price 3s. 6d. post free.

MINIATURES from LONDON LIFE.

By T. R. CROGER, Author of 'Notes on Conductors and Conducting,' &c.

SUN.—"There is a fund of humour in the book, and not a few valuable facts and reflections. The chapters on historic byways are especially instructive and interesting."

London: GAY & BIRD, 22, Bedford Street, W.C.

NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE POST FREE.

SATURDAY, APRIL 8, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| LHASA AND ITS MYSTERIES ... ..   | 423     |
| SOUTH AFRICA PAST AND PRESENT ... ..   | 424     |
| HAZLITT AND COLERIDGE ... ..   | 425     |
| NAPOLEON'S DEALINGS WITH THE POPE ... ..   | 426     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Clairvoyante; Nancy Stair; The Rebel Wooing; To Windward; Freckles; Widdicombe; My Turkish Bride) ... ..   | 428     |
| BOOKS ON PLATO ... ..  | 429     |
| ITALIAN PHILOLOGY ... ..   | 430     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Leopardi in English Verse; W. B. Donne and his Friends; The Church in the Primitive Age; Maxims of Balzac; Reprints; The Baptismal Service; Schoolroom Humour; The Revue Germanique) ... .. | 431-432 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 432     |
| RESEARCH FELLOWSHIPS AT NEWNHAM COLLEGE; A LYKE-WAKE DINGEE; THE ARAB CONQUEST OF EGYPT; CAPT. WILLIAM ADAMS; THE SCOTT SALE ... ..  | 433-434 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 434     |
| SCIENCE—CHEMICAL BOOKS; THE STRUCTURE OF THE ATOM; RESEARCH NOTES; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..  | 436-439 |
| FINE ARTS—ARCHITECTURAL BOOKS; EARLY BRITISH MASTERS AT SHEPHERD'S GALLERY; CONSTANTIN MEUNIER; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..   | 439-442 |
| MUSIC—SYMPHONY CONCERT; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..  | 443     |
| DRAMA—HAMLET; GOSSIP ... ..  | 443-444 |

LITERATURE

Lhasa and its Mysteries, with a Record of the Expedition of 1903-4. By L. Austine Waddell, Lieut.-Col. I.M.S. (Murray.)

It says much for the inherent interest of the Tibetan question that three large works could be published on the subject within as many months, and that each of them should possess an exceptional amount of original and instructive matter. Col. Waddell is the latest, and we may now not unreasonably hope the last, chronicler of the expedition to Lhasa, and in some respects he enjoys a distinct advantage over either of his predecessors. He has closely studied the literature and religion of Tibet for many years; his previous work on Tibetan Buddhism is favourably known; he had already visited several parts of Western Tibet; and he possesses a considerable knowledge of the Tibetan tongue. He thus could boast qualifications for the task of describing the mysterious forbidden land north of the Himalaya that the journalists whose works have preceded his could not lay claim to. For them everything was novel; to him the chief attraction of the expedition lay in the fact that it provided the opportunity of corroborating or correcting the study of many years. A somewhat amusing instance will illustrate this difference with sufficient clearness. Mr. Landon gave his readers a description and an illustration of what he called the Treaty Stone, the monument recording the treaty between China and Tibet in the seventh century of our era; but Col. Waddell points out that there is a mistake. The stone fixed on by Mr. Landon relates not to the treaty, but to an edict on smallpox! A monolith with a Tibetan inscription stands on the further side of the willow-tree overshadowing both monuments, and is the real memorial of the ancient treaty. As to its precise authenticity and antiquity, we notice that Col. Waddell, perhaps wisely, avoids committing himself to a positive opinion.

As the chief medical officer with the expedition, Col. Waddell enjoyed exceptional opportunities of studying the Tibetans at close quarters, and his praises are consequently entitled to particular notice. It is not merely that he lauds their courage and describes their daring as "superb," but he pays frequent tribute to their good temper and readiness to please. Speaking of the crowd in the Lhasa streets, he writes:—

"Their beardless faces, though coarse-featured and small and restless-eyed, had a contented, cheery expression, since they had lost their fears, having seen the futility of further resistance and experienced our forbearance. Their friendly demeanour did not bear out Marco Polo's wholesale denunciation that 'the people of Tebet are an ill-conditioned race.' It was almost always a good-humoured grinning crowd that gathered round us in our shopping or photographing excursions, and smiled in childish pleasure at our lavishness or stared with open-eyed curiosity at our strange ways, invariably respectful, though never cringing. Seldom was a sullen face seen, except amongst the Lamas, but many of these, too, would occasionally relax so as to let a good-natured smile lighten up their broad faces."

His impressions of the people in the mass are strengthened by what he says about one or two individual Tibetans with whom he had relations. There is, for instance, the extremely interesting account of his interview with the Regent of Tibet, with whom the treaty was signed. They had a long theological discussion, which was somewhat abruptly ended by the Eastern dignitary's discovery that Buddha was not mentioned in the Christian Scriptures, whereupon he brusquely asserted that "the English have no religion at all!" But interesting as is this passage, the account given of the late Prime Minister, the Shata Shape, claims more detailed notice, as it removes a good deal of misconception about, perhaps, the most intelligent Tibetan now living. Col. Waddell made his acquaintance some years ago at Darjeeling, and the Shape, who subsequently fell into disgrace under the Dalai Lama, is at present in honourable confinement at Sangnak Cho, in the province of Tsa-rong. But there is good reason to believe that this retirement is only temporary. It has been stated in several places that on the occasion of his visit to Darjeeling the Shape was ducked in a pond by English officers for some alleged rudeness to an English lady; but Col. Waddell describes the incident in a different way, and diminishes its importance by stating that it was "his clerk" who was pulled off his horse and hustled on the public road by "some hot-headed young British 'subs.'" It may, therefore, be hoped that the ex-minister has made little of the incident, which would hardly have been the case if he had himself undergone this personal indignity. There is a very striking portrait of the Shape in the present volume, and we call attention to it for the purpose of noticing the somewhat remarkable resemblance between this Tibetan minister and Lord Curzon. It lends additional interest to Col. Waddell's description of the man:—

"Happening to be at Darjeeling at the time, I paid him [the Shape] several visits, and found him to be a most refined and well-informed gentleman, and very well disposed towards the English. As a hereditary ruler he was anxious to learn something about how we ruled India, and he begged me to give him a summary of our criminal, police, and civil codes. For, said he, as he had nothing to show politically for his visit of many months to Darjeeling, he should like to be able to take back to Lhasa some useful information, by which his countrymen might improve their government by imitating portions of our Indian system, the superiority of which had much impressed him.....He was much struck with our practice of not compelling an accused person to testify against himself, and exclaimed, 'Why, we, following the Chinese, do the very opposite, for we torture the accused until he confesses to the crime!'.....Offering to take him down to the plains to see Gaya, the holiest place on earth to a Buddhist, the spot where Sakya Muni became a Buddha, he thanked me effusively, but explained that while, personally, nothing would give him greater pleasure, he was an official, a servant of the Grand Lama, who had permitted him to go only as far as Darjeeling, and that, were he to go further on to India, he might on returning to Lhasa be disgraced and lose his position and influence on the ground of having been too friendly with the English."

This conversation took place at the end of 1893, about the time that the convention was signed with the Chinese Commissioner, and Col. Waddell very rightly regrets that "this friendly Tibetan nobleman" was allowed to return to Lhasa without having been associated with the treaty. Had this been done the Tibetans could and would not have repudiated the treaty as they did, on the ground that they "had been no party to it." The best that can be hoped from him now is that some turn of the political wheel in Tibet may bring the Shape back to power, and that he may have the opportunity of putting into practice his good intentions of twelve years ago.

With regard to the political side of the question, Col. Waddell does not conceal his sympathy with the original policy of the Indian Government, which was to ignore China, and to bring Tibet into direct relationship with India by the appointment of a British Resident at Lhasa. He accuses China of having deliberately opposed the expedition, and his indictment of the Amban is not weakened by the obstructiveness, now coming into prominence, of the Chinese Commissioner Tang, who is at the present moment at Calcutta. He says:—

"This Amban Yu Tai is a brother of the envoy Sheng Tai, who signed the Sikkim Convention in 1893. He is a Manchu of noble birth, a scion of the royal house, and was specially deputed from Peking by the Empress-Dowager to settle the Anglo-Tibetan dispute, under a threat of punishment should he fail. His evasion and dilatory tactics will be remembered—how he was appointed in September, 1903, but did not reach Lhasa till the 12th of February, 1904, and despite repeated assurances that he was hurrying on to Gurnu and afterwards to Gyantsé, and giving dates for his starting, under various pretexts never left this capital at all. Indeed, there was every reason to believe that, notwithstanding their plausible professions of friendship, the Chinese have been all along hostile, playing their old game of making a cat's-paw of the Tibetans against us. They certainly gave false information several times during this expedition, minimising the strength of the Tibetan forces, and they concealed from the mission the plot to attack it at Gyantsé, while in the Chumbi Valley they are believed to have acted as spies, giving information to the Tibetans of our strength and movements, and are alleged by the Tibetans to have opposed the sending of delegates."

Notwithstanding these accusations, which everybody believes to be very near the truth, the policy pursued by the Government has been to give way to China all along the line, and to transfer the results of our efforts and expenditure very largely to her pockets. Col. Waddell, however, is not always correct when referring to China. He attributes the abandonment of the Macaulay mission in 1886 to the fact that Lord Salisbury "held the then current but exaggerated notions of the enormous military strength of China." This is not in accordance with history. We must leave the responsibility for the statement that Lord Salisbury had these "exaggerated notions" of China's military power with Col. Waddell, but certainly they had nothing whatever to do with the withdrawal in question. The facts are that Lord Salisbury was then engaged in negotiations with China on the subject of the position created in Burma by our occupation of the country, and Chinese diplomacy had raised so many points of controversy that no speedy settlement seemed possible. The negotiations promised indeed to prove interminable, when a hint reached Lord Salisbury that if he gave up the projected mission to Lhasa the difficulties in Burma would be removed and a satisfactory arrangement concluded. Lord Salisbury gladly countermanded a mission which was then mainly geographical and scientific, to be relieved from his worries in the Irrawaddi valley, which were many and real. He had certainly no "exaggerated notion" of the capacity of Chinese diplomatists to show themselves dilatory and obstructive.

We have noticed a certain number of slight mistakes, and the accuracy of the references in the index of subjects is not unimpeachable. Those, for instance, to the Shata Shape contain several errors. We do not know why Col. Waddell should add to the existing terrors of Asiatic orthography by spelling the Chinese Emperor Khien-Lung's name as Chenlung. With regard also to the Buddhist formula, "Om! ma-ni pad-me Hum!" is there sufficient reason, after a century or so of unbroken usage, for changing the last word into "Hung"? Col. Waddell strews this word about his pages in a somewhat aggressive manner, and he only once softens this cause of irritation by modifying it into "Hüng." These remarks do not imply that we have any doubt of the soundness of Col. Waddell's scientific attainments; but there are cases in which it is better to accept the prevalent practice than to introduce an innovation which only tends to produce confusion in the mind of the general reader. Col. Waddell pays some well-deserved compliments to the skill and prudence of Sir James Macdonald, the commander of the troops, whose share in the success of the expedition has perhaps not been sufficiently emphasized in the histories of this little war. As Mr. Brodrick's censure of Col. Younghusband is still fresh in the public memory, we rather admire Col. Waddell's boldness in closing his volume with the prediction that there will "ere long" be a university under British direction at Lhasa.

SOUTH AFRICA PAST AND PRESENT.

The Life and Times of Sir Richard Southey.
By the Hon. Alex. Wilmot. (Sampson Low & Co.)

Agricultural and Pastoral Prospects of South Africa. By Owen Thomas. (Constable & Co.)

SIR RICHARD SOUTHEY was a remarkable man of a type which is happily common in the history of our dominions beyond the seas. He was, as his biographer justly observes,

"a typical colonist of the best class—a class of which their mother country and the lands of their adoption may alike be proud; a class of men brave, patient, sagacious, and industrious, who have taken so great a part in the formation and consolidation of that Greater Britain which now forms an important part of the Empire, and, it may be added, a class difficult of creation except under conditions found only in new countries, where the elements of ever-present difficulty and danger make men quick in observation, cautious in decision, and determined in action."

He can hardly be called a famous man, for the part which he played in building up South Africa never brought him very conspicuously before the public of this country. But his services were both known and valued by the authorities, and the K.C.M.G. which the Queen bestowed on him in 1891 was properly characterized by Lord Loch when he wrote to its recipient, "Your services to the country will make every one rejoice that you have received this recognition." Southey's leading qualities were a determination of character and imperturbability of disposition which strongly impressed Froude when that amiable traveller made his acquaintance in 1874. At that time Southey was Lieutenant-Governor of Griqualand West, containing the newly discovered diamond-mines. Froude wrote in his diary:—

"I have rarely met a man whom I have more admired. Mr. Southey is over seventy. He drove me one day seventy miles in a cart with as wild a team as I ever sat behind, and he went to a party in the evening. I said to myself as I looked at him, 'If some one came in and told you that you were to be taken out and shot in five minutes, you would finish what you were about with perfect deliberation, and not a muscle of your face would alter.'"

On a smaller scale, Southey's character seems to have resembled that of the Duke of Wellington. He could boast the same equanimity in danger, the same inflexible intention to carry on the Queen's Government, the same strict adherence to truth in word and action. He was not much of an orator, but his speeches in the Colonial Parliament carried greater weight than those of many more brilliant speakers, because "it was known that he never uttered anything tainted by falsehood." This is no mean reputation for a public servant to earn, and on that score alone Southey's life was worth writing. Mr. Wilmot, who is an authority on the history of South Africa, has written it with exactness and fulness which make amends for the want of literary graces—much as Southey's own veracity counterbalanced his lack of rhetorical ornament. The book covers a considerable period of colonial history, and is of use as throwing light on a series of events which have been somewhat obscured by the more showy occurrences of the past generation.

Southey, who was a third cousin of Robert Southey the poet, was born in a Devonshire village in 1808, and emigrated to the Cape with his father at the age of twelve. The land to which he came as a boy had been an English colony for little over a decade, and was still engaged in the task of consolidation against the outlying and savage tribes of Kaffirs and Zulus. The Slachtersnek rebellion had just been crushed by that injudicious use of force which sowed the seed of hatred for English rule in the hearts of the Boers. Chaka, the Napoleon of the Zulus, had recently founded his military despotism, from which the revolt of Moselekatse and Moshesh gave rise to the Matabele and the Basuto States about the time of Southey's arrival in the colony. Seven years later the famous ordinance of General Bourke, known as the Magna Carta of the natives, was issued in pursuance of the propaganda of Dr. Philip and his fellow-missionaries. Young Southey was only twenty-six when slavery was abolished in the Cape Colony, and the Boers, who considered—with some justice—that they had been hardly treated by the manner in which this salutary ordinance was carried out, shook off the dust of British territory from their feet and went into the wilderness.

Southey was personally concerned in many affairs which were of vital importance to the growing colony. He married at an early age, and settled down as a farmer in the neighbourhood of Grahamstown. When the Kaffir War of 1834 broke out, he had to leave his farm to destruction and escape for his life. After placing his wife and child in safety, he volunteered for active service under Sir Benjamin D'Urban and Sir Harry Smith. Mr. Wilmot gives a good account of the ill-advised way in which Lord Glenelg, under the influence of the missionary element, pandered to the Kaffirs, and disgusted the colonists by ceding back the districts which the British troops had captured by hard fighting—thus perpetuating the menace of the black cloud which lay on the borders of the colony, only to be thoroughly dissipated in our own days with the destruction of first the Zulu and then the Matabele power. After the end of this war Southey returned—like Cincinnatus—to the plough, from which he was again summoned when Sir Harry Smith became Governor of the Cape Colony in 1847. Smith had noted the energy and talents of the young volunteer, and invited him to become his private secretary in the work of "settling our black children." Southey accepted the offer, and entered upon a career of public service which lasted for nearly half a century. He was largely instrumental, first of all, in the delicate task of declaring British sovereignty over the Orange River settlements of the Boers, after the skirmish of Boomplaats had taught them that they were as yet unable to resist British arms. In this hazardous and difficult business he displayed a combination of firmness and tact which won him golden opinions, and caused the Boers to acquiesce in the new order of things far more readily than any one had supposed possible. For the next twenty years we see Southey holding various minor offices, and struggling against the retrograde policy which was adopted by the Home Government in that unfortunate era of "painter-cutting" doctrine. He was one of the colonial statesmen who consistently pointed out the criminal folly of such a policy, and thus paved the way for later imperial designs by much steady, though quiet work. All his colleagues learnt to value

"the innate sagacity, the capacity for taking infinite pains, the temper that could not be ruffled, and the courage that could not be daunted, with which he approached every task allotted to him."

As Colonial Secretary of the Cape, and later as the first Governor of Griqualand West—the country of the new diamond mines—he did much to preserve and consolidate British influence in South Africa, and so to prepare the way for that "reddening of the whole map" which has at last been brought about, with the best prospects for the future of one of our richest dominions beyond the seas. Southey was a really great man, whose repute in his lifetime was hardly commensurate with his achievements, and he well deserved to be depicted to the public, for whom he worked, as Mr. Wilmot has drawn him in this interesting biography.

Mr. Owen Thomas's book has no pretension to literary merit, but is a kind of catalogue raisonné of the various districts of South Africa which offer favourable prospects to the farmer and stock-breeder. It seems to be founded on a careful investigation of the facts, and should be useful to the intending emigrant. To the general reader its interest lies chiefly in its roseate confutation of those cynics who still declare that the agricultural prospects of South Africa are like the snakes in Iceland.

The Collected Works of William Hazlitt.
12 vols. Edited by A. R. Waller and Arnold Glover. With an Introduction by W. E. Henley. (Dent & Co.)

(Second Notice.)

WHAT is Hazlitt's attitude towards Coleridge, as revealed in these volumes? As clearly, perhaps, as any of his generation Hazlitt discerned the greatness of Coleridge's natural gifts; yet of none of his contemporaries has he written in terms so contemptuous and abusive. The reason was twofold: Coleridge had wasted his great powers; and, like Wordsworth, he had turned to the unclean side. If he was more abject, but less odious than Wordsworth, this was merely because he had failed while sacrificing his independence of mind to secure independence of fortune. His politics had been turned—but not to account. There are, it is well known, certain savage attacks on Coleridge in The Examiner and The Edinburgh Review of 1816-17, the authenticity of which—notwithstanding that the best judges assign them to Hazlitt—has in some quarters been questioned or denied simply because of their extreme ferocity and gross injustice. Hazlitt, it is urged, never could have sunk to the level of Gifford; still less could he have employed the weapons of Gifford to wound the name of one to whom, on his own showing, he owed the very power of literary expression. Unhappily, Hazlitt shows elsewhere that he had profited only too well by Gifford's lessons in the art of defamation; though it may be admitted that he seldom reaches the lengths of brutal insolence exhibited in the Edinburgh critique of 'Christabel.' Of the articles in question, one in The Examiner (June 2nd, 1816) on 'Christabel,' and two in The Edinburgh (September, December, 1816), on 'Christabel' and the 'Lay Sermon' respectively—the editors have, on the strength of the internal evidence, admitted the last-named into their text; the two others, as "probably, though not certainly, Hazlitt's," they have printed amongst the notes. They have done well; for editors are bound to give their author the benefit of the doubt. And yet, when all the evidence, circumstantial as well as internal, is taken into account, so strong does the presumption of Hazlitt's responsibility become, that it may be said to exclude every alternative theory save one—that which sees in these two articles the hand of a facile and unscrupulous imitator—some imitator unknown and undivineable—of Hazlitt's style.

Let us briefly review the facts. In April, 1816, Coleridge had fled from his long opium-slavery at Calne to the shelter of Gillman's home at Highgate. Here his first move was to seek work on The Courier, a step of which Hazlitt was bound to hear from Lamb, between whom and Coleridge Morgan, Coleridge's factotum, was just then plying daily. Now by 1816 The Courier had become, under Street, the new manager, a semi-official organ of the Ministry. Hazlitt, soured by the ruin of his hopes the year before, chafed at the thought of Coleridge

"squatting like a toad at the ear of The Courier, and pouring therein his canting, drivelling abuse of Jacobinism and the Revolution."

In 1810 Coleridge had worked for this paper under Stuart; but Street cared little for the poet's abstract politics, and discouraged, without flatly declining, his overtures. Of this, however, Hazlitt could, of course, know nothing. He resolved to attack and, if possible, disable Coleridge. 'Christabel' was just coming out: why not assail the poet through his ballad?—of which, by the way, Hazlitt's wife owned a MS. copy. 'Christabel' appeared on or about June 1st. On the 2nd The Examiner printed a short review of the poem—the first of the articles in dispute.

In the first place, the opening paragraph is in Hazlitt's wonted style. Here it is, with some parallels from Hazlitt's acknowledged writings, to which the bracketed numbers in the paragraph refer:—

"The fault of Mr. Coleridge is, that [1] he comes to no conclusion. He is [2] a man of that universality of genius, that [3] his mind is suspended between poetry and prose, truth and falsehood, and an infinity of other things; and [4] from an excess of capacity, he does nothing."

Compare with this the following passages, which might be multiplied indefinitely:—

1. "He is an intellectual Mar-Plot, who will neither let anybody else come to a conclusion, nor come to one himself.....Two things are indispensable to him—to set out from no premises, and to arrive at no conclusion."—III. p. 139.

2. "He walks abroad in the majesty of an universal understanding."—IV. p. 214.

3. "He moves in an unaccountable diagonal between truth and falsehood, sense and nonsense, sophistry and commonplace," &c.—III. p. 140.

4. "Mr. C. is too rich in intellectual wealth to need to task himself to any drudgery.....Persons of the greatest capacity are often those, who for this reason do the least."—IV. p. 214.

Secondly, The Examiner charges Coleridge with omitting from the printed text of 'Christabel' a "line which in the MS. runs thus, or nearly thus:—Hideous, deformed, and pale of hue." The writer adds:—

"This line is necessary to make common sense of the First and Second Part. 'It is the keystone that makes up the arch.' For that reason Mr. C. left it out."

In other words, Coleridge here is said deliberately to turn sense into nonsense. Compare with this the second paragraph of the Examiner review of the 'Lay Sermon' (III. p. 138), and the exordium of the Edinburgh notice of the same work (X. p. 120), where Coleridge is charged with abusing the free citizen's privilege of writing and publishing nonsense, and with "laying himself out in absurdity." The line here borrowed from Ben Jonson ('Underwoods,' xxx.) is a favourite quotation of Hazlitt's. Thirdly, the reviewer says that behind Coleridge's story "there is something disgusting" (we shall see what he means presently), "which is but ill glossed over by a veil of Della Cruscan sentiment and fine writing, like flowers strewed on a dead body." Compare this with "Here is a very pretty Della Cruscan image; and we think it a pity that Mr. C. ever quitted that school of poetry," &c. (X. p. 127); "He misses his way by strewing it with flowers" (IV. p. 214); "Burke strewed the flowers of his style over the rotten carcass of corruption" (XII. p. 289). Fourthly, the poet is said to be, "like the witch in Spenser, evidently 'busied about some wicked gin'"—another, this, of Hazlitt's stock quotations. Fifthly, the story of 'Christabel' is described as "petrific"—a Miltonic word, with its congeners, affected by Hazlitt. Coleridge, for example, is "a terrible petrification of religion, genius, and the love of liberty." Sixthly, "Why does not Mr. C. always write in this manner?" inquires the Examiner critic; "If Mr. Wordsworth does not always write in this manner, it is his own fault," writes Hazlitt (XI. p. 574). Seventhly, "We could repeat these lines to ourselves not the less often for not knowing their meaning," writes the Examiner critic of 'Kubla Khan,' ll. 37-41; "There are two lines in a modern poem which we often repeat to ourselves," &c., writes Hazlitt (VIII. p. 441). Eighthly, the critic charges Coleridge with throwing a crust to the critics—a phrase applied by Hazlitt (IV. p. 279) to Wordsworth. Ninthly, and lastly, the story of 'Christabel' is said by the Examiner critic to be "dim, obscure, visionary—more like a dream than a reality." C., when he wrote it, was spell-bound; and "the mind, in reading it, is spell-bound" also—"the faculties thrown into a state of metaphysical suspense and theoretical imbecility." Compare Hazlitt's account of the 'Lay Sermon' (E. R., Dec., 1816), written by Coleridge "under the spell of voluntary self-delusion." "Our lay-preacher talks in his sleep"—indulges in a "sort of day-dream," and imparts his hallucinations to his readers. The 'Lay Sermon' "tends to produce a complete interregnum of all opinions; an abeyance of the understanding; a suspension both of theory and practice," &c. (X. p. 121).

The reader will see that if Hazlitt did not write this review, it was written by his moral, intellectual, and literary double. But an attack in The Examiner, however trenchant, could do comparatively little harm. The foe, to be effectually maimed, must be struck at through a medium of wider circulation and influence. In September appeared the second assault on 'Christabel,' and this time the organ selected was The Edinburgh Review. The thing is not a critique; it is, what Coleridge calls it, a "rhapsody of predetermined insult." It rallies Coleridge on his intemperance, and hints that he is under medical restraint. It charges him with covert obscenity—his poem, so far as it has any meaning at all, relates a disgusting tale of seduction under the thin disguise of gramarye. Geraldine is a man in female garb, and Christabel a not unwilling victim. The Examiner critic had implied this by hinting that "the sorceress seems to act without power—Christabel to yield without resistance." The reviewer strives to fasten an indelicate meaning on the word "leap," which occurs in the twenty-ninth line of the original text, and affects to be shocked at the open reference to the gender of the mastiff. He derides the language of the opening lines, forgetting that it is the language of Shakspeare. The style of the narrative, he complains, is "vague, inexplicit," at times "unintelligible"; it is marked by bewilderingly sudden transitions—"the poet opens eagerly upon some topic, and then flies from it immediately"—an "unerring symptom" of drug-sodden brains. 'Kubla Khan,' again, is truly, as its author observes, a "psychological curiosity," and "smells strongly of the anodyne," while 'The Pains of Sleep' is "mere raving." The whole pamphlet, in fine, is "utterly destitute of value.....it exhibits from first to last not a ray of genius." Such is the mixture of drivelling and delirium which Lord Byron extols as the work of a "wild and original genius"!

"And are his panegyrics to be echoed by the mean tools of a political faction, because they relate to one whose daily prose is understood to be dedicated to the support of all that courtiers think should be supported?"

At least let such services "be requited with solid pudding instead of empty praise." Let the Treasury reward their champion with a pension or a place, instead of "puffing his bad poetry, and cramming his nonsense down the throats of the loyal and well-affected."

If The Examiner chastises with whips, The Edinburgh chastises with scorpions. Yet, differing as they do in degree of hostility, one has only to study these two articles together carefully to see that they are the work of one hand, and, if so, that hand is Hazlitt's. Our limits oblige us to omit the evidence in the case of the Edinburgh article. We must refer the reader to a communication in Notes and Queries (9th S. xi. 170-2), where he will find the subject fairly, though not exhaustively discussed; suffice it here to say that the charges of inexplicitness and unintelligibility, flightiness and raving, "coxcombry and shuffling," which form the heads of the indictment in the Edinburgh review of 'Christabel,' form also the staple of Hazlitt's attacks on Coleridge in his acknowledged writings. One point, omitted by the writer in Notes and Queries, may be mentioned. The Edinburgh critic derides Coleridge for speaking of his poem as 'The Christabel,' and a month or two later Hazlitt, in The Examiner, derides Coleridge for using the same form in reference to 'Wat Tyler': "'The Wat Tyler,' as Mr. Coleridge has personified it," &c. Is it likely that a point so infinitesimal, so utterly irrelevant, should be made by two writers independently? The Edinburgh article, we know, was at the time of its appearance popularly ascribed to Hazlitt. Jeffrey expressly disclaimed the authorship, but Hazlitt never. As to the review of the 'Lay Sermon,' that was not even bespoken by Jeffrey, but, as he tells us, "offered to him by a gentleman in whose judgment and talents he had great confidence." In short, every circumstance connected with their appearance points to the conclusion that these articles in The Edinburgh must be regarded as several stages in a preconceived plan of campaign. They were designed by Hazlitt to follow up the attacks in The Examiner (June 2nd, September 8th, December 29th, 1816), and form part of a series culminating in the onslaught on 'The Literary Life' (E. R., August, 1817), which, it is evident, was confidently expected to demolish the adversary. Such is the obvious inference from Hazlitt's closing sentence of contemptuous dismissal: "'Till he can do something better, we would rather hear no more of him."

The assault on 'Christabel' in The Edinburgh Review is a lasting stain on English criticism; yet this circumstance, while it should make us cautious in fixing the responsibility, cannot justify us in withholding or diluting the truth. To those who take the pains to study carefully the characters, works, and mutual relations of the two men concerned, it becomes a moral certainty that the responsibility lies with Hazlitt. He often writes of Coleridge "with a ripe and sensual gust" (Henley), and his strictures are by no means always unfair or unmerited; but the assault on 'Christabel' is a disgrace to the critic no less than to the man—it is at once poor journalism and a moral offence. To adapt Henley's account of an article by Gifford: its style is abject, its inspiration party-political, its matter the very dirt of the mind. Writing under the shelter of anonymity and from the vantage ground of a powerful literary organ, Hazlitt proclaims to the world that a poem is utterly worthless which he knows to be, of its kind, supereminently good. Elsewhere (III. p. 205) he betrays his true opinion of 'Christabel.' He hated Coleridge for his politics, and therefore strove to blast his literary fame; but we find an intensity of bitterness, a wanton savagery, in the second review of 'Christabel' which even the force of political animosity fails to account for, and the following confession—if, as we believe, it relates to Coleridge—suggests a further personal cause for Hazlitt's unbridled ferocity (VII. p. 132):—

"I care little what any one says, particularly behind my back, and in the way of critical and analytical discussion—it is looks of dislike and scorn that I answer with the worst venom of my pen. The expression of the face wounds me more than the expressions of the tongue. If I have in one instance mistaken this expression, or resorted to the remedy where I ought not, I am sorry for it. But the face was too fine over which it mantled, and I am too old to have misunderstood it."

Le Pape et l'Empereur (1804-1815). By Henri Welschinger. (Paris, Plon.)

THIS work fills up a gap in the history of the First Empire. Much as students are indebted to Count d'Haussonville and M. Theiner for their excellent works dealing with the Concordats and the struggles that ensued, their volumes, as was well known, lacked complete documentary evidence, especially in the later parts. This was due not to any want of assiduity on their part, but to the action of the Imperial Government. Napoleon III. believed that he was acting in the interests of his family and of the Imperial tradition by refusing permission to the former of these scholars to consult the procès-verbaux of the National Council of 1811. The St. Helena 'Memoirs' had expressly stated the desire of the illustrious exile that his "discussions" with Rome should not be made known, and Montholon was informed that the Emperor himself would dictate to him an account of those episodes. As a matter of fact, little was committed to paper, probably on account of ill-health or a growing distaste for the subject. This is to be regretted. The paragraphs which were dictated contain statements to the effect that, after the anointing of the Emperor by Pope Pius VII.,

"the Kings of Europe emulated each other in their haste to recognize him, and saw with pleasure a modification introduced into the Republic."

The carrying away of the Pope from Rome by General Miollis in 1809 is guardedly touched on, and is finally dismissed as "one of those inexplicable combinations of destiny which sometimes occur, and which now transported the Chair of St. Peter from the banks of the Tiber to those of the Seine. Paris would be the capital of the Grand Empire and the residence of the sovereign Pontiff of 80,000,000 Catholics."

In view of these official utterances, it is not surprising that Napoleon III. displayed much caution with regard to documents dealing with the relations of his uncle to the Papacy. The number of documents on this question which the Imperial Commission omitted from the official 'Correspondance de Napoléon I.' was very large; and it is needless to say that the letters then suppressed form a piquant addition to the editions recently published by MM. de Lecestre and de Brotonne.

M. Welschinger is equally fortunate. He has been the first to use for literary purposes the large files of hitherto unedited documents relating not only to the Council of 1811, but also to the Ecclesiastical Commissions of 1809 and 1811, and to the so-called Concordat of Fontainebleau of 1813. It would be superfluous to say that the author, by his previous works dealing with the trial and execution of the Duc d'Enghien, the divorce of the Empress Josephine, and the censorship of the press during the First Empire, had thoroughly grounded himself in preliminary and cognate questions.

The narrative opens with an account of the negotiations that went on between Paris and Rome respecting the coming of Pius VII. to the French capital for the coronation of the Emperor. The Pontiff was led to expect the happiest results for the Church if he yielded to Napoleon's wish in this matter. He did so; and this step must be pronounced his first mistake—a mistake which could scarcely be retrieved. Coming, as it did, soon after the execution of the Duc d'Enghien, it seemed to the whole world a condoning of that offence. M. Welschinger blames the act, but with a reserve which is very natural. In fact, the Church of Rome was in a most difficult position. The Concordat with France was endangered by the conflict with Napoleon over the Organic Articles. Austria and the German States had set clerical claims at defiance, and the Act of Secularization of 1803 had struck at the root of ecclesiastical power in Central Europe. The authority of the Church of Rome, it seemed, could never be recovered in the temporal domain; and in the spiritual sphere the Pope and Cardinals could hope to regain ground only by the exercise of the suppleness and tenacity which have ever marked the policy of the Vatican in time of misfortune.

In this respect the visit of the Pope to Paris at the close of the year 1804 promised to produce good results. Some of them were attained. Nothing tended to rehabilitate the Roman Catholic creed in that free-thinking city so much as the sight of the gentle, dignified old Pontiff. It may also be questioned whether the grace with which he submitted to the slight inflicted on him at the coronation by Napoleon did not add more to the popularity of the Pope than of the Emperor. All this is ably described by M. Welschinger, as well as the question of the legality of the second marriage of Napoleon and Josephine, on December 1st, 1804, which he had previously investigated. He does not raise the question which naturally occurs, whether the indignity offered to the Pope in Notre Dame on the following day was not in some measure a retaliation for the annoyance felt by Napoleon at this compulsory marriage, which is believed to have thwarted his schemes. In any case, the Pope's insistence on this step had not improved his chances of gaining any substantial return to the Church. The recovery of the Legations was doubtless impossible from so hard a bargainer as the French Emperor; but other advantages were to be definitely expected. If the question of the abolition of divorce in the French Empire presented grave difficulties of a personal nature, yet the Pope had a right to demand the abolition of the most vexatious of the Organic Articles, which nullified many of the benefits conferred by the Concordat, and tended to uphold the Gallican Separatists. In point of fact he gained next to nothing. Napoleon upheld the obnoxious Articles, and the laws of divorce established by the Civil Code. His only concessions were the establishment of certain religious "congregations," the control by the bishops of religious education in the lycées, a slight increase in the miserably low stipends of the poorest priests, and the appointment of chaplains to the armies and the military hospitals. After showing his feeling as to the insufficiency of these slight concessions, Pius VII. departed for Rome on April 4th, 1805.

The Vatican did not accept the situation thus created; and the long strife, which was ended only by Napoleon's abdication in 1814, now began. Other sources of trouble opened up. The Pope refused to annul the marriage of Jerome Bonaparte with Miss Paterson, Protestant though she was; and his refusal was right. M. Welschinger thinks that Napoleon's eagerness for the dissolution of that marriage was prompted by a desire to gain a precedent that might be useful for the annulling of his own, that of December 1st, 1804. This is quite likely, and it may be that Pius VII., divining this secondary motive, persisted in his refusal, with results that are well known. The climax of Imperial pride was reached in the strange epistle dictated by Napoleon at Dresden on July 22nd, 1807, when he was giving the law to the whole of Europe:—

"Perhaps the time is not far off when I shall recognize the Pope only as Bishop of Rome, as equal to, and of the same rank as, the bishops of my States. I shall not fear to unite the Gallican, Italian, German, and Polish Churches in order to carry on my affairs without the Pope."

The French occupied Rome on February 2nd, 1808; and, after suffering a long series of indignities, the Pope saw his States incorporated in the French Empire in accordance with Napoleon's decree of May 17th, 1809. The preamble referred to Charlemagne as having merely assigned Rome, with other Imperial fiefs, to the Pope, though Rome did not cease to belong to his empire. Charlemagne's successor now resumed control over Rome and the other fiefs. The excommunication of Napoleon by Pius VII. and the seizure of the fou furieux—the Emperor forestalled Thiers's appellation of Gambetta—by the French troops were the natural result of the attitude which the Emperor had early assumed towards the Holy See. But those who read Napoleon's letters on this subject will readily perceive in what sense the forcible deportation of the Pope was "one of those inexplicable combinations of destiny which sometimes occur." The purely subjective view of destiny which Napoleon held cannot be illustrated better than by comparing his letters of 1808-9 on Papal affairs with the lucubrations of St. Helena.

We have no space in which to follow M. Welschinger in detail through the later phases of the dispute. His narrative brings out in strong relief the pompous ineffectiveness of Cardinal Fesch, the obvious half-heartedness of the attempt made by Francis II. and Metternich in 1810 in favour of the now captive Pope, the inflexible determination of Napoleon to coerce the Pontiff into a surrender of all the important points at issue between them, and the praiseworthy constancy of Pius VII. It is evident that the author's sympathies go out to the weaker side; but this is inevitable in face of the new evidence which he brings forward. It all tends to throw fresh light on the faults of character which served to bring about the Emperor's downfall. Qualities like those which are here depicted could hardly fail to lead to a catastrophe. Anxious as the Emperor was to detach the French bishops from the side of the Pope, he could not refrain from damaging his cause by exaggerations and false charges which the bishops at the National Council of 1811 felt compelled to rectify or refute. The curious scene reported by M. Welschinger on p. 321 shows that the Emperor could not rid himself of his early conviction that, as the Pope's kingdom was "not of this world," he must therefore obey the Emperor in all things. The attitude of the Pope, on the other hand, was marked by serenity, firmness, and perspicacity. Even when worn by his detention at Savona, he detected the meaning of the intrigue of the two bishops who sought to inveigle him into a surrender. And when, on the pretext that the English were about to make a descent on Savona, he was hurried away to Fontainebleau, the same gifts again foiled the attempts of the Emperor. In the chapter dealing with the so-called Concordat of Fontainebleau, M. Welschinger has occasion to expose the hollowness of the version of those affairs which Napoleon dictated at St. Helena. He refutes the stories of violence offered to the Pontiff at Fontainebleau, and also disposes of the well-known mot, "commediante," said to have been applied by Pius VII. in 1804 to Napoleon. In the closing pages justice is done to Narbonne for the excellent advice given early in 1813.

It is to be regretted that M. Welschinger, in the last chapter, has accepted as genuine the well-known monologue reported by the Chevalier de Beauterne as having been uttered by Napoleon at St. Helena. Much as it has been quoted and referred to in pulpits, that panegyric of Christianity and of the Roman Catholic Church lacks every element that merits trust. It has lately been shown to be almost certainly a later compilation of Montholon and some clerical friends. Its inclusion here mars the impression of solidity and critical acumen which we gain from most of the other parts of this volume. The reference to Bismarck's "Culturkampf" on p. 455 also bears too obviously the marks of sympathy with clerical claims. We have one other criticism to make—namely, that in dealing with the events of 1807–8 which led to the rupture between the Pope and the Emperor, the author assigns too little importance to the commercial motives which were then so prominent in the Napoleonic policy, and which prompted the measures everywhere adopted against States having a seaboard.

NEW NOVELS.

The Clairvoyante. By B. L. Farjeon. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE day has gone by when the introduction of hypnotism into a story was regarded as a fond appeal to Christmastide credulity, and no student of Albert Moll will quarrel with the main incidents of the late Mr. Farjeon's legacy of romance. His clairvoyante is also a convict, whose offence was due to the control of her will by her unscrupulous husband. So complete was her slavery that in hypnotic sleep she wrote begging letters, endorsed cheques, and abused her employer's trust, while she herself remained innocent and sweet. We observe her under the eye of the prison doctor, who tells the story, and reports the impossibly ample recital of her misfortunes which she gives upon her deathbed. The chief interest lies in the contest between her husband and the doctor, who, in an exciting passage, is only just in time to snatch from him the fruit of a hypnotic triumph over the governor of the prison. The characters of this curious performance are merely outlines; but greater novelists than Mr. Farjeon have failed to make more than "cases" out of such feeble heroines as the clairvoyante and her daughter.

Nancy Stair. By Elinor Macartney Lane. (Heinemann.)

THIS is a noteworthy story of Scottish life in the eighteenth century, in which Lord Stair tells the tale of his daughter's love affairs. Putting aside all the details of verisimilitude provided by preface and foot-notes, we may say that Nancy Stair is drawn so vivaciously—she moves through these pages with such a gay and natural step—that she is lifelike. She is delightful as the baby-tyrant of her father's house; she is still more attractive when, in the full flower of her girlhood, she is pursued by the attentions of the scheming Duke of Borthwicke, and accepts the devotion of gallant Danvers Carmichael. A pleasing glimpse of Burns, with whom Nancy Stair exchanges rhymes in an inn parlour, helps to preserve the atmosphere of romance that pervades the greater part of the novel. But the story loses all its delicacy and charm when the duke is murdered and Danvers is accused of the crime. The rest is melodrama.

The Rebel Wooing. By J. A. Steuart. (Hutchinson & Co.)

IN this novel, for which Mr. Steuart has chosen a title suggestive of more stirring scenes, the spirit of romance plays about a Nonconformist pulpit. Eric Methven,

"crowned with classical honours from Edinburgh and Oxford," and full of the frank enthusiasm of the young evangelist, becomes the pastor of the West Kirk at Portfotherington. Adam Braidwood, rich shipowner and stern dogmatist, is the chief pillar of the church; his daughter, who has reached "the exquisite and romantic age of eighteen," is quickly recognized by the impressionable minister to be its brightest ornament. The course of true love not running smooth at Portfotherington—a purse-proud father is the familiar obstacle—Eric Methven finds in London a larger scope for his extraordinary powers as a preacher. His passionate eloquence attracts even the fashionable world to Caledonia Street chapel, and eventually the masterful shipowner relents, and the wedding-bells ring in the closing chapter. The story, if wanting in originality, is skilfully told, and the characterization is clever. Eric Methven is drawn with a vivid and subtle touch, and Stephen Wentworth, who has left the Church for the Bar, is an admirable portrait of the cultured man of the world. Nowhere, however, is Mr. Steuart more successful than in depicting the humble Highland home of the minister's parents. Here a clear note of sincerity is struck, and the picture is simple, pleasing, and true. There are some scenes in the book—notably the conversation between a cynical bencher and Stephen Wentworth at Lincoln's Inn, and the attempt of a Sister of Mercy, with "a ghoulisn lust glittering in her eyes," to convert a dying woman to the Roman Catholic faith—in which Mr. Steuart would appear to have aimed at effect rather than truth.

To Windward. By Henry C. Rowland. (Nutt.)

THIS is a curious story, old-fashioned, yet American, humdrum and simple enough in the main, breezy and full of open air, yet containing such passages as the following:

"The swift flame flashed to the man at her side, swept through his whole being, in a great, devouring blaze, rushed in a seething conflagration through heart and mind and soul, fusing the fibers of reason and recollection, catching him up in its blast and bearing him like a feather upon its brim. He gathered her to him in a quick, mad, all-compelling fury of love, while her eager arms flew around his neck, and her sweet face was crushed like a flower to his."

But, in spite of such outbreaks, it is upon the whole a simple, sensible tale enough, full of enthusiastic sentimentality.

Freckles. By Gene Stratton - Porter. (Murray.)

THE history of a maimed but heroic waif employed by the "Grand Rapids Lumber Company" to guard a tract of uncleared forest from the depredations of timber-thieves is an excellent subject for a tale of adventure, and considered from this point of view 'Freckles' is in many respects well above the average. The marvellous fauna and flora of the swamp—its awful solitude, its mystery, its haunting fascination—are pictured with much beauty and with a minute particularity which seems to proceed from intimate knowledge. But we could willingly have dispensed with the so-called "swamp-angel"—a young lady with a warm heart, a nice taste in millinery, and the rather uncelestial accomplishment of mixing iced drinks. Still more cheerfully could we have spared the Irish peer and peeress, with titles all awry, who opportunely claim the hero as their long-lost nephew. The illustrations scarcely bear out the enthusiastic eulogiums bestowed by everybody in general upon the surpassing beauty of the heroine.

Widdicombe. By M. P. Willcocks. (Lane.)

ALTHOUGH this Devonian novel is not absolutely convincing, it displays an excellent gift of humorous portraiture and a descriptive talent which resembles Mr. Eden Phillpotts's in the fact that it would be wholly pleasing if it did not imperil its charm by occasional pedantry. Unlike the remarkable writer we have named, Miss Willcocks never arrives at a point where by sheer dramatic energy or pressure of plot a story rushes to its end without conscious effort and almost without leave. Her study and consideration are, in fact, more obvious in her last chapters than in their predecessors, and the reader feels that the destinies of her principal characters have been conjectured rather than determined. Silphine Rosdew, the heroine, as we first see her, is a ripe embodiment of the joy of living, a vivid contrast to her fiancé of philosophical speech and sleepless prudery, whose hands at one time were "froggy" and whose head at another seemed "moth-eaten." The separation of this pair having once been effected, their final union appears but a perverse triumph of machinery, despite all that a prophetic dream and the pathos of failure and illness attempt on the man's behalf. With her minor people Miss Willcocks is very successful. Genefer, who unties her family's knots, is a character whose tender tartness would have delighted Miss Alcott; and her grandmother is unforgettable, if only on account of her comparison of Death to bloaters which have hard or soft roes "and no middle ones." Dialect is adroitly and not too frequently employed, and there is a spirited description of a West-Country feast of lanterns, designed to promote the fecundity of the orchard. A first novel so unegotistical and observant of life as this awakes a pleasant anticipation.

My Turkish Bride. By Arthur Crawshay. (Harper & Brothers.)

WE do not remember the name of Mr. Crawshay as a writer of fiction; but if the book before us is a first effort in this direction, we consider that a new author of sensational story has made his appearance. The merit of the tale before us is that it possesses a good and well-sustained plot. The hero, an Etonian "wet-bob," tells his own story in easy style, the naturalness of which is heightened by a slight tone of egotism. He takes us from Oxford to his father's home in a sporting county; thence to Paris, where he meets with a Russian officer of distinction who is destined to plot against him with a Turk. The author is at his best at Constantinople, where he is evidently at home—and, indeed, the book reveals a good deal of personal knowledge alike of Turkish life and the Russian system of espionage. Perhaps Mr. Crawshaw would have been well advised if he had stopped when he reached the climatic point of interest, the rescue—or, rather, the abduction—of the heroine by her English lover. In his desire to do justice to a charming Russian countess he continues the story and weakens the effect. But the tale is well told and the interest well sustained throughout.

BOOKS ON PLATO.

The Myths of Plato. By J. A. Stewart. (Macmillan.)—This is an interesting and suggestive study of "Plato the Prophet." The groundwork of the book consists of the original text, reprinted in the main from Stallbaum, and an English rendering of all the shorter myths, together with a considerable portion of the 'Timæus.' A couple of brief extracts, chosen at random, may serve to give a taste of the quality of Prof. Stewart's translation:—

"Round about are three others seated at equal distances apart, each upon a throne: these be the Daughters of Necessity, the Fates, Lachesis, and Clotho, and Atropos. They are clothed in white raiment and have garlands on their heads; and they chant to the melody of the Sirens; Lachesis chanteth of the things that have been, and Clotho of the things that are, and Atropos of the things that shall be: and Clotho with her right hand ever and anon taketh hold of the outer round of the spindle, and helpeth to turn it; and Atropos with her left hand doeth the same with the inner rounds; and Lachesis with either hand taketh hold of outer and inner alternately."—'Rep.' 617 C-D.

"Inasmuch, then, as Eros is the son of Abundance and Poverty, his case standeth thus:—First, he is poor always; and so far is he from being tender and fair, as most do opine, that he is rough and squalid, and he goeth barefoot and hath no house to dwell in, but lieth alway on the bare earth at doors and on the highways, sleeping under the open sky; for his mother's nature he hath, and he dwelleth alway in company with want."—'Sympos.' 203 C-D.

These specimens may be sufficient to show what a fine scholarly translation this is. Prof. Stewart has a nice sense for rhythm and diction, and he has wisely preserved the archaic colouring of the language, which subserves the purpose of the myth by leading the mind of the reader away from the present into regions of remote solemnities.

With the Platonic myths for a text, Prof. Stewart gives us, in his 'Introduction,' a full and illuminating disquisition on myth in general, and its relations to poetry and philosophy. In dealing with the genesis of myth he distinguishes the three kinds "anthropological," "ætiological," and "eschatological"; and each of these kinds of primitive story-telling he illustrates from the folklore of the Zulus and Maoris. But in discussing the philosophical use of myth, as by Plato, he adopts also another system of classification, based on the Kantian distinction between Ideas of Reason and Categories of the Understanding. Under the first head are grouped such myths as those of the 'Phædo,' 'Gorgias,' 'Politicus,' 'Timæus,' and the myth of Er, as being concerned with Ideas of God, Cosmos, or Soul; and under the second, the 'Phædrus,' 'Meno,' and 'Symposium' myths; while the 'Atlantis' and 'Earth-born' myths, "which respectively represent the Ideals and deduce the Categories of the Nation, as distinguished from the Individual," form a third class.

In his investigation of the function of myth, which he holds to be identical with that of poetry, Prof. Stewart develops a theory of poetry which is profoundly suggestive. "The essential charm" of the Platonic myth, as of poetry in general, consists, it is argued,

"in its power of inducing, satisfying, and regulating what may be called Transcendental Feeling, especially that form of Transcendental Feeling which manifests itself as solemn sense of Timeless Being—of 'That which was and is and ever shall be,' overshadowing us with its presence."

The poet, or myth-teller, is a wizard whose art lies in "throwing the patient suddenly, for a moment, into the state of dream consciousness out of a waking consciousness which the poet supplies with objects of interest."

The peculiar form of experience which is thus stated to be the chief end of all myth and poetry is explained genetically as "an effect produced within consciousness by the persistence in us of that primeval condition from which we are sprung, when Life was still as sound asleep as Death, and there was no Time yet"; in other words, "Transcendental Feeling" is rooted in that bedrock of our being, the "Vegetative Part of the Soul," "which holds on, in timeless sleep, to Life as worth living," and "which inspires the conscious life with .....faith in reality and goodness." This theory of the nature of poetic truth Prof. Stewart applies, in his "observations" on the 'Phædrus' myth, to the question of "the Universal of Poetry." "This so-called 'Universal,'" he writes (p. 387),

"is no conceptual product of the logical understanding; the logical understanding, like the senses, regards the World as a number of more or less connected items external to itself; but this feeling which is come over us is the feeling of being one with the World."

In this connexion Prof. Stewart controverts the view maintained by a number of critics, that metrical form is an essential condition of the existence of poetry; he can quote on his side the great names of Coleridge and Wordsworth, and, as his whole book shows us, the still greater example of Plato. At the same time, it is to be observed that "Transcendental Feeling" does not give us the "specific difference" of poetry, inasmuch as it can be induced by other artistic representations, such as those of painting and music, and even by unaided conditions of nature, as Prof. Stewart himself points out (p. 35).

It comes to this, then—if we adopt the view here put forward—that Plato has recourse to myth when he wishes to deal with fundamental universal objects which the logical understanding is incompetent to handle, such as Soul, God, Cosmos; or, again, when he attempts to trace back to their origin in such objects "certain habitudes or faculties (categories and virtues) belonging to the make of man's intellectual and moral nature." In other words:—

"Myth, not argumentative conversation, is rightly chosen by Plato as the vehicle of exposition when he deals with a priori conditions of conduct and knowledge, whether they be ideals or faculties."

We have spent thus much space in endeavouring to explain, however inadequately, the fundamental points in Prof. Stewart's interpretation, because we are convinced that this interpretation contains much that is profoundly true and of far-reaching importance. In indicating points of detail, however, we must be brief. A feature of the book is the wealth of quotation it holds from poetry, especially from the 'Divina Commedia,' with which the subject is illustrated; and later Greek myths are represented by extensive excerpts from Plutarch in Philemon Holland's version. There is a lucid discussion of the relation of myth to allegory, exemplified by references to Philo, Bunyan, and others. In dealing with the derivation of Plato's eschatological myths from Orphic sources, Prof. Stewart makes the interesting suggestion that "it was Pindar's form which helped to recommend to Plato the matter" of the Orphic teaching. Following Hegel and Couturat, he rejects Zeller's view that the doctrine of pre-existence and immortality is propounded as scientific truth, and he suggests, very plausibly, that the curious argument for immortality in 'Rep.' 608 C ff. is intended "to lead up to the myth of Er and heighten its effect by contrast—to give the reader of the 'Republic' a vivid sense of the futility of rationalism in a region where Hope confirms itself by 'vision splendid.'"

In his comments on the topography of the myth of Er, Prof. Stewart expresses his dissent from Dr. Adam's views on some details—the position of the Λεμῶν and the "pillar of light." He disputes, also, Mr. Archer-Hind's explanation of 'Tim.' 41 D, and warns us with regard to this dialogue that it "is a myth, not a scientific treatise, although it was its fortune from the first to be treated as if it were the latter." As to the Protagoras myth, it is contended, as against Schleiermacher and others, that it is not a Sophistic apologue or allegory, but a true myth, which teaches that "a teleological explanation of man's place in the Cosmos is indispensable."

It may be said, in conclusion, that Prof. Stewart's book—dealing, as it does, with a side of Platonism which has been too much neglected—is the finest contribution to the knowledge of Plato's thought which has been made in this country of late years. It shows that grasp upon the "soul of poetry" without which it is in vain that a man strives to enter in at the straitgate of Platonism; and because it possesses this one thing needful it is of more value than many volumes of "stylo-metric" statistics or "empirical" judgments in aiding to a correct appreciation of Idealism and the first of Idealists.

A good list of contents and an index are furnished, and we have noticed only a couple of slight misprints (pp. 226, 340).

The Platonic Conception of Immortality. By R. K. Gaye. (Clay & Sons.)—In this essay, which obtained the Hare Prize in 1903, Mr. Gaye sets out "to trace the rise and gradual development of the doctrine of immortality as it was formulated in Plato's mind, and to indicate certain changes which he introduces into this doctrine in consequence of a modification of his theory of soul—a modification due to changes in his metaphysical theory."

As a disciple of Dr. Henry Jackson, Mr. Gaye accepts the account of Plato's philosophical development which credits him with two distinct and widely differing theories of ideas—the "earlier theory" of the 'Phædo' and 'Republic,' and the "later theory" of the 'Timæus' and other dialogues posterior to the 'Parmenides.' Assuming the correctness of this account, Mr. Gaye seeks to find corresponding stages of evolution in Plato's conception of immortality. After a brief sketch of pre-Platonic views of immortality, he proceeds to deal successively with those of the earlier and of the later dialogues which bear most directly upon his theme; and naturally he finds the most important representative of the earlier period in the 'Phædo,' and of the later in the 'Timæus.' Accordingly his discussion is mainly occupied with the views of the soul and its destiny contained in these two dialogues. Here he is on ground which Mr. Archer-Hind has already made his own; and he is for the most part content to follow in the steps of that Platonist. He believes, for example, that the mythical record of creation in the 'Timæus' symbolizes "the self-evolution of absolute roûs, which is one aspect of the Idea of Good"; and many other things which an idealist ought to know and believe to his soul's health. A good deal of the book, therefore, amounts to little more than a réchauffé of the doctrines taught by the two authorities above mentioned. In some minor details, however, Mr. Gaye marks his independence. He is dissatisfied (pp. 155 ff.) with

Mr. Archer-Hind's over-literal interpretation of 'Tim.', 41 Dff.; he criticizes the same editor for underrating the importance for Platonic theory of the arguments on immortality in the 'Phædo' (pp. 79 ff.); he dislikes Dr. Jackson's term "hypothetic" as applied to the existence of the "later" ideas. Moreover, as against Mr. E. S. Thompson (in his 'Meno'), Mr. Gaye maintains that the 'Symposium' is to be coupled with the 'Phædrus' rather than with the 'Phædo,' and to be dated before, not after, the 'Republic.' In this view he is probably right. Less convincing are his arguments for placing the 'Phædo' after the 'Republic' (pp. 69 ff.) on the ground that "the proof of immortality in the 'Phædo' is intended to correct and supersede the proofs in the 'Phædrus' and the 'Republic.'" Nor is it so certain as Mr. Gaye's dogmatic tone would imply that "the 'Phædo' is dissociated from the 'Republic' by an important change in Plato's opinion," concerning, namely, the possibility of attaining absolute knowledge; for it is mere assumption that Plato did "look forward with confidence" in the 'Republic' to the realization of this ideal. On the whole, however, the discussions of these earlier dialogues form the most valuable part of the essay. The later chapters are based so largely on Mr. Archer-Hind's interpretations that they will hardly prove satisfactory to Platonists who are still hard of heart to believe his prophetic exposition of the self-evolution of the Platonic Absolute. Yet, whatever we may think of his assumptions, Mr. Gaye's essay shows decided ability, and is written in a good clear style.

The Euthydemus of Plato. By E. H. Gifford. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—The 'Euthydemus' has been unduly neglected by English scholars. The edition by Mr. Wells was slight and unsatisfactory, and is now antiquated. We are grateful, therefore, to Dr. Gifford for having applied his mature scholarship to the task of elucidating this dialogue. His text is constructed with considerable judgment, following in the main the lines laid down by Prof. Burnet; his notes are sound, concise, and, for the most part, sufficient; and in his introduction he deals with most of the important questions which concern the subject. The conservative tendency is shown, for example, in the retention of the Bodleian text in 276 E, ὑμῖν; 286 E, οὐδ' ἄρα ἐκέλευον κ.τ.λ.; 292 E, ποίῃσει; 292 A, τί ἔργον ἀπεργάζεται. In 293 D the popular emendation παταγεῖς for πάντα λέγεις is rejected—wisely, no doubt; but λέγεις itself is almost certainly corrupt, and should be marked as such. On the other hand, the editor admits Burnet's οὐκ εὖ σύ, 276 C; Routh's ἦ δ' ὅς, 277 A; Badham's excision of καὶ σὺ φρων, 281 C; Routh's οἶον λόγων, 282 D; Hermann's ὥστε καὶ εἶναι, 284 B; Schanz's θύσαι δ', 302 E; and a few other minor corrections. The only original emendations introduced into the text are καθ' ἃ for κατά, 271 C, and σὺ δ' ἐκέλευες for οὐδὲ κελεύεις, 286 E. In some of the more difficult passages the explanations offered are not convincing. Thus, the clause καὶ μάχη, ἣ πάντων ἔστι κρατεῖν, 271 D, should probably be transposed, if not ejected with Burnet; nor is the device of supplying τέχνη sufficient to solve the difficulties in the phrase οὐδεμία ..... τῆς θηρευτικῆς αὐτῆς, 290 B, where the force ascribed by the editor to αὐτῆς is also questionable. In the notes on 290 A ff. one misses the expected references to the 'Sophist.' And although the note on 290 C rightly criticizes Dr. Lutoslawski's denial that διαλεκτική can mean metaphysical science, the editor himself appears to deny that "ideas" are alluded to in 301 A. It also strikes a reader that young students will hardly be edified by such notes as "for.....this use of συγγάμω with a participle see Rutherford, 'N. Phryn.', p. 342" (p. 27), or "on the various uses of ἡδῆ in Plato, cf. Lutoslawski, 106, 118" (p. 23). A specially useful feature in the introduction is the list, with classifications, of the numerous fallacies which occur in the dialogue. In dealing with the literary allusions, Dr. Gifford allows that Antisthenes is referred to in 285 D ff., Thrasymachus in 290 A, and Isocrates in 304 D ff. The question of the date of the 'Euthydemus,' in connexion with that of the 'Phædrus,' is discussed at considerable length, and the conclusion arrived at is that the former is later and the latter earlier than Isocrates 'Against the Sophists.' Many good authorities, however, hold that the 'Phædrus' alludes to this oration of Isocrates, and Dr. Gifford's discussion of the matter is by no means exhaustive or final; he omits, for one point, to take account of the bearing of the oration of Alcidas on the question. Similarly in his section on the Sophists, Dr. Gifford hardly seems to have mastered the literature of the subject; he quotes Grote, Cope, and Poste, but shows no sign of acquaintance with the writings of Sidgwick, Jackson, and Gomperz; and, what is of more practical interest, he fails to make clear the distinctions between the various species of teachers denoted by the generic term "Sophist." Misprints occur in the notes on 275 A ("Burnett"), 285 A (διδόνται).

ITALIAN PHILOLOGY.

A GOOD Italian grammar in English, or indeed in any language, for the use of beginners, would be a very useful aid to students and teachers of that interesting though neglected tongue. At present it is not too much to say that nothing of the sort exists, and the student is forced to pick what he wants out of Diez's 'Grammar of the Romance Languages,' or turn to some ancient work like Corticelli's 'Tuscan Grammar,' published just a hundred and fifty years ago. The announcement that Prof. Ricci, of King's College, had produced a work of the kind aroused hopes which acquaintance with the work, alas! does not justify. His Italian Grammar for English Students (Walter Scott Publishing Company) turns out to be a mere accident of the old meagre kind, illustrated with exercises of the familiar "The cousin's sister has two hats" type. At the very outset are two questionable statements: first, that there are no diphthongs in Italian; secondly, that "the vowels are a as in bath, e as in press, i as in bit, o as in note, and u as oo in hood." We pity the student who tries to pronounce, say, avevi on this principle. As to diphthongs, surely Italian is full of them. A diphthong does not involve any change in the pronunciation of either vowel; it occurs when two vowels meet in one syllable. What does Prof. Ricci say to such a line as "Voi siete nuovi, e forse perch' io rido"? Gli, ci, with following vowel, of course do not count, any more than Spanish ll is an exception to the rule that consonants in that language are not doubled; they are really single sounds. Nor do we consider the cases where i represents Latin l. But what about the ei in direi, the ai in amai? We find nothing upon the "closed" and "open" sounds of e and o, important as these are both etymologically and in practice. As might be expected, there is the usual list of "irregular" verbs. Surely the time has come when Italian grammar may be taught in the only rational way, namely, with constant reference to the Latin forms. To call such inevitable inflexions as scrivo, scrissi, scritto, or metto, misi, messo, irregular, while vendo, vendei, venduto, is considered normal, seems inconsistent with any but the merest "courier" view of teaching a language.

An Italian and English Dictionary. By Hjalmar Edgren, Ph.D. (New York, Holt & Co.; London, Bell & Sons.)—It was Giuseppe Baretti who over a hundred and fifty years ago amplified the dictionary of Altieri and published the first Italian-English dictionary worthy of the name. Baretti had a thorough knowledge of the English language, as shown by some of his works published in English, and he had also the advantage of being a great friend of Dr. Johnson, of Goldsmith, and of Reynolds, who painted his portrait, now at Holland House. Although many other Italian-English dictionaries have been published since, that of Baretti still holds the field as the one containing the least number of mistakes, an evident proof that there is not in existence any good dictionary of these two combined languages. The one under review has been prepared by a Swedish professor at the University of Nebraska, which goes to show how keen and universal is the regard for the Italian language among educated men all the world over. It is thus with the greater regret that we are obliged to state that this new dictionary does not supply the want that we feel of a really trustworthy book of the kind. Although it is very bulky, containing over a thousand pages, the student may meet with serious difficulties in finding the words of which he wishes the translation, owing to the method adopted in compiling it.

Etymologically related words are grouped together, and the alphabetical order—the only possible order in a dictionary—is ignored, with disastrous results. But even the etymological order and the grouping of words into etymological divisions are very often ignored. Instead of placing the modification gentaccia under the word gente, the compiler reverses the order of the two words. Again, to find legista we must look for it in the group headed by the adjective legislativo; and under the adverb latinamente we must look for all the derivatives of the word latino.

These are not isolated examples, the volume bristling with these puzzling and arbitrary groupings on nearly every page. The most important requirement in a dictionary, simplification of arrangement, so that anybody who knows how to read should find without the least difficulty the word which he is searching, is wanting here.

The dictionary is preceded by rules on the pronunciation which we cannot commend, though it may be said that on such points opinions are likely to differ.

If it be sweet to look upon ills from which you are yourself free, it is equally no slight consolation to find that others are afflicted in like manner with yourself. This reflection is borne in upon the English reader of Signor de Amicis's latest work, L'Idioma Gentile (Milan, Treves). We in England—those of us, at any rate, who respect the language of Dryden and Wordsworth, of Addison and Lamb—are apt to think that no tongue was ever so maltreated as ours has been of late by writers and speakers struggling to express in a hurry ideas which they have not fully considered by the aid of a vocabulary which they have only partially acquired, and in which the accurate signification of many terms is, therefore, imperfectly known to them. Daily do we suffer from the conversation of persons, doubtless without blame in the ordinary duties of life, who misapply terms, mispronounce words, or, from sheer indolence and vagueness, take refuge in a perpetual repetition of some catch phrase—some "Don't you know?" or "What do you call it?"—till the interlocutor, without being over-fastidious, begins to doubt if the possession of speech affords any indication of the superiority of the human intellect to that of other animals. From the fact, perhaps, that our acquaintance with general society in other countries is usually limited, we are apt to think that slovenly speaking and writing is a special weakness of our own countrymen; it is probably more general in England than in France. But Italy, if we may trust Signor de Amicis, suffers no less than ourselves from the linguistic aberrations of her writers and talkers. From "Signor Coso," "Mr. Thingamy," so called from his pet word-of-all-work—who imperils his immortal soul on his death-bed by asking for "il Coso," which the scandalized priest, when he realizes what is meant, kindly but firmly refuses to administer in response to "a request made in those terms"—to Dr. Raganella, whose bride, on the honeymoon, remains for an hour by the Falls of Schaffhausen, to escape for a while from his torrent of words—we know them all. Well, too, do we know the like of the "Ligurian painter," talented, but unlettered, who, when he came across any new word, either confused it with some other in more general use, but of similar sound, or gave it in his mind "the first meaning which, by certain mysterious analogies with other words, he thought it ought to bear." "The false coiner," the author calls him; though he is rather of the race of the Malaprops, and the title is better deserved by those who deliberately frame unscholarly and unrequired forms like the "correctitude" in which some of our daily papers revel. Even with dialectal peculiarities we are not wholly unfamiliar, though among cultivated persons they are mostly confined to intonation. But the Genoese who blames his Tuscanizing friend for saying "arimmetica" in place of aritmetica, and "austriao" for austriaco, finds his parallel in 'Arry observing, "Rummy talkers these 'Ighlanders. They say 'she' for 'e,' and 'nozzing' for 'nothink.'" As to the peculiarities of the dialects in the peninsula, the foreign reader will find a good deal of curious information in these pages. Some will be interested in noticing how persistent certain local forms of pronunciation and phrase have been since the days of Dante. Of Italian slang, too, much may be learnt, especially from the chapter on 'La Lingua Faceta'; though when we read of the "professor of letters" who could make his friends "sbellicar dalle risa" by the simple process of relating every-day events in the words or turns of phrase of the 'Decameron'—a faculty which with us hardly survives the first degree—we are inclined to think that Mr. Peter Magnus would have been a success in Italian social circles. A very good chapter is one entitled 'A traverso i Secoli,' in which a brief, but really excellent and discriminating survey is given of a dozen or two most notable Italian prose authors from Dante to Carducci. Manzoni, one is glad in these times to see, comes in for high commendation. But the whole book is full of good things, both for entertainment and for instruction, and is written, so far as a foreigner may judge, in a bright and unaffected style, showing that the author has paid heed to the precepts which he would inculcate. Every student of Italian should read it.

The Dizionario Moderno of Signor Alfredo Panzini (Milan, Hoepli) may in a sense be regarded as a kind of companion to the work of Signor de Amicis. That is to say, it will be found useful by students of modern Italian as a guide to the large number of newly coined words, or old words turned to new uses, or foreign words imported under more or less of disguise, with which the Italian of the present day has embellished the tongue of Castiglione and Ariosto. It is, however, primarily intended for Italians themselves, being in substance a dictionary of such phrases, allusions, and foreign terms as may be expected to puzzle the moderately instructed citizen in the course of his daily reading. We may take a column or two as specimen: Piccolo (a name, apparently for a junior waiter at a café); piccolo circuito (electric); Pick-frean, "noto termine inglese di pasticceria.....certi biscottini bianchi" (no attempt is made at an etymology!); pick-pocket; pictoribus atque poetis; pidria (dialectic, a funnel); pièce; pied-à-terre; and so forth. Gallicisms and provincialisms are duly noted, and meanings and derivations in most cases, though not in all, correctly given. Signor Panzini would have done well to get his sheets revised by some English friend, who could not only have enlightened him as to "Pickfrean," but have pointed out, e.g., that "bull's-eye" is by no means a neologism, and means a good deal more than "a species of photographic machine," and that the first syllable of "farewell" has nothing to do with "far"; or, again, that "La fiera delle vanità" has an origin far more venerable than the "felice titolo" of a novel by Thackeray. Most Englishmen, too, would by now, we hope, have been capable of telling him that "cui bono?" does not mean "a che giova?" Under the head 'Articolo' is some interesting information as to the use of the article with proper names; and as a "rider," a criticism of a fashion which we had supposed to be quite accepted in Italy, the inversion of Christian name and surname. It is interesting to note that the use of "articolo" in both the tradesman's and the journalist's sense is disapproved by purists, though the author does not hold with them.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

SIR THEODORE MARTIN, who many years ago tried his hand at translating Heine, and, if we remember right, did not achieve any very conspicuous success therein, has now, in his Poems by Giacomo Leopardi (Blackwood), tested his powers upon another poet of the early nineteenth century, who has attracted and baffled probably almost as many would-be translators; and his efforts have been better rewarded. Leopardi is no doubt much easier to put into English—at any rate, when the translator is well read in English poetry—than is Heine. We have nothing in English quite corresponding to Heine's blend of mockery and sentiment. Byron, with whom the Marchese Gumpelino and others have compared him, is in a very different category; nor would the most intimate familiarity with Byron's manner be of much avail to the translator of Heine. But Leopardi's palette is charged with the colours in which many English poets, from the master-hand of Wordsworth downwards, have painted. Leopardi no doubt used them to procure very different effects; but all that is best in his work might be taken out of Wordsworth and not missed. Consequently, the translator needs only to imbue himself with something of the Wordsworthian manner to obtain a satisfactory medium for his rendering. Sir Theodore Martin is at his best when he most reminds us of Wordsworth. Take the following lines:—

There was a time when grass and flower and grove
All thrilled with life. The gentle winds of heaven,
The clouds, and the Titian lamp, were all
In sympathy with man. It was the time
When the wayfarer in the lonesome night,
Watching with eyes intent thy radiant star,
Oh Venus, as it beam'd on hill and dale,
Deem'd that thou wert companioning his way,
And hadst a thought for mortals.

Or this:—

I to this spot, out in the fields, remote
From public haunt, repair, alone, alone,
And every pleasure, every jest, postpone
To some hereafter season; and the while,
As through the golden air I peer and peer,
The sun, that after a delightful day
Behind the distant mountain sinks, its glory o'er,
Departing seems to say,
Youth, blessed youth, is gone and will return no more.

Of course, Wordsworth would have minded his rhymes better than is done in the last piece; that, however, is not the translator's fault, but comes of faithful adherence to a weakness of Italian versification. Also, Wordsworth would probably not have called the sun "the Titian lamp," though he would not have stuck at the "delightful day," which, by the way, is a felicity of the translator's own introduction, the original word being sereno. The rendering is accurate enough throughout, though once we find ascolta confused with asconda, rather to the detriment of the sense. In 'Il Tramonto della Luna,' to render "ove fosse incolume il desio" by "where desire has lost its fire" is to make the author say exactly the opposite of what he means. The last two lines of 'Sabato del Villaggio' have been too much for Sir Theodore, as for other translators. Yet the drift of the whole passage is plain enough. The poet tells the boy that his boyhood is like a bright day preceding the festa of early manhood; "but," he warns him, "do not be in too great a hurry for your festa to arrive." This is a different thing from

But may life's festival, come when it may,
Not on thy heart too great a burden lay.

William Bodham Donne and his Friends.
Edited by C. Barham Johnson. (Methuen.)
—Mrs. Johnson is probably correct in saying that her grandfather's name is almost unknown to the present generation. Indeed, she might have gone further, and said wholly unknown. William Bodham Donne came of a Norfolk family which claimed kinship with the poet Cowper, whose mother was a Donne. His father and grandfather before him were surgeons; but the father retired early from his profession, and settled down on a little country estate to devote himself to culture and his library. His son, who was born in 1807, inherited his father's tastes, but never achieved much in his long life. He wrote many articles for various better-class journals and magazines; but that is merely to say that he belonged to a class of leisured and cultivated men, which has happily never been wanting in this country. He left Cambridge without a degree, owing to scruples about the Thirty-nine Articles, and henceforth devoted himself to letters and to his friends, making his début in print in The Athenæum in 1829. It was an amiable and pleasant life, and it is well to have it put on record in this pious volume. Its interest lies chiefly in the sidelights on the characters of several celebrated people with whom he was intimate. For the book not only includes Donne's own correspondence, but also letters of others to him over a period of fifty-three years. Amongst his earliest friends were the Kembles and Richard Chenevix Trench, afterwards Archbishop of Dublin. The incongruity of the association of these names with the Torrijos expedition in 1830 raises a smile, which in no way affects one's appreciation of a generous quixotism. General Torrijos, in revolt against the new despotism of his country, organized a revolutionary movement in Spain. He and his partisans imagined that the country was ripe for it:—

"John Sterling espoused their cause warmly, collected money from the 'Apostles,' and induced Trench, Kemble, and Robert Boyd, a young cousin of Trench's, to offer their services. John Kemble went before them to Gibraltar to organize their rising, and here he waited in anxious expectancy for his friends. They were long in coming, for their ship had been boarded just on the eve of starting, and Trench, Torrijos and his Spaniards saved themselves by jumping overboard. Eventually they arrived by different routes at Gibraltar, only to find the King of Spain prepared, the coast guarded, and a price set on the head of any one of them caught in Spain. Seeing that the cause was utterly hopeless, Trench and Kemble sorrowfully returned to England, leaving Robert Boyd, who refused to accompany them, and the other fifty-five."

Boyd and Torrijos and his associates landed and were shot. But what a pre-archiepiscopal adventure! Donne's reputation as a stylist was great among his friends, and Trench consulted him. "Dean Merivale sent him the proofs of his 'Roman History' to revise, and John Kemble the same with his 'Saxons in England.'" But the friend who appears most in these pages is Bernard Barton, the Quaker poet, father-in-law of Edward FitzGerald. FitzGerald himself steps in and out with his well-known lively and engaging manner. Donne's letters to him were destroyed, and so were not available for inclusion, but many of "Fitz's" letters appear. He considers Carlyle "a one-sided man," but supposes he will come to be "a furious admirer of his 'French Revolution.'"

"Fitzgerald has called twice.....he had charge of two nieces one day: and very deliberately turned them alone into a conjurer's room, while he came to Charlotte Street. Hence he went for them with an old blue dressing-gown hanging on his arm."

Every one will remember what FitzGerald thought of 'Aurora Leigh,' and how Browning met his posthumous criticism. Writing in 1876, FitzGerald says:—

"What do you think of Browning's Poem? I say an impudent piece of Cockneyism—so far as I can judge from the three vain attempts I have made to read it. Alfred Tennyson says I am wrong, however, and I should shut my mouth after that, only that the magnanimous Old Dog tried to force Bailey's 'Festus' down our throats in the same way."

Was this 'Pacchiarotto'? Here is a crisp characteristic summary:—

"Gladstone I always looked on as a Doctrinaire, but honest, as Politicians can be; D'Israeli as a very clever Quack, whose Statesmanship is as flashy and 'superficial as his Novels.' Indeed, I judge the fellow by his books. I read 'Coningsby' in the summer, and find no impression left; his 'Lord Hertford' a curious contrast to Thackeray's."

In 1852 Donne became Librarian of the London Library, a position he resigned when, five years later, he was appointed Examiner of Plays in succession to his friend Kemble. Of him in this connexion his granddaughter writes:—

"It is said he never allowed the word 'God' to appear, and a story is told of a gentleman calling on him, and finding him seated with his children looking over manuscripts. As he entered he heard a voice say, 'Here's another God, father'; and the answer, 'Very well, my dear, cross Him out and put heaven as usual.'"

The Church and its Organization in the Primitive Age. By Walter Lowrie. (Longmans.)—This is the first volume of a lengthy treatise on the development of the Christian Church, which will be found of great interest by all who are capable of appreciating new ideas. It will not be interesting to any one else. In respect of form, everything is against this book. It is clear indeed that there is a marked unity of treatment, so far as the author's general standpoint is concerned. Yet the extraordinary method of his work might well disguise this. To find his views, for instance, on the growth of episcopacy one must look at his introduction, study carefully some of the notes, and only then approach the section labelled 'Bishops.' Style there is none; and no one who reads this book will be misled by any grace of expression into accepting erroneous ideas. The distinction between large and small type was doubtless intelligible to the author; to the reader it is merely irritating. The repeated references to Sohm's 'Kirchenrecht' are an evidence of candour; yet even with the help of the notes they do not enable us to determine how much of this book is original, how much is free translation, and how much is reproduction or condensation of the notions of the German jurist. At the same time the writer's strong grasp of a fruitful idea and his massive powers of learned criticism are such that the work is almost exciting in its freshness. It is certainly the most important work on Christian origins published in English since the Bishop of Salisbury's 'Ministry of Grace.' The main theses of Mr. Lowrie, which he professes to have borrowed from Sohm, are as follows. The organization of the Primitive Church was charismatic, not legal—i.e., it depended on the recognized inspiration of individuals, not on the constitution of the society. The moment it became legal, Catholicity—which in the author's point of view is a degradation—began. This would take place as soon as there came a serious conflict between the main body of Christians and their divinely appointed rulers. Thus all who seek legitimacy in any form of Church organization are mistaken. The Church in itself has none of the characteristics of civil society. Further, the author completely reverses the notion that the episcopate has developed from below, and strongly separates bishops from presbyters, even in New Testament times. The most unsatisfactory part of the theory is the extremely small importance it allows to presbyters in the early Church. On the other hand, the use made of the Ignatian letters is very ingenious and convincing. The writer thinks that Ignatius was supporting the episcopal organization, not against Presbyterianism, but as against separatism and unorganized congregations generally. This point he seems to us to make out.

What the real importance of this work may be in the study of the subject it is impossible at present to say. It is certain to be acutely criticized. But that, so far as England is concerned, it marks a very definite change, we cannot doubt. The other interesting part of the book is the attempt to show how the development of Christian government and architecture, no less than its worship, all proceeded from the organization of the Eucharistic service. Here the author is professedly only sketching. But his sketch is of great value, and, we think, suggestive of more complete work in the future. His power of intellectual detachment and philosophic grasp will inevitably win the author a high place among investigators. For this reason we could wish he would drop such terms as "depotentiate."

MR. A. L. HUMPHREYS is one of the deftest hands at selecting good things that we know. Deep and genuine philosophy, with a curious mixture of worldly caution, prevails in the Balzac: Maximes which he has sent us, printed in the luxurious style which makes his books a delight. Woman, it need hardly be said, is the chief figure in these pages, in which the French is boldly faced with the English. The translator is generally happy, having the gift of freedom from pernicious literalness.

MESSRS. DENT have begun a new issue of the novels of the Sisters Brontë with Jane Eyre, 2 vols. We like everything about the form and get-up of the books except the yellow tint of the binding, which is best by candlelight. The coloured illustrations by M. Edmund Dulac show both character and cleverness. Altogether it is an attractive edition.

ALL the eight volumes of The Diary of Samuel Pepys, edited by Mr. Wheatley (Bell), are now out. The last volume contains an admirable index. Publishers and editor have the satisfaction of knowing that they have treated one of the world's imperishable things in the best way.

BORROW'S Wild Wales and Beaconsfield's Sybil, with an introduction by the Earl of Iddesleigh, another noble writer of fiction, have been added to Mr. Lane's "New Pocket Library," a neat and handy little series we strongly commend to the spring traveller.

MR. J. R. TUTIN has published at Cottingham, near Hull, a volume of selected poetry from the works of Phineas Fletcher, with an introduction and some illustrations, somewhat fancifully entitled The Spenser of his Age. The book is neatly bound, and affords an excellent insight into a neglected author. We owe our thanks to Mr. Tutin for his latest service to choice, if somewhat old-fashioned poetry.

MESSRS. EYRE & SPOTTISWOODE send us two copies of their "Bijou" edition of the Baptismal Service, one bound in white leather and mounted in silver, and the other in vellum binding, with inlaid sides and silk tie. These little books ought to be widely appreciated. Both are charming in appearance.

School-Room Humour, by Dr. Macnamara, M.P. (Bristol, Arrowsmith), is a capital shillingworth on the whole. The collector thanks teachers, who are old friends, for some of his anecdotes. If we are to preserve the strict meaning of anecdotes, some of these ingenious educators have reached a very advanced age. But it is evident that long memories are out of fashion, so we expect that most of the book will be new and amusing to the average reader.

WE have received the first two numbers of the Revue Germanique (Alcan), published in January and March, further issues being promised in May, July, and November. The review has been started with the support of the universities of Lille, Lyons, and Nancy, and deals with matters concerning Germany, England, the United States, the Netherlands, and Scandinavia. The numbers contain articles, notes, and documents, signed reviews by experts, and a bibliography of recent books and of some selected reviews. France is deservedly famous for its work in English scholarship, and the two numbers before us reach a high standard of interest. The first issue contains some striking unprinted letters of Nietzsche, whose last years are considered by Prof. Henry Lichtenberger in the March number. This also contains an important article on some unknown sources of Shelley's novels, by M. A. Koszul. Other things well worth reading are on Goethe's 'Faust,' by M. E. Lichtenberger, which incidentally throws a good deal of light on the criticism of all big classics; on 'Ruskin's Youth,' by M. A. Chevrillon; and M. Aynard's review of Mr. Haney's 'Coleridge Bibliography.' Announcements of articles to come include M. Emile Legouis on Sir Roger de Coverley. The review, if it maintains its present standard, will be of real value to English scholars. But we doubt the advisability of comprehending "all the manifestations of civilization" of the countries aforesaid. The fiscal policy, for instance, has crept in under economics. We think history, literature, and art are sufficient for one review to attack. The year's subscription for England is 16 fr.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Flint (R.), On Theological, Biblical, and other Subjects, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Ordo Romanus Primus, edited by E. G. C. F. Atchley, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Wardell (R. J.), Studies in Homiletics, 12mo, 2/6

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Branch (E. A.), Freehand for Teachers and Art Students, 4to, limp, 2/6 net.
Macquoid (P.), A History of English Furniture: Vol. 1, The Age of Oak, folio, 42/ net.
Snell (F. C.), The Camera in the Fields, cr. 8vo, 5/
Whall (C. W.), Stained-Glass Work, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Dekker (T.), The Seven Deadly Sinnes of London, 8vo, boards, 21/ net.
Downes (R. P.), Seven Supreme Poets, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Dream of the Rood, edited by A. S. Cook, 12mo, 3/6

Bibliography.

- English Catalogue of Books for 1904, roy. 8vo, 6/ net.

Philosophy.

Perrin (R. St. J.), The Evolution of Knowledge, 6/
Wolf (A.), The Existential Import of Categorical Predica-tion, Studies in Logic, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.

History and Biography.

Barrett (C. R. B.), The History of the Society of Apothecaries of London, 4to, 21/ net.
Browning (Robert), by C. H. Herford, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Cadogan (Hon. E.), Makers of Modern History, Three Types: Louis Napoleon—Cavour—Bismarck, 8/ net.
Diary from Dixie (A.), edited by I. D. Martin and M. L.
Avery, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Grace Book B, Part 2, edited by M. Bateson, 4to, 21/ net.
Jose (A. W.), The Growth of the Empire, cr. 8vo, 4/6
Origines Icelandicæ, translated by G. Vigfusson and F. Y.
Powell, 2 vols. 8vo, 42/ net.
Select Documents illustrative of the History of the French Revolution, edited by L. G. W. Legg, 2 vols. 12/ net.
Ward (J.), Our Sudan, its Pyramids and Progress, 21/ net.

Geography and Travel.

Coke (Hon. H. J.), Tracks of a Rolling Stone, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Thirlmere (R.), Letters from Catalonia and other Parts of Spain, 2 vols. 8vo, 24/ net.
Wallace (D.), The Lure of the Labrador Wild, 8vo, 7/6

Sports and Pastimes.

Bylandt (Count H. de), *Dogs of all Nations, their Varieties,
&c.*, 2 vols. 4to, 63/ net.
Gallican (W. M.), Fishing in Derbyshire and Around,
cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Sheringham (H. T.), An Angler's Hours, extra cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

Philology.

Kirk (J. W. C.), A Grammar of the Somali Language, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Science.

Caton (R.), The Harveian Oration, 1904, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Curry (C. E.), Electromagnetic Theory of Light, Part 1, 8vo, 12/ net.
Froussard (Paul), Mucocombranous Enterocolitis, edited by Dr. E. Blake, cr. 8vo, sewed, 2/6 net.
Hancock (A. I.), The Physical Culture Life, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Heath (T. E.), Our Stellar Universe, 4to, 5/ net.
Mundy (R.), A Primer of Biology and Nature Study, 2/6
Râteau (A.), Experimental Researches on the Flow of Steam through Nozzles and Orifices, translated by H. B.
Brydon, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Report on Temperature Experiments on Field Coils of Electrical Machines, folio, sewed, 5/ net.
Zimmer (G. F.), The Mechanical Handling of Material, illustrated, 4to, 25/ net.

General Literature.

Chesson (Mrs. W. H.), The Bell and the Arrow, cr. 8vo, 6/
Crawford (E.), Sorreltop, cr. 8vo, 6/
Fitzroy (I.), A Quixotic Woman, cr. 8vo, 6/
Garvice (C.), Linked by Fate, cr. 8vo, 6/
Godard (J. G.), Racial Supremacy, cr. 8vo, 6/
Green (E. M.), Elizabeth Grey, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hine (C. de L.), Letters from a Railway Official to his Son, a Divisional Superintendent, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Hodges (L. M.), The Great Optimist, and other Essays,
cr. 8vo, 4/ net.
Houmas (M.), A Dreamer's Harvest, cr. 8vo, 6/
Jack Verschoyle's Wife, by Cattleuchlan, cr. 8vo, 6/Merriman (C. E.), A Self-Made Man's Wife, her Letters to her Son, cr. 8vo, 6/
Mitford (B.), A Frontier Mystery, cr. 8vo, 6/
My New Zealand Garden, by a Suffolk Lady, 3/6 net.
Oppenheim (E. P.), The Master Mummer, cr. 8vo, 6/
Patricia: a Mother, by Iota, cr. 8vo, 6/
Pemberton (M.), Mid the Thick Arrows, cr. 8vo, 6/
St. Clair (W.), Bendish, cr. 8vo, 6/
Stewart (C. D.), The Fugitive Blacksmith, cr. 8vo, 6/
Swan (M.), Ground Ivy, cr. 8vo, 6/
Torriani (R.), The Pains of Happiness, cr. 8vo, 6/
Warden (F.), The Youngest Miss Brown, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

History and Biography.

Baumgarten (F.), Poland (F.), n. Wagner (R.), Die hel-lenische Kultur, Part 1, 2m.
Dumesnil (R.), Flaubert, 3fr. 50.
Gmelin (H.), Studien zur spanischen Verfassungsgeschichte des 19. Jahrh., 8m.
Lavis (E.), *Histoire de France: Vol. 6, Part 2, Henri IV.
et Louis XIII.*, par M. Mariéjol, 6fr.
Schlumberger (G.), Derniers Soldats de Napoléon, 5fr.

Geography and Travel.

Joanne (P.), Dictionnaire Géographique et Administratif de la France, Vol. 7, 30fr.

Philology.

Cousin (G.), De Urbibus quarum Nominibus Vocabulum πολις finem faciebat, 6m.
Helm (R.), Apulei Opera, Vol. 2, Part 1, 2m. 40.
Leeuwen (J. van), Aristophanis Ecclesiazusa, 5m.
Schepers (M. A.), *Aleiphronis Rhetoris Epistolarum
Libri IV.*, 3m. 20.

RESEARCH FELLOWSHIPS AT NEWNHAM COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

AN appeal addressed to all who are interested in women's education, or, indeed, in national education, has been issued by the Council of Newnham College, asking for funds in aid of the endowment of research fellowships. The main object of these, as the name implies, is to enable a few students of special ability to prosecute for a time some piece of independent work which is already in preparation, and for this purpose to continue their residence in college after their University course has been completed.

The ground for making the appeal at this particular time is an offer from a generous donor of 500l. towards the endowment, and of an additional 100l. for every 400l. collected, until 3,000l. has been obtained, this sum invested being sufficient for the maintenance of a single fellowship with an endowment of 100l. a year. This stipend, small as it is, and offered only for three years to any candidate, would yet make it possible for an able woman to do useful work in advancing knowledge along some line in which she had become interested, perhaps during her college course.

To be able and eager to do original work and to lack opportunity is not only a great privation to the individual, it also means waste of the rarer kind of ability. The College realizes this, and recognizes also that if it cannot hold out to its distinguished students some prospect of engaging in research after they have completed their academical training, its usefulness as an educational institution will be hampered. The truest instruction is that which stimulates the recipients to think for themselves, which makes minds active and venturesome in the employment of knowledge as an instrument instead of weighted with it as a load.

There can be no question that the presence in the College of women who are independently carrying on advanced work has in many ways a beneficial influence upon the life of the place. This has already been seen to be the result of three fellowships, of the kind which it is now hoped permanently to endow, which have been maintained during the last three or four years by annual subscriptions from a few generous friends. Such support is, of course, too precarious a basis to build upon, and the scheme was introduced at first tentatively. Before asking publicly for the endowment of fellowships, the Council determined to experiment with the small funds at its disposal, in order, if successful, to be able to point to definite results. The results, considering the brief term for which the fellowships have been held, have been very satisfactory. The list of books which have already appeared as the work of the Fellows includes 'Prolegomena to the Study of Greek Religion,' by Miss Jane Harrison, and 'A Fourteenth-Century English Biblical Version,' by Miss A. C. Paves (both published by the University Press); 'Borough Customs,' vol. i., by Miss Mary Bateson (published by the Selden Society); a monograph on 'British Graptolites,' by Miss G. L. Elles (published by the Paleontological Society); a paper in botanical physiology, by Miss G. C. Matthaëi (published by the Royal Society); and other work is shortly expected.

The lecturers of the College have published many books and learned papers; but to undertake any considerable work of scholarship there must be, at some time or other, more "learned leisure" than commonly falls to the lot of the active teacher. Already the list of learned societies to which members of Newnham College contribute is a long one, and contains the names of all the more important scientific journals. These facts seem to show that if more opportunity and encouragement were afforded in aid of the production of learned and original work, the amount could be largely increased. The highest kind of scientific inquiry is seldom lucrative, and the fact that it must be supported by endowment is realized wherever learned work is undertaken. But the sole endowment of Newnham College, save for a few small scholarships, consists of its buildings and the grounds they occupy. Its entire income is derived from the students' fees, and these suffice only to meet current expenses and to pay off debt still due on the buildings and the grounds. No funds are available for the maintenance of learning and advancement of knowledge—work which cannot be undertaken without funds, however necessary a part they may be of the collegiate ideal. Many women in bygone days contributed of their wealth to the maintenance of learning in the colleges of ancient foundation. Without their gifts many men would have lost the opportunities which their fellowships have opened up to them. Learning among women now needs the same kind of encouragement.

In support of this appeal to the public for funds to enable Newnham College to develop along the lines most conducive to its future usefulness, there can also be urged the good service which it (together with the other women's colleges) has rendered to the cause of education generally since its establishment in 1875. It is not only the students of these colleges individually who have benefited, but through the labours of many of them as teachers the standard of girls' education has been raised not only at home, but also in the colonies. Nor has the College supplied teachers only, important as that part of its work must always be. It can claim to have contributed good workers in many other fields. Some of its members are on the Education Committees of the County Councils, some are school managers or sanitary inspectors, some are physicians, and some are engaged in social and philanthropic work of an organized and systematic kind. There has been no one-sidedness in the College development, but if increased means were placed at its disposal it would doubtless obtain a still more honourable reputation as a home of learning. Subscriptions and inquiries should be sent to the Principal.

A LYKE-WAKE DIRGE.

THERE can be no reasonable doubt that the Rev. A. L. Mayhew has correctly explained the expression "fire and fleet." Sir Walter Scott, who in his 'Border Minstrelsy' was the first to print the ballad, seems to have misread the word "fleet" through some confusion between the letters f and the long s in his manuscript, which was probably copied from Aubrey. Sir Henry Ellis, in his edition of Brand's 'Popular Antiquities,' copied Aubrey correctly, and the ballad was also rightly printed in the Folk-Lore Society's edition of 'The Remains of Gentilisme and Judaisme,' p. 31. The editor of that work, however, wrongly assigned the meaning of "water" to "fleet." To Mr. Mayhew belongs the credit of having first given the correct explanation of "fire and fleet," which, as he observes, is a very old legal term. The subject was well threshed out in Notes and Queries some years ago (8th S. x. 76, 166, 339, 422; xi. 17, 113, 175, 235; xii. 295, 378), and future editors will doubtless take note of the correct version.

W. F. PRIDEAUX.

47, Great Russell Street, W.C.

In reference to the Rev. A. L. Mayhew's note (The Athenæum, April 1st, p. 400), may I point out that the reading "fleet" in the second line of the above Dirge is much earlier than Brand's 'Popular Antiquities'? This version of the Dirge is derived from John Aubrey's 'Remains of Gentilisme and Judaisme,' a MS. of 1686-7 in the Lansdowne collection (No. 231). Brand was, it is true, the first to print it, in the second edition (1813), edited by Ellis. Since then it has often been reprinted.

Aubrey glosses "fleet" as equivalent to "water," which is confirmed by Bishop Kennett in Lansdowne MS. 1033, where he says, "hence the Fleet, Fleet-ditch, in Lond. Sax. flood, amnis, fluvius." In the 'Glossary of the Cleveland Dialect' (1868) the Rev. J. C. Atkinson supposes "fleet" to be equivalent to the Cleveland "flet," live embers.

In explaining "sleet" as = "salt" in the 'Oxford Book of English Verse,' Mr. Quiller-Couch is following Sir Walter Scott, who, when printing this, the better-known version, in the 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border,' says, "Sleet.....seems to be corrupted from selt, or salt; a quantity of which.....is frequently placed on the breast of a corpse." Cf. Pennant's description of a "wake," 'Tour in Scotland,' 1769.

The suggestion that "Fire and fleet" should be retained, "fleet" = "house-room," I believe was first made by me in 'Popular Ballads of the Olden Time,' Second Series (A. H. Bullen), published last December, where I adduced evidence from Murray's Dictionary to show "fire and flet" is an old legal phrase = "fire and house-room." On pp. 88 ff., and in the appendix, Mr. Mayhew will find the above facts set out more in detail.

F. SIDGWICK.

Ringmer, Sussex.

I CAN confirm the amended interpretation by Mr. A. L. Mayhew of the phrase "fire and sleet" (rectius "fire and fleet" or "fire and flet") from some early wills of the inhabitants of the parish wherein—for my sins—I abide.

Thus, a certain Robert Wynton, in his will, dated 1588, says:—

"Dennis my wyfe shall have the inner chamber in my house, a garden, a garden to sett and sowe yerbes and flette rome and fire rome, egresse and regresse, during her life, but if yt fortune that Dennis my wyfe do marie again she shall depart out of my house."

William Bell, of the same parish, in his will of 1571 says that his "wife is to have egresse and ingresse to the well and the oven, and to have fyre and flett in my house at all times."

In the will of Henry Godden (dated 1591) he leaves to

"Pernell my daughter a chamber in my foresaid house with flette rome and fere rome, ingress and egress while she kepeth herself unmarried and no longer."

These are a few instances out of many.

W. HENEAGE LEGGE.

YOUR correspondent Mr. A. L. Mayhew may be interested to hear of an earlier date than the one he gives for the reading he suggests. In The Bengal Gazette for 1780 portions of the poem are printed in a spelling which is apparently intended for Lowland Scots, and the first verse runs thus:—

This ean night, this ean night,
Every night and awle,
Fire and fleet and candle light,
And Christ receive thy sawle.

It is a matter for curious speculation how this fragment—eight verses in all, some apparently mutilated, and not running consecutively—came to be printed in such unlikely surroundings.

SYDNEY C. GRIER.

THE ARAB CONQUEST OF EGYPT.

Brasenose College.

I HAVE come across a fresh piece of evidence for the identification of Al Mukaukas with Cyrus, Patriarch of Alexandria. In the Syriac 'Chronicon Anonymum,'* edited with a Latin translation by Guidi, occurs the following passage:—

"Potiti sunt Arabes tota regione Syriæ et Palæstinæ. Egyptum quoque ingredi erat in animo: sed non valuerunt: custodiebantur enim fines magno exercitu et vi a patriarcha Alexandrino, locis quoque quibus hostes in regionem ingredi aut egredi possent præclusis et exstructis in ripa Nili per omnem regionem muris."

In other words, the Muslim forces which overran Syria from 631 to 640 were deterred from an earlier attempt on Egypt by a powerful Roman army placed on the borders, and powerful defences prepared, by the Patriarch of Alexandria. It is not open to doubt that the Patriarch referred to is Cyrus, who was sent to Egypt as Viceroy in 631, and the importance of the passage is that it furnishes conclusive proof that Cyrus had the supreme military as well as civil command, a point which has been called in question. Thus Prof. Lane-Poole, in criticizing my theory, remarks (Proc. Royal Irish Acad., vol. xxiv. sec. C. 13, p. 254):—

"Cyrus was Patriarch and civil governor, but not military prefect; yet we find him (if he be El Mukawkis) commanding at the battle of Heliopolis,"

i.e., according to the Arab historians. Precisely, and given the fact that Cyrus was responsible for the military defences of the country, his command at the battle follows quite naturally.

Now as to the authority of the 'Chronicon Anonymum.' Guidi is clear that the document as it stands can be assigned with certainty to a date between 670 and 680, while the portions relating to the Persian kings have an air of still greater antiquity. The writer was thus contemporary with, if not earlier than, John of Nikiou, and may well have been actually contemporary with the conquest of Syria and Egypt. His authority, therefore, is of the very highest order; it is independent of all Egyptian writers; yet, agreeing as it does with John of Nikiou, it must be preferred, in any case of collision, to that of the Arab historians, who were all much later.

A. J. BUTLER.

CAPT. WILLIAM ADAMS.

Oxford.

A FEW weeks ago, when looking through the Savile MSS. in the Bodleian Library, I noticed a volume lettered 'Journal of a Voyage to Siam & China.' An examination showed the 'Journal' to be the logs of certain voyages made between 1614 and 1619, and a further examination proved them to be the original logs kept by William Adams on four voyages made during those years. As the rise of Japan to a foremost place among naval powers has stimulated a fresh interest in that famous seaman, whose literary remains have hitherto consisted of some six letters, this discovery will probably be welcome.

The manuscript is on Japanese paper, and extends to 158 pages, of which about sixty are blank. The shelf-mark of the volume is MS. Savile 48. The first log (24 pp.) begins: "a [remembe]ranc of a vyage to Siam.....begoon the 28 of nouember 1614," and contains an account of the unsuccessful voyage of the Sea Adventure, which, having sprung a leak soon after leaving Japan, had to put in at Nafa Kiang in the Liu Kiu Islands. The log, by far the most interesting one in the volume, relates a series of misfortunes. Just when the ship had been made ready to start from Nafa the sailors mutinied; afterwards they fought with the merchant-passengers; later they were unable to meet their debts, which had to be paid by Adams; and shortly before leaving Nafa the "humoursome" Wickham accused Adams (it seems unjustly) of private trading. On May 21st, 1615, the Sea Adventure put out from Nafa, and returned to Japan, reaching Cochi on June 12th. A record of loans, a list of persons to whom presents were given, and some miscellaneous accounts follow. At the end is an interesting list of polite phrases in Loochoo.

The second log (18 pp.) begins: "A remembranc begonn my viag in the gift of God in the yeer of our Lord 1617 the 17 day of marche being mounday." This was a voyage to Cochin China, an account of which exists in the Journal of Edmund Saris preserved in the India Office. The log continues till August 6th. A few miscellaneous accounts, some dated November, 1616, occur at the end.

The third log (6 pp.) begins: "Item to remember I went abourd the 9 day of march [1618] to a begounn our vyage for Cochechinna,"

The voyage was unsuccessful, Adams being obliged to put back to Japan owing to the loss of his junk's rudder. The log ends on May 6th. It is preceded by a list of words in some language akin to Chinese.

The fourth log (19 pp.) begins: "The grac of God begovn a viag this yeer 1619 the 15 of marche for Tovnkín." It is chiefly concerned with negotiations between the merchants and the "King's son" for trading rights, and ends abruptly on August 9th. A fragment of a log and some miscellaneous accounts follow.

STRICKLAND GIBSON.

THE SCOTT SALE.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE commenced on the 27th ult. the eleven days' sale of the extensive and valuable library of printed books and MSS. of the late John Scott, of Largs, N.B. Most of the lots reached high prices, the following occurring in the first three days: Augustine, De Civitate Dei, Romæ Sweynheym & Pannartz, 1468, 52l.; another edition, Venet., V. de Spira, 1470, 45l. Bannatyne Club Books, a set, 139l. Berlinghieri, Geographia in terza rima, 31 maps on metal, Firenze, c. 1480, 100l. Breydenbach's Latin Voyage to Jerusalem, 1486, 141l.; the same in French, 1488, 39l.; the same in German, n.d. (1486-8), 50l. Cæsar de Bello Gallico, Venet., Jenson, 1471, 49l. Calandrus, De Arithmetica, 1491, 30l. Caxton's Chronicles of England, second edition, very imperfect (165 ll. only), 1482, 102l. Caxton's edition of the Polychronicon (1483), imperfect, 201l. Alain Chartier, Œuvres Diverses, MS. on paper, Sæc. XV., 24l. Ciceronis Epistolæ ad Atticum, Venet., Jenson, 1470, 41l. Officia, &c., Paris, 1477, 32l. 10s. Confession of Faith (Scottish), &c., Amst., L. Elzevir, 1649, 36l. Confession of Faith Subscribed (sic) by the Kings Majesties and his Household, Edinb., 1590, 32l. Confessione of Fayth professed by the Protestantes of the Realme of Scotland, Edinb., R. Lepreuk, 1561, 126l. Collection relating to the Scotch Colony of Darien (60 lots), 289l. Dekker's Entertainment to King James, 1604, 30l. Gawin Douglas's Palace of Honour, first edition, 1553, 95l. Edinburgh Bibliographical Society's Publications, 5 vols., 1896-1901, 22l. A Collection of the Writings of Andrew Fletcher of Saltoun, 39l. Fraser's Scottish Family Histories (14), 162l. 10s. Froissart's Chronicles in English, 1525, 38l. Glanville, De Proprietatibus Rerum, in French, by Jean Corbichon, manuscript on vellum, Sæc. XV., 50l.; the same, Tradladado en Romance, printed in Tolosa, 1495, 53l.; the same in Dutch, Haerlem, 1485, 80l.; the same in English, printed by Wynkyn de Worde, n.d., 251l. Goupil's Illustrated Monographs (10), 134l. Hamilton's Catechism, St. Andrews, 1552, 141l. Contemporary Facts relating to Henry, Prince of Wales, eldest son of James I. (14 lots), 144l. 14s. S. Hieronymus, Epistolæ, Romæ, Sweynheym et Pannartz, 1468, 69l. Higden's Polychronicon, fine MS. of the fifteenth century on vellum, 161l.; the same, printed by Wynkyn de Worde (imperfect), 1495, 58l.

Literary Gossip.

LADY CATHERINE MILNES GASKELL'S new volume, entitled 'Spring in a Shropshire Abbey,' will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. immediately after Easter. Grouping her facts and reflections under the heading of the months, the author presents the history of the ancient house and its possessors as a background to the march of the seasons and the interests of daily life. The book contains sixteen full-page illustrations of the abbey and its surroundings.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will publish before long a translation, by the Duchess Litta-Visconti-Arese, of the late Gaetano Negri's monograph on the Emperor Julian the Apostate. The work is an exhaustive study and defence of the emperor, and deals minutely with the great struggle between Christianity and paganism in his day.

* Corp. Script. Christ. Orient.: Scriptores Syri: Chronica Minora: Pars Prior. Paris, 1903, pp. 13-32.

THE Rev. George Tyrrell, S.J., will contribute a preface to Mr. Francis Thompson's 'Study of the Relations between Brother Ass, the Body, and his Rider, the Soul.'

THE Clarendon Press will publish early next week 'A Criticism of Systems of Hebrew Metre: an Elementary Treatise,' by Mr. William Henry Cobb. Kuenen (1894) is the latest authority; but new investigations have appeared since his death, and there is no modern English or American work on the subject.

ABBOT GASQUET has in the press an important work entitled 'Henry III. and the Church: a Study of his Ecclesiastical Policy and his Relations with Rome.' The work is based upon original documents both in the Vatican and in England, and treats this important period in the development of English polity with the impartiality that distinguishes the author's well-known works on 'Henry VIII. and the English Monasteries' and 'The Eve of the Reformation.' The book will be published shortly by Messrs. Bell & Sons.

IT may be of interest at the present moment to learn that the paper on 'The English Occupation of Tangiers' (1661-83) which Miss Enid Routh will read before the Royal Historical Society on the 13th inst. was suggested to her by the Council during the past session, and forms part of a somewhat extensive examination of the sources which Miss Routh has undertaken. During recent years the episode has been more or less seriously treated by the late Sir L. Playfair and Col. John Davis; also by Mr. Budgett Meakin and Mr. Frewen Lord; but the original sources are largely unexplored. A few years ago the Council of the Royal Historical Society vainly offered a medal for original research upon the subject.

As the last contingent of American historical students begins to return, their places are quickly taken by new-comers. Last season was, perhaps, the best hitherto, both in respect of numbers and the work done. As a specimen of valuable results we may mention the recent communication by Prof. Charles Andrews to the American Historical Association. Amongst the new workers this season will be Prof. Cheyney and Miss B. Putnam.

A TRANSLATION of 'The Autobiography of Mark Rutherford' into Bohemian will shortly appear. The rendering is being made by a pastor of the Reformed Church of Bohemia.

The Saturday Review is printing this week a sonnet by Mr. William Watson on the Scott monument in Edinburgh.

A FIFTH and thoroughly revised edition of Mr. Lee's 'Life of Shakespeare' will be published on the 18th inst. by Messrs. Smith & Elder.

THE announcement that the justly famous Rowfant Library has been sold to Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co., and is in the United States awaiting possible dispersion if it is not soon resold en bloc, has caused a good deal of surprise and regret. Since the sons of the collector of the library, the late Locker-Lampson, inherit his literary tastes, it was hoped that the collection would not pass out of the hands of the family.

THE second of the series of lectures organized by Mrs. Cobden-Sanderson will be given at the Kensington Town Hall on the evening of Wednesday next. Mr. Bernard Shaw will speak upon Shakspeare and his plays, and the chair will be taken by Dr. Furnivall. After the lecture questions and discussion are invited.

IT is proposed to issue an index to 'Bacon's Annals of Ipswich,' compiled by Nath. Bacon, Town Clerk and Recorder of Ipswich, grandson of Lord Keeper Sir Nicholas, and related to Francis Bacon, Viscount St. Albans. The work consists of abstracts from the town records and documents, and throws much light upon the manners and customs of the time. It was privately issued in 1884 without any index; this is now in course of compilation, and will shortly be issued by subscription. Only 100 copies will be printed.

WE regret to record the death on the 31st ult., in his seventy-ninth year, of Mr. William Hill Collingridge, the founder of The City Press. He was born at Cowper's house at Olney, which he purchased and presented to the town, and there established the Cowper Museum. At the sale of the Hayley collection he bought 'Yardley Oak' in the handwriting of Cowper. This, with other MSS., including the diary kept by Samuel Teedon, he included with his gift. Mr. Collingridge was special visitor to the Printers' Almshouses for many years.

THE Bedford College for Women, in consequence of the limitation of their leases, and the steady growth of the institution, consider that a freehold site and a new building are essential, the cost of which may amount to 150,000*l.* A further endowment of 100,000*l.* is stated to be necessary to make the work of the College fully effective. A public appeal, which has the approval of the Senate of the University of London, is accordingly made for funds. Donations may be sent to Miss Henrietta Busk, hon. secretary of the appeal fund, at Bedford College, Baker Street, W. The College was opened in 1849, and was the first to offer scholarships and fellowships to women. There are at present 280 students, of whom forty are in residence.

WITH reference to the extremely interesting holograph letter of Mary, Queen of Scots, which realized 900*l.* at the John Scott sale at Messrs. Sotheby's yesterday week, a slight error may be pointed out in Father Pollen's preface (p. ix) to the facsimile and translation of it in vol. xciii. (1904) of the Scottish History Society's Publications. In that preface it is stated that the letter was either "withdrawn" from or "bought in" at the Dawson Turner sale at Messrs. Puttick's on June 9th, 1859. As a matter of fact, it was neither withdrawn nor bought in. The lot in which this letter occurred was in two volumes, and comprised 'A Collection of Original Letters of Sovereigns and other Illustrious Personages, illustrative of Scottish History, 1538-1704.' It was bought by Thorpe the bookseller for 280*l.*, a very high price at that time. Thorpe immediately broke the two volumes up, and made out of them an entire day's sale, which was held at Messrs. Puttick's on July 16th. The Mary Queen of Scots letter sold last week formed lot 26 in this sale, and was purchased for 40*l.* by Joseph Lilly, the bookseller. It is interesting to note that Thorpe's enterprise was fully justified by the results, for, whereas the two volumes cost him 280*l.*, the sale piecemeal in July resulted in a total of 488*l.* 19*s.* Mr. Puttick's MS. list (now in the British Museum) of sales at his house has his own annotation "resold by Thorpe" written against the entry of this July sale.

ONE of the gems of the Hurst sale, held recently in New York, was the complete manuscript of Walter Scott's 'History of Scotland.' It was written by Laidlaw at Scott's dictation, but is full of interlineations and changes made by Scott in his own autograph. This MS. realized 1,600 dollars. At the same sale 1,065 dollars was paid for a letter of George Washington, the highest price recorded, although as much as 1,150 dollars has been paid for one signed by George and Martha Washington conjointly. The letter just sold extends to ten pages folio, and was written to Benjamin Harrison, signer of the Declaration, from Middlebrook, May 5th, 1775. Another lot at the Hurst sale consisted of fifteen chapters of Washington Irving's 'Bracebridge Hall,' 155 pp., and fetched 1,315 dollars; and another MS., nine chapters of the same author's 'Tales of a Traveller,' 184 pp., realized 1,110 dollars.

THE literary event of the past week in Paris was the fêting of M. Albert Sorel by his old scholars and admirers. M. Sorel, who is a member of the Académie Française and of the Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, recently published the eighth and concluding volume of his great work on 'L'Europe et la Révolution Française.' The fête was of a distinctly practical nature, in that M. Sorel was presented with a gold medal struck in his honour by Chaplain.

THE Société des Poètes Français, of which "le maître" M. Sully Prudhomme is the honorary president and the moving spirit, has concluded its annual "concours," with the result that the prize of the year has been awarded to M. Delacour for his poem 'Le Sage.'

THE Figaro has had the good fortune to discover a new poet in the person of the Duchesse de Rohan, who is about to publish her first volume of verse, under the title of 'Lande Fleurie.' The great French daily congratulates itself and its readers on publishing a selection of unprinted verses which exhibit much grace of thought and facility of expression.

THE Andersen centenary on April 2nd was celebrated throughout Denmark with theatrical performances, readings from his fairy tales, numerous articles and books on his life and works, &c. The Theatre Royal, Copenhagen, played his fantastic drama 'Ole Lukøje'; and Andersen's native town, Odense, arranged a great festival, in which a representative of the German Government took part by order of the Emperor.

THE Parliamentary Papers of the week include Education, Scotland, Reports for the Western, Northern, and Southern Divisions ( $2\frac{1}{2}d.$ ,  $2d.$ , and  $1\frac{1}{2}d.$  respectively); Appendix to the Report of the Commissioners of National Education, Ireland, Section II. ( $11d.$ ); Royal Scottish Museum, Edinburgh, Report ( $1\frac{1}{2}d.$ ); and the Annual Statistical Report of the University of Edinburgh ( $2d.$ ).

SCIENCE

CHEMICAL BOOKS.

The Chemical Synthesis of Vital Products and the Inter-relations between Organic Compounds. By Raphael Meldola. Vol. I. (Arnold.)—This volume deals with hydrocarbons, alcohols and phenols, aldehydes, ketones, carbohydrates and glucosides, sulphur and cyanogen compounds, camphor and terpenes, and colouring matters of the flavone group. Prof. Meldola has, in odd intervals of time occurring in a very busy life, produced a work of great thoroughness, and one which will be welcome to all chemists and students of chemistry who have to deal with products of the action of life, as well as to physiologists. The work was conceived whilst the author was preparing an address as President of the Chemical Section of the British Association at Ipswich in 1895, and taking stock of our knowledge of synthetical chemistry. Naturally, the scope of the book grew under treatment in order to give an adequate notice of the distribution in nature of the vital products and of the numerous synthetical processes employed in their artificial production.

Up to the present time the successful synthesis of organic compounds by the chemist has thrown virtually no light on the biochemical problems of their production in the bodies of plants and animals. The methods of the chemist, for the most part of a pyrogenic nature, have no bio-chemical interest. The temperatures and conditions used are such as to be fatal to any form of life. Although carbohydrates can now be produced artificially, yet the processes have no parallel with that by which plants decompose carbon dioxide with the assimilation of carbon and liberation of oxygen.

Prof. Meldola's object has been to endeavour to bring the chemist and the physiologist and their works nearer together. The book is, in the words of the author, "a record of the synthetical achievements of generations of workers arranged with a distinct bio-chemical bias." The introductory chapter of eighteen pages is partly historical, but mainly treats of organic chemistry and chemical synthesis from the biocentric standpoint, and this is the standpoint which the author wishes to emphasize. It necessitates an arrangement of the matter different from that usual in works on organic chemistry, and also the recognition of both "up-grade syntheses" and "down-grade syntheses," some being the result of enzyme action. The author has been, we think, completely successful in his arrangement and classification of the matter, and shows, as was to be expected, an exhaustive knowledge of the subject and an inexhaustible patience in collecting and arranging the references. Full references are given to every statement of fact, both as to the natural occurrence of the compound and to the methods employed for their synthetical production. Nearly fifty periodicals are quoted from besides patent literature. We note that the author pleads that the Englishman Henry Hennell, who synthesized alcohol from olefant gas at the same time (1828) that the German chemist Wöhler synthesized urea from ammonium cyanate, should share honours as a pioneer in this field. At the time these syntheses were made neither of them was "complete," but later both the cyanate and the ethylene were obtained from inorganic material.

Prof. Meldola points out the necessity of the chemist and physiologist working hand in hand, and hopes that the publication of this volume may possibly contribute towards this much desired rapprochement between the sciences. He looks upon the work of Charabot in France on the terpene alcohols and ketones, in connexion with essential oils, as a good example of the kind of work which is much required. He remarks that "the development of physiology along chemical lines is bound to take place at an increasing rate with the progress of discovery, and in the future the two sciences must necessarily become more and more interdependent. If, some decades hence, a work on similar lines to the present should ever be compiled, it may be anticipated with confidence that the laboratory methods for synthesising vital products will have approximated more closely to the physiological processes. It may further be predicted with equal confidence that as greater chemical mastery is acquired over the biochemical processes the number of syntheses of vital products effected in the laboratory will go on increasing at a much greater rate."

The study of synthetical chemistry from the biocentric point of view furnishes numerous examples of the relationships between biochemistry and chemical technology, many of the syntheses of vital products effected of late years being directly owing to the technological value of such products. Prof. Meldola is to be heartily congratulated and sincerely thanked for the production of this very useful and interesting volume, which will help towards that binding together of the sciences of chemistry and physiology which he desires and foresees. It will also render far easier the work of a successor in continuing the labour now that Prof. Meldola has not only laid the foundations of this record, but has also built up the structure to the present date. It should be added that the volume has an excellent index.

The Principles of Inorganic Chemistry. By Wilhelm Ostwald. Translated, with the Author's Sanction, by Alex. Findlay. Second Edition. (Macmillan & Co.)—That a second edition of this work has been called for in less than three years is a proof that the views enunciated by Ostwald are filtering rather rapidly into the minds of English-speaking teachers of chemistry. The present edition has been revised in accordance with the second German edition, published at the beginning of 1904. The principal change is the rewriting of the introductory paragraphs so as to present the fundamental conceptions in a clearer and more concise manner; also the section on uranium rays and radio-activity has been rewritten by the author for the purposes of this translation. The book is very clearly printed, and contains 126 figures in the text. We look on it as an excellent sign that Ostwald's book is meeting with a good demand not only in the author's country, but also in many other lands. Besides the English translation there is one already published in Russian, and Japanese and French editions are about to appear.

Introduction to the Study of Physical Chemistry. By Sir William Ramsay. (Longmans & Co.)—The Phase Rule and its Applications. By Alex. Findlay. (Same publishers.)—Sir William Ramsay writes his little book, which is both printed separately and also as part of Dr. Findlay's book on the phase rule, as editor of a series of small text-books on different parts of chemical physics. Dr. Findlay's volume is the first of the series, and others will follow on stoichiometry, electro-chemistry, the relation between chemical constitution and physical properties, spectroscopy, thermodynamics, and chemical dynamics and reactions. These volumes will be written by recognized authorities in their various departments, and will be supervised by Sir W. Ramsay. To judge from the instalment before us, they will be very welcome to students and workers in the extensive domain of chemical physics. Original English books on some of the branches of the subject are at present scanty. Being in separate form, each part may be more frequently and easily kept up to date than if all were issued in one volume. The editor of the series has written an admirable short introduction, in which he points out that it was not until the middle of the nineteenth century that it was clearly recognized that certain physical phenomena depended on the chemical composition of the objects concerned, and thus the birth of physical chemistry became possible. He gives a concise but clear survey of the lines on which the development of the subject has proceeded up to the present day.

Dr. Findlay has done good service in presenting to the non-mathematical chemist an exposition of the phase rule of Prof. Willard Gibbs, in which it is seen devoid of the mathematical clothing in which it was wrapped by its author. It is true that this has been done to some extent by Roozeboom, but the present work will be a boon to the student of chemical equilibria, and serve as a stepping-stone to more elaborate works on the subject. There are over one hundred figures in the text, and the free use of these alone enables the exposition of the phase rule and its applications to be made without mathematical formulæ. Dr. Findlay also reproduces many tables of numerical data from original papers, and adds full references to original work. This is a feature too often neglected in small manuals. No doubt the recent Faraday Lecture delivered by Prof. Ostwald will act as a stimulus, and give an even greater interest to work of the kind with which it is the purpose of these volumes to deal.

Electro-Chemistry.—Part I. General Theory. By R. A. Lehfeldt. (Longmans & Co.)—This is the second of the series of "Text-Books of Physical Chemistry," edited by Sir William Ramsay. The volume could scarcely have been entrusted to better hands than those of Dr. Lehfeldt, whose work in the field of electro-chemistry from the physical side is well known. He has divided the volume into three parts. Part I. is on 'The Mechanism of Conduction in Electrolytes,' including the measurement of quantities of electricity by different voltmeters. Part II. is written by Mr. T. S. Moore, of the University of Birmingham, and is on 'The Relation of Chemical Constitution to Conductivity.' This chapter forms an enlargement of parts of chap. i.; it has been carefully arranged and brought up to date, and treats from a chemical point of view the relation of number of ions in solution to constitution, complex salts, pseudo-acids and bases, and amphoteric electrolytes. Part III., by Dr. Lehfeldt, deals with the 'Theory of Chemi-electromotive Force.' It discusses polarization, the thermodynamic theory, and the calculation of the electro-motive force of voltaic cells, various standard cells, and methods of measurement of electro-motive force and of differences of potential. The volume is a welcome addition to a series well commenced.

Electrolytic Preparations: Exercises for Use in the Laboratory by Chemists and Electro-Chemists. By Dr. Karl Elbs. Translated by R. S. Hutton. (Arnold.)—The translator, the Demonstrator and Lecturer on Electro-Chemistry at Owens College, Manchester, found the work of Dr. Elbs very useful to him in his course of laboratory work, and has done good service in translating it for the use of others. There are many handbooks on the physical side of electrolysis, but few dealing adequately with that of chemical preparations, other than metallurgical operations, by electrical means; and therefore this collection of exercises from the electro-chemical laboratory of Giessen is welcome.

A few pages only are devoted to purely physical matters, measuring instruments and apparatus for electrolysis; and then follow examples of preparations from mineral chemistry and from organic chemistry. Among the former we find experiments with unattackable anodes, including the preparation of sodium hypochlorite, of chlorates and perchlorates; also experiments with soluble anodes, such as the production of copper oxides from copper, of white lead from metallic lead, and of pure copper from brass. The examples from organic chemistry include the electrolysis of organic acids with the preparation of ethane and ethylene, the reduction of aromatic nitro-compounds in acid solutions and in alkaline solutions, the reduction of carbonyl compounds, and one or two oxidation processes, such as the preparation of iodoform from alcohol and potassium iodide in the presence of sodium carbonate and carbon dioxide. A few of the processes are already of practical and even commercial importance. In all cases the conditions necessary to success as to temperature, strength of current, &c., are given. Laboratories in which electro-chemical work is done will find this a valuable aid.

Acetylene: the Principles of its Generation and Use. By F. H. Leeds and W. J. A. Butterfield. (Griffin & Co.)—In this small handbook the authors have put together almost all that need be said on the production and purification of acetylene and its subsequent uses. By far its most important use at the present time is for the production of light, although it may also be used in producing heat and power. No other gas, commercially produced, can yield when burnt, volume for volume, so much light as acetylene. There are other attendant advantages to its use in many cases. Thus, the raw material, calcium carbide, from which it is obtained, is, relatively to the amount of light yielded, less bulky than the raw material of other gases, and than oils and candles; therefore, when the cost of transit is high, or facilities for storage are bad, acetylene may be both more economical and more convenient than other illuminants. Acetylene itself, when produced, requires smaller storage accommodation, and smaller mains and service pipes than other illuminating gases. Its light more closely resembles sunlight than that of any other flame—that is, it is more nearly a pure white light; and except by electricity or incandescent gas-burners, no light of similar intensity and brilliancy can be obtained. Also on grounds of health acetylene lighting has advantages; no illuminant which depends on combustion for its light—that is, which consumes and vitiates air—uses up so little air for the same amount of light as this gas.

Electric lighting does not depend on oxidation, and does not, therefore, spoil the air; but the presence of a flame in a room is not an unalloyed evil. The air which comes into contact with the flame is deprived of its organic matter and micro-organisms by combustion, and so far rendered less impure, and, in the case of crowded rooms, less detrimental to health; also the ventilation of the room is generally increased by the action of the flame. In small rooms, or those liable to overcrowding, acetylene is, therefore, better than other illuminants, except electricity, on account of its exhausting and vitiating the air to a less degree. With regard to the economics of the use of acetylene, each installation must be judged on its own conditions and merits, and in the present work will be found the necessary data on which to form estimates; in a great many cases, only some form of incandescent lighting with water-gas or air-gas is likely to be more economical; and there are numerous instances in factories and the like where the vibrations and draughts render a system of lighting with incandescent mantles inadmissible.

In comparing the value of acetylene with other illuminants, Messrs. Leeds and Butterfield have tried to use a basis of "illuminating effect" rather than that of simple "illuminating power," as judged by the total candle-power of the light emitted. The amount of light required to illuminate a room of about 300 square feet in area, so that ordinary print may be read comfortably in any part of the room, is taken as the standard. This standard is, doubtless, higher than is generally attained, unless by incandescent gas flames. To obtain this amount of lighting requires the use of about 30 wax or paraffin candles, judiciously distributed, and giving an aggregate of about 35 candle-power (candle-power=standard sperm candle). Lights of higher intensity give a much higher degree of illumination in their immediate vicinity, but adequately to light objects at some distance they require a far greater aggregate candle-power than with smaller and more numerous sources of illumination. To obtain the equivalent illuminating effect of the 30 candles, as above, would require about 11 small electric glow-lamps, of nominally 8 candle-power; from 6 to 10 coal-gas jets burnt in the ordinary way, with a flat flame; 4 incandescent gas flames; 5 rather large paraffin lamps; or from 3 to 5 acetylene flames, according to their size. The aggregate candle-power in the case of the electric lighting would be more than twice that of the candles themselves; in the case of the coal gas and the paraffin lamps, from twice to three times the candle-power of the candles would be required and given; and in the case of the acetylene three or four times the candle power would be given. Compare the cost of "equivalent illumination," and incandescent coal-gas burners are much the cheapest, little more than one-sixth the cost of candles; coal gas, as usually burnt, and electric lighting do not differ much from candles in cost under ordinary circumstances; paraffin oil lighting is about one-third the cost, and acetylene lighting about one-half the cost of the candles. The authors devote chapters to the physics and chemistry of the reaction between calcium carbide and water; to acetylene generators; to the chemical and physical properties of acetylene, its purification, the pipes and burners required; and to its minor uses. The regulations of the English and of the German Acetylene Associations on the sale, transport, and storage of calcium carbide are included.

All those concerned in the installation of a system of lighting in rather out-of-the-way places, or where no public supply can be drawn upon, should consult this book, which can be heartily recommended.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE ATOM.

II.

IN The Athenæum of March 25th some reasons were given for supposing that the analogy drawn by Prof. J. J. Thomson between the groupings of Mayer's floating magnets and the arrangement of the chemical elements in Prof. Mendeléeff's Periodic Law was not so close as some of his followers—notably Mr. Whetham—would have us suppose. The discrepancy becomes more apparent if we take as standard of comparison the new table of the elements drawn up by Prof. Mendeléeff, which is given as frontispiece to the new (1905) edition of his 'Principles of Chemistry.' Here we find the elements arranged in nine vertical rows or groups, of which the first eight correspond with fair closeness to the first eight given by Prof. J. J. Thomson and, following him, by Mr. Whetham. Thus, he arranges helium, neon, argon, and the other rare atmospheric gases in a group by themselves, which he calls Group O, which may be taken to correspond with Group I. of Prof. Thomson's table. Then follows Group I., corresponding to Prof. Thomson's Group II. (although in Prof. Mendeléeff's table it is headed by hydrogen), lithium and sodium coming respectively second and third. Then comes the beryllium-magnesium group (Mendeléeff's II. and Thomson's III.), ending with the newly discovered radium; then the boron-aluminium (III.-IV.); then the carbon-silicon (IV.-V.), in which is included for the first time the radio-active metal thorium; then the nitrogen-phosphorus (V.-VI.); then the oxygen-sulphur (VI.-VII.), in which is now placed the heaviest of metals, uranium; and then the halogen group (VII.-VIII.), beginning with fluorine-chlorine, to which Prof. Mendeléeff hopes to add a yet-to-be-discovered metal, with an atomic weight of 99, which he calls provisionally eka-manganese. But when we reach Group VIII. (IX. of Thomson) we find there not Prof. Thomson's neon and argon doing duty over again, as his theory apparently requires, but the sub-groups of closely related metals—iron-nickel-cobalt, ruthenium-rhodium-palladium, and osmium-iridium-platinum. Although the last two of these sub-groups might from their atomic weights be transferred to the other end of the series—or, in other words, put into Prof. Mendeléeff's Group O—this would be impossible for iron-nickel-cobalt, and would do Prof. Thomson no good, as his theory requires all in that group to be non-valent.

To turn to the question of valency, which Mr. Whetham defines with great justness as "the number of hydrogen atoms a chemical atom will combine with or replace," those who would convert Prof. Thomson's analogies into the evidence of an absolute connexion seem to have fallen upon evil days. Their argument requires that the valency of an element should be a property as inherent in it, and as invariable, as are, according to him, the formations into which fall Mayer's floating magnets when employed in numbers ranging from 59 to 67, or—to use a better example—its atomic weight. But this is very far from being the case. In an additional note to the last edition of the work quoted above, Prof. Mendeléeff says:—

"It is impossible to foretell all the compounds formed by an element from its atomicity or valency, because the atomicity of the elements is variable. In  $\text{CO}_2$ ,  $\text{COX}_2$ ,  $\text{CH}_4$ , and the multitude of carbon compounds corresponding with them, the carbon C is quadrivalent, but in CO either the carbon must be taken as bivalent or the atomicity of oxygen be regarded as variable."

And again:—

"The periodic system of the elements.....shows that there is a law or rule for the variation of the forms of oxygen and hydrogen compounds: chlorine is univalent with respect to hydrogen, and septavalent with respect to oxygen; sulphur is bivalent towards hydrogen, and sexavalent as regards oxygen; phosphorus is trivalent to hydrogen, and pentavalent in respect to oxygen—the sum in every case being equal to 8. Hence [our italics] the power of the elements to change their atomicity is an essential part of their nature, so that constant valency cannot be considered as a fundamental property."

While M. Mailhe, in his annual review of mineral chemistry (Revue Générale des Sciences, 1905, p. 178), in noticing Dr. Guntz's late preparation of a double salt in the shape of a sub-chloride of barium and sodium, pertinently asks, "Que devient la notion de valence en présence de tels corps?" and seeks to show that in this compound a formula which shows chlorine as trivalent is the only one possible. The chlorine, which in Prof. Thomson's scheme has a valency of 1, has therefore other valencies of 3 or 7 according to circumstances. Will Mr. Whetham admit that similar variability is to be found in the arrangement of Prof. Thomson's group of 66 magnets? If not, the argument which he would draw from it seems to fall to the ground.

There remains the supposed analogy between some quality, not very clearly defined, manifest in the centre seven of Prof. Thomson's groups and the supposed electric "sign" or polarity in the Mendeléeff table. But this breaks down almost as soon as it is examined. If we accept—as seems fair—Mr. Newman Howard's correction of Mr. Whetham's error and omission (for the last of which he is not solely responsible), we shall find that Prof. Thomson's Groups II. to IV. are electro-positive, and only the Groups V., VI., and VII. electro-negative. Applying this rule to the corresponding groups in the table of the elements, and omitting the iron-platinum group, we shall find that only twenty-one of the remaining known elements are negative, while forty-one are positive. This seems rather extraordinary; but all attempt to explain it must be laid aside when we see that this polarity corresponds to no inherent quality in the element itself, but is entirely relative. Thus cadmium, which is positive to lead, is negative to zinc; and copper, which is positive to silver, is negative to bismuth. And even these relations can be altered with the electrolyte employed. Place tin and cadmium in a solution of caustic potash, and tin is positive and cadmium negative; but if the same pair are placed in hydrochloric acid their relative polarities are immediately reversed.

To sum up, then, it is claimed that it has been shown:—

(1) The supposed regularity of change exhibited in the groupings of Mayer's floating magnets either does not exist, or takes place in accordance with some law not yet formulated.

(2) The supposed correspondence between these groupings and Mendeléeff's Periodic Law can only be shown by assuming an order of arrangement for the elements not in accordance with that law or recognized by its enunciator.

(3) The supposed correspondence between the arrangement of groups 59 to 67 and the valency of some of the elements is worthless, because this valency is in itself a quality varying with circumstances, and not a fundamental property. And

(4) No argument can be drawn from a supposed polarity of the elements which is never more than relative, and can be varied with the electrolyte employed.

In these circumstances, what becomes of the astounding concordance that Prof. Thomson's followers have found between his suggested model of the atom and the periodic properties of the chemical elements?

ONE word in answer to Mr. Newman Howard's letter in your issue of the 1st inst. I do not doubt that Mr. Whetham's comparison of the group of sixty-six floating magnets with the atom of an electro-positive element is a mistake, and that for "electro-positive" we should here read electro-negative. In the absence of any admission to this effect, I did not see my way to assuming this to be the case, especially in view of Mr. Whetham's preface. In the sameway, the argument seems to demand that the group of sixty-three magnets shall be considered as representing the atom of a "tetravalent" or quadrivalent element with electro-positive properties. Yet neither Mr. Whetham nor Prof. Thomson makes this assertion directly, and it entails rather serious consequences for their hypothesis.

As to the suggestion that it is Prof. Thomson's calculations rather than Mr. Whetham's deductions from them that should be criticized, I would point out that it is Mr. Whetham, and not Prof. Thomson, who has asserted the exact concordance of the grouping of the magnets with the periodic properties of the elements; that he, so far as I know, was the first to draw a parallel between this and the Darwinian theory of evolution of living organisms; and that it is from his book rather than from Prof. Thomson's communication that the newspaper articles which I have deprecated seem to have been taken. THE WRITER OF THE ARTICLE.

RESEARCH NOTES.

PROF. J. J. THOMSON'S lectures at the Royal Institution finished on the 25th of last month, appropriately enough, with some remarks on the end of the world. The lecturer drew attention to the fact that, though the revolution of the corpuscles round each other in an atom of radium was approximately a thousand million million times greater than the revolution of the earth round the sun, yet that the atom came to a sudden and violent end in about 800 years. The fact would be more alarming were we certain of the relation between corpuscles and atoms. Apart from these metaphysical preconceptions, the lectures were very successful, most of the experiments going well, with the exception of two upon the rate of leak in an electroscope, which failed, said the lecturer, because one of the audience had in his pocket a large quantity of radium. The principal new fact announced was the discovery of the Delta rays, of low penetrative power, which seem to be the same as the slow-moving electrons of Prof. Rutherford, already announced. Prof. Thomson thinks that these are negatively charged particles; that they are emitted by radium, polonium, and uranium, and probably by all substances when exposed to light; and that they are easily deflected by a magnet. He also seemed more convinced than ever that negative electricity is the only electricity possible, that which we call positive being only what remains when the negative is taken away.

A like adhesion to the electronic theory was shown by Sir Oliver Lodge in his public lecture at the same place the same week on 'The Pertinacious Currents,' when he showed how the charge given by an induction coil to two or more condensers can be so trapped by a mercury rectifier as to reach a potential and intensity capable of breaking down a very high resistance. According to his theory, the bombardment by the cathode particles is so searching that it is necessary to provide a path by which the positive electrons can creep back into the field, and this is found by him in the tinfoil coating which surrounds the neck of his rectifier. In this case this was illustrated by the burning by a battery of Leyden jars of a thick piece of wet string, and this and all the other experiments, as is usual with this lecturer, went without a single hitch. Any one wishing for an exposition of the whole electronic theory, clear as only a Frenchman can make it, is recommended to read M. Langevin's communication to the International Congress of Science at St. Louis on 'La Physique des Électrons,' which is reprinted in the Revue Générale des Sciences for March 30th, 1905. It should be noticed that he accepts to the fullest extent the doctrine that matter has no independent existence, but is, as he says, merely electrified centres (centres électrisés) in the ether. Gravitation he would explain as making, with electric and magnetic force, a third mode of activity of the ether, although he admits that its connexion with the other two is very obscure. His explanation of inertia as the "sillage" or wake left by the passage of the moving electrified centre through the ether is ingenious, and deserves to be studied, while the phenomena of radiation are according to him, due to the acceleration of the movement. He objects to Lord Kelvin's vortex-ring theory as insufficient, but seems inclined, as did Prof. J. J. Thomson in his private lectures in Albemarle Street, to regard with favour Prof. Rutherford's contention that the Alpha particle is an atom of helium which has lost a negative corpuscle.

It seems, therefore, that a very considerable part of the scientific world is definitely committed to this electro-magnetic theory of matter, which is thereby shown to have no independent existence. Yet it is not likely to gain immediate and unquestioning acceptance by the outside public so long as its proof remains as purely mathematical as it does at present. After all, we can never forget that the mathematicians of Ptolemy's day, and for many centuries afterwards, found themselves equal to explaining the supposed movement of the sun round the earth by a system of epicycloids. Moreover, the chemists have not yet had their say in the matter, though the veteran Prof. Mendeléeff has raised the standard of opposition in his 'Chemical Conception of the Ether,' and by his suggestion in 'Principles of Chemistry' that electricity may prove to be only a form of chemical action. Perhaps the solar eclipse in August next will give them stomach for the fight, for it will offer a rare opportunity for further investigations of the supposed gas coronium, which Prof. Mendeléeff's theory demands as a halfway house between helium and the ether when imagined as an extremely tenuous gas subject to all the hitherto known laws of matter.

An experiment to solve the debated question whether the ether does or does not move with the earth is suggested by Mr. Michelson in The Philosophical Magazine. He would transmit two pencils of light in opposite directions round the earth parallel to the equator, when he expects that, if the ether does not move with the earth, one of the two pencils would be accelerated and the other retarded by a quantity proportional to the velocity of the earth's surface and to the length of the parallel of latitude at the place. A light which would travel round the whole earth would have its inconveniences, even if it were possible to produce it; but he thinks that a path of 4 kilometres would give an approximately accurate result. This experiment, though expensive, ought not to be impossible, and offers a fine opportunity for a scientifically-disposed millionaire.

On the question of valency, or the power of most of the chemical elements to combine with or displace a greater or less number of atoms of hydrogen, it is sufficient here to refer to the communication of M. de Forcrand to the Académie des Sciences, and to say that the time has come when hydrogen should be recognized as having a divalent atom. M. de Forcrand writes with all the authority given by his researches into the properties of the hydrates, and it has been evident for some time that the whole doctrine of valency (which is referred to in another column) requires revision. It should have very important results for the new study of electrochemistry. F. L.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—March 22.—Dr. J. E. Marr, President, in the chair.—Messrs. G. B. Pritchard, T. E. Robertson, and E. P. Turner were elected Fellows.—The following communications were read: 'An Experiment in Mountain-Building, Part II,' by Lord Avebury,—and 'The Rhetic Rocks of Monmouthshire,' by Mr. Linsdall Richardson.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—March 16.—Lord Avebury, President, in the chair.—Mr. A. T. Martin read a report on various antiquarian discoveries around Bath.—Mr. W. J. Kaye, jun., read some notes on Roman triple vases.—The Rev. H. J. Cheales communicated an account of some wall-paintings in Friskney Church, Lincs.

March 23.—Sir Henry Howorth, V.P., in the chair.—A letter was read from the Clerk of the Claypole Rural District Council, stating that the Council had agreed to repair the existing mediæval bridge, and to accept the Society's offer of a contribution towards the cost.—The Rev. W. Greenwell communicated an account of a cemetery of the Late-Celtic period in East Yorks.—Mr. E. K. Clark submitted a report as Local Secretary for Yorks.

March 30.—Mr. W. Gowland, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. O. M. Dalton read some notes on the harbour and fortifications of Famagusta, and on some Byzantine silver plate and jewellery at present in the custody of the Government of Cyprus.—Mr. F. Haverfield communicated a note on a bronze vessel of Italian type found at Bath.—Mr. C. Dawson exhibited a bronze rapier-blade, of unusual length, found at Lissane, co. Derry.—Mr. Henry Laver exhibited a small leaden seal found at Colchester.—Dr. Codrington exhibited a paving-tile from Peatling Magna Church, Leicestershire.

ZOOLOGICAL.—March 21.—Mr. G. A. Boulenger, V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during February, and called special attention to a female kiang (Egurus hemionus kiang) deposited by the King; to a male lynx (Felis lynx) from the Caucasus and a male leopard of the Persian race (F. pardus tulliana); and to a semi-albino variety of the common fox (Canis vulpes).—The Secretary also read a letter from Mrs. S. L. Hinde describing the killing of a partridge by a duiker (Cephalophus sp. inc.), which devoured the bird's head, it was thought to gratify its desire for salt.—Mr. F. Gillett exhibited, in order to show the protective nature of the coloration of the animal, a photograph of a wounded oryx (Oryx beisa) hiding in undergrowth of wood in its native haunts.—Mr. C. Tate Regan exhibited and made remarks upon a series of pencil sketches of fishes of the Rio Negro and its tributaries, made by Dr. A. R. Wallace about fifty years ago.—Mr. Macleod Yearsley exhibited a radiograph of a living snake, showing the skeletons of two frogs it had swallowed some hours previously.—Mr. R. E. Holding exhibited and made remarks upon some skulls of the fallow deer (Dama vulgaris) and the red deer (Cervus elaphus), showing arrest of the growth of the antlers, due to complete or partial castration.—Mr. R. I. Pocock read a paper upon the effects of castration upon the horns of the prongbuck (Antilocapra americana).—Sir Harry Johnston read a paper on the mammals and birds of Liberia. He was of opinion that, although Liberia was not marked off clearly by any natural features from either Sierra Leone on the one hand, or the Ivory Coast on the other, it possessed a certain distinctness and a slight degree of peculiarity as regards its flora and fauna. As regards mammals and birds, Liberia was, to a great extent, a meeting-place for the forms of Northern Guinea (Sierra Leone to the Gambia) and those of the Gold Coast, the Niger Delta, and the Cameroons. The species of mammals peculiar to it included the dwarf hippopotamus, the zebra antelope, Jentink's duiker, and Büttikofer's monkey. The author enumerated eighteen species of mammals and twenty of birds, specimens of which had been obtained by various collectors in Liberia.—Mr. M. A. C. Hinton read a paper on abnormal remains of the red deer (Cervus elaphus). The remains consisted of three antlers which were obtained from different post-Pliocene deposits in the south of England. They belonged to individuals which had suffered testicular injury at an early period of life, by which the characters of youth were retained for a longer period than was usual.—A paper by Dr. R. Broom, entitled 'On the Affinities of Procolophon,' was communicated by Dr. A. Smith Woodward. The author believed that reptiles in Permian times became specialized along two distinct lines: the one represented by the Pareiasaurians, Anomodonts, Therapsidians, and Theriodonts, and terminating in the mammals; the second giving rise to all the other reptilian orders. The common ancestor was believed to have been a true reptile, probably belonging to the order Cotylosauria. Procolophon was held to be an early member of the branch which led to the Rhynchocephalians, and possibly fairly closely allied to the land ancestor of Mesosaurus.—Prof. H. G. Seeley described the skulls of Procolophon from Donnybrook and Fernrocks. He concluded that the main affinities were with the Anomodontia, chiefly with the Pareiasauria, and in the teeth with the Theriodontia; but that in a less degree there were indications of affinity with reptiles classed as Labyrinthodonts. All parts of the skeleton supported the separation of the Procolophonina as an order of extinct Reptilia.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—April 4.—Sir Alexander R. Binnie, V.P., in the chair.—It was announced that 12 Associate Members had been transferred to the class of Members, and that 102 candidates had been admitted as Students.—The monthly ballot resulted in the election of 2 Members, 73 Associate Members, and 1 Associate.

SOCIETY OF ENGINEERS.—April 3.—Mr. N. J. West, President, in the chair.—A paper was read on 'Statistics of British and American Rolling Stock,' by Mr. W. Pollard Digby.

ARISTOTELIAN.—March 6.—Mr. S. H. Hodgson, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. J. Solomon was elected a Member.—Dr. J. L. McIntyre read a paper on 'Value Feelings and Value Judgments.'

April 3.—The Rev. Hastings Rashdall, President, in the chair.—Mr. A. T. Shearman read a paper on 'Some Controverted Points in Symbolic Logic.' Symbols may apply either to terms or to propositions, but it is expedient to commence with the former. There is a decided difference in the rules in the two cases, but nothing in the way of principle to prevent the double use. Symbolic logic is confined exclusively to one kind of propositions, viz. assertions. Propositions asserted to be "probably true," "certain," "known to be true," and so on, do not come within the scope of the subject. The attitude of mind involved in such propositions can be dealt with symbolically, but new terms must be introduced. Symbols borrowed from mathematics and applied to logical purposes require the exact sense in which they are to be understood in the new sphere to be defined. A genuine logic of relatives—i.e., a generalized treatment of copulæ—is impossible because of the infinite number of assumptions that have to be dealt with. The so-called logic of relatives is merely a treatment of multiple quantifications. As regards the question of utility, symbolic logic can discover new truths, but not new truths in natural science. Jevons considered that the calculus is of use in scientific investigations. In this he was wrong, and greatly as he stimulated logical study, he cannot be said to have contributed anything of value to symbolic logic.—A discussion followed, in which Mr. Bertrand Russell, Mr. Shadworth Hodgson, and others took part.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- |        |   |
|--------|---|
| MON.   | Surveyors' Institution, 4.—'Farm Buildings,' Mr. H. M. Cantley.   |
|        | — Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'Unsolved Problems in Electrical Engineering,' Col. Rookes E. B. Crompton.   |
|        | — Geographical, 8½.—'The Problem of the Upper Yangtze Provinces and their Communications,' Col. C. C. Manifold.   |
| TUES.  | Asiatic, 4.—'Hellenism and Mohammedanism,' Mr. E. H. Whistfield.  |
|        | — Royal Institution, 5.—'Tibet,' Lecture II., Mr. Percival London.  |
|        | — Colonial, 8.—'Imperial Organization,' Sir Frederick Pollock.  |
|        | — Institution of Civil Engineers, 8.—'The Maintenance and Strengthening of Early Iron Bridges,' Mr. W. Marriott.  |
| WED.   | British Archaeological Association, 8.—'Folk and Weather Lore of Peterborough and District,' Mr. C. Dack.   |
|        | — Society of Arts, 8.—'The Industrial Resources of the State of Matto Grosso, Brazil,' Mr. G. Terrance Milne.   |
| THURS. | Royal, 4½.  |
|        | — Historical, 5.—'The English Occupation of Tangiers,' Miss E. M. G. Routh.   |
|        | — Royal Institution, 5.—'Synthetic Chemistry,' Lecture II., Prof. R. Meldola.   |
|        | — Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'Report of the International Electrical Congress at St. Louis,' Paper on 'The Alternating Current Series Motor,' Mr. F. Creedy.   |
|        | — Antiquaries, 8½.—'Lead Rain-Water Heads of the Sixteenth and seventeenth Centuries,' Mr. Lawrence Weaver.   |
| FRI.   | Astronomical, 5.  |
|        | — Physical, 8.—'On Ellipsoidal Lenses,' Mr. R. J. Sowter; 'The Determination of the Moment of Inertia of the Magnets used in the Measurement of the Horizontal Component of the Earth's Field,' Dr. W. Watson; 'Exhibition of a Series of Lecture Experiments illustrating the Properties of the Gaseous Ions produced by Radium and other Sources,' Dr. W. Watson. |
|        | — Institution of Mechanical Engineers, 8.—President's Address.  |
|        | — Royal Institution, 9.—'The Law of Pressure of Gases below Atmosphere,' Lord Rayleigh.   |
| SAT.   | Royal Institution, 3.—'Some Controverted Questions of Optics,' Lecture III., Lord Rayleigh.   |

Science Gossip.

THE first part of the Records of the Geological Survey of India for 1905, just to hand, is taken up with a comprehensive review of the mineral productions of India covering the period of six years 1898 to 1903, compiled by Mr. T. H. Holland, F.R.S., the Director of the Survey. In future, by order of the Indian Government, a quinquennial review is to be adopted and published as the official report of output and progress of the mineral industries. The expansion of the coal trade in recent years is noteworthy, and points to considerable internal commercial enterprise. If impetus could be given to the development of the metallurgical industries of India, the expansion would be even more marked in future. We learn that the country is rapidly occupying the enviable position of supplying its whole wants in mineral fuel. Imports of foreign coal for all purposes are diminishing steadily; indeed, on the railways imported coal has been almost cut out already. There appears to be an unexploited field in the case of deposits of the so-called rare metals, but it is stated that proper search would probably yield fruitful results on account of the geological variety of India. During the past two years surveys of auriferous fields have been in progress. On the authority of Mr. J. Malcolm McLaren, an officer of the Survey, the total Indian output of gold is no more than  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. of the world's annual supply.

THE second International Botanical Congress will take place at Vienna, June 11th–18th. The first Congress was held in Paris in 1900.

AN old subscriber writes:—

"There is an unfortunate mistake in your notice of 'The Book of the Rose,' on p. 404 of last week's issue, when the late Rev. A. Foster-Melliar is described as 'one of the greatest living authorities on roses.' Alas! he died some three or four months ago, and is a sad loss to the rose world in general."

NEXT week's Saturday Review will contain an interesting article, due, we believe, to the new Secretary of the Zoological Gardens, on 'Animals and Temperature.' Dr. Chalmers Mitchell is both scientific and practical, and has succeeded in keeping the macaw and other birds accustomed to warm climates out of doors during the whole winter in the new large aviary. The Gardens already show marked improvement under his care.

THE London Geological Field Class, conducted by Prof. Seeley, F.R.S., begins its twentieth season on Saturday, April 29th, with a visit to the North Downs at Betchworth. The Field Class is carried on continuously on Saturday afternoons in May, June, and July.

ACCORDING to the Greenwich records, last month was the wettest March since 1851, the rainfall amounting to 3.57 in., whereas in 1851 it slightly exceeded 4 in., the highest record hitherto obtained. The mean temperature for the six months from October to March was about one degree above the average for the last sixty years.

PHOTOGRAPHS taken at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, reveal the existence of variability in no fewer than thirty-six faint stars in the neighbourhood of  $\delta$  Aquilæ, the last of which will be reckoned as var. 37, 1905, Aquilæ; in four others variability was suspected. Var. 38, 1905, Andromedæ was detected by Mr. Stanley Williams, of Hove, Brighton. The maximum brightness of this star is magnitude 10.5 and the minimum 11.8, whilst its period seems to be about forty-five days—"rather long," the discoverer remarks, "for a variable of the ordinary short-period type, but the observations are so distributed that they seem to preclude the possibility of its being any shorter."

WE have received the second number of vol. xxxiv. of the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani, containing a paper by Signor Bemporad on the photometric reduction of the stars in the great astral photographic survey.

A VERY remarkable meteor was seen in South-West Germany and Switzerland and part of France on the evening (about 8<sup>h</sup> 20<sup>m</sup>) of the 21st ult., the path of which has been determined by Herr H. Rosenberg, of Strassburg, from fourteen observations. The result shows that when first seen it was nearly over Weil, Kepler's birthplace, in Würtemberg, and that it burst about 20' to the north of Rheims in France. The elevations at the beginning and end of the visible path were 57 and 126 kilometres, or about 36 miles and 78 miles respectively; so that whilst seen it was rising higher above the earth. This course of nearly 240 miles was traversed in about nine seconds.

FINE ARTS

ARCHITECTURAL BOOKS.

Architecture, East and West: a Collection of Essays written at Various Times during the last Sixteen Years. By R. Phené Spiers. (Batsford.)—The importance of this series of republished articles is guaranteed not merely by the reputation of the distinguished author, but also by the choice of the committee which selected them as most worthy to form part of a testimonial presented to Mr. Spiers last February. The essays are almost all devoted to subjects of mediæval architecture, and chiefly of the East — Persian, Sassanian, and Mohammedan. Ancient architecture is represented only by a review of M. Dieulafoy's explorations at Susa, and by the final paper on the influence of Greek art on the Persian order. Oriental mediæval art, either in its own home or in its influence on Italy, France, and Sicily, is treated throughout the rest of the papers. The volume, accordingly, is a series of studies on some of the most difficult and obscure problems of the history of architecture. The obscurity of these problems is mainly due to the want of first-hand knowledge of Oriental architecture, with which some (one might even say many) great writers on historical architecture may be charged. The subject has not been fashionable in the schools of modern times, especially on the continent of Europe; it has been more thoroughly studied in England, though not widely and deeply enough even there. A striking instance of divergence of opinion is mentioned by Mr. Spiers on p. 73. The great palace of Firouzabad is regarded by Fergusson as a Sassanian edifice of about 450 A.D., whereas M. Dieulafoy

"arrived at the conclusion that this was a Persian palace, built in the style of the country in the sixth century B.C., the real Persian palaces (as at Persepolis and Susa) being the governmental style introduced from foreign nations."

Such a difference of opinion would be impossible if Oriental art had been more studied in the modern European schools; and Mr. Spiers points out that the Persian and Sassanian structural methods are entirely different from one another, so that it ought not to be possible for any trained eye like M. Dieulafoy's to make such an error, after the Sassanian origin of the palace had been pointed out by Fergusson. The error arises from the prepossessions of scholastic system based on preponderating study of Greek and Western art and insufficient attention to late Oriental art. The same error in method leads to the difference of opinion (mentioned in The Athenæum, November 14th, 1903, p. 657) between Mr. Sarre on the one hand, and Sir Charles Wilson and Mr. Strzygowski on the other, as to the origin of the Seljuk architecture in Asia Minor; the two latter see that it was borrowed from Persian Mohammedan art, while the former argues that it was developed in Asia Minor, being worked up directly out of Græco-Roman and Byzantine art. This is a perfectly typical case. Mr. Sarre apprehends certain details and similarities quite correctly, taking them singly, and then he draws a conclusion which is historically wrong, because he entirely ignores the countries further east and their art. Mr. Spiers's papers ought to contribute much to a better knowledge of mediæval art and the influence of the East on the West, provided that the schools of Germany and France begin to learn the lesson (which at present they entirely refuse to accept) that in many subjects a good deal is now written in English which must be read and studied (not merely glanced into with the aid of an index, or quoted at second hand) by any one who wants to know his subject thoroughly.

A History of Architecture. By Prof. Banister Fletcher and Banister F. Fletcher. Fifth Edition. (Batsford.)—We are not surprised that a fifth edition of this book has been called for. The opportunity of making a comparative study of all the styles of architecture within two covers is one that those who need a comprehensive knowledge of the modes of right building have naturally welcomed.

The earlier editions appeared to us at times somewhat meagre and turgid, a not altogether surprising fact, in view of the immense amount of material to be selected from. The refining process of revision has been undertaken by the surviving author in no half-hearted manner, and the present edition is certainly an improvement on the former ones in clarity and fulness of information. There are 700 new illustrations, bringing the total up to about 2,000, and no praise can be too high for the photographs of classic buildings. The line drawings are too small, however, and too crowded on to the page to have their full effect. Their workmanship is good enough, but the crowding affects, for instance, the photograph of the model of Beauvais Cathedral, which is so small as to be useless.

The danger in such cases is that a book intended to give the outlines of a large subject may become unwieldy. The chapter on architecture in the United States, with a drawing of an appalling "sky-scraper," seems, for instance, unnecessary; and although Indian, Chinese, and Japanese architecture form the subjects of special studies of considerable interest, their practical application in what may be termed Christian countries is so small that they would, for the sake of the general reader, be better left out. Bulk has its impressiveness, but Messrs. Fletcher's book may now rely on its quality.

A List of Norman Tympana and Lintels with Figures of Symbolical Sculpture in the Churches of Great Britain. By Charles E. Keyser. (Stock.)—The study of details of church architecture has always been a matter of well-recognized interest. One antiquary delights in plans, another in towers; this in bells, that in fonts, the other in misereres, and so forth, with many other special subjects exclusively dealt with by way of comparison and collection. Here the author undertakes to illustrate the tympanum—although, by the way, he gives no definition of what a tympanum is—and contrasts or compares upwards of two hundred examples, gathered with patience and painstaking from churches spread throughout the length and breadth of the land. Some see in this specific detail a survival of the classic pediment, commonly ornamented with sculpture of a figurative character, and more or less in high relief; others look on it as an artificial adornment of what would otherwise be a plain slab, capping or tying the jambs of a doorway. But be this as it may, the tympanum is found to offer convenient surface for sculpture, and our earliest ecclesiastical architects frequently availed themselves of it for giving representations in allegory of the cardinal features of that religion to which the whole edifice was devoted. Precise dates are very sparingly mentioned by the author, where no data for pronouncing on the epoch of construction can be procured; but we are told that the examples herein described belong principally to the period between 1080 and 1200, though some among them "may be safely placed at a pre-Norman date."

We may say here that the liberal illustration of the volume is its chief merit (a merit which would have been considerably enhanced if some idea of the scale adopted had been given). Mr. Keyser has been lavish with his photographic facsimiles, and for this we owe him much; without them his book would often have been obscure or unintelligible. The contents are: a topographical classification of examples alphabetically under names of counties, to which Wales contributes only two and Scotland but one; an index of the illustrations, which consist of a hundred and fifty-five full-page or half-page blocks from photographs; a lengthy introduction of seventy-nine pages, which really constitute the bulk of the book; the alphabetical catalogue of these several examples, whereof the greater number are illustrated in a series of large photographs in the author's possession, a duplicate of which has been presented to the Art Library of the Victoria and Albert Museum at South Kensington, with references to the works where they are described; an appendix giving a list of the photographers; and an index of the subjects, figures, and inscriptions which occur on the specimens. To this there might have been advantageously added an index, indispensable for pointing out where the several designs are dealt with in the text of the introduction. For example, the inscription on the tympanum at Dinton in Buckinghamshire forms illustration No. 40, which has been inserted, with many others, between pp. xxxiv and xxxv, but it is left to the reader to find out that it has been expounded at p. xxviii; and the tympanum in St. Nicholas's Church, Ipswich, bearing a representation of Michael the archangel in combat with the dragon, fig. 138, between pages lxx and lxxi, carries an Anglo-Saxon inscription which has not been transcribed in the same way (although repeated) at pp. xxviii and lxx. But these are minor faults, and they must not weigh too heavily against a work which evinces much that is good from ecclesiological and antiquarian points of view.

The subjects which contribute illustration to the tympanum are, for the most part, of the same kind as those sculptured on capitals of columns, miserere seats, bench-ends, and fonts. The cycle of Biblical characters and metaphors, drawn from both the Old and the New Testaments, is richly interspersed with ecclesiastical personages; objects of natural, or unnatural, history, such as animals and birds, dragons, griffins, wyverns, mermaids, sagittarii, and serpents; and inanimate things, such as crosses, trees, wings, sundials, and so forth. Angelic forms are numerous. Among the animals, the horse, the lion, and a non-specialized creature are the most frequent. In like manner, among the birds there is an abundance of a kind hard to distinguish by any generic name. Scenes appertaining to the life of Christ, or concerning Christian doctrine, are by far the most favoured by the sculptors. Mr. Keyser finds eleven different scenes coming under this category: the Virgin and Child, the offerings of the Magi, the performance of a miracle, the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, the Crucifixion, the Agnus Dei, the descent into hell, the Ascension and Majesty of Christ, the Coronation of the Virgin, the pronouncing of a benediction, and the giving keys to Peter. Some of these are among the finest examples in the series. The cross naturally occupies a large number of tympana. Adam and Eve, Abraham, Daniel, David, Elisha, Isaac, and Samson among the personages of the Old Testament; the Apostles and Evangelists, St. Michael, St. John Baptist, St. George, St. Margaret, St. Nicholas, St. Paul, St. Peter, St. Thomas of Canterbury, and St. Edward the Confessor, of the New Testament or the mediæval Church, also occur. In some the author recognizes an altar, in others the Blessed Trinity, Dove of the Holy Spirit, the interlacing circles of Eternity, the Hand of the Almighty or "Dextera Dei," the Heavenly Mansions, a marriage scene, a rose emblematic of Christ, the Rose of Sharon (and if so, this should be placed with the Agnus Dei mentioned above as belonging to the Christ cult), souls, suns, the trees of spiritual life and of knowledge, and other symbols of religious import.

It must, however, always be a matter of conjecture whether the object sculptured on the slab of the tympanum was to be taken literally for what it resembled, or to be accorded a symbolical and metaphorical signification. Are the two wheels at the sides of the head of St. Nicholas on the tympanum at South Ferriby, in Lincolnshire, merely ornament, or do they "seem to be introduced to imply the doctrine of eternity"? and does a wheel similarly preserved at Ridlington, in Rutland, above which a lion and griffin are represented in a combatant attitude, seem "to be intended to portray the eternal warfare which is going on in the world between the forces of good and evil"? May not this instance, at least, have the same simple signification as the fleurettes found in scenes painted on early Greek vases, where the part stands for the whole, and a conventional flower stands for a flower-strewn land, just as the sun, in the scene of the Harrowing of Hell, indicates the upper air or heaven from which the Saviour descends?

But while deprecating the wholesale application of emblematic meaning to common and almost conventional representations, we may admit that many of the principal or central figures stand by way of symbols, "to teach the rustic moralist," with their too often "shapeless sculpture." One of these symbols which occurs with much persistency is the tree, twenty-seven examples of which have been noted by the author. Simple, plain, and symmetrical, as at Siston in Gloucestershire; elaborately drawn with an almost Greek appearance at Rochford in Herefordshire; exuberantly and beautifully intricate, as at Stratton, also in Gloucestershire, they tell the same tale to Mr. Keyser as they were set to tell the Christian worshipper in the days of their making. Sometimes animals are introduced as feeding on the fruits or shoots of the tree, or standing on guard, as it were, on each side of it, and the author in each case explains their allegory. The Agnus Dei, to take another instance, appears to be a favourite device for sculptors of early tympana, and many varieties of representation have been recorded.

In conclusion, it may be said that the book is a welcome addition to the extensive array of works on Christian symbolism and church detail. It deals with a subject somewhat difficult to dissect and arrange, and is in some parts wanting in method and lucidity. But there is much of attraction in the illustrations, and ingenuity in the author's explanation of them; while the apposite way in which cognate examples have been put side by side will teach both the beginner and the expert antiquary something worth learning as to the manner in which the sculptor went hand-in-hand with the priest in the endeavour to impress fundamental doctrines on the people who attended their temples. It is remarkable that while caricature, the comic, and the grotesque so frequently prevail in the embellishment of service-books, carvings of stall-seats, bench-ends, finials, gargoyles, and other accessories ecclesiastical, nothing of the kind seems to be found on tympana. Possibly such examples have been suppressed by an over-sensitive zeal on the part of their custodians, who could not appreciate the causes of their occurrence.

English Metal Work. Ninety-three Drawings by William Twopeny (1797-1873). With a Preface by Laurence Binyon. (Constable & Co.)—The drawings in this book are a delightful example of what we may term a record of "folk-art." It is not known by whom or when the locks, hinges, vanes, fire-dogs, door-handles, railings, &c., illustrated were designed or made, but they show little or no foreign influence. William Twopeny was a member of the Temple and a conveyancer, besides being an enthusiastic and discriminating antiquary. His drawings, which are preserved in the British Museum, were made in pencil, and Mr. Binyon claims for them, rightly, that they are neither exaggeratedly picturesque nor too coldly matter-of-fact. They not only represent, but also reproduce the spirit of, the article depicted. Although the artist was born in Kent, of Kentish parents, and his native county naturally supplies a large proportion of the examples of metal work, he was catholic in his selection, and nineteen other counties are well represented.

The difficulties of reproducing old pencil drawings, to which allusion is made in the preface, have not proved insurmountable, and the care expended upon them has its due reward in the result. The village blacksmith or plumber may have been something fantastical at times, and may not have been over-careful in preserving his curves from crippling, but at least he had his heart in his work. In many of these pieces of craftsmanship a mute, inglorious Quentin Matsys may survive to show his successors in the mysteries of iron, copper, and lead work what may be achieved in materials which, unplastic as is their appeal, have yet in them the possibility of better things than mere utility. The recording and appreciation of "folk-art," untrammelled by dates and therefore theories of evolution, have a charm for others than the antiquary. They draw attention to the innate love for the beautiful which exists in most of us, however flouted in an age of hurried utility.

Architecture and other Arts. By Howard Crosby Butler, A.M. Part II. of the Publications of an American Archaeological Expedition to Syria in 1899-1900. (New York, the Century Company; London, Heinemann.)—Although numbered second in a series of publications promised by the members of the American Archaeological Expedition to Syria, this is the first to appear. It describes and illustrates a large number of ruins in the mountain regions of Northern Central Syria, that is to say beyond the Orontes to the south-east of Aleppo, and stretching as far south as Palmyra; and in the Djebel Hauran, further to the south, on the borders of Palestine, just north of Bosrah, and including Philippopolis.

The principal authority on the architecture of both these districts, prior to the appearance of the present work, was De Vogüé, but a number of ruins not considered by him are here described, and the volume, which is large, gives a great deal of interesting detail concerning little-known districts where the ruins are well worth study.

The dates ascribed to the buildings range from 85 B.C. to 609 A.D., since which there is no reason to suppose that any building of artistic pretension has been done. The photographs of the country show barren and rocky wastes, and the state of the ruins renders it clear that for centuries they have only been used as stone quarries, or as patched-up dwellings for miserable inhabitants. The interesting speculation as to why building operations on any considerable scale ceased so suddenly is answered by Mr. Butler in one word—deforestation. The immense quantities of timber required by the Romans during their occupation for the purposes of building construction denuded the hills on which these ruins stand of their trees, with the result that the rainfall, instead of being held back and supplying the necessary water to the summits, rushed down into the valleys, carrying with it the soil required to support vegetable life, and rendered the buildings uninhabitable. The same process, he says, is still going on in Italy, Sicily, and Spain. In the sixth-century buildings it is to be noticed that wood is much more sparingly used than in those of earlier date, and an invasion of the Persians may have completed the ruin of agriculture, necessary to the existence of such communities as occupied these buildings.

The style of this Syrian architecture has a character of its own. The ordinary house was a purely trabeate building, so bare of ornament and so eminently practical in construction as to resemble the framework of a modern hotel, but built of stone instead of iron. The earlier monumental buildings, though owing something in detail to Roman influence, were more Greek in actual character. The system of casing a concrete shell in stone was not adopted. The construction was in cut stone blocks laid without mortar, but the arch, as a constructional principle, was gradually evolved, and came to form the principal feature of many of the buildings. Here was an advance on Greek methods of construction.

It is to be noticed that the arch, in its inception, had nothing of the mechanical principle of the wedge about it. It consisted simply in cutting a segment out of a lintel stone to give head room, as we say practically, but more correctly to give a new form to the top of an opening. The next step was to superimpose a lintel stone so treated over two corbels with curved soffits, and with the three stones to form a semicircular head to a doorway or window opening. Eventually the arch with correctly cut voussoirs appeared, as well as the waggon-head vault and the half or complete stone dome. In all these cases the Roman plan of construction was improved as the arches were built of stone blocks and not of concrete.

Oriental influence appears in the incised carving of mouldings and ornament, in the basket or bell-shaped capitals, in the capitals with brackets, and in the horseshoe arch. The gradual development of the basilica plan, the introduction of the clearstory, with its high centre gable and lower half-gable façade, and of the apse, with its quarter-sphere vaulted roof, are interesting instances of the evolution of the Romanesque style. If the publication of these illustrations does nothing else, it at least adds immensely to the material showing the transition from the classic to the Romanesque style; and from the latter to the Gothic is but a step. The material for tracing the second half of the transition in architectural style being already sufficiently complete, the lacunæ need not now be more than are to be expected in the history of any gradual and far-reaching change.

There are many other points of interest in the volume under consideration which might be noticed. The peculiar continuation of string courses round and over wall openings, the cuspid ornamentation outside openings, the grouping of circular-headed openings of graduated size, the finishing of architrave mouldings round openings in a whorl, and the carrying of cornices of corbels and arcades, though not in the stepped form used in the Italian Romanesque gables, are a few that occur to us.

The sculpture found in these ruins cannot be said to equal the architecture. It is, in the main, crude and uninteresting. The torso of a Nike suggests that the best Greek work had been studied, but the judgment on a sculptured figure from a battered torso is apt to be delusive. The mosaics are few in number, and Roman in character. They may be compared with those of Pompeii, though much later in date. They can hardly be said to add much to our knowledge of this ancient style of work. Traces of wall-painting were also discovered, but they were of such a fragmentary character as to be of little value.

It is to the 398 photographs reproduced in the book that those interested will naturally first turn. They are not the best architectural photographs we have seen, taken as a whole, but they are, in the main, sufficient to give a very fair idea of the matters illustrated. The seven representing the Church of St. Simon Stylites at Kal'at Si'mân indeed do justice to one of the finest examples of architecture in the book. The comparative paucity and distinct inferiority of the geometrical drawings constitute the gravest fault we have to find, but the making and carrying of sketches in a desert is not the easiest of tasks. Nevertheless it must not be forgotten that the camera alone cannot effectively illustrate architecture.

Of the literary matter there is not much to be said. Mr. Butler reports conscientiously what he found, and, for the most part, leaves his reader to draw conclusions. This method has its advantages. The irritation of admiring the work done, and differing entirely from the deductions drawn as a result of that work, is thereby obviated.

EARLY BRITISH MASTERS AT SHEPHERD'S GALLERY.

As usual, Mr. Shepherd has been able to collect a good deal of new material for a history of British art. He has, it is true, several works by the greater men; but there is almost as much interest in the work of half-forgotten artists, some of whom are brought to light again for the first time, thanks to Mr. Shepherd's scholarly investigations. We confess, for instance, to a complete ignorance of an artist called G. Ralph, and yet in the signed work by him of A Girl at a Harpsichord (No. 74) we have a more than average example of eighteenth-century genre. It reminds one of Romney, but is at once weaker and more refined, while the background has reminiscences of Gainsborough. Woolmer, too, is already half-forgotten, yet his Musidora might almost pass for an Etty, and has considerable charm, though the background is less perfectly harmonized with the nude than Etty would have made it.

An impressive landscape of Stonehenge still awaits a satisfactory attribution. Girtin has been suggested, but the handling of paint seems to belong to an earlier tradition. We should suppose rather that one of Wilson's imitators might have done it. The planes of the landscape are imperfectly realized; but the general idea of the empty downland under a heavy wrack of storm-cloud shows a real, if rather melodramatic imagination. Yet another unknown picture has much merit: it is The Gale (112), with a composition that reminds one of Turner, but a distinctly eighteenth-century treatment.

By Turner himself there is one exquisite sketch, A Woodland Landscape (129). It is first drawn on paper with pen, and then lightly touched with oil colour in the most masterly way, giving a depth and glow, a suffusion of golden sunlight through the glade which, in view of the slightness of the means employed, is marvellous. It is, moreover, a singularly perfect composition. The J. S. Cotmans are also good. One, an important oil of Norwich Castle (81), is in his late manner, and perhaps too scenic in effect, while the contrasts of intense blue and golden brown are rather positive; but the great rectangular block of the castle shows much of Cotman's power of large, massive design. The other Cotmans are water-colours, of which one, Norwood Church (82), is beautiful.

Of the Wilsons, one (88) is interesting as being an early landscape almost entirely in Claude's manner, very light in handling and minute in detail. A landscape (109) ascribed to Barker of Bath seems too hot in colour and too heavy in touch for him, and may possibly be by Hoppner. There is an admirable J. C. Ibbetson of Lancaster (120), an elaborate oil-painting carried out in the restricted colour-scheme of the water-colours of the period.

An interesting Allan Ramsay of General Tarleton, an unusually good Opie (87), and an unidentified portrait of the elder Pugin (104), are other noteworthy items in an interesting little exhibition.

CONSTANTIN MEUNIER.

THE death, on Tuesday, of Constantin Meunier removes one who, whether as a painter or as a sculptor, will rank among the greatest of modern delineators of labour. His work has been described as a "beau poème du travail," and its realism is as vivid in art as Zola's 'Germinal' is in literature. Meunier's scenes and groups are not the mere outcome of an occasional visit to the "black" country of his native land, for he lived for many years in the very heart of the scenes which he transferred to canvas or reproduced in bronze and plaster. His studio was in Louvain, the headquarters of a Belgian country district which is, perhaps, the unloveliest in continental Europe. To the person of average artistic instincts there is very little to attract in collieries, with their endless plains of chimneys and long uniform rows of dull, commonplace hovels which are called working-men's dwellings. And yet it was in such places and amid such scenes that Meunier found his inspiration, his incentive for work. Art, it is true, has no limitations, and Meunier has triumphed in a line of art in which there is no obvious poetry, nothing but the endless toil of wresting from nature her inexhaustible riches of coal and iron. In all his work there is the imprint of truth to nature. In art he was a Socialist, for he has given us not the idealism of the fields of Jules Breton and of Millet, but the naturalism of suffering among men and women for whom there is apparently no escape, no brightening of the dawn.

Constantin Meunier was born at Etterbeck, Brussels, on April 12th, 1831, and made his first public appearance as an artist at the Brussels Salon of 1851, with a piece of sculpture called 'Guirlande'; but he soon abandoned the chisel for the brush, and exhibited a number of remarkable pictures dealing with the life of the Trappists and with peasant life; following these came some powerful pictures of the life of the workers in Spain, which at once stamped him as an artist of great power and intensity in a direction which had been all but overlooked. Then came a return to his earlier métier, his work as a sculptor, by which he at once won universal fame: his 'Grison,' 'Le Débardeur,' 'Ecce Homo,' 'Le Cheval de Mine,' and his great accomplishments in the Museum of Decorative Arts at Brussels known as 'L'Apothéose du Travail,' with the four seated figures of 'La Mine,' 'La Moisson,' 'Le Port,' and 'L'Industrie,' dominated by a 'Semeur.'

Meunier's work is very little known in this country, to which he paid a visit some seven years ago, studying the conditions at Woolwich Arsenal and elsewhere. In France he has long been appreciated, and is well represented at the Luxembourg Gallery, where there are one of his pictures, 'Au Pays Noir,' and a number of his works in bronze.

W. R.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 1st inst. the following. Pictures: H. Dawson, A River Scene with Cattle, 120l. P. Graham, Driving Sheep over the Moor, 430l. F. Holl, Doubtful Hope, 231l.; Widowed, 288l. J. Linnell, Harvest Time, 556l.; Driving Cattle and Sheep through a Valley, 294l. E. Long, Reading 'Don Quixote', 110l. P. Nasmyth, A View in Surrey, with peasants and horse near a woody pool, 346l. Sir L. Alma Tadema, Under the Archway, 399l. Auguste Bonheur, Homeward Bound, 346l. Henriette Browne, Her First Sorrow, 147l. P. J. Clays, Vessels at the Mouth of a River, 294l. E. Frère, Benevolent Fingers, 157l. J. Israëls, A Dutch Peasant-woman Sewing, 546l. C. Troyon, A Road Scene, with a cow and some sheep, trees on the right, 924l. Drawings: C. Fielding, The Wreck, 283l. Marcus Stone, Queen Mary and Princess Elizabeth in the Chapel Royal, Westminster, 69l.

On the 3rd inst. a drawing by Sir T. Lawrence, Head of a Boy, was sold for 86l.

The same firm sold on the 4th inst. the following engravings:—After Cosway: The Fair Moralist, by Bartolozzi, 68l. After Reynolds: The Snake in the Grass, by W. Ward, 47l. After Wheatley: The Return from Shooting, by Bartolozzi, 25l. After Hamilton: May, June, July, and September, by the same, 53l. After Bigg: Dulce Domum, and Black Monday, by J. Jones, 52l. After Romney: Lady Hamilton as Nature, by H. Meyer, 357l. After Morland: A Visit to the Boarding School, and A Visit to the Child at Nurse, by W. Ward, 65l.; St. James's Park, and A Tea-Garden, by F. D. Soiron, 67l.; Rural Amusement, and Rustic Employment, by J. R. Smith, 65l. Inside of a Country Alehouse, after Morland, by W. Ward, and Outside of a Country Alehouse, after J. Ward, by W. Ward, 68l.

Fin-Art Gossip.

THE New English Art Club exhibition will be held this spring at the Royal Institution, Liverpool, and open on April 17th, the private view being on April 15th. The selecting jury contains the following names:—Francis Bate, P. W. Steer, W. Rothenstein, Frederick Brown, Henry Tonks, A. E. John, R. E. Fry, D. S. MacColl, David Muirhead, W. W. Russell, A. A. McEvoy, A. W. Rich, and Muirhead Bone.

At the Goupil Gallery Messrs. Marchant & Co. have opened a spring exhibition of pictures and drawings by British, French, and Dutch artists.

MESSRS. DICKINSON invite us to a private view to-day of water-colour drawings of Shakespeare's country and woodland and meadow, by Mr. A. C. Wyatt; there will also be a collection of Shakspeareana at the same place.

MESSRS. EIMDON & Co. invite us to a private view of furniture, designed by Mr. Charles Spooner and Mr. A. J. Penty, at the hall of the Alpine Club on Tuesday next.

AN exhibition of the works of Francisco Zurbaran, the Spanish artist, will shortly be opened at the Royal Museum of Painting and Sculpture at Madrid. It is expected that about 100 of his principal works will be on view, chiefly borrowed from Seville, Cadiz, and the convent of St. Jerome at Guadalupe.

AN international fan exhibition is to take place in Berlin in October, and the committee entrusted with the management invite the assistance of the owners of valuable and historical fans in all countries, so that the collection may be as complete as possible. The exhibits will be divided into five groups, one of which will be historical, and they will include lace, hand-painted, embroidered fans, &c. Many eminent native and foreign artists have already promised their assistance. We hope that a representative selection of Mr. Conder's charming work in this line may be obtained.

THE death, in his forty-seventh year, is announced from Berlin of the landscape painter Heinrich Kohnert. His paintings of the scenery of the Mark Brandenburg and the Harz mountains formed a prominent feature at the chief art exhibitions in Berlin.

THE death recently of Odoardo Tabacchi removes one of the leading Italian sculptors of the latter half of the nineteenth century. Tabacchi was born at Valganna in 1831, and studied art at the Brera, Milan, and under Abbondio Sangiorgio. He succeeded Vela as professor at the Turin Academy in 1869, and held the post for thirty-five years, teaching and working incessantly. He executed all kinds of work in his branch of art—fancy subjects, portraits, monuments, and symbolical decorations for tombs. Several of his smaller works enjoyed great popularity, and of his 'Tuffolina' in bronze, exhibited at the Great Exhibition in Paris in 1878, hundreds of replicas must have been sold. Tabacchi's last great work was the monument at Asti of King Humbert on horseback.

M. GEORGES CAIN, the Director of the Carnavalet Museum, made several interesting purchases at the Beurdeley sale held in Paris recently. These include a charming water-colour drawing of a view from the Terrace of the Tuileries in 1760. Another water-colour drawing is by Meunier, signed and dated 1788, and represents Sainte-Geneviève Church. This was engraved by Née, and was acquired for 1,500 francs. Yet another purchase was Swebach's ink drawing of 'Souper Fraternel,' an episode of the Revolution, a drawing well known through the engraving by Berthault. This drawing sold for 650 fr.

THE artists of theatrical scenery are to be recognized in France as well as England, for the committee of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts have decided to devote a special room for exhibits of this class. These works will come under the general section of "arts décoratifs." The "jour de vernissage" is fixed for April 30th.

THE copies reserved by the publisher of the illustrated édition de luxe of the Catalogue of the Whistler Memorial Exhibition have long since been taken up, and the only way now of obtaining one is by inscribing one's name at the New Gallery. The catalogue will be strictly limited, and will never be reprinted. The exhibition closes next Saturday.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Symphony Concert.

THE 'Symphonia Domestica' was given for the second time at the Symphony Concert, Queen's Hall, last Saturday. The reading of the work, this time under the direction of the composer, only differed from the one which Mr. Wood gave by being somewhat more impetuous during those tempestuous gusts which interrupt music that seems to promise something really interesting. Our impression of the work has not changed. The qualities of strength and skill are not lacking to it, but, taken as a whole, it offers a strange, an uncomfortable mixture. Berlioz and Liszt struck out new paths, yet they never uttered such harsh, ugly sounds as are to be heard in Strauss; the composer of the 'Domestica' is a master of orchestration, yet there are moments in this work in which doubling of parts produces a thickness of sound by no means pleasant. Strauss has undoubtedly written fine works, but in the one under discussion he seems to have used the art he professes and his own gifts to extravagant purpose. The large orchestra required and the complexity of the music must prevent the symphony from becoming really popular. It will no doubt be performed from time to time by Mr. Wood, but we hope that before long the composer will abandon the perilous path of programme music which he is pursuing; that he will cease such funning as the aunts' and uncles' comments, and the bath bell; and that he will aim, as he has done in so many of his Lieder, at simplicity, not one, however, which implies retrogression, but merely one in which the art is concealed.

We thanked Mr. Wood for producing the symphony, and we thank him again for giving us the opportunity of hearing the work under its composer's direction. Wagner was condemned unheard, and many musicians finally discovered that such criticism was foolish. There is little danger of Strauss becoming a martyr to prejudice and ignorance. His works, with the exception of those he has written for the stage, have all been heard here. Some critics extol him to the skies, while others think he is venturing beyond the boundaries of his art. But there is no abuse—no dislike, so far as we are aware, of the man personally. With Wagner it was different, for like his great contemporary Berlioz, by his sharp tongue and caustic pen, he made many enemies. The critics merely discuss Strauss's music, and the verdict will finally rest with the public.

Musical Gossip.

THE number of concerts is ever on the increase, but for want of space many of interest have to pass unnoticed. A word, however, must be said with regard to three Choral Ballads by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor, recently performed, for the first time in London, at the Crystal Palace. The poems are by Longfellow, and the music of the first two is picturesque and pleasing; but the third, "Loud he sang the Psalm of David," is bold and more characteristic.—M. Jacques Thibaut, the French violinist, gave a concert this week at the Queen's Hall, and in Max Bruch's G minor Concerto, also in solos by Bach and Beethoven, displayed not only fine technique and superb tone, but also readings which showed intelligence finely tempered with emotion.—Mr. Manuel Garcia, grandson of the centenarian, gave a vocal recital on Wednesday afternoon at the Aeolian Hall. His voice is not yet fully under control, neither is it of very sympathetic quality. He was heard to most advantage in some light French songs. Mr. Frederick Fairbanks, a pianist whom we had not heard before, played solos by Chopin, Rubinstein, and MacDowell. He has excellent command of the key-board, but his rendering of Chopin's Ballade in A flat lacked warmth and poetry.

THE Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union gave excellent performances of Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' at the Town Hall, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Wednesday week. The fine singing of the chorus reflected much credit upon the able conductor of the society, Mr. James M. Preston.

THE dates of the two 'Ring' cycles, under Dr. Richter's direction, at Covent Garden, are as follows: May 1st, 2nd, 4th, and 6th, and May 10th, 12th, 13th, and 15th, and the hours of commencement respectively 8.30, 5, 5, and 4.30. The third and fifth evenings in the first week will be devoted to light opera—Rossini's 'Barbiere' and Donizetti's 'Don Pasquale.' The latter work has not, we believe, been given since 1881.

THE Queen's Hall orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, has been engaged for two concerts at the Alexandra Palace—the first this evening, and the second next Saturday evening. Mr. Wood and his orchestra have also been engaged for the Westmorland Festival, May 4th and 5th.

MR. ERNEST DONAJOWSKI, the music publisher, has resigned his membership of the London Chamber of Commerce, as he does not consider that influential body to have brought its full power to bear upon the Government for such amendment of the law as will demolish the piracy which is so injurious to the music trade.

NEXT Tuesday is fixed for the first night of Humperdinck's new three-act opera 'Die Heirat wider Willen' at the Berlin Opera-House. The event is naturally exciting special interest, and it is to be hoped that the composer will achieve a success equal to that won by his 'Hänsel und Gretel,' produced at Weimar in 1893.

A BRAHMS Society has been formed at Vienna for the purpose of purchasing the building in which the composer lived in Vienna, and turning it into a Brahms Museum.

THE programme of the special concert announced to be given at Bologna on April 3rd, to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the Liceo Musicale, included overtures by Rossini, Morlacchi, Donizetti, and Paër. The first three were pupils of Mattei, first Professor of Counterpoint at that institution. The only connexion of Paër with Bologna appears to have been the production of his opera 'Sofonisba' there in 1796, but the overture selected for performance was the one to his 'Ero e Leandro,' produced at Naples in 1795.

THE Théâtre Lyrique International, to be built at Ostend, was mentioned in The Athenæum of March 4th. It is to be opened in 1906, after which performances will be given every year from July 5th to August 22nd. In 1906 there are to be six performances of 'Don Giovanni' (in Italian) and four cycles of the 'Ring.' It is the intention to give Berlioz's 'Les Troyens,' the complete work ('La Prise de Troie' and 'Les Troyens à Carthage'), in 1907.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |   |
|--------|---|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.                                   |
| —      | Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.   |
| MON.   | Miss E. Barton's Violin Recital, 3.15, Aeolian Hall.                          |
| —      | Mlle. Camilla Landi's Song Recital, 3.30, Bechstein Hall.                     |
| —      | London Choral Society, 8, Queen's Hall.                                       |
| —      | Subscription Concert, 8.30, Aeolian Hall.                                     |
| TUES.  | London Symphony Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.                                     |
| —      | Madame Wanda Landowska's Harpsichord and Pianoforte Recital, 8, Queen's Hall. |
| —      | Misses Felix and Raife's Concert, 8, Aeolian Hall.                            |
| —      | Miss Arvilla Clark's Vocal Recital, 8.15, Bechstein Hall.                     |
| WED.   | Bach Choir ('Everyman'), 8.30, Queen's Hall.                                  |
| —      | Mr. Frank Lambert's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.                            |
| THURS. | The Ingleton Trio, 3, Broadwood's.  |
| —      | Philharmonic Concert, 8, Queen's Hall.  |
| FRI.   | Miss Annabel McDonald's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Bechstein Hall.                  |
| —      | M. Trebini's Violin Recital, 8, Bechstein Hall.                               |
| SAT.   | Mr. Frederick Fairbanks's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.              |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

ADELPHI.—Hamlet.

MR. H. B. IRVING'S Hamlet is one of the best and most satisfactory to be recalled. It so happens that, unlike other tragic Shakespearean parts, the Hamlet of to-day is a growth of modern thought. Traditions, some of them dating back to the days of Betterton, if not to those of Shakespeare himself, were swept into the limbo of vanities by the arrival of Fechter, and the stage of to-day knows no more of the stately presence of John Philip Kemble, in inky cloak and plumage, bending majestically over the skull of Yorick, than it knows of the restless demonstrations of David Garrick, incorporating into his own part every line belonging to other characters that could possibly be transferred. The Hamlet of to-day, so far as it was not excogitated by Fechter, originated with Sir Henry Irving. Other scholars and executants, English and foreign, have brought their intellects to bear upon the character until (except where, as in the case of poor Wilson Barrett, the vanity of the individual was too absorbing to admit of hint or suggestion from without) successive Hamlets have assimilated the results of the best thought of the age. Not always easy is it to determine to whom a portion of the new development is due. Imitation of preceding models is often unconscious, and is, in fact, "the sincerest flattery." Sometimes, however, it is conscious and servile, and instances are not unknown in which the purposeful appropriation of an actor's method, in tragedy as in comedy, has led to the originator being denounced as a plagiarist of his own ideas. With some allowance, then, it may be held that in acting, as in science, the latest comer is the wisest, as the most learned man. Those are but few who in the case of a Hamlet of to-day can definitely ascribe to the originator the new and intelligent business which is now current. The search after new readings is fortunately abandoned, the excursions into that debatable land being more frequently productive of amazement or derision than of profit. Much, however, has been added in the way of significant and illuminatory action; and not only from home sources, but also from foreign artists, such as Rouvière, Salvini, Mounet-Sully, and others, more or less important contributions have been received. Of all preceding Hamlets, that of his father appears to have exercised the most influence upon Mr. Irving. We are as far as possible from hinting at or implying conscious imitation. We are, indeed, willing to accept the statement put forward, on what seems official authority, that Sir Henry's Hamlet has virtually not been seen by his son. So strong and assertive is in this case the influence of heredity, that the presentations could scarcely be expected very widely to diverge. After all, the task imposed upon every Hamlet is the same—that of avenging a "foul and unnatural" murder. A responsibility of the kind would naturally impress in the same fashion two men in whom the family strain is so strong. There are respects in which the later Hamlet seems the more human and convincing. In his imaginative gifts Sir Henry has known no equal among actors of to-day, and few among those of yesterday or previous times. Here he still remains unapproached. In limpidity and purity of elocution he has found superiors, and to the list one more has to be added. The son's style is, within limitations, that of the father minus the mannerisms. These have in recent times been diminished, but in the pronunciation of vowels, especially full sounds, such as the o in God, much has yet to be acquired. In the scenes with Ophelia we find in the younger man a depth of passion such as we do not recall in the older. Opinions differ as to what are the precise relations between Hamlet and Ophelia, and though we prefer, for sentimental reasons, to regard the intimacy as purely innocent, something may be said on the other side. The violence displayed by Mr. Irving on observing the treachery—for as such he seems to regard it—of Ophelia in bringing her father upon his "secure hour" is such as a man would not permit himself unless intimacy had extended beyond customary limits. On the other hand, the address to Ophelia beginning "Nymph, in thy orisons," was, for some reason we fail to grasp, spoken as an aside. A large amount of human passion is exhibited in the scenes generally with Ophelia, though we do not recognize any reciprocal heat on the part of the heroine. The "business" in which the dying Hamlet removes from his brow the crown which, after the death of Claudius, had been placed there, belongs, we fancy, to Mr. Forbes Robertson. That in which Hamlet, passing, on his way to the queen's chamber, through the closet of the king, seizes on the light which Claudius has left behind, is new. Mr. Irving's movement in snapping across his knee the recorders is significant, but not quite new. Among those by whom Mr. Irving was supported, the place of honour belongs to Miss Lily Brayton, whose Ophelia, though perhaps a little overcharged with tragedy, is touching.

Dramatic Gossip.

OWING to the absence of Miss Viola Tree, the part of Trilby at His Majesty's was played last Monday by Miss Constance Collier. Miss Tree will play the character on Monday next.

'BUSINESS IS BUSINESS,' Mr. Grundy's adaptation of 'Les Affaires sont les Affaires,' the rights of which have been acquired by Mr. Tree from Mr. Alexander, will be produced at His Majesty's during the first week in May, Mr. Tree and Miss Tree supporting the principal parts.

HIS MAJESTY'S THEATRE will be closed during Holy Week for rehearsals of the pieces to be produced at the Shakspeare festival.

WHEN presented at the Court Theatre in May, 'Man and Superman' will be in three acts, extracted from the four of which in its original shape it consists. The entire third act of the printed version will, it is said, be excised.

THE intention of giving Ibsen's 'Wild Duck' at the Court Theatre has been abandoned, so far as the present season is concerned.

A COPYRIGHT performance of 'A Courler of Fortune,' by Mr. Arthur W. Marchmont, has been given at the Theatre Royal, Bath. The first regular performance of this piece seems likely to take place in New York.

MR. DE VRIES, whose performance at the Haymarket of different characters in 'A Case of Arson' has attracted much attention, will appear before long at the Avenue in an adaptation by Mr. Arthur Sturgess from the German of Herren Oscar Walter and Leo Stein.

THE reappearance in London, in June, of Mr. Charles Hawtrey is to be expected.

THE play by Mr. H. G. Wells intended for Mr. James Welch is understood to be an adaptation of his own 'The Wheels of Chance.'

THE appearance of Miss Maxine Elliott in 'Her Own Way,' a play of New York life, in which she has been seen in America, is fixed for Easter Monday.

ON the production by Mr. Martin Harvey of 'Hamlet,' next month, at the Lyric Theatre, Mr. Stephen Phillips will enact the Ghost.

THE production by Mr. Alexander, at the St. James's, of 'Mr. Chilcote, M.P.,' in which he will himself support the principal part, may be expected next month.

AT the revival at the Imperial of 'Beaucaire' Miss Eva Moore plays the part of Lady Mary Howard, first taken by Miss Lane.

THE little-known Théâtre des Escholiers has produced a five-act comedy by M. Claude Berton, entitled 'Ces Messieurs du Tiers.' This shows the sufferings of Colette, a married mondaine, at the hands of the various aspirants to or recipients of her favours.

'LA FIACCOLA SOTTO IL MOGGIO' of Gabriele d'Annunzio, produced in Milan, is in four acts and in verse. Its gruesome plot presents the arraignment by a girl of her father for being the accomplice of a maidservant in the murder of his wife, and the termination consists in a holocaust. This grim piece is said to have the beauty of language which makes the author the most noteworthy of acted dramatic poets.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—M. P. M. W.—H. M.—G. S.—received.

M. Y.—Certainly.

I. G. A.—Not suitable for us.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogue post free on application.

NOW READY, COMPLETE.

In 5 vols. 21s. net each; or in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

BRYAN'S DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged under the supervision of

C. G. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.,

Assisted by a Staff of Specialists.

With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates.

Illustrated Prospectus on application.

In this Edition upwards of 1,400 New Biographies have been added, and nearly 6,000 Corrections made in Articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 Lives have been partly rewritten.

THIRD AND CHEAPER EDITION, 6s. net.

The ART of J. McNEILL WHISTLER.

An Appreciation. By T. R. WAY and G. RAVENS-CROFT DENNIS. With numerous Illustrations.

"It is a splendidly considered tribute to the artist's genius, and an accurate guide to the special characteristics of his work.....The book is one which no art-lover will want to be without."—St. James's Gazette.

CHEAPER REISSUE, 8s. 6d. net.

LORENZO LOTTO. An Essay in

Constructive Art Criticism. By BERNHARD BERENSON. With numerous Illustrations.

Pott 8vo, illustrated, cloth, 1s. net each; or in limp leather, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 2s. net each.

BROWNING. By Sir Frank T. MARZIALS, C.B.

JOHNSON. By John Dennis.

[Bell's Miniature Series of Great Writers.]

BRAHMS. By Herbert Antcliffe.

CHOPIN. By E. J. Oldmeadow.

SCHUMANN. By E. J. Oldmeadow.

[Bell's Miniature Series of Musicians.]

FOURTH EDITION, post 8vo, 5s. net.

HOW to LOOK at PICTURES. By

ROBERT CLAREMONT WITT, M.A. With 35 Illustrations.

THIRD EDITION, post 8vo, 6s. net.

HOW to COLLECT OLD FURNI-

TURE. By FREDERICK LITCHFIELD, Author of 'Illustrated History of Furniture,' &c. With 40 Plates and numerous other Illustrations.

SECOND EDITION, post 8vo, 6s. net.

HOW to IDENTIFY PORTRAIT

MINIATURES. By GEORGE C. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D. With Chapters on the Painting of Miniatures by ALYN WILLIAMS, R.E.A. With 40 Plates, illustrating upwards of 70 Miniatures.

SIXTH THOUSAND, post 8vo, 5s. net.

HOW to IDENTIFY OLD CHINA.

A Handbook for Collectors of English Pottery and Porcelain. By Mrs. WILLOUGHBY HODGSON. With 40 Plates and numerous Reproductions of Marks.

A CHEAPER EDITION OF ROSE'S 'LIFE OF NAPOLEON.'

LIFE of NAPOLEON I. By J. Holland

ROSE, Litt.D., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge. Largely compiled from new materials taken from the British Official Records. In 2 vols. post 8vo, with Maps and Plans. Fourth Edition, 10s. net.

ORIGINAL EDITION, with numerous Illustrations. 2 vols. large post 8vo, 18s. net.

NAPOLEONIC STUDIES. By J.

HOLLAND ROSE, Litt.D. Post 8vo, with Maps, 7s. 6d. net.

"Whatever may be the side of Napoleon's career in which the reader may be interested, we make bold to say that he will find something new to him within the four hundred pages of this modest little volume. Dr. Rose is to be congratulated on his mastery of a difficult and complicated subject."—Athenæum.

With 56 Illustrations from Life. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; paper covers, 1s. net.

The CARE of HORSES. A Book for all who have Practical Charge of Horses. By ADA F. CARTER, Instructress in Riding, and CHAS. CARTER, M.R.C.V.S. Lond.

"It contains a great amount of sound and practical advice on horsemanship and horsemastership in a wonderfully concise and interesting form. I consider it ought to be in the hands of every owner or hirer of horses."

Major-General BADEN-POWELL.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS,
Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

Published since January 1, 1905.

BIOGRAPHY, MEMOIRS, &amp;c.

The LIFE of the MARQUIS of DUFFERIN and AVA. By Sir ALFRED LYALL. Third Edition. 2 vols. 36s. net.

Sir MOUNTSTUART E. GRANT DUFF'S NOTES from a DIARY, 1896-JAN. 23rd, 1901. Seventh and last Series. 2 vols. 18s.

The LIFE of GENERAL SIR JAMES BROWNE, R.E. ("Buster Browne"). By General J. J. McLEOD INNES. With Illustrations and a Map. 18s. net.

A MOTHER of CZARS. A Sketch of the Life of Feodorowna, Wife of Paul I. and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. By Mrs. COLQUHOUN GRANT. 12s. net.

SIXTEEN YEARS in SIBERIA. A Remarkable Record of the Realities of Prison Life in Russia. By One who has undergone them—LEO DEUTSCH. Cheap Edition. 6s. net.

LIFE and LETTERS of EDWARD BICKERSTETH, late Bishop of Tokyo. By Rev. SAMUEL BICKERSTETH. With Illustrations. Cheap Edition. 3s. 6d. net.

A CHEAP EDITION OF
DR. SMILES'S LIVES OF THE ENGINEERS.

Reset from New Type, and printed on Large Paper, with extra Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d. each vol.

JAMES BRINDLEY and the EARLY ENGINEERS. SMEATON and RENNIE. METCALFE and TELFORD. BOULTON and WATT. GEORGE and ROBERT STEPHENSON.

The LIFE of JOHN NICHOLSON, SOLDIER and ADMINISTRATOR. By Capt. LIONEL J. TROTTER. Cheap Edition. 2s. 6d. net.

HISTORY, POLITICS, AND PHILOSOPHY.

ESSAYS BY THE LATE LORD SALISBURY.

FOREIGN POLITICS. 6s. net.

BIOGRAPHICAL ESSAYS. 6s. net.

IRELAND in the NEW CENTURY.

With an Epilogue replying to his Critics. By the Right Hon. Sir HORACE PLUNKETT. Cheap Edition. In paper covers, 1s. net.

The AWAKENING of JAPAN. By OKAKURA-KAKUZO, Author of 'The Ideals of the East.' 5s. net.

The BALKAN QUESTION. The Present Condition of the Balkans and of European Responsibilities. By VARIOUS WRITERS. Edited by LUIGI VILLARI. Map. 10s. 6d. net.

The ROYAL ACADEMY and its MEMBERS. 1768 - 1830. From Official Documents. By the late J. E. HODGSON, R.A., and F. A. EATON, M.A., Secretary of the Royal Academy. Illustrated. 21s. net.

The GREEK THINKERS. A History of Ancient Philosophy. By Prof. THEODOR GOMPERZ. 3 vols. 14s. net each volume.

The FRIENDS of ENGLAND. An Inquiry into the Cause which has produced the Empire and Regulates its Cohesion, together with an Estimate of the Dangers which threaten it in the Future. By the Hon. GEORGE PEEL. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

MAKERS of MODERN HISTORY.

NAPOLEON III. CAVOUR. BISMARCK. By the Hon. EDWARD CADOGAN. 8s. net.

The HISTORY of INDIA. By the Hon. MOUNTSTUART ELPHINSTONE. New Edition, Ninth. 15s. net.

TRAVEL AND HANDBOOKS.

LHASA and its MYSTERIES. A Record of the Expedition, 1903-1904. By L. A. WADDELL, LL.D. C.B. C.I.E., Lieut.-Col. Indian Medical Service. With 200 Illustrations, and Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo, 25s. net.

OUR SUDAN. By John Ward, F.S.A., Author of 'The Sacred Beetle,' 'Greek Coins and their Parent Cities.' 720 Illustrations. 21s. net.

FROM the CAPE to the ZAMBESI.

By G. T. HUTCHINSON. With an Introduction by Col. FRANK RHODES, C.B. D.S.O. With many Illustrations. 9s. net.
[Ready next week.]

A CHEAP EDITION OF MRS. BISHOP'S WORKS.

With Illustrations. 2s. 6d. net. each.

UNBEATEN TRACKS in JAPAN. HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO.

RECENT EXCAVATIONS in the ROMAN FORUM, 1898-1905. By (Mrs.) E. BURTON-BROWN. This Work is indispensable to all visitors to Rome who desire to follow and understand the remarkable discoveries of recent years. Illustrations and Plans. 2s. net.

HANDBOOK—INDIA, BURMA, and CEYLON. New Edition (Fifth). With 78 Maps and Plans. 20s.

FICTION AND POETRY.

A QUIXOTIC WOMAN. A Novel. By ISOBEL FITZROY. 6s.

FRECKLES. A Novel. By Gene STRATTON-PORTER. 6s.

IN the ARENA. A Novel. By Booth TARKINGTON, Author of 'Monsieur Beaucaire,' &c. 6s.

The FRIENDSHIP of ART. By BLISS CARMAN. With Portrait. 6s.

SONGS from a NORTHERN GARDEN. By BLISS CARMAN. 2s. 6d. net.

BLISS CARMAN'S POEMS. Limited Edition, on Hand-made Paper, 2 vols. folio, polished Persian, 2l. 2s. net.

GENERAL LITERATURE, THEOLOGY, &amp;c.

BIRD LIFE and BIRD LORE. By R. BOSWORTH SMITH. With Illustrations. 10s. 6d. net.

DARWIN'S The VARIATION of ANIMALS and PLANTS under DOMESTICATION. 2 vols. 5s. net.

The ORGANIZATION of AGRICULTURE. By EDWIN A. PRATT. Second Cheaper Edition. 1s. net.

IN LOCO PARENTIS. Chapters on Institution Life and Work. By the Rev. MARSHALL G. VINE. With a Preface by JAMES GRANVILLE LEGG, His Majesty's Chief Inspector of Home Office Schools. 2s. 6d. net.

The INVENTOR'S GUIDE. By JAMES ROBERTS, M.A. LL.B. 2s. 6d. net.

GEOLOGY: Processes and their Results. By THOMAS C. CHAMBERLIN and ROLLIN D. SALISBURY. With Maps in Colour, Plans, and numerous other Illustrations. 21s. net.

SMILES' SELF-HELP. Reset from New Type and printed on Large Paper. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

OUR HERITAGE in the CHURCH. By the late EDWARD BICKERSTETH, D.D., late Bishop of South Tokyo, Japan. With a Preface by the Right Rev. B. F. WESTCOTT. 5s.

The LIFE of CHRIST. A Continuous Narrative in the Words of the Authorized Version of the Four Gospels, with Introduction, Commentary, and Notes. By the Rev. JOSEPH JOHN SCOTT, Canon of Manchester. 7s. 6d.

* * A PAGE ADVERTISEMENT OF MR. MURRAY'S STANDARD WORKS WILL APPEAR NEXT WEEK.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW BOOKS.

In crown 4to, bound in cloth gilt, copiously illustrated,
price 21s. net.

The HISTORY of the SOCIETY of APOTHECARIES of LONDON. By C. R. B. BAR-RETT, M.A.Oxon. With numerous Illustrations by the Author.

In crown 4to, appropriately bound, price 10s. 6d.

The TABLE BOOK of the CINQUE PORTS. Being the Index to the Decrees of the Courts of Brotherhood and Guestling, from 1433 to the Present Time.

In square 8vo, appropriately bound in cloth, illustrated,
price 3s. 6d. net.

MY NEW ZEALAND GARDEN.
By a SUFFOLK LADY.

"The writer is chatty and discursive. Her literary style is simple and unpretentious, but not without charm."
Oxford Chronicle.

NEW NOVELS.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, illustrated, price 6s.

The KNIGHT of the NEEDLE
ROCK and his DAYS, 1571-1608.
This is a story of Elizabethan times, the chief incidents taking place in the Isle of Wight, Guildford, and in London.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, price 6s.

The PAINS of HAPPINESS. A Novel. By RASSAC TORRIANI.

"The author interweaves a double love story with no little skill."—Pall Mall Gazette.

CHEAP EDITION.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 3s. 6d.

CROSS PURPOSES. A Story of England and France. By JEAN MERIVALE.
"Well worth reading and immensely better than much of the literature that commands a great run at the libraries."
Sheffield Daily Independent.

ELLIOT STOCK,
62, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

GENERAL INDEXES.

THE FOLLOWING ARE STILL IN STOCK:—

|                    | £. | s. | d. |
|--------------------|----|----|----|
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| FOURTH SERIES ...  | 3  | 3  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| SIXTH SERIES ...   | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| SEVENTH SERIES ... | 0  | 6  | 0  |
| GENERAL INDEX,     |    |    |    |
| EIGHTH SERIES ...  | 0  | 6  | 0  |

For Copies by post an additional Threepence is charged.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,
Notes and Queries Office,
11, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

NOW READY, price 10s. 6d. net.

THE NINTH SERIES
GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred.
The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.THE NATIONAL FLAG, BEING THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, containing an account of the Flag, with Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

CLIFFORD'S INN.

For view of CLIFFORD'S INN, taken in 1892, see

NOTES AND QUERIES, April 2, 1892.

The same Number also contains Sketches of the ROLLS CHAPEL, OLD SERJEANTS' INN, the GATEWAY, LINCOLN'S INN, &c.

Price 4½d., free by post, of

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

Messrs. T. C. & E. C. JACK
beg to announce they have still a few Sets remaining of
CAPT. BRINKLEY'S GREAT WORK
JAPAN AND CHINA.

Only 500 Sets were retained for the English market, and of these over 450 have been subscribed for. The work will therefore be out of print almost imme- diately.

Illustrated with 226 Full-Page Plates,
 of which 100 are in Colour.

In 12 vols. cloth, gilt top, 14s. net per volume.

The JAPANESE AMBASSADOR in London says:
 "The best authority on Japan."

The Athenæum says:—"Enormously in advance of all existing literature on the subject."

London: T. C. & E. C. JACK,
 34, Henrietta Street, W.C.; and Edinburgh.

DAVID NUTT,
 57-59, LONG ACRE, W.C.

JUST OUT.

FOLK-LORE.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.

A Quarterly Review of Myth, Tradition, Institution, and Custom.

Vol. XVI. No. 1. 5s. net.

Contents.

ANNUAL REPORT AND STATEMENT OF ACCOUNTS.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS. W. H. D. ROUSE.

MIDSUMMER CUSTOMS in MOROCCO. E. WESTERMARCK.

SOME NOTES on the HUCULS. With Plates I.-VI. M. L. HODGSON.
 COLLECTANEA:—The Padstow Hobby Horse. With Plates VII.-IX.—
 The Devil in Glencoe. DORA BAILEY—Miscellaneous Notes from Monmouthshire. BEATRICE A. WHERRY—Folk-Lore of the Negroes of Jamaica—Additions to 'The Games of Argyleshire.' R. C. Maclagan.

CORRESPONDENCE:—Riddle or Charm? F. BARRY—"I'll put my foot in the fire!" A. LANG—Group Marriage. N. W. THOMAS —The Elder-Tree. ALBINIA WHEKRY—Translation of Maltese Folk-Tales. E. MAGRI.

REVIEWS:—A. W. Howitt, 'The Native Tribes of South-East Australia,' E. S. HARTLAND—L. H. Nassau, 'Fetichism in West Africa,' and E. Allgret, 'Les idées religieuses des Pan,' A. LANG
 —Carl Ilbke, 'Zwei Jahre unter den Kanibalen der Salomo-Inseln,' A. C. HADDON—George A. Dorsey, 'Traditions of the Skidi-Pawnee,' N. W. THOMAS—William Thalbitzer, 'A Phonetical Study of the Eskimo Language,' E. S. HARTLAND—
 'Sociological Papers, 1904,' C. S. BURNE—H. M. Chadwick,
 'Studies in Anglo-Saxon Literature,' F. M. STENTON—'Journal of the Folk-Song Society, 1904,' L. M. EYRE.

FRENCH CORRESPONDENCE,
 SOCIAL and PERSONAL, for ENGLISH PEOPLE.
 By BEATRICE VON HOLTHOIR. Pocket Size, printed in Red and Black. Wrapper, 1s. (1s. 1d. post free); cloth, 1s. 6d.

LATEST SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.
DIVORCE. By Paul Bourget.
BLOOMSBURY. By C. F. Keary.
TO WINDWARD. By H. C. Rowland

"A BOOK TO READ."

FERGUSON'S GUIDE. By H. C. Can-
 FIELD. 6s. net.

*Has been widely praised as the most amusing example of American humour since Mr. Dooley.

A Beautiful Edition of the greatest contemporary record of the Reign of Henry VIII.

EDWARD HALL'S CHRONICLE
 OF
HENRY THE EIGHTH

These two volumes, which are now ready, form the commencement of an important Series of Reprints of the Contemporary Histories of the Tudor and Stuart periods—great and imposing works of authentic value and of much literary charm, which have inexplicably fallen into forgetfulness.

The Series, which will include, among others, such works as CAMDEN'S QUEEN ELIZABETH, STRANGE'S MARY STUART, L'ESTRANGE'S REIGN OF KING CHARLES, &c., is entitled

THE LIVES OF THE KINGS.

Subscriptions are now being received for the first Two Volumes (viz., HALL'S HENRY VIII.). First published in 1542, its destruction was ordered by Queen Mary; so that it is to-day excessively rare. The merits of the work, long overlooked, are now generally recognized.

An Introduction is contributed by

CHARLES WHIBLEY,

who is also the Editor of the whole Series.

Mr. HENRY NEWBOLT has undertaken to write the Introduction to CAMDEN'S ELIZABETH, and the other numbers will be dealt with by other competent writers.

The Two Volumes of HALL'S CHRONICLES, now ready, are printed by T. & A. Constable on pure rag paper, and bound in buckram, gilt design, gilt top. The Edition for the United Kingdom is limited to 500 Copies, and the price is 16s. net per Volume. There is also an Edition de Luxe on Japanese vellum (25 Copies only) at 5l. 5s. net the Set.

Both Editions have Photogravure Frontispieces.

London: T. C. & E. C. JACK,
 34, Henrietta Street, W.C.; and Edinburgh.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S
NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS'.

STUDIES IN COLONIAL NATIONALISM.

By RICHARD JEBB. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

THE EAST AFRICA
PROTECTORATE.

By Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G., late H.M. Commissioner for the Protectorate.

With Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

TIMES.—"A remarkably interesting book."

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A work of sterling value."

STANDARD.—"A delightful book."

MORNING POST.—"Of singular interest and of permanent value."

WESTMINSTER.—"An admirable volume."

DAILY NEWS.—"A most admirable account."

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THROUGH THE LANDS OF THE SERB.'

The BURDEN of the BALKANS.

By M. EDITH DURHAM. With a Map and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 14s. net.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Those who read Miss Durham's previous book, 'Through the Lands of the Serb,' were unanimous in the opinion that it was an ideal record of an adventurous journey; and all who take up her new volume will find it even better than the former—if that be possible."

FOURTH IMPRESSION.

The UNVEILING of LHASA. By

EDMUND CANDLER. With Illustrations and a Map.
 Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

AN IRISH "ROMAN A CLEF."

The SEETHING POT. By George

A. BIRMINGHAM. 6s.

SPECTATOR.—"A very brilliant and detached study of Ireland of yesterday and to-day."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"An absorbingly interesting book."

London:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 41 and 43, Maddox Street, W.

JUST PUBLISHED.

FIFTH EDITION, GREATLY ENLARGED.

"The Indispensable Handbook of Architecture for Students, Travellers, and General Readers."
 Thick demy 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth gilt, 21s. net.

A HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE
ON THE COMPARATIVE METHOD.

By Prof. BANISTER FLETCHER, F.R.I.B.A.,
 Formerly Professor of Architecture in King's College, London; and

BANISTER F. FLETCHER, F.R.I.B.A., University Extension Lecturer on Architecture and formerly Lecturer on Architecture, King's College, London.

Contains upwards of 800 pages, with about 2,000 Illustrations of Views and Details of the chief Buildings of the World, reproduced from Photographs and from a unique Series of Drawings.

"As complete as it well can be."—Times.
 "No student of architecture should be without this standard work, which is itself a triumph of art."—Daily News.
 "We can recall no other book, with anything like the same compass, that furnishes so clear and so large a purview of the subject."

Daily Telegraph.
 "Mr. Fletcher's book is a Bible of Architecture. It is not only indispensable to students of architecture and those who travel to see its masterpieces, but it is also an admirable gift-book for a drawing-room table."—Queen.

"A delightful book for reference and study for the antiquary or for the intelligent general reader."—Antiquary.

OLD ENGLISH COTTAGES AND FARM HOUSES.

A SERIES OF VOLUMES DESIGNED TO ILLUSTRATE THE MOST TYPICAL AND BEAUTIFUL REMAINS OF MINOR DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE IN ENGLAND.

Crown 4to (10 in. by 7 in.), handsomely bound in art canvas, 21s. each net.

Each Volume contains 100 Photographic Plates artistically printed in Collotype, accompanied by Descriptive Notes and Sketches.

1. KENT and SUSSEX. Photographed by
 W. GALSORTHY DAVIE, and Described by E. GUY
 DAWBER. [Recently published.]

"A valuable record presented in a very attractive form."—Builder.

2. SHROPSHIRE, HEREFORDSHIRE, and CHESHIRE. Photographed by JAMES PARKINSON, and Described by E. A. GULD. [Recently published.]

"Every one of the plates has its own charm or interest. There is not a single subject which one cannot linger over with pleasure and appreciation."—Antiquary.

3. The COTSWOLD DISTRICT, comprising
 Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire, Northants, Worcestershire.
 Photographed by W. GALSORTHY DAVIE, and Described by E. GUY DAWBER. [Just published.]

"This charming volume contains one hundred photographs of the most beautiful domestic buildings in the country."—Daily News.
 "The volumes are attractive in sympathetic letterpress and printing, and wholly delightful in illustration."—Times.

B. T. BATSFORD, 94, High Holborn, London.

W. C. BENNETT'S POEMS.

The GOLDEN LIBRARY.—Square 16mo, cloth, 2s.

SONGS FOR SAILORS.

Morning Post.—"Spirited, melodious, and vigorously graphic."

Daily News.—"Very spirited."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"Really admirable."

Morning Advertiser.—"Sure of a wide popularity."

John Bull.—"Very successful."

Metropolitan.—"Instinct with patriotic fire."

Illustrated London News.—"Right well done."

News of the World.—"There is real poetry in these songs."

Mirror.—"With admirable felicity he embodies national sentiments and emotions which stir the hearts of the people."

Echo.—"These songs are literally written for sailors, and they are precisely the kind of songs that sailors most enjoy."

Nonconformist.—"These songs bear a true literary mark, and give out the genuine ring."

Leeds Mercury.—"There is no one nowadays who can compete with Dr. Bennett as a popular song-writer. In his volume of sea songs we find the qualities which must secure its success."

Liverpool Mail.—"Dr. Bennett has devoted his lyrical powers to a noble object in this comprehensive yet inexpensive work. This gem deserves to be patronized not only by our entire Royal Navy, but by all our Sailors' Homes and all our Mercantile Marine Associations."

Examiner.—"Full of incident and strongly expressed sentiment, and having a simple, dashing, musical roll and movement that reminds us of some songs that are favourable with all sailors, and the touches of humour he introduces are precisely of the kind that they will relish."

Scotsman.—"Dr. Bennett's heart is thoroughly in his work.... All spirited and vigorous. There is a healthy, manly, fresh-air dash about them which ought to make them popular with the class for whose use and pleasure they are designed."

Chatto & Windus, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

NORWICH UNION FIRE OFFICE.
 Founded 1797.

HEAD OFFICE: NORWICH.

CHIEF (50, Fleet Street, E.C.

LONDON OFFICES (1, 72, King William Street, E.C.

Claims Paid ..... £18,000,000

Applications for Agencies invited.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for

ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEARTBURN,

HEADACHE, AND INDIGESTION.

And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
 Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

FLORENCE WARDEN'S NEW NOVEL.—Now ready.

The YOUNGEST MISS BROWN. By Florence Warden, Author of 'The House on the Marsh.'

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THE LEAVENWORTH CASE.'—On APRIL 10.

The MILLIONAIRE BABY. By Anna Katharine Green, Author of 'The Leavenworth Case.'

ALLEN UPWARD'S NEW NOVEL.—On APRIL 17.

The PHANTOM TORPEDO-BOATS. By Allen Upward, Author of 'The Secret History of To-day,' &c.

A SPOILER of MEN. By Richard Marsh, Author of 'The Beetle.'

The following Six-Shilling Novels will be ready shortly.

STINGAREE.

By E. W. Hornung. BALIOI GARTH.

By Algernon Gissing.

The ERROR of HER WAYS.

By Frank Barrett. DON TARQUINIO.

By Fr. Rolfe.

The MISSING ELIZABETH.

By Adeline Sergeant. DILYS.

By Mrs. F. E. Penny.

Fcap. 8vo, picture cover, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

LI TING of LONDON. By George R. Sims ("Dagonet").

Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net.

MACAULAY'S HISTORY of ENGLAND. Vol. I. (New Volume of the "St. Martin's Library").

SHORTLY, crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

The WILD MARQUIS: Life and Adventures of Armand Guerry de Maubreuil
(the Would-be Assassin of Napoleon I.). By ERNEST A. VIZETELLY, Author of 'With Zola in England.'

THE ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.

Printed in clear type on fine paper; full size of page, 6½ by 4 1-16 inches. Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net each; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net each.

IMPORTANT SERIES OF ELEVEN NEW VOLUMES IN THE PRESS.

MACAULAY'S HISTORY of ENGLAND. In 5 vols.; and

JUSTIN McCARTHY'S A HISTORY of the FOUR GEORGES and of WILLIAM IV. In 2 vols.

JUSTIN McCARTHY'S The REIGN of QUEEN ANNE. In 1 vol.

A HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES, from the Accession of Queen Victoria to 1897. In 3 vols.

The other Volumes of the Series are as follows:—

LONDON; ALL SORTS and CONDITIONS of MEN; SIR RICHARD WHITTINGTON (Shortly); GASPARD DE COLIGNY (Shortly). By Sir WALTER BESANT.

The DEEMSTER. By Hall Caine.

The WOMAN in WHITE. By Wilkie Collins.

ROBINSON CRUSOE. (The Two Parts.)
By DANIEL DEFOE. With 37 Illustrations by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

UNDER the GREENWOOD TREE. By THOMAS HARDY.

CONDENSED NOVELS. By Bret Harte.

The AUTOCRAT of the BREAKFAST-
TABLE. By OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES. With Illustrations by J. G. THOMSON.

The ESSAYS of ELIA. By Charles Lamb.

The LIFE of the FIELDS; The OPEN
AIR; NATURE NEAR LONDON. By RICHARD JEFFERIES.

The CLOISTER and the HEARTH. With 32 Full-Page Illustrations. "IT IS NEVER TOO LATE TO MEND." By CHARLES READE.

MEMORIES and PORTRAITS; VIRGINI-
BUS PUERISQUE; MEN and BOOKS; NEW ARABIAN NIGHTS; ACROSS the PLAINS; The MERRY MEN (May 4). By ROBERT LOUIS STE-VENSON.

The POCKET R. L. S.

SKETCHES. By Mark Twain.

The COMPLETE ANGLER. By Walton and COTTON.

The DECAMERON. By Boccaccio.

MR. SWINBURNE'S POETICAL WORKS. The COLLECTED LIBRARY EDITION in 6 vols. is NOW COMPLETE, and a SECOND IMPRESSION is now on Sale. 36s. net for the 6 vols. crown 8vo, buckram, gilt tops.

The LIFE of CHARLES DICKENS as Revealed in his Writings. By PERCY FITZGERALD, F.S.A. With Portraits and Facsimiles.
2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net. [Shortly.]

A HISTORY of OUR OWN TIMES, from the Diamond Jubilee, 1897, to the Accession of King Edward VII. By JUSTIN McCARTHY.
2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth, 24s. [Preparing.]

RECOLLECTIONS of ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON in the PACIFIC. By ARTHUR JOHNSTONE. With Portraits and Facsimile Letter.
Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s. net. [Preparing.]

A RAINY JUNE, and Three other Stories. By OUIDA. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

The MAN-HUNTER. By Dick Donovan, Author of 'The Man from Manchester,' &c. A NEW EDITION. Crown 8vo, picture cloth, flat back, 2s.

The ADVENTURES of JONES. By Hayden Carruth.
With Illustrations. A NEW EDITION. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

WHEN a GIRL'S ENGAGED. By Hope Merrick.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

The POET and the PIERROT. By Dorothea Deakin, Author of 'The Smile of Melinda,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY BOOKS.

The LADY of LYNN. By Sir Walter Besant.
With 12 Illustrations by G. DEMAIN HAMMOND.

A PRINCE of GOOD FELLOWS. By Robert BARR. Illustrated by J. F. SULLIVAN.

The MASSARENES. By Ouida.

The BAG of DIAMONDS. By G. Manville
FENN.

AS LUCK WOULD HAVE IT. By William WESTALL.

HAVILAND'S CHUM. By Bertram Mitford.

The SHADOW of the ROPE. By E. W.
HORNUNG. [May.]

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4042.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY.—The NEXT MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, April 19, at 8 P.M., when Mr. E. LOVETT will read some Notes on (1) 'The Snake-Ammonite Myth of Whitby,' and (2) 'Some Scotch and Irish Evil-Eye Charms and Appliances,' which will be illustrated by numerous Specimens. A Paper by Mr. R. E. DENNETT on 'Congo Folk-lore,' and, if time permit, a Paper by Miss GOODRICH FREER on 'Jerusalem Folk-lore' will also be read. F. A. MILNE, Secretary.
April 11, 1905.

LONDON SHAKESPEARE LEAGUE.

The THIRD ANNUAL SHAKESPEARE COMMEMORATION DINNER will be held on SATURDAY, May 6, 1905, Sir WILLIAM COLLINS, M.D., in the Chair, at the CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly, at 8 o'clock.—For particulars and Dinner Tickets apply Mrs. GOMME, Hon. Sec., 24, Dorset Square, N.W.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

MESSRS. CARFAX OPEN their NEW PREMISES, 24, BURY STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W., with an EXHIBITION of WORKS by Mr. JOHN S. SAROENT, R.A. The EXHIBITION will CLOSE on APRIL 29. Open daily, including Saturdays, 10 to 6. Admission One Shilling.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX. Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

(University of London.)
FACULTY OF MEDICINE.
The SUMMER SESSION BEGINS on WEDNESDAY, April 26. The work is arranged so that a Student may advantageously begin his Medical Curriculum then.
The BUCKNILL SCHOLARSHIP and FOUR ENTRANCE EXHIBITIONS will be AWARDED in OCTOBER.
Full information may be obtained from either of the undersigned.
SIDNEY MARTIN, M.D. F.R.S., Dean of the Faculty.
WALTER W. SETON, M.A., Acting Secretary.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN APRIL 25, 1905. Students can reside in the College within the Hospital Walls, subject to the Collegiate Regulations.
The Hospital contains a service of 750 Beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly 9000. are awarded annually.
Special Classes for the Preliminary Scientific and other London University Examinations, for the F.R.C.S., and for other Higher Examinations.
There is a large, thoroughly well-equipped Cricket Ground.
For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to Mr. W. DOUGLAS HANSEN, M.C. Cantab., Warden of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.
A Handbook forwarded on application.

ST. THOMAS'S HOSPITAL, ALBERT EMBANKMENT, S.E.

(University of London.)
The SUMMER SESSION will COMMENCE on APRIL 26. The Hospital occupies one of the finest sites in London, and contains 602 Beds, of which 540 are in constant use.
Entrance and other Scholarships and Prizes (Twenty-six in number), of the value of more than 5000, are offered for competition each year.
Upwards of Sixty Resident and other Appointments are open to Students after qualification.
A Students' Club forms part of the Medical School Buildings; and the Athletic Ground, nine acres in extent, situated at Chiswick, can be reached in forty minutes from the Hospital.
A Prospectus, containing full particulars, may be obtained from the undersigned.
J. H. FISHER, B.S. Lond., Dean.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

WILLIAM LINDLEY STUDENTSHIP.—A RESEARCH STUDENTSHIP in PHYSIOLOGY, of the value of 1000. for one year, founded in memory of the late William Lindley, and tenable in the Physiological Laboratory of the University, is NOW VACANT. Applications, accompanied by a summary of the career of the applicant, and the names of Three Persons to whom reference may be made, will be received by the undersigned on or before MONDAY, May 8 next.
A. W. RUCKER, Principal.
University of London, South Kensington, S.W.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIP'S EXAMINATION.
An EXAMINATION for the awards of ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS and EXHIBITIONS in Classics, Modern Languages, History, Mathematics, and Science, will be held at the University on MONDAY, May 15, and Following Days.
SCHOLARSHIPS, &c., tenable at the HALLS of RESIDENCE in connexion with the University are also OFFERED for AWARD on the results of the above Examination.—For particulars apply to the REGISTRAR.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL is prepared to appoint a JUNIOR ASSISTANT LECTURER in CLASSICS, at a Salary of 1500. per annum.—Details of the conditions of appointment may be obtained from the REGISTRAR.

THE VICTORIA UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

The COUNCIL is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in JURISPRUDENCE and ROMAN LAW for Three Years.—A detailed statement of the conditions of appointment may be obtained from the REGISTRAR.

F O L K E S T O N E.

WOODLANDS PREPARATORY SCHOOL.
Rev. HENRY T. J. COGGIN, M.A. Cantab.

EDUCATION.
Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

RHONDDA URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION.
The EDUCATION COMMITTEE of the RHONDDA URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL invite applications for the Office of DIRECTOR of EDUCATION. The person appointed will be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of the Office, and to reside within the area of the Council. The Salary will be 1000. per annum. Candidates must have had actual experience in similar positions and in practical teaching, as well as in the performance of the several duties set out in the Council's prescribed list.—Applications, marked "Appointment of Director of Education," accompanied by not more than three Testimonials, to be delivered to the undersigned, from whom a list of the duties can be obtained, on or before MONDAY, May 1, 1905. Canvassing, directly or indirectly, is prohibited, and will be a disqualification.
W. P. NICHOLAS, Clerk of the Council.
Public Offices, Pentre, Glam., April 8, 1905.

EAST HAM TECHNICAL COLLEGE.

SECONDARY SCHOOL FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.
The COMMITTEE invite applications for the post of ASSISTANT MISTRESS, who must be qualified to give instruction in English subjects. Salary offered, 900. per annum. Applications must be made on the printed forms, which may be obtained from the undersigned. Canvassing members of the Committee, directly or indirectly, will be a disqualification.
W. H. BARKER, B.Sc.
Technical College, East Ham, E.

WEST HARTLEPOOL EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

ART MASTER.
ART MASTER WANTED for the SCHOOL of ART, to commence SEPTEMBER 1.
Salary 1800. per annum.
Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned.
Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, together with three Testimonials, to be sent in before MAY 10 to
J. G. TAYLOR, Secretary.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the Post of WARDEN of the ALEXANDRA HALL of RESIDENCE for WOMEN STUDENTS, in succession to Miss E. A. Carpenter. Applications and 70 Copies of Testimonials to be sent by MAY 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.
T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES, ABERYSTWYTH.

The COUNCIL invites applications for the post of REGISTRAR and SECRETARY of the COLLEGE, at a Salary of 3000.
Applications and 70 copies of Testimonials to be sent by MAY 10 to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.
T. F. ROBERTS, Principal.

BOROUGH of CHELMSFORD.

PUBLIC LIBRARY, MUSEUM, AND SCIENCE AND ART SCHOOL.
LIBRARIAN AND CURATOR—CARETAKERS.

The CORPORATION of the BOROUGH of CHELMSFORD require a LIBRARIAN and CURATOR for their PUBLIC LIBRARY and MUSEUM, who must devote the whole of his time to the duties of his office.
Salary 1500. per annum, without Residence.
The Corporation also require a MAN and his WIFE as CARETAKERS of the PUBLIC LIBRARY and MUSEUM, at a Salary of 350. per annum, with Fuel, Light, and Residence on the premises, in addition to any Salary to be received by them for acting as Caretakers of the Science and Art School.
The persons appointed will be required to devote their whole time to the duties of their office.
Applications, in applicants' own handwriting, stating age, previous occupation, and past experience, accompanied by not more than Three Testimonials of recent date, and marked outside "LIBRARIAN AND CURATOR" or "CARETAKERS," must reach me not later than THURSDAY, April 20, 1905.
A statement of the duties and conditions of each office can be obtained on application at the Town Clerk's Office, 16, London Road, Chelmsford.
By order,
THOS. DIXON, Town Clerk.
Chelmsford, April 6, 1905.

METROPOLITAN BOROUGH of FINSBURY.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES COMMITTEE.
SUB-LIBRARIAN WANTED, to enter upon duty as soon as possible. Preference will be given to one versed in modern Library methods, with a practical knowledge of exact classification (Adjustable or Dewey System) and Open Access experience. Salary, 1000. per annum.
The appointment is to be of a Temporary nature for Six Months, but the Committee trust that it will then be made permanent.—Applications, accompanied by not more than Three recent Testimonials, to be lodged with the undersigned at the Clerkenwell Public Library, Finsbury, London, E.C., not later than SATURDAY, April 29, 1905, endorsed on outside "Application Sub-Librarian." Canvassing is prohibited.
HARRY G. T. CANNONS,
Acting Librarian and Clerk to the Public Libraries Committee.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 962, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

NOTICE.—FRIDAY NEXT being GOOD FRIDAY, the ATHENÆUM will be published on WEDNESDAY at Ten o'clock.—ADVERTISEMENTS should be at the Office not later than 10 o'clock on TUESDAY Morning.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.
PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 218, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

BELFAST LIBRARY and SOCIETY for PROMOTING KNOWLEDGE.

(LINEN HALL LIBRARY.)
The GOVERNORS of the LIBRARY require the services of a LIBRARIAN at a Salary of 1500. per year, rising by yearly increases of 200. to 2100.
All applications to be sent in on or before APRIL 20, 1905.
Full particulars on application to the HONORARY SECRETARY, Linen Hall Library, Belfast.

EDITOR WANTED for high-class WEEKLY.
Practical knowledge of Mechanical Pastimes as well as Literary experience desirable. Whole or only part time.—Apply, with full particulars, to Box 1000, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED, in LONDON or the PROVINCES by a UNIVERSITY MAN. Has had great experience as Editor and Leader Writer. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

THE PRESS.—WANTED, an ENGAGEMENT on DAILY or WEEKLY NEWSPAPER. Seven years' Assistant Manager of The Standard. Author of numerous Published Works.—Address JOHN B. MANSUET, 8, Hernden Road, East Hill, Wandsworth, S.W.

A YOUNG GENTLEMAN, with some Press Business Experience, seeks position as SECRETARY, CONFIDENTIAL CLERK, or POSITION of TRUST. Highly capable Correspondent, Book-keeper, &c. Very highest credentials.—Address Box 3304, Judd's, 5, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

GENTLEMAN, at liberty the end of April, late on Staff of Learned Society, London, desires to engage in PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK.—Address Box 998, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

A RUSSIAN LADY STUDENT would like to EXCHANGE RUSSIAN LESSONS into ENGLISH with an ENGLISH LADY.—Address 41, Frederick Street, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.

EXPERIENCED INDEXER and TRANS- LATOR requires EXTRA WORK; also Typewriting at 1s. 3d. a thousand.—Box 999, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

ACTOR-DRAMATIST, twenty years' experience, Master of Construction and Stage Craft. Reports upon, Remedies Faults, gives Playwrights Practical Advice while Working, brings out latent Scenes and Situations, making Plays suitable for Representation. Novels Dramatised. Large connexion among Cosmopolitan Managers.—Care of SPRING FIDELITY, Literary Agents, 110, St. Martin's Lane.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH, REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian. Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience, wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

JOURNAL (LONDON WEEKLY) WANTED to BUY. Must be well established, influential, and remunerative, or capable of being made so.—CUSTON, Box 2897, Sell's, 167, Fleet Street, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss FOTHERHAIR & Son, Sel. Tripos, 524, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPE-WRITER.—CHANGE of ADDRESS.—Miss E. M. TUCKER begs to say she has CHANGED HER ADDRESS to 61, MAITLAND PARK ROAD, Haverstock Hill, N.W. Established 1884.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., PLAYS, &c., promptly and carefully TYPED. Black and White Illustrations. Moderate terms.—Miss GARRIS, Elgin Lodge, Chadwell Heath.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

SHORTHAND and TYPE-WRITING.—Authors' MSS., Plays, Sermons, Reports, &c. 9d. per 1,000. Legal and General Copying. Accuracy and Despatch guaranteed.—Miss N. E. ROBINSON, 8, Westover Road, Wandsworth Common, London, S.W.

TYPE-WRITING.—The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years.—SIXES & SIXES, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolveston Gardens, Hammersmith.)

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

MSS. REVISED and TYPE-WRITTEN.—Complete knowledge of, and accurate work in, Latin, French, and German.—MURISON, St. Winifred's No. 1, Ledger's Road, Slough.

AUTHORS' MSS. REVISED by experienced LITERARY MAN and carefully TYPE-WRITTEN. Literary, Legal, and Commercial Translations.—M.A., 12, Craven Villas, South Ealing, W.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BRACHES, 34, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Lerner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED. And supplied with every requisite. Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.' The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C. America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.O.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.O.

Catalogues.

PICKERING & CHATTO'S CATALOGUES.

CATALOGUE of TRACTS and PAMPHLETS, chiefly Historical and Topographical, 238 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of 3,000 Rare Tracts and Pamphlets, including Items on Africa—America—Quebec—Anne—Astrology—Bedfordshire—Berkshire—Buckinghamshire—Cambridgeshire—Civil War—Charles I. and II.—Channel Islands—Cheshire—Commonwealth—Cornwall—Oliver Cromwell—Cumberland—Derbyshire—Devonshire—Dorsetshire—Durham—Economics and Trade—Queen Elizabeth—Essex—Flanders—France—George I. and II.—Germany—Gloucestershire—Hampshire—Herefordshire—Hertfordshire—Holland—Ireland—James I. and II.—Jesuits—Jews—Kent—Lancashire—Law—Leicestershire—Lincolnshire—London—Middlesex—Monmouthshire—Norfolk—Northamptonshire—Northumberland—Nottinghamshire—Oxfordshire—Popery—Popish Plot—Pretender (the Young and Old)—Printing—Trynne—Quakers—Rutlandshire—Prince Rupert—Scotland—Shropshire—Somersetshire—Spain—Spanish Armada—Staffordshire—Suffolk—Surrey—Sweden—Wales—Warwickshire—Westmorland—William III.—Wiltshire—Worcestershire—Yorkshire. Paper cover, post free, 1s.

CATALOGUE of ENGLISH LITERATURE, noted Bibliographically and Biographically, including First or Early Editions of the Writings of practically every English Author from Chaucer to R. L. Stevenson. 504 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of nearly 4,000 Rare Books, half-cloth, post free, 3s. 6d. This Catalogue has been pronounced on all sides to be the most interesting Book seller's Catalogue on the subject ever issued.

CATALOGUE of SPORTS, PASTIMES, ARTS, SCIENCES. 222 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of nearly 2,000 Old or Rare Books upon almost every Branch of Sport, Science, or Art, paper cover, post free, 1s.

CATALOGUE of MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, 126 pp. 8vo, with Descriptions and Selling Prices of about 900 Old or Rare Books, including Works on Africa, America, Australasia—First Editions of Books Illustrated by Randolph Caldecott, George and Robert Cruikshank, Richard Doyle, Harry Furness, James Gilray, Ernest Griset, John Leech, Hablot K. Browne (Phiz), Henry Alken, Thomas Rowlandson, and numerous Rare Works with Coloured Plates—an interesting Collection of Old Curiosa, Erotica, Facetiae, Old Romances, Chap Books, and Children's Books—numerous Topographical Works relating to most of the Counties of England, Ireland, Scotland, and Wales—fine Illuminated Manuscripts, with Miniatures—a valuable Assemblage of Early Typographical Specimens, including many Rare Editions Principes and Examples of the Early Printers. Paper cover, post free, 1s.

CATALOGUE of NEW PURCHASES. Books on all Subjects, including a fine Collection of Stamped and Elaborately Gilt-Tooled Old Bookbindings and several very beautiful Ancient Illuminated Manuscripts. 578 pp. 8vo, containing Descriptions, with Selling Prices, of 4,000 Valuable Books, illustrated with 9 Coloured and 198 Reproductions of Manuscripts and Old Bindings, cloth, post free, 6s.

It has been found necessary to make the above charges for our Catalogues, to prevent an inundation of applications from irresponsible persons. The cost of the Catalogue will, however, be deducted from the first order of 1l.

PICKERING & CHATTO, Antiquarian Booksellers, 66, HAYMARKET, LONDON, S.W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

CATALOGUE of FRENCH BOOKS, at greatly reduced prices. I. PHILOSOPHY. II. RELIGION. III. HISTORY. IV. POETRY, DRAMA, MUSIC. V. BEAUX-ARTS. VI. GEOGRAPHY. VII. MILITARY. VIII. FICTION. IX. GENERAL LITERATURE.

DULAU & CO. 37, Soho Square, London, W.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—Engravings, Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings, Palmer, Whistler—Japanese Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence. WM. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR, No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT of ART BOOKS,' by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 10 contains Manuscripts, Early Printing, Americana, Seventeenth-Century Literature, &c.

SCARCE BOOKS at LOWEST PRICES.—Our CLEARANCE CATALOGUE, No. 13, APRIL, 1905, is JUST ISSUED. It comprises a valuable Collection of scarce Books of Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries—wide range of Books on Travel—Manuscripts—Autograph Letters—Book-plates (Ex-Libris)—valuable Engravings, &c. The prices are merely nominal, to make room for New Purchases. CATALOGUES gratis and post free. Please write for one.—THE ANTIQUARIAN BOOK CO., 123, Gray's Inn Road, W.C.

NOW READY, TO BE HAD POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

CATALOGUE 39.—CHINA, JAPAN, and the PHILIPPINE ISLES, from the Sixteenth to the Eighteenth Century. 452 Nos.—JACQUES BOSENTAL, Bookseller and Printseller, 10, Karl Strasse, Munich, Bavaria.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 141 Illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED. Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

W. GLAISHER'S NEW GENERAL CATALOGUE OF REMAINDERS (Spring, 1905)

IS NOW READY, and can be had on application. It contains many important BOOKS, offered at a GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE by

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Wholesale and Export Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

A COLLECTION of over EIGHTY RUBBINGS of MONUMENTAL BRASSES FOR SALE. Some very fine.—Apply for particulars CLARKS HILL, Hampton, Evesham, Wores.

ARUNDEL CHROMOS.

Large number in Stock; many rare ones. Send stamp for this Month's Printed List. SAINT JUDE'S DEPOT, BIRMINGHAM.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—SPINK & SON, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently Timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Solicitors, Messrs. KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TO BE LET for SOME MONTHS this Spring and Summer, a WELL-FURNISHED COTTAGE, pleasantly situated near Church and Post-office, and containing Three Sitting and Five Bed Rooms, and good Offices.—Apply ESTATE OFFICE, Fenchell, Stowmarket, Suffolk.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WINTER APARTMENTS.—Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

SUPERIOR modern, well-appointed HOUSE, the best position in TUNBRIDGE WELLS, TO BE LET FURNISHED, or APARTMENTS.—Mrs. KIDNER, Beausite, Boyne Park, Mount Ephraim.

Sales by Auction.

Engravings and Drawings by the Old Masters.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, April 17, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS and DRAWINGS by the OLD MASTERS, including a Small Collection formed in Italy between the years 1760 and 1780, the Property of a CLERGYMAN. May be viewed two days. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 18, at 1 o'clock precisely, ENGRAVINGS from various Sources, including Mezzotint Portraits after the great Masters of the English Schools; Fancy Subjects in Stipple; and Engravings in Colours by and after Bartolozzi, Norland, Wheatley, Angelica Kaufmann, and others. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Books and Manuscripts, including the Property of W. FRASER RAE, Esq., deceased.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 27, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including the Property of W. FRASER RAE, Esq., deceased, comprising R. F. Stevens's Facsimiles of American Manuscripts, British Museum Pre-historic, Ethnographical and Christie Collection; other Properties, containing Ackerman's Oxford, Westminster Abbey, Foreign Military Gallery, and other Books with Coloured Plates—Publications of the Grolier Club—French Illustrated Books—Works on Costume—Water-Colour Drawings—Historical Works, Extra Illustrated Books—Illuminated Horse—An interesting Collection of Pamphlets and Tracts, chiefly printed in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries—Plays—Early Poetry—Goldsmith's Traveller and Deserted Village, First Editions—and other Works of an interesting character. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Library of the late A. J. HIPKINS, Esq., F.S.A., the eminent Authority on Musical Instruments; a Portion of the Library of the late MACKENZIE WALCOTT, Esq., the well-known Antiquary; and other Properties.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on MONDAY, April 17, and following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, VALUABLE BOOKS, including Grove's History of Music, 5 vols.—Rowlandson's Poetical Magazine, 4 vols.—the Cambridge Shakespeare, 40 vols.—Cervantes' Don Quixote, 4 vols.—Edition de Luxe—Cruikshank, Life of Napoleon, uncut—Curtis's Botanical Magazine, complete to 1899—Edwards's Botanical Register, 33 vols.—Sowerby's English Botany, 22 vols.—Loddiges' Botanical Cabinet, 17 vols.—Curtis's Flora Londinensis, 6 vols. in 2—Boswell's Dorado, 1767—a Musical MS. of the Seventeenth Century—Scott's Guy Mannerling, First Edition—Sheraton's Cabinet Maker, 1791-93, fine copy—Faint, Naples Museum Cabinet, Secret—Williamson's Oriental Field Sports, Coloured Plates, 1807—Horatii Opera, 1483—Racinet, Le Costume Historique, Large Paper—the Studio, Kitton's Charles Dickens by Pen and Pencil, 2 vols.—Lowe's Ferns, 1856—Nichols's Literary Anecdotes and Illustrations, 17 vols.—Viollet-le-Duc, Dictionnaire de l'Architecture, 10 vols.—Dictionnaire du Mobilier Français, 6 vols.—Pipe Roll Society's Publications, a Set—the Iris, 36 vols.—Gentleman's Magazine, 192 vols.—Hendel, Suite de Pièces pour le Clavecin, 1720—Encyclopædia Britannica, Tenth Edition—Britton's Architectural Antiquities, 5 vols. Large Paper—Nicolas's History of the Orders of Knighthood, Plates in Gold and Colours—Grose's Antiquities, 12 vols.—Bayley's Tower of London, Large Paper—Shakespeare's First Folio, the Oxford Reprint—Works on Music, Musicians, Bibliography, Folk-lore, &c.—First Editions of Modern Authors, &c.

Modern Publications and Reminders—Miscellaneous Books in all Classes of Literature.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, April 18, and following Day, at 1 o'clock, MODERN PUBLICATIONS and REMAINDERS, comprising several thousand volumes of Popular Standard Novels—500 Oscar Wilde's Ballad of Reading Gaol—50 Foster's Oxford Men and their Colleges, 2 vols.—150 Anderson's Law of Execution—Surplus Stock of Teubner's Greek and Latin Classics, &c.—also MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS in all Classes of Literature. To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Valuable Books.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., EARLY in MAY, valuable BOOKS, comprising Issues from the Modern Presses, including the Kelmscott Chaucer—beautiful Fine-Art Books—handsome Library Sets of Standard Authors, in calf and morocco bindings—First Editions—Publications of the Learned Societies.—Books of Prints and Engravings. Catalogues are preparing.

Natural History Specimens.

TUESDAY, April 18, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., rare and valuable BIRDS' EGGS—Entomological Specimens, British and Exotic—fine Cabinets—Books—Heads and Horns of Big Game—fine Lion and Tiger Skins—and many general Specimens. Catalogues and all particulars on application.

Photographic Cameras, Lenses, and all Kinds of Accessories, Field Glasses, &c.

THURSDAY, April 20, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., a fine Lot of PHOTOGRAPHIC CAMERAS, LENSES, SHUTTERS, and all kinds of ACCESSORIES, by best Makers—Prism and other Field Binoculars—Astronomical and Field Telescopes—Scientific Instruments—Tools—Fine 14 in. Theodolite by Steward, and other Surveying Instruments—Electrical Instruments and Apparatus—and a large quantity of valuable goods. On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, April 17, and TUESDAY, April 18, ENGRAVINGS, ETCHINGS, and DRAWINGS by and after the Old Masters.

On TUESDAY, April 18, a PORTION of the COLLECTION of CHINESE and JAPANESE OBJECTS of ART, comprising Porcelain, Lacquer, Metal Work, Cloisonné Enamel, Persian, Rhodian, and other Tiles, Eastern Embroideries, &c., formed by Dr. CHRISTOPHER DRESSER, deceased, late of Elm Bank, Barnes; Porcelain, Decorative Objects, and Furniture.

On SATURDAY, April 29, the Choice COLLECTION of MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS of the English and Continental Schools of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq., removed from 28, Oakwood Court, Melbury Road, W., and Carlton Lodge, Bournemouth.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A. Ph.D.
No. 78. APRIL, 1905. Royal 8vo, price 5s.

1. Articles.
NOTES on GAIUS GRACCHUS. By W. Warde Fowler. Part I.
BLAKE and the BATTLE of SANTA CRUZ. By Prof. Firth, LL.D.
The NORTHERN QUESTION in 1717. By J. F. Chance. Part II.
2. Notes and Documents.
The BURTON ABBEY SURVEYS. By J. Horace Round.
The ST. ALBANS COUNCIL of 1213. By H. W. C. Davis.
AN OXFORDSHIRE WILL of 1250-1231. By the Rev. H. Salter.
The MANUSCRIPTS and DATE of MARSIGLIO of PADUA'S 'DEFENSOR PACIS' By James Sullivan.
The NAME of NAVARINO. By William Miller.
SIXTEENTH-CENTURY MAPS of IRELAND. By R. Dunlop.
3. Reviews of Books. 4. Notices of Periodical Publications.
London: Longmans, Green & Co.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. Price 2s.

Contents.—APRIL.

- RESULTS of the NATIONAL ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION:—
- I. GEOGRAPHICAL. With Portrait, 4 Plates, and Magnetic Chart. By Capt. Robert F. Scott, C.V.O. R.N.
- II. NOTES on the PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY of the ANTARCTIC. By H. T. Ferrar, M.A. F.G.S. With 3 Plates and Sketch Map.
- III. ON the METEOROLOGY of the PART of the ANTARCTIC REGIONS where the "DISCOVERY" WINTERED. By Lieut. C. W. Royds, R.N.
- IV. The DISTRIBUTION of ANTARCTIC SEALS and BIRDS. By Dr. E. A. Wilson. With 1 Plate.
- V. PRELIMINARY REPORT of the BIOLOGICAL COLLECTIONS of the "DISCOVERY." By T. V. Hodgson.
- OBSERVATIONS on the ANTARCTIC SEA-ICE. By Capt. W. Colbeck, R.N.R. With 2 Plates.
- The GREAT ZIMBABWE, and other ANCIENT RUINS in RHODESIA. By Richard N. Hall. With 4 Illustrations.
- EXPLORATION of WESTERN TIBET and RUDOK. By Capt. C. G. Rawling. With 5 Plates and Map.
- PTOLEMY'S MAP of ASIA MINOR: Method of Construction. By the Rev. H. S. Cronin. With 2 Maps.
- REVIEWS:—
- EUROPE: British Trade. ASIA: Geography of India; The Exploration of Further India; Affairs of Asia. AFRICA: African Races; The Masai; Azurara's Chronicle; History of Madagascar. AUSTRALASIA and PACIFIC ISLANDS: Fiji Folk-lore.
- The MONTHLY RECORD.
- OBITUARY:—The Earl of Southesk. Stephen William Silver. Gabriel James Morrison. Prof. Eduard Kitcher. The Rev. S. L. Graham Sandberg.
- CORRESPONDENCE:—Protection from Snow-glare. By Major R. L. Kennion.—Botany of Grinnell Land. By H. C. Hart.
- London: Edward Stanford 12, 13, 11, Long Acre, W.C.

PUBLISHED ON THE 15th OF EACH MONTH.

Price 1s. net (postage 3d.).

THE BEST LITERARY AMERICAN MAGAZINE.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

APRIL. Vol. XCV. No. 570.

Contents.

- STRANGER THAN FICTION. Lafcadio Hearn.
- THOREAU'S JOURNAL. IV. Henry D. Thoreau.
- The COST of WAR. Charles J. Bullock.
- The ETERNAL LIFE. Hugo Münsterberg.
- The COMING of the TIME. A Novel. IV-VII. Margaret Sherwood.
- A RAY WINDOW in FLORIDA. Bradford Torrey.
- IN the DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S OFFICE. Charles C. Nott, Jr.
- The WHITE LLAMA. A Story. Charles F. Lummis.
- HENRY JAMES. W. C. Brownell.
- THE WARFARE of HUMANITY with UNREASON. Christian Thomasius. I. Andrew D. White.
- LETTERS of MARK. Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- THE RECOMPENSE. A Story. Annie Hamilton Donnell.
- SIGNIFICANT BOOKS on POLITICS and ECONOMICS. Winthrop More Daniels.
- LETTERS to LITERARY STATESMEN. II. To Arthur James Balfour. "Alciphron."
- THE RIGHT and WRONG of the MONROE DOCTRINE. Charles F. Dole.
- The CONTRIBUTORS' CLUB
- London: Gay & Bird, 22, Bedford Street, W.C.

ON the NORTHERN COAST of CYPRUS;
Unsolved Problems in Electrical Engineering; Society of Painters in Water Colours; Magazines and Reviews; Buildings of St. Louis Exhibition (Architectural Association); the Surveyors' Institution Meeting; Typical Structures of Concrete Steel (Student's Column); and Illustrations of Bristol Art Gallery and All Hallows Church, Lombard Street, E.C.; &c.—See the BUILDERS of April 15 (Ad. by post 4½d.). Through any Newagent or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

NOW READY.

PHILOSOPHICAL TRANSACTIONS of the ROYAL SOCIETY of LONDON.

Series II, containing Papers of Biological Character.

Vol. CXCVII., pp. 408, with 22 Plates, price 17. 13s. 6d.

London: Harrison & Sons, 45, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED, 290 pp., 5s.

FINDS and ANGELS.

A STORY of the LIVING DEAD.

Written throughout with spirit and with verve and literary skill. This thrilling narrative, once read, will never be forgotten, for no matter whether the scene is in Hades or Paradise, the interest is enthralling.

"The punishment 'fits the crime' in quite a Gilbertian manner."

St. James's Gazette.

A. H. Stockwell, 6, Creed Lane, Ludgate Hill, E.C.

THE AGE of MARIE ANTOINETTE. A Sketch of the Period of European Revival, which claims among its representatives Goethe, Prudhon, Gainsborough, and Mozart. By CHARLES NEWTON SCOTT. New and Revised Edition.

[Three-and-Sixpence.

London: The Leadenhall Press, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

8vo, cloth, price 3s. net.

THE FISH RIVER BUSH and its FAUNA. By W. G. BLACK, F.R.S. Illustrated. Young J. Pentland, Edinburgh and London.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

MISS CORELLI'S GREAT BOOK WILL BE READY ON MONDAY NEXT, APRIL 17.

ORDER IMMEDIATELY AT YOUR LIBRARY OR BOOKSELLER'S TO AVOID DISAPPOINTMENT.

FREE OPINIONS.

BY

MARIE CORELLI.

APRIL 17.

Price 6s.

The JAPANESE SPIRIT. By Okakura Yoshisaburo. With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. [Just published.]

PENTHESILEA. A Poem. By Lawrence Binyon, Author of 'The Death of Adam,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

A REGISTER of NATIONAL BIBLIOGRAPHY. By William PRIDEAUX COURTNEY. In 2 vols. demy 8vo, 31s. 6d. net.

CATHERINE DE MEDICI and the FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL, Author of 'Women and Men of the French Renaissance.' 'The Household of the Lafayettes,' &c. Demy 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, 15s. net.

"She has displayed in the pages before us the most excellent qualities of temper, industry, and perception, and in her treatment of an enigmatic and elusive figure she has neither ignored the complications of her material nor shrunk from solving its perplexities."—Fall Mall Gazette.

JOHN GRAHAM OF CLAVERHOUSE, Viscount of Dundee, 1648-89. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"Apart from the personal interest of the story, the book throws welcome light on one of the most dramatic epochs of Scottish history."—Standard.

The KING in EXILE (CHARLES II.). By Eva Scott, Author of 'Rupert Prince Palatine.' Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

"Miss Scott's work bears tokens of deep research and of judicious selection. It is well annotated and illustrated, and has a long and carefully compiled index."—Morning Post.

The SUN and the SERPENT. A Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy 8vo, with 33 Full-Page Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

"Dr. Oldham speaks from a well-informed mind, and utters his views with such moderation and clearness that they commend themselves to serious consideration."—Scotsman.

A HISTORY of the ANCIENT WORLD. By George Stephen GOODSPEED, Ph.D., Professor of Ancient History in the University of Chicago. With Illustrations, Maps, and Plans. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"A distinguishing feature of the work consists of the very judicious helps which the method adopted in it affords to the student."—Glasgow Herald.

JÖRN UHL. By Gustav Frenssen. Crown 8vo. 6s. [Just published.]

The most popular German novel of modern times.

The author, who woke up to find himself famous and his small congregation of Lutheran peasants elbowing out of their tiny church every Sunday by literary pilgrims curious to see the Primitif who had so touched the sophisticated heart of modern Germany, is the son of a village carpenter, and was born within the sound of the North Sea, in the remote village of Barlt, in 1863. The novel has been translated by Mr. F. S. Delmer, of Berlin University.

TALES of RYE TOWN. By Maud Stepney Rawson, Author of 'A Lady of the Regency,' &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The best book of short stories we have read for a year or two—one of the best we have ever read."—Morning Post.

JOHN FLETCHER'S MADONNA. By Mrs. Comyns Carr, Author of 'Cottage Folks,' &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mrs. Comyns Carr has very cleverly worked out an original idea, contriving her picture in a perfect mosaic of picturesque detail.....The Baron strongly recommends it to those capable of enjoying a good novel when they get it." Punch.

A ROUGH REFORMER. By Ernest Glanville, Author of 'The Kloof Bride.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Smartly written and witty, and full of character and grim satire."—Daily Mail.

MR. ERNEST THOMPSON SETON'S NEW BOOK.

MONARCH, the BIG BEAR. By Ernest Thompson Seton. With many Drawings by the Author in Half-Tone and Line. 5s. net.

"A more charming and pathetic animal story was never written even by that sympathetic student of wild life, Thompson Seton."—Daily Express.

Please write for COMPLETE CATALOGUE and ANNOUNCEMENT LIST, and PROSPECTUSES of all NEW BOOKS.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., LIMITED, 16, James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

MR. MURRAY'S STANDARD WORKS.

AUSTIN, JOHN.

LECTURES on JURISPRUDENCE. Edited by ROBERT CAMPBELL. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 32s.

STUDENT'S EDITION of AUSTIN'S JURISPRUDENCE. By ROBERT CAMPBELL. Crown 8vo, 12s.

ANALYSIS of AUSTIN'S JURISPRUDENCE. By GORDON CAMPBELL. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BERENSON, BERNHARD.

The DRAWINGS of the FLORENTINE PAINTERS. With a Copious Catalogue Raisonné, and 150 Facsimile Illustrations. 2 vols. folio, 21l. net.

BISHOP, Mrs. (Isabella L. Bird).

HAWAIIAN ARCHIPELAGO. Illustrations. Cheap Edition. 2s. 6d. net.

A LADY'S LIFE in the ROCKY MOUNTAINS. Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The GOLDEN CHERSONESE and the WAY THITHER. Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 14s.

UNBEATEN TRACKS in JAPAN. Illustrations. Cheap Edition. Large crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

KOREA and her NEIGHBOURS. With Maps and numerous Illustrations. 2 vols. large crown 8vo, 24s. Also in 1 vol. 5s. net.

JOURNEYS in PERSIA and KURDISTAN. With Maps and Illustrations. 2 vols. crown 8vo, 24s.

The YANG-TSE VALLEY and BEYOND. With Map and Illustrations. 8vo, 21s. net.

BORROW, GEORGE.

(The only Authorized and Complete Edition.)

The BIBLE in SPAIN. 2 vols. crown 8vo, 12s.; New Edition, in 1 vol. 6s.; Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d.

The GYPSIES of SPAIN. New Edition. Illustrated. 6s.; Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d.

LAVENGRO. New Edition. Illustrated. 6s.; Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d.

ROMANY RYE. New Edition. Illustrated. 6s.; Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d.

WILD WALES. New Edition. Illustrated. 6s.; Cheap Edition, 2s. 6d.

BYRON, LORD, The WORKS of.

A New Text, Collated with the Original MSS. and Revised Proofs, with many hitherto Unpublished Additions. With Bibliographies and full Indices. With Portraits and Illustrations. 13 vols. crown 8vo, 6s. each.

POETRY. 7 vols. Edited by ERNEST II. COLERIDGE.

LETTERS. 6 vols. Edited By ROWLAND E. PROTHERO, M.V.O.

LIFE, LETTERS, and JOURNALS. By THOMAS MOORE. Portraits. Royal 8vo, 7s. 6d.

POETICAL WORKS. Popular Edition. Royal 8vo, 7s. 6d.

CRIPPS, WILFRED.

OLD ENGLISH PLATE. Eighth Edition. With 123 Illustrations and 2,600 Facsimile Plate Marks. 8vo, 21s. net.

** Tables of the Date-Letters and Marks sold separately, 5s.

OLD FRENCH PLATE. With Tables of Makers' Marks, in addition to the Plate Marks. 8vo, 10s. 6d.

CROWE and CAVALCASELLE.

A HISTORY of PAINTING in Italy, Umbria, Florence, and Siena, from the 2nd to the 16th Century. A New Edition, with Editorial Notes by LANGTON DOUGLAS, with upwards of 200 Illustrations. Large demy 8vo. 6 vols. 17. 1s. net each.

Vol. I. EARLY CHRISTIAN ART.

Vol. II. GIOTTO and the GIOTTESQUES.

DARWIN, CHARLES.

CROSS and SELF-FERTILIZATION in the VEGETABLE KINGDOM. 9s.

DESCENT of MAN, and SELECTION in RELATION to SEX. Woodcuts. Library Edition, 2 vols. 15s.; Cheaper Edition, 1 vol. 7s. 6d.; Popular Edition, 2s. 6d. net.

DIFFERENT FORMS of FLOWERS on PLANTS of the SAME SPECIES. 7s. 6d.

EXPRESSION of the EMOTIONS in MAN and ANIMALS. Illustrations. 12s.; Popular Edition, 2s. 6d. net.

FORMATION of VEGETABLE MOULD THROUGH the ACTION of WORMS. Illustrations. 6s.; Popular Edition, 2s. 6d. net.

INSECTIVOROUS PLANTS. Woodcuts. 9s.

JOURNAL of a NATURALIST DURING a VOYAGE ROUND the WORLD. Illustrations. Medium 8vo, 21s.; Cheaper Edition, 3s. 6d.; Popular Edition, 2s. 6d. net.

MOVEMENTS and HABITS of CLIMBING PLANTS. Woodcuts. 6s.

ORIGIN of SPECIES by MEANS of NATURAL SELECTION. Library Edition. 2 vols. 12s.; 1 vol. 6s.; Popular Edition, 2s. 6d. net; and in paper cover, 1s. net.

VARIATION of ANIMALS and PLANTS UNDER DOMESTICATION. Woodcuts. 2 vols. 15s.; Popular Edition, 2 vols. 5s. net.

VARIOUS CONTRIVANCES by which ORCHIDS are FERTILIZED by INSECTS. Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.; Popular Edition, 2s. 6d. net.

LIFE and LETTERS of CHARLES DARWIN. 3 vols. 8vo, 36s.; 1 vol. Edition, 7s. 6d.; Popular Edition, 2s. 6d. net.

MORE LETTERS of CHARLES DARWIN. Edited by FRANCIS DARWIN and A. C. SEWARD. Portraits. 2 vols. 32s. net.

FERGUSON, JAMES.

HISTORY of ARCHITECTURE in all COUNTRIES from the EARLIEST TIMES. With 1,700 Illustrations. 5 vols. medium 8vo, 6l. 6s.

Vols. I. and II. ANCIENT and MEDIEVAL. 63s.

Vol. III. INDIAN and EASTERN. 31s. 6d.

Vols. IV. and V. MODERN. 31s. 6d.

(Arrangements have been made with Booksellers enabling them to offer special terms for the above work complete.)

GIBBON, EDWARD.

HISTORY of the DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE. Edited, with Notes, by MILMAN, GUIZOT, and Sir Wm. SMITH. Maps, 8 vols. demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

(Arrangements have been made with Booksellers enabling them to offer special terms for the above work complete.)

GOLDSMITH, OLIVER.

The WORKS of. Edited, with Notes, by PETER CUNNINGHAM. Vignettes. 4 vols. 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

(Arrangements have been made with Booksellers enabling them to offer special terms for the above work complete.)

GROTE, GEORGE.

HISTORY of GREECE. Portrait, Map, and Plans. 10 vols. Crown 8vo, 5s. each. (The Volumes may be had separately.)

HALLAM, HENRY.

The CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY of ENGLAND. Library Edition, 3 vols. 8vo, 30s.; Cabinet Edition, 3 vols. post 8vo, 12s.; Student's Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HISTORY of EUROPE DURING the MIDDLE AGES. Cabinet Edition, 3 vols. post 8vo, 12s.; Student's Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

LITERARY HISTORY of EUROPE DURING the XV., XVI., and XVII. CENTURIES. Library Edition, 3 vols. 8vo, 36s.; Cabinet Edition, 4 vols. post 8vo, 16s.

KUGLER'S HANDBOOK OF PAINTING.

The ITALIAN SCHOOLS of PAINTING. Sixth Edition, Revised. With nearly 250 Illustrations. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 30s.

The GERMAN, FLEMISH, and DUTCH SCHOOLS. Third Edition, Revised. With 60 Illustrations. 2 vols. crown 8vo, 24s.

MAINE, SIR HENRY S.

ANCIENT LAW. Cheap Edition. Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

VILLAGE COMMUNITIES in the EAST and WEST. Demy 8vo, 9s.

LECTURE on the EARLY HISTORY of INSTITUTIONS. Demy 8vo, 9s.

DISSERTATIONS on EARLY LAW and CUSTOM. Demy 8vo, 9s.

POPULAR GOVERNMENT. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MILMAN, DEAN.

HISTORY of the JEWS. 3 vols. post 8vo, 4s. each.

EARLY CHRISTIANITY. 3 vols. post 8vo, 4s. each.

LATIN CHRISTIANITY. 9 vols. post 8vo, 4s. each.

(Arrangements have been made with Booksellers enabling them to offer special terms for Complete Sets of the above works.)

MOTLEY, JOHN LOTHROP.

The UNITED NETHERLANDS. Portraits. 4 vols. crown 8vo, 6s. each. Also Library Edition. 4 vols. demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

LIFE and DEATH of JOHN of BARNEVELD. Illustrations. 2 vols. crown 8vo, 6s. each. Also Library Edition. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

The RISE of the DUTCH REPUBLIC. With Illustrations. Library Edition. 3 vols. demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

POPE, ALEXANDER.

LIFE and WORKS of. With Introductions and Notes by J. W. CROKER, Rev. W. ELWIN, and W. J. COURTHOPE. 10 vols. with Portraits, demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. each.

(Arrangements have been made with Booksellers enabling them to offer special terms for the above work complete.)

SMILES, SAMUEL.

SELF-HELP. 3s. 6d. | THRIFT. 3s. 6d.

CHARACTER. 3s. 6d. | DUTY. 3s. 6d.

INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY. 3s. 6d.

LIFE and LABOUR. 3s. 6d.

MEN of INVENTION and INDUSTRY. 3s. 6d.

The LIFE of a SCOTCH NATURALIST, THOS. EDWARD. 3s. 6d.

JAMES NASMYTH, Engineer. 3s. 6d.

JASMIN, Barber, Poet, Philanthropist. 3s. 6d.

JOSIAH WEDGWOOD. The great Artistic Potter. 3s. 6d.

BOY'S VOYAGE ROUND the WORLD. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.

LIFE of GEORGE STEPHENSON. 2s. 6d.

LIVES of the ENGINEERS. Portraits and Illustrations. 5 vols. crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each. Also a Cheap Edition. Large crown 8vo, with extra Illustrations, 3s. 6d. each.

BRINDLEY, VERMUYDEN, MYDDLETON, PERRY SNEYTON and RENNIE.

METCALFE and TELFORD.

BOULTON and WATT.

GEORGE and ROBERT STEPHENSON.

ROBERT DICK, Geologist and Botanist. Illustrations. 12s.

The HUGUENOTS. Their Settlements, Churches, and Industries in England and Ireland. 7s. 6d.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

C. GRIFFIN &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS AND NEW EDITIONS.

JUST OUT, in medium 8vo, handsome cloth. With over 100 Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

CONSTRUCTIONAL STEEL WORK.

Being Notes on the Practical Aspect and the Principles of Design; together with an Account of the Present Methods and Tools of Manufacture.

By A. W. FARNSWORTH, A.M.I.Mech.E.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

LIST OF CHAPTERS.

PART I. PRACTICAL DESIGNING.

- CHAP.
I. IDEAL DESIGNING.
II. THE GOVERNING FACTOR—ECONOMY.
III. THE DUTY OF THE DESIGNER.
IV. TESTS AND ANALYSES.
V. THE SPECIFICATION.
VI. THE DRAWINGS—(a) RIVETS.
VII. " (b) MATERIAL SIZES.
VIII. " (c) FINISH.
IX. INSPECTION—I.
X. " II.
XI. ESTIMATING.

PART II. PRACTICAL SHOP WORK.

- CHAP.
XII. OFFICE ROUTINE.
XIII. THE TEMPLATE SHOP.
XIV. THE GIRDER SHOP—I.
XV. " II.
XVI. " III.
XVII. " IV.
XVIII. THE SMITHY.
XIX. FINISHING AND DESPATCHING—MISCELLANEOUS.
XX. GENERAL EQUIPMENT.
INDEX.

"One of the most important and satisfactory technical works we have seen for a long time."—Ironmonger.

PUBLISHED TO-DAY, in large crown 8vo, handsome cloth, with over 200 Illustrations, 6s. net.

AN INTRODUCTION to the DESIGN of BEAMS, GIRDERS, and COLUMNS, in Machines and Structures, with Examples in Graphic Statics. By WILLIAM H. ATHERTON, M.Sc. M.I.Mech.E., &amp;c.

Contents:—Introductory—Applied Forces and Reactions—The Equilibrium of a Beam—Stress, Strain, and Elasticity—Strength of Rectangular Beams—Applications—Strength of non-Rectangular Beams—Shearing Action in Beams—Diagrams of Shearing Force and Bending Moment—Strength of Rolled Joints—Moment of Inertia—Numerical Applications—Experiments on Beams—The Deflection of Beams—Some Types of Girders—Braced Girders, Stress Diagrams—The Strength of Columns—INDEX.

READY NEXT WEEK, SECOND EDITION, Revised and Enlarged, with important Appendix. In handsome cloth, very fully illustrated, 25s. net.

The METALLURGY of STEEL. By F. W. Harbord, Assoc.R.S.M.

F.I.C., Consulting Metallurgist and Analytical Chemist to the Indian Government, Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's Hill. With 37 Plates, 280 Illustrations in the Text, and nearly 100 Micro-Sections of Steel, and a Section on the MECHANICAL TREATMENT OF STEEL, by J. W. HALL, A.M.Inst.C.E.

Abridged Contents:—The Plant, Machinery, Methods and Chemistry of the Bessemer and of the Open Hearth Processes (Acid and Basic)—The Mechanical Treatment of Steel, comprising Mill Practice, Plant, and Machinery—The Influence of Metalloids, Heat Treatment, Special Steels, Micro-structure, Testing, and Specifications.

"We cannot conclude without earnestly recommending all who may be interested as makers or users of steel, which practically means the whole of the engineering profession, to make themselves acquainted with it as speedily as possible, and this may be the more easily done as the published price, considering the size of the book, is extremely moderate." Engineer on the last Edition.

AT PRESS, SECOND EDITION, Revised and greatly Enlarged. With many additional Plates.

The PRINCIPLES and CONSTRUCTION of PUMPING

MACHINERY (Steam and Water Pressure). With Practical Illustrations of ENGINES and PUMPS applied to MINING, TOWN WATER SUPPLY, DRAINAGE of LANDS, &amp;c., also Economy and Efficiency Trials of Pumping Machinery. By HENRY DAVEY, Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, Member of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers, F.G.S., &amp;c.

JUST OUT, SECOND EDITION, Revised, Enlarged, Rewritten throughout. In large 8vo, very fully illustrated, 15s. net.

CALCAREOUS CEMENTS: their Nature, Manufacture, and Uses. With some Observations upon Cement Testing. By GILBERT R. REDGRAVE, A.I.C.E., and CHARLES SPACKMAN, F.C.S.

Contents:—Introduction—The Burning of Lime—Retrospective and Historical Review of the Cement Industry—The Early Days of Portland Cement—The Composition of Portland Cement—The Chemical Analysis of Cement, Raw Materials, Portland Cement, and Lime—Analysis of Raw Materials and Portland Cement, Calculation of Proportions, Rapid Methods of making Determinations, and Specific Gravity.—Preparation of the Mixture of Raw Materials by the Wet Method—The Dry Process: Treatment of the Raw Materials by Dry Methods—Crushing, Grinding, and Auxiliary Machinery—Calculation of the Cement Mixture—Revolving or Rotary Kilns—Grinding, Storing, and Packing the Cement—Dust Collecting Contrivances—The Composition of Mortar and Concrete—Cement Testing—Accelerated Tests for Constancy of Volume—Employment of Slags for Cement Making—Scott's Cement, Selenitic Cement, Cements produced from Sewage Sludge and the Refuse from Alkali Works, Sidero Cement—The Plaster Cements—Specifications for Portland Cement—Appendices A, B, C, D, E, F—INDEX.

READY SHORTLY, THIRD EDITION, Revised and Enlarged. Fully illustrated, 10s. 6d.

PROPERTIES of MATTER (being Vol. I. of 'A Text-Book of Physics'). By J. H. POYNTING, Sc.D. F.R.S., Late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; Professor of Physics, Birmingham University; and J. J. THOMSON, M.A. F.R.S., Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; Professor of Experimental Physics in the University of Cambridge.

Contents:—Gravitation—The Acceleration of Gravity—Elasticity—Stresses and Strains—Torsion—Bending of Rods—Spiral Springs—Collision—Compressibility of Liquids—Pressures and Volumes of Gases—Thermal Effects Accompanying Strain—Capillarity—Surface Tension—Laplace's Theory of Capillarity—Diffusion of Liquids—Diffusion of Gases—Viscosity of Liquids—INDEX.

READY SHORTLY, SECOND EDITION, thoroughly Revised. Illustrated, 16s.

The CHEMISTRY of MANUFACTURING PROCESSES. By

BERTRAM BLOUNT, F.I.C. F.C.S. Assoc.Inst.C.E.; and A. G. BLOXAM, F.I.C. F.C.S.

General Contents:—Sulphuric Acid Manufacture—Alkali, &c.—Destructive Distillation—Artificial Manure—Petroleum—Lime and Cement—Clay and Glass—Sugar and Starch—Brewing and Distilling—Oils, Resins, and Varnishes—Soap and Candles—Textiles and Bleaching—Colouring Matters, Dyeing, and Printing—Paper and Pasteboard—Pigments and Paints—Leather, Glue, and Size—Explosives and Matches—Minor Manufactures.

READY SHORTLY, AN IMPORTANT NEW WORK.—In one large 8vo Volume, handsome cloth.

THE SYNTHETIC DYE STUFFS,

AND THE INTERMEDIATE PRODUCTS FROM WHICH THEY ARE DERIVED.

By JOHN CANNELL CAIN, D.Sc., and JOCELYN FIELD THORPE, Ph.D.

IN THREE PARTS.

Part I. A THEORETICAL DESCRIPTION of the INTERMEDIATE PRODUCTS and DYE STUFFS.

Part II. METHODS for PREPARING the more IMPORTANT INTERMEDIATE PRODUCTS and DYE STUFFS, on the LABORATORY SCALE.

Part III. The ANALYSIS and IDENTIFICATION of INTERMEDIATE PRODUCTS and DYE STUFFS, together with METHODS for DETECTING DYE STUFFS on the FIBRE.

JUST OUT, in large crown 8vo, handsome cloth, with numerous Illustrations, including a Portrait of the late Sir Clement Le Neve Foster, in Foxdale Mine, 6s. net.

The INVESTIGATION of MINE AIR.

Being Translations by Sir CLEMENT LE NEVE FOSTER, D.Sc. F.R.S., of Important Papers by Dr. OTTO BRUNCK, Professor in the Royal Saxon Mining College, Freiberg, and LEON POUSSIGUE, Manager of Ronchamp Collieries, France. To which is added an Original Monograph by JOHN SCOTT HALDANE, M.D. F.R.S., Fellow of New College, and Lecturer in Physiology and Mining Hygiene, Oxford University.

Contents:—Part I. By Prof. BRUNCK. Introduction—The Constituents of Mine Air—Taking the Samples—Determination of the most Important Constituents—Arrangement of the Laboratory—Part II. By LEON POUSSIGUE. Superintendence of the Ventilation of Ronchamp Collieries—Analysis of the Mine Air—Part III. By Dr. HALDANE. Methods of Analysis—The Interpretation of Mine Air Analyses—APPENDIX. The Effects of Carbonic Oxide in connexion with the Snafell Mine Disaster in 1897 (Compiled from Sir C. LE NEVE FOSTER'S Report to the Home Secretary)—INDEX.

"Concise, clear, authoritative, and carefully illustrated." Scotsman.

SHORTLY, SECOND EDITION, Revised and Enlarged. Fully illustrated.

ELECTRICAL PRACTICE in COLLIERIES. By DANIEL BURNS, M.E. M.Inst.M.E.

Units of Measurement, Conductors, &c.—The Theory of the Dynamo—The Dynamo, Details of Construction and Working—Motors—Lighting Installations in Collieries—Pumping by Electricity—Electrical Haulage—Coal Cutting—Miscellaneous Applications of Electricity in Mines—INDEX.

"A clear and concise introduction to electrical practice in collieries."—Mining Journal on last Edition.

JUST OUT, in large crown 8vo, handsome cloth, fully illustrated, 5s. net.

OIL FUEL: its Supply, Composition, and Application. By SYDNEY H. NORTH, late Editor of the Petroleum Review.

AT PRESS.

Large crown 8vo, handsome cloth, fully illustrated.

SMOKE ABATEMENT. By Wm. NICHOLSON, Chief Smoke Inspector to the Sheffield Corporation.

Contents:—Introduction—General Legislation against the Smoke Nuisance—Local Legislation against the Smoke Nuisance—Smoke Abatement—Smoke from Boilers, Furnaces, and Kilns—Private Dwelling-House Smoke—Chimneys and their Construction—Smoke Prevention and Fuel Savers—Waste Gas from Metallurgical Furnaces—Summary and Conclusions—INDEX.

JUST OUT, FOURTH EDITION.

Thoroughly Revised and greatly Enlarged, 10s. 6d.

VALVES and VALVE-GEARING. A

Practical Text-Book for the Use of Engineers, Draughtsmen, and Students. By CHARLES HURST, Practical Draughtsman.

Part I. STEAM ENGINE VALVES.

Part II. GAS ENGINE VALVES and GEARS.

Part III. AIR COMPRESSOR VALVES and GEARING.

Part IV. PUMP VALVES.

EIGHTH EDITION, thoroughly Revised, Pocket Size, leather, 8s. 6d.

A POCKET-BOOK of MARINE

ENGINEERING RULES and TABLES. For the Use of Marine Engineers, Naval Architects, Designers, Draughtsmen, Superintendents, and others. By A. E. SEATON, M.I.C.E. M.I.Mech.E. M.I.N.A., and H. M. ROUTHWAITE, M.I.Mech.E. M.I.N.A.

"ADMIRABLY FULFILLS its purpose."—Marine Engineer.

FOURTH EDITION, in handsome cloth, very fully illustrated, 12s. 6d.

VOLUME II. of

A TEXT-BOOK of APPLIED

MECHANICS and MECHANICAL ENGINEERING. Specially Arranged for the Use of Engineering Students Qualifying for the Institution of Civil Engineers, the Diplomas and Degrees of Technical Colleges and Universities, Advanced Science Certificates of British and Colonial Boards of Education, and Honour Certificates of the City and Guilds of London Institute, in Mechanical Engineering. By ANDREW JAMIESON, M.Inst. C.E., &amp;c.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF

J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

VOL. V. READY NEXT TUESDAY.

DIARY AND LETTERS OF
MADAME D'ARBLAY(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE
BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN
DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other
Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I., 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II.,
1781-86. Vol. III., August, 1786, to June, 1788. Vol. IV.,
July, 1788, to July, 1791. Vol. V., July, 1791, to April, 1802.
8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN
ENGLAND.By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. FROM the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo,
8s. 6d. net.

Previously Published.

Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

1905 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE

STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1905. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D.
With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN

TRAGEDY:

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

MACMILLAN'S GUIDE TO

ITALY AND SICILY.

With 19 Maps and 33 Plans. Fifth Edition. 10s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICH-SEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

AN ANGLER'S HOURS.

By H. T. SHERINGHAM, Angling Editor of the Field.
Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Sheringham has a fluent and picturesque style, which is a delightful gift, but he has behind it also that store of knowledge of which the absence cannot be cloaked by the most skilful affectation."PRINCIPLES & METHODS OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE.By A. C. PIGOU, M.A. F.S.S., Fellow of the Royal Economic Society. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.THE LOGIC OF HUMAN CHARACTER.By CHARLES J. WHITBY, B.A. M.D. Cantab. Crown
8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S
LIST.

SECOND IMPRESSION NEARLY READY.

L H A S A.

By PERCEVAL LANDON,
Special Correspondent of the
Times. With an Introduction by
Col. Sir FRANCIS YOUNG-
HUSBAND, K.C.I.E. In 2 vols.
royal 8vo, beautifully illustrated,
*2l. 2s. net.*An Illustrated Prospectus, with Extracts from Reviews, sent free on application.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

READY NEXT WEEK in 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.THE RUSSIAN NAVY IN THE PRESENT WAR.By Capt. N. KLADO,
Of the Imperial Russian Navy.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.

READY NEXT WEEK, in 1 vol. 6s.

MARIAN SAX.

By Madame ALBANESI,
Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One
Elder,' &c.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME OF THE KING.

Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War.

By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times."Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."

Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW IN GREAT DEMAND.

In 1 vol. medium 8vo, with over 250 Illustrations, 18s. net.

ANTARCTICA.

Two Years amongst the Ice of the South Pole.

By Dr. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD.

"The author has as good a story to tell as any polar explorer since Nansen, and he has told it with spirit and enthusiasm."—Times.MR. DOWNEY'S BOOK IS THE SUCCESS OF THE SEASON.

In 1 vol. large crown 8vo, with 16 Portrait Sketches, 6s. net.

TWENTY YEARS AGO.

A Book of Anecdote.

By EDMUND DOWNEY,

Author of 'Through Green Glasses.'

"The anecdotes are all fresh goods, and in the humour of them there is an unmistakable taste of reality which adds immensely to the flavour."—St. James's Gazette."Mr. Downey has an ample collection of good stories, and knows how to tell them well."—World.A BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST ON CHILD LIFE
AND LABOUR IN OUR BIG CITIES.

The CHILD SLAVES of BRITAIN.

By ROBERT SHERRARD. Author of 'The White
Slaves of England,' &c. In 1 vol. 6s.

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, illustrated covers.

HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M.
CROKER.The MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 182, High Holborn, W.C.T. FISHER UNWIN'S
NEW BOOKS.

THE

PROGRESS OF HELLENISM
IN ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE.By JOHN PENTLAND MAHAFFY,
D.D. Mus.Doc. Dublin, Hon. D.C.L. Oxon, sometime
Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin. 5s. net.

ROBERT ADAM,

Artist and Architect; his Works and his System.

By PERCY FITZGERALD,

Author of 'The Westminster Cathedral: a Criticism,' &c.

Illustrated from Photographs. 10s. 6d. net.

This is the outcome of many years' study, and Mr. Fitzgerald writes with enthusiastic admiration for Adam's character and genius.WHAT I HAVE SEEN WHILE FISHING,
AND HOW I HAVE CAUGHT MY FISH.

By PHILIP GEEN,

for Twenty-seven Years President of the London Anglers' Association.

With 73 Illustrations. Second Edition.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. net.

L'AVOCAT PATELIN.

The Famous Farce of the Fifteenth Century.

Translated from the French

By SAMUEL F. G. WHITAKER.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

"Reads smoothly and preserves the fire of the piece."—Manchester Guardian.

NEW AND CHEAP EDITIONS.

ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE in the MIDDLE AGES. By J. J. JUSSERAND.
Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.The HISTORY of FLORENCE (for the First Two Centuries). By Prof. PASQUALE VILLARI. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net.

MAXIM GORKY'S STORIES.

Bound in cloth, 1s. net each.

THREE of THEM.

The OUTCASTS.

The MAN WHO WAS AFRAID.

SIXPENNY EDITION.

The HUNGRY FORTIES: Life under the Bread Tax. With an Introduction by Mrs. COBDEN UNWIN. Paper covers, 6d.

NEW 6s. NOVELS

LUCIE and I. By Henriette Corkran,
Author of 'Celebrities and I' and 'Oddities and I.' Crown 8vo, 6s.A PAGAN'S LOVE. By Constance CLYDE. 6s.

A New Volume in "The First Novel Library."

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

SATURDAY, APRIL 15, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  | PAGE    |
|--|---------|
| REMINISCENCES OF A RADICAL PARSON ... ..   | 455     |
| NOTES FROM A DIARY ... ..  | 456     |
| A NEW LIFE OF CLAVERHOUSE ... ..   | 456     |
| 'SONNETS FROM THE PORTUGUESE' IN FRENCH ...  | 457     |
| A COMMENTARY ON MAGNA CARTA ... ..   | 458     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Golden Pool; A Pagan's Love;The Stepping-Stone; The Seeker; Crittenden;The Bell and the Arrow; The Two Captains;Langbarrow Hall; The Seething Pot) ...   | 459-460 |
| FRENCH BOOKS ... ..  | 460     |
| THEOLOGICAL BOOKS ... ..   | 460     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The Twentieth-Century Child;Trade Unions; Statistics of Australia and NewZealand; Gladstonian Ghosts; Borough Customs;Machiavelli and the Modern State; The Story ofFerrara; Aristotle's Politics; The Decameron andHeptameron; Reprints; Petrarch at Vaucluse) ...                                   | 461-463 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 463     |
| B. F. STEVENS'S CATALOGUE-INDEX OF MANUSCRIPTSRELATING TO AMERICA; A LYKE-WAKE DIRGE;HYMNS FROM THE GREEK OFFICE BOOKS; THESCOTT SALE ... ..   | 464-465 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 465     |
| SCIENCE—ANTARCTICA; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES;SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ...  | 466-469 |
| FINE ARTS—GEORGE MORLAND; THE ANCIENTCASTLES OF IRELAND; THE GOUPIL GALLERY;THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATERCOLOUR; ETCHINGS AT PATERSON'S GALLERY;THE NATIONAL ART COLLECTIONS FUND; THEABERDEEN SCULPTURE GALLERY; 'AUTUMNLEAVES' AND FORD MADOX BROWN; BRYAN'SDICTIONARY OF PAINTERS; SALES; GOSSIP ... | 470-473 |
| MUSIC—LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY; LONDON SYMPHONYORCHESTRA; MADAME LANDOWSKA'S RECITAL;GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..  | 474     |
| DRAMA—ALICE SIT BY THE FIRE; PANTALOON;OTHELLO; THE TROJAN WOMEN; SHAKSPEAREANA;GOSSIP ... ..  | 474-476 |

LITERATURE

Reminiscences of a Radical Parson. By Rev. W. Tuckwell. With Portrait. (Cassell & Co.)

THIS volume is, for the most part, written in graver mood than the 'Reminiscences of Oxford,' which Mr. Tuckwell issued in 1900, but it is none the less pleasant reading on that account. The silhouettes and dainty sketches here given of Gladstone, Harcourt, and scores of other politicians still alive or lately passed away have the same flavour of graceful scholarship, the same shrewd wit, and the same sympathetic and discriminating humour, which sparkled in the gossip of the genial writer about the dons and undergraduates—Pusey, Routh, Jowett, Newman, Mark Pattison, and many others—of whom he saw most before he settled down to a quarter of a century's quiet work as a schoolmaster. In 1878 he exchanged that for other work which, had he so chosen, might have been as quiet, in an out-of-the-way Warwickshire rectory. The earlier volume, however, contains nothing so serious as the chapters in which Mr. Tuckwell propounds the views on his country's political and social requirements in the present day which forced him into action as a "Radical parson."

In his opening chapter he tells "how he became a Radical," as a consequence of his zeal in providing for his rustic neighbours not only serviceable Sunday sermons on practical questions, but also wholesome entertainment and instruction in weekday leisure. With classes and magic-lantern lectures on the botany and geology of the district, history, and so forth, he instituted fortnightly concerts and monthly dances, at which "savory refreshments were dispensed at one penny per article," but no tobacco or alcohol, and at the conclusion of which the common opinion coincided with one honest yokel's remark, "Tell 'ee, Passon, this be better foon than getting toight." For a long while, Mr. Tuckwell tells his readers, "I had felt painfully the contrast between my own comfortable rectory and the squalid pigsties in which many of our people lived," without considering it a duty to do more than lighten the superficial conditions of their lot. But in 1883 Henry George's 'Progress and Poverty' and other books published at about the same time "acted with compelling and defining force." Accustomed for many years to interest his audiences by lectures and sermons of an unusual sort, but hitherto taking no part in local politics, Mr. Tuckwell in his first address at an election meeting in February, 1884, unexpectedly started on a fresh line for the next decade. "Unaccountable straightfor'ard and unaccountable true" was, I learned, the Boeotian comment on my speech," and it proved to be the germ of a thousand others delivered in every part of England.

This is not the place for discussing Mr. Tuckwell's political opinions, his qualified support of Gladstone's Home Rule policy and other questions taken up by the party that had in him such a vigorous spokesman. But, as regards the Land Nationalization scheme which he always considered of supreme value, it may be pointed out that, in assuming for it more originality than it really possesses, he also assumes that, could it be put into practice, it would have results of a nature and efficacy with which it appears unreasonable to credit it. The essential part of the scheme now generally associated with George's name had been the dream of all sorts of land-law reformers long before his time, but neither by him nor by any of his disciples has an effective plan been yet devised for attaining the ideal. "I would have it ordained," says Mr. Tuckwell, with charming simplicity,

"that on a given day—say next New Year's Day—all the land in Great Britain should cease to be the property of its present owners, and should revert to the community. That its fair rental should be ascertained, and that the State—or, preferably, the local governing bodies—should pay this rent to the owners, or, where the land is encumbered, to the mortgagees in equitable proportions, during forty years to come, recovering it from the actual tenants. That at the end of forty years all such payments should cease; and the State should be absolute owner, using all rents paid to it for public purposes. It would probably be municipalised—managed, that is, either by existing local boards, or by specially constructed district land courts, whose primary aim would be to multiply everywhere small tenancies, advancing money on easy terms for the erection of cottages upon each holding, breaking up desolate and unproductive lands. In a few years the whole of England might be converted into such holdings, nowhere of more than fifty acres in extent, enormously productive, easily transferred, managed by the local courts, protected from sub-letting, sub-division, mortgage; with tenancy absolutely secure so long as rents were paid and rules observed. As the forty years expired, all this vast rental, held by the State in perpetuity, and no longer charged with payment to the ancient owners, would be employed to extinguish taxation and to reduce the National Debt."

We are not told by what equitable and omniscient machinery the "fair rental" is to be ascertained; how the State or the municipality, with all the "specially constructed" machinery that can be devised, will be competent to carry out the multiplication everywhere of small tenancies, the breaking up and fertilization of unproductive lands, the money-lending, the superintendence of cottage-building, and all the rest of it, in order that at the end of forty years a landholding millennium may be in full and complete working order. It is much to be feared that, as matters are managed in this country and in these days, the State or municipality would have to pay far more than the capital value of the land for its compulsory purchase, that there would be stupendous waste and blundering during the forty years' passage through the intermediate wilderness, and that in the end, instead of the abolition of the National Debt, we should find we had bought a white elephant.

Mr. Tuckwell gives, in successive chapters, a pathetic account of 'English Misery—its Depths as I had Seen Them,' and 'Its Causes as I Divined Them,' and that which follows, on 'Its Remedies as I Presaged Them,' is interesting, while in another, perhaps the most important in the book, he details the history of a notable experiment carried on by himself in encouraging allotments. He divided up 200 acres of glebe-land attached to his Warwickshire rectory into plots—five being of twenty-five acres apiece, which were farmed out to the village butcher and others, who assisted their humbler comrades with a team and plough and other conveniences; and the rest being holdings of from a third of an acre to two acres apiece, which were taken up by men employed in some cement works near by, who in their evenings, with help from their wives in the daytime, turned them to excellent use. The average labourers' wage in the district was 14s. a week: the estimated minimum cost of maintaining a family of six in decency was 21s. Growing their own wheat and vegetables, keeping pigs, and obtaining other produce from their allotments, Mr. Tuckwell's tenants, paying him a fair rent, were able to raise themselves from a condition of what was virtually pauperism to one of, for them, affluence, and there was jubilation in the village for nine years, until, in 1893, the rector gave up his living. His bishop had refused to co-operate in such an arrangement of leases as would have secured to the allotment-holders permanence of tenure, but the college authorities who owned the living, and who approved the experiment, had promised that, in the event of a change of rectors, they would see that the incoming rector was a man likely to carry on the good work. The promise, however, was forgotten. The new-comer gave the tenants six months' notice of ejectment:—

"Piteous were the lamentations which reached me. Nearly all the men at once gave up their holdings. Visiting the farm in 1897, I was agast at its absolute ruin: I left it a Garden of Eden—it had become a desolate wilderness. My successor came to me, humbled and tearful, by that time conscious of his mistake. Conscious too late; the mischief was done, and was irreparable. 'Ignorance,' says Shakespeare, 'is the curse of God.' His had led him to the shattering of a splendid scheme, and—a thing of less consequence to any but himself—the destruction of his own pastoral influence, usefulness, and emoluments.”

Mr. Tuckwell has a talent for apt quotation and the telling of anecdotes which, even when they are not new, acquire freshness and novelty from the grace with which he introduces them. Most of the best bits in this volume, however, have already been quoted in the daily papers, and the special charm of his scholarly work in itself renders it impossible for justice to be done to it by quotation. There are a few slips in writing, scarcely important enough to call for mention. The only one likely to cause confusion occurs on p. 44, where Prof. Beesly is referred to as “editor of The Westminster.” By this, of course, the venerable Westminster Review is meant, not The Westminster Gazette.

Notes from a Diary, 1896 to January 23, 1901.

By the Right Hon. Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, G.C.S.I., F.R.S. 2 vols. (Murray.)

In taking leave of the public on the threshold of the present reign, Sir M. E. Grant Duff expresses the modest hope that his ‘Notes’ have preserved some interesting and amusing things which would otherwise have disappeared. He puts them at considerably less than their value. The future historian of our times will find them as indispensable as the ‘Journal’ of Charles Greville has been to Sir Spencer Walpole and other surveyors of an earlier generation. He will be obliged, of course, to test some of the facts by the light of fuller information, and it may be questioned if the following anecdote will ever rank as indisputably authentic:—

“Reay mentioned, as current in Paris, a story to the effect that just before M. Faure’s election, when it was thought by some that Brisson was likely to be successful, a gentleman called at the French Embassy in Berlin, and asked to see M. Herbette. The servant replied that the Ambassador was engaged and could not possibly see him. ‘I must see him,’ said the stranger, opening as he spoke the front of his greatcoat. The servant, who had a quick eye, saw from the uniform and decorations he wore, that it could be no other than the Emperor, and introduced him. When he saw the Ambassador, he said: ‘I hear a rumour that M. Brisson is likely to be the new President, and I just wished to mention that, if he is, I will mobilize immediately.’”

But could the amenities of political life in the seventies be more happily illustrated than by this reminiscence, communicated to Sir Mountstuart by Lord George Hamilton?

“On the night on which Lord Salisbury so far forgot himself and the dignity of the House of Peers as to compare the last Lord Derby to Titus Oates, Lord George Hamilton and Lord Morley went together to dine at Grillion’s. When they entered the room they found only two people, standing at a distance from each other. They were the antagonists of an hour before. An agreeable quartette it must have been, and very dry I think must the champagne have tasted. During the earlier part of dinner, conversation was carried on by Lord Salisbury and Lord Derby respectively addressing the two others, but ere it was over the ethos of Grillion’s asserted itself, and they spoke to each other.”

Administrative reputations are evanescent, and the high compliment paid by the late Lord Northbrook to Sir Charles Wood, afterwards Lord Halifax, will come as a surprise to those unacquainted with the inner workings of official life:—

“Welby asked Northbrook whether he did not think Graham and Cardwell had been the two best administrators of our times. Northbrook vehemently denied the former’s right to a high place, declaring that his fame at the Admiralty rested merely upon the useful but subordinate achievement of having put the accounts on an excellent footing. When, however, the stress of war came, he showed neither the decision nor any of the higher qualities which should have been possessed by a man at the head of the navy in troublous times. Of Cardwell he spoke more highly, but put Sir Charles Wood much above any one whom he had seen at work as an administrator.”

A more recent First Lord of the Admiralty appears in these pages as a humourist:—

“Lady Edmond Fitzmaurice, Mr. N. Buxton, and the Tyrrells left us. He mentioned incidentally that Chamberlain, who is represented in the Upper House by Lord Selborne, had been staying with a lady, who, not satisfied with the signatures of her guests, has the detestable habit of requiring them to add something in prose or verse. Chamberlain point-blank refused, whereupon his hostess, who is by no means famous for tact, turning to Lord Selborne, his representative in the House of Lords, said: ‘Mr. Chamberlain’s name may be enough, but yours is not.’ The person addressed, taking up his pen, then wrote: ‘Selborne, Advocatus diaboli.’”

On his own account, the author furnishes a searching estimate of Jowett, suggested by the biography. “The greatest head of a college that ever lived,” and “eminently unfit for the rôle of a father confessor,” are two of the conclusions, and of them the second is undoubtedly less open to question than the first. Jowett, with his small voice and his sarcasms, suggests Rogers, and here is a capital story about the redoubtable Samuel:—

“Coleridge told me that, after the death of Southey, a committee assembled at his father’s, Sir John Coleridge’s, house to discuss the best way of doing honour to the poet’s memory, and he, then a very young man, was appointed to act as secretary. A number of highly-distinguished persons being assembled, there was a knock at the door, old Mr. Rogers was ushered in, and received of course with much respect. Just as business was about to commence the new arrival said: ‘I once heard the Duke of Wellington speak of Mr. Southey.’ ‘Oh!’ said some one, ‘what did the Duke say of Mr. Southey?’ ‘The Duke said,’ answered Rogers, “‘I don’t think much of Mr. Southey,’” and with this encouraging introduction the proceedings of the committee began.”

The strong opinions of a more recent laureate on Gladstone’s later Irish policy are amusingly illustrated from a conversation at the Club:—

“Flower gave an account of a visit to Farringford with the Duke of Argyll, during which Tennyson read his poem on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, and at the words—

‘Who never sold the truth to serve the hour,
Nor paltered with eternal God for power,’ interjected, ‘As I am afraid Gladstone is doing now.’”

And here is an equally downright personage to the life:—

“The Bishop of London made us laugh by a characteristic story of Freeman. He was examining the field which men call Hastings and the gods Senlac. A man came up to him and said: ‘I think, Sir, I can be of some service to you.’ ‘Pray go away,’ was the historian’s answer, ‘I don’t want you at all.’ ‘But,’ insisted the new-comer, ‘I think I could show you something which you ought to see.’ ‘Go away,’ rejoined Freeman, ‘I don’t want any information.’ ‘But really, Sir, if you would allow me, I think I could save you trouble.’ ‘Go away, go away,’ said Freeman, now thoroughly angry. ‘I know the Duke has given orders that I am to be left quite alone.’ ‘But I am the Duke,’ was the answer.”

It is with much regret that we take leave—though it may be merely a case of au revoir after all—of these ‘Notes from a Diary.’ They are a treasure-house of entertainment, and perhaps the fact that one or two of the stories are distinctly old, while some have appeared in print before—as, for example, the discussion between Lord Russell of Killowen, Lord Herschell, and Mr. Gully on the hopelessness of their prospects at the bar when they first joined the Northern Circuit—will not seriously detract from their popularity. The narrator nearly always gives the neatest version of a saying, though other recorders of table-talk have frequently contrived to blunt the point. Such, as Hayward bitterly complained, was the case with many of Rogers’s witticisms. He has also remained constant to his resolution not to set down dislikes, though the late Mr. Hutton tried to make him depart from that sagacious determination. He will not please the world of taste, as at present understood, by all his preferences. Thus he notes a conversation with Prof. Saintsbury about Christina Rossetti:—

“I maintained that I could find twenty short poems by Mrs. Hemans, superior to any twenty similar ones that could be selected from the writings of the no doubt gifted lady whom he places so much above her.”

The Latin verses by Dr. Butler quoted in vol. ii. p. 91 are said to be Alcaics, but they are in the metre of Ode I. 6 of Horace, the Third Asclepiad. Surely the saying of J. K. S. is spoilt, and should run “Heaven lies about us in our infancy, and we lie about ourselves in our old age.” There is a good deal of pleasant classical lore; there are riddles, too, and jokes galore, so that the ordinary man as well as the scholar should be pleased.

John Graham of Claverhouse. By Charles Sanford Terry. (Constable & Co.)

PROF. SANFORD TERRY’S life of Claverhouse is certainly the most industrious and careful that has yet appeared. Mark Napier’s was a wilderness of a book. The pen and peculiar humour of that good old Cavalier ran away with him. ‘The Despot’s Champion,’ by a lady who withheld her name, was lucid, succinct, and well arranged, but not so well nourished in documents as Prof. Terry’s narrative. He has not conciliated the general reader, for he publishes long extracts from letters, some of them already familiar, in the original spelling, and he conscientiously disentangles Claverhouse's wooing, if wooing it can be called, of the Menteith heiress, and all the story of the shilly-shallying of the other aspirant, the Marquis of Montrose. The imbroglio of Queensberry, Aberdeen, and Claverhouse about the spoils of the fallen Lauderdale and the lands of Dudhope, with the Constabulary of Dundee, and all the Queensberry - Claverhouse alliance and quarrel, are elucidated with care and toil. "We own that it is not entertaining," but Prof. Terry has faced the tedious task with resolution and patience.

The statesmen were, as politicians are even now, men of this world. Queensberry wanted to be a duke; Claverhouse thought that a labourer so unflinching as himself was worthy of his hire. They all dealt in the usual manner of the backstairs; there was no other way of dealing. Persons to-day who wish to be made dukes, or even knights, ask for what they desire, and use such personal influence as they have. Queensberry thought that Claverhouse was slack as regarded his claims, and Claverhouse, in a rather sympathetic way, faced with spirit every grandee who was unfriendly. The Duke of York (James II.) had always stood by him, and Claverhouse's loyalty more than repaid the Duke, while it won for himself the cleansing triumph of a death like that of Wolfe or Nelson, in the arms of Victory, and "under the wings of Renown." Prof. Terry justly remarks that Claverhouse was distinguished by "a curious concentration on self-interest and duty alike." He was unsparing of his own labour, reckless of his own life, heedless of popular hatred, and he was thoroughly determined to win the rewards which he deserved. Of course, this character does not command our sympathy like the chivalrous self-sacrifice of Montrose. But there is only one Montrose in the history of Scotland. Claverhouse knew his own merits; he was determined to win his way to eminence; if the king and the cause came first in his mind and heart, John Graham was a very good second. Macaulay styles him "rapacious." Like Sganarelle in 'Le Festin de Pierre,' he exclaimed, "Mes gages!" articulately enough; but he would not sell sword and honour, and when all coats were turning, Claverhouse "kept the bird in his bosom." He was not cruel for the love of cruelty; but ruthless he was within the immense latitude of the law, when the last fierce struggle for "the bloody and barbarous inconveniences of Presbyterian government" was to be faced by methods as barbarous and as bloody. We cannot imagine Montrose or Ogilvy, Napier or Wogan, Spottiswoode or Aboyne, accepting the duties which Claverhouse undertook; but he secured the abolition, for the time at least, of the death penalty for trivial offences at Dundee; he urged the pardon of the multitude, and the punishment of the leaders of rebellion; and he remonstrated against making men responsible for the technical offences of their tenants and their women-folk. He was beyond all comparison the most efficient, honest, courageous, and clear-sighted Scottish Cavalier of the Restoration; and, had he turned his coat in 1688, he might have made Marlborough look to his laurels. He married for love; his wife was worthy of him; and he knew that his alliance with a Covenanting family might be fatal to his worldly interests. Patrick Walker, the biographer of 'The Saints of the Covenant,' speaks of "the hell wicked-witted, bloodthirsty Graham of Claverhouse, who hated to spend his time with wine and women, which made him more active in violent, unheard-of persecution."

Prof. Terry remarks that Walker meant "not to testify to Claverhouse's purity, but to suggest that what wine and women were to others, persecution and lust for blood were to him." Walker, in any case, says that Claverhouse hated debauchery, and, with Marlborough's beauty and more, he did not take advantage thereof. As in 'Wandering Willie's Tale,' he watches the orgies of the Restoration with melancholy and scornful eyes.

To take certain disputable points, we cannot endorse Prof. Terry's view that Claverhouse, at the age of twelve, was the middle-class John Graham who first appears in the records of St. Andrews as a third-year's man in 1660. Claverhouse was no prodigy; he did not matriculate at ten, and take his Master's degree before he was fourteen. We feel certain that he was the better-born and richer (potentior) John Graham, who, with David Graham his brother, matriculated in 1665, and took no Master's degree at all. Claverhouse once quotes Lucan in an apposite way, and with a high spirit; but no more than Montrose was he a precocious scholar. As to handwriting, Claverhouse used, as a man, the usual c; the Graham who took his degree in 1661 used the Greek epsilon; and he who matriculated in 1665 used at that date the old Scots form of e. As to Drumlog fight, the hours of the day are given, with the fact that Claverhouse sent to Glasgow for reinforcements, in a dispatch of Lord Ross ('Lauderdale Papers,' iii. 167). The author seems to have overlooked this evidence. He quotes Brownlee of Torfoot, "who was present," from Howie's 'Scots Worthies' (i. 587). Can he believe that a blue bonnet of 1679 wrote, "The venerable Douglas had commenced the solemnities of the day. He was expatiating on the execrable evils of tyranny.....In this moment of intense feeling," and so forth? Thomas Brownlee of Torfoot never wrote a word of that modern rhetoric. Prof. Terry clears up Montmouth's behaviour in the pursuit after Bothwell Bridge, but we incline to believe that the Whigs had "prepared," if they did not erect, gallows for Cavaliers. The argument for the exact field where Dundee's final victory was won leaves us unconvinced; but a fresh inspection of the ground is necessary for the formation of opinion. Prof. Terry has discovered that the mysterious letter of Dundee to King James after Killiecrankie was published at the time, as a broadsheet, with small, but not unimportant, variations. We are unable to form a conjecture as to the real origin of this paper. If it is an "artistic" Jacobite forgery of the hour, it is the work of a very remarkable artist. The "atrocities" of Dundee are reduced to their real dimensions; even so they are not pleasant, and Presbyterian legend can never be shaken.

Les Sonnets Portugais d'Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Traduits en Sonnets Français par Fernand Henry. (Paris, Guilmoto.)

THE French have shown of late a remarkable interest in the life and work of Mrs. Browning. The elaborate biography of the English poet by Mlle. Merlette, and the successive translations by MM. "A. B.," Charles des Guerres, and L. Morel, were the latest evidences of this study until the publication of the very remarkable monograph which is before us to-day. Few continental writers have paid English poetical literature so full a tribute as M. Fernand Henry. First known by an admirable version of Shakespeare's 'Sonnets,' then by a translation of FitzGerald's 'Omar,' to which we gave prominent attention in these columns, he has of late divided his attention between the lyrics of Milton and the sonnets of Elizabeth Browning. In all these cases the method of M. Henry is the same. He is not content, after the French custom, to give a translation of poetry in prose. He presents us with a poem, in which as closely as possible he reproduces the form of the original. This he enshrines in a biography, a commentary, and notes so copious, that the foreign reader, ignorant of English, has before him a complete apparatus for the appreciation of the place an English author takes in literary history.

The only writings of Mrs. Browning which have hitherto been presented in their entirety to French readers are the 'Sonnets from the Portuguese' and 'Aurora Leigh,' a remarkable prose version of which was published by "A. B." in 1897. M. F. Henry considers that it is enough for Frenchmen to know these works—the only ones, he declares, by which her name will live. The judgment is bold, and can only be accepted with reserve. Mrs. Browning will unquestionably live as the author of a large number of glowing and nervous lyrics, such as 'Cowper's Grave,' 'Bianca among the Nightingales,' and 'A Musical Instrument,' in which the unhappy violence of her mannerism was kept within bounds. But, if M. Henry speaks of complete works of some length, his criticism is doubtless just. Future students will apply to 'Casa Guidi Windows,' and even to 'The Seraphim,' for side-lights on a brilliant poetical temperament, but nobody will read them for mere pleasure any more. Nor does it seem possible that 'Aurora Leigh' itself will ever be completely vitalized again, will ever do more than excite curiosity into a faint and fragmentary enthusiasm. The one extended production of Mrs. Browning which challenges, and will continue successfully to challenge, comparison with the most delightful products of poetic genius in the nineteenth century is the series of 'Sonnets from the Portuguese.'

We cannot do better than quote an example of M. Fernand Henry's method as a translator:—

Songeant, un jour, comment Théocrite a chanté
La douceur du retour de ces chères années
Dont chacune vient tendre, en ses mains fortunées,
A tous, jeunes ou vieux, le présent souhaité,— Tandis que par ses vers j'avais l'esprit banté,
Je revis, à travers mes larmes, ces journées,
Dans le bonheur et dans la tristesse égrenées,
Qui sur mon front avaient tour à tour projeté

L'ombre de leur passage. Et j'étais tout entière
A pleurer quand soudain, par derrière, aux cheveux
Un Fantôme me prit ; et comme de mon mieux
Je luttais, une voix se fit entendre, altière :
"Devine qui te tient ?" "C'est la Mort," dis-je.
Alors
Tinta ce mot d'argent : "C'est l'Amour, non la Mort !"

No one will deny that this is a skilful and sympathetic rendering, or that in most respects it keeps singularly close to the text. The sestet is rendered as completely as, we suppose, poetry ever can be poured into the cup of another language; nothing is spilt. On the other hand, in transferring the octet it seems to us that M. Henry has lost one or two drops. "As I mused it in his antique tongue," says Mrs. Browning, innocently anxious that it should be understood that she read her Theocritus in Greek. This has not escaped M. Henry's attention, since in another part of his volume he refers to it; but it has evaded him as a translator. Again, "à travers mes larmes" does not quite express "in gradual vision through my tears," where the poet indicates that the phantom years rise slowly into sight. We point out these slight matters, without emphasizing their importance, and with a full knowledge of the difficulty of the task which the French scholar has so courageously undertaken.

The ability of the translator was greatly taxed in rendering that admirably feminine and nobly poetic cry of the heart which begins "I never gave a lock of hair away." To do complete justice to it, perhaps a combination of the old rich language of Louise Labé with the penetrating modern note of Marceline Desbordes-Valmore would have been required. But we do not think that a French reader condemned to form his impression of this sonnet wholly from Henry's version will doubt that the original is a very beautiful work of art:—

La boucle de cheveux, la seule qu'ait reçue
Un homme, c'est, Très-Cher, celle qu'en ce moment
Tout autour de mes doigts j'enroule doucement
Jusqu'à l'extrême bout de sa brune étendue.
Reçois-la. Ma jeunesse, hélas ! est révolue :
Mes cheveux sur mes pieds s'ondulent plus gaïement,
Et la fleur du rosier ou du myrte, ornement
D'un jeune front, leur est désormais défendue.
Ils n'ont plus qu'à masquer ces longs sillons de pleurs
Que sur ma pâle joue ont creusés les douleurs.
J'avais cru jusqu'ici que la Mort, la première,
Viendrait me la couper, mais c'est l'Amour qui vint.
Prends-la donc, trouves-y le baiser tendre et saint Qu'à l'instant de mourir y déposa ma mère.

The biographical and critical apparatus with which the translator accompanies his rendering is erudite and accurate. There is not a little in his notes which an English reader, even though versed in the subject, will read with advantage.

Magna Carta: a Commentary on the Great Charter of King John. By W. S. McKechnie. (Glasgow, MacLehose & Sons.)

THE author of this important book has already done good service in the field of juridical learning as a lecturer of the University of Glasgow. The publication of the results of "several years of hard but congenial work" should entitle him to the gratitude of historical scholars at large. Magna Carta is, indeed, a document of European importance, and even something more, for the general principles of justice and good government which it enunciates have been carried into the most distant provinces of our empire. An adequate commentary on this fundamental charter of liberties will command as much attention in the universities of Calcutta, Melbourne, and Toronto as in the seats of learning of this country or on the Continent, where the origins of our insular constitution never fail to excite an intelligent interest. Moreover, it was surely time, as Mr. McKechnie has pointed out, that some attempt should be made to bring the fruitful results of modern research to bear upon the interpretation of this world-famous instrument.

Whether such an attempt could ever be completely successful may be regarded as a matter of opinion; but of the great merit and value of the present essay there can, we think, be little doubt. The historical and juridical methods adopted by the author are sound and intelligent, and naturally in striking contrast with those of earlier commentators. His style is attractive and sufficiently concise, whilst his equipment for such a formidable task is very considerable. As the result of these elaborate studies, we have an entirely new view of the Great Charter in its legal and constitutional aspects and political environment. Further than this, Mr. McKechnie's commentary is illumined by much valuable information on the subject of scutages, customs, forests, and mediæval trade, whilst the attention paid to purely textual criticism is very noticeable.

Perhaps in his evident anxiety to do sufficient justice to the modern authorities who deal with these extraneous matters Mr. McKechnie has failed to do full justice to his own fine qualities as a commentator. Indeed, there are two sides to this work. One represents that minute scrutiny and acute criticism of earlier commentaries which we naturally associate with Mr. McKechnie's enlightened academic method. On the other side we have a number of historical digressions occasioned by the author's conscientious endeavour to be "up to date" in respect of certain recent theories of a more or less exacting nature. In this portion of his work we miss the note of cautious and subtle criticism which distinguishes Mr. McKechnie's handling of the classical authorities. If the author is somewhat dogmatic in his own province of learning, he is on the whole convincing. It is, however, difficult to avoid a feeling of regret that he should have insisted on the unqualified acceptance of many propositions which he clearly has not in all cases confirmed by an independent investigation. Thus, although his résumé of the modern constitutional theories regarding forests, fisheries, trade, scutages, and customs will be of great service to those who are unable to follow the original authorities closely for themselves, a certain want of familiarity with the details of these diverse and highly technical subjects occasionally tends to some confusion in the author's exposition. For instance, we read:—

"No law or traditional usage trammelled him [the king] in his dealings with foreign merchants.....Magna Carta therefore sought to restrain this branch of the prerogative.....This benefited the Merchants by securing to them certain rights.....a confirmation of the ancient and just rates of 'Customs' with the abolition of John's 'evil tolls.'"

But, apart from a possible confusion here between the status of foreign and native merchants, if it is true, as Mr. McKechnie further contends, that "kings took what they could, and left future ages to invent theories to justify or explain their actions," what "rights" could their victims claim? and how could any "ancient and just rates" be "confirmed" to them? We confess that in this case, at least, we prefer Stubbs's lucid "theory" of the transaction.

Now and again, too, the author seems to miss a point in his frequent corrections of the "erroneous views" of earlier writers, as when he denounces the clause in the 'Articuli super Cartas' of 1300, which demanded that no Common Pleas should be held in the Exchequer "contra formam Magnæ Cartæ," as a "clear misinterpretation" of the Charter itself which has misled more than one eminent scholar. Mr. McKechnie does not attempt to assign any cause for this singular "misinterpretation," and therefore it is permissible to suggest that his objection, that "the Exchequer never 'followed the king'; it stayed at Westminster, where its offices, tallies, and Pipe rolls were," does not apply in this case. It is surely notorious that the Exchequer, with all its impedimenta, was removed only two years before to York, in company with the Bench, and it is by no means improbable that this conjunction excited the apprehensions of the Commons.

Such questionable passages are, however, singularly few, and their importance, even if the author should be proved to be at fault, is small, compared with the numerous good points which he has successfully made.

A much more serious blemish occurs in Mr. McKechnie's description of the MSS. of the Great Charter and the charters of liberties which preceded it. Strange to say, in treating of the earliest of these, the charter of Henry I. which was to serve the barons of King John as a model for Magna Carta itself, the editor omits all mention of the text prepared by Prof. Liebermann, whose description of the MSS. can alone claim to be regarded as "exhaustive." When we remember that it was with special reference to this portion of Prof. Liebermann's monumental work that we were told, on the highest authority, "Lagam regis Henrici nobis reddit," the omission seems certainly unfortunate. Moreover, we venture to suggest that a perusal of Prof. Liebermann's learned commentaries would have materially assisted the author in his description of the MSS. connected with the charters of 1154 and 1215. This description, as it stands, cannot be regarded as particularly valuable. There seems to be no authority for assuming that a copy of the Great Charter, now in the British Museum, was originally deposited in Dover Castle because this fortress, "like the Tower of London, was a natural place for the preservation of documents of national value." It would be far simpler to suppose that this was the copy addressed to the Barons of the Cinque Ports. In any case, Mr. McKechnie might well have added a reference to the account of this local repository and the Charter in question given in Archæologia Cantiana. We notice, too, that, in connexion with other subjects, there is no reference here to Prof. Liebermann's treatise on the spurious

"Constitutions" of Cnut which forms the basis of modern research upon the early history of the forest. For the relations of the Crown with the Jews, we miss Prof. Gross's 'Exchequer of the Jews.' In dealing with the text of the ancient coronation oath, Dr. Wickham Legg's monograph should not have been ignored. Finally, we may remark that Mr. McKechnie's estimate of the evil councillors of King John is largely discounted by the exhaustive essay of Mr. Turner and the well-known work of M. Petit-Dutaillis, which deal with the same subject.

We do not, of course, suggest that Mr. McKechnie was unaware of the existence or importance of the above-mentioned and other special works; but as he frequently cites authorities of no original value, such omissions are somewhat conspicuous.

An irritating effect is also needlessly produced by the author's haphazard system of extending certain cases in mediæval Latin. He seems to have begun with the use of the classical diphthong, discarding this in a later stage of his work for the more fashionable e, but both forms appear sometimes in close juxtaposition. As the author has told us that his proof-sheets were read by four friends, he must be regarded as unfortunate in respect of such an oversight, and in the occurrence of misprints like "Miss Morgate."

It is with real reluctance that we conclude this notice of an exceptionally valuable book with some fault-finding, but whilst its author has done admirable work on the constitutional side of his subject, he has at times said either too much or too little on some of its other aspects.

NEW NOVELS.

The Golden Pool. By Austin Freeman. (Cassell & Co.)

It is not often nowadays that we come upon a new novel of exactly this stamp—a story of adventure opening in as deliberately romantic and adventurous a vein as 'Robinson Crusoe' itself, and continuing throughout its course frankly and exclusively in the same style, with never a hint of mental analysis or any other sort of superiority. The hero is a bank clerk in an English coast town, but all his tastes and ambitions are in the direction of seafaring and adventure. Chance brings him the offer of a post as supercargo aboard a well-found brig engaged in the West African trade. In Quittah, on the west coast, he agrees to remain ashore for a few months to manage a small "factory," in the interests of his employer. Here his adventurous taste rouses in him the longing to examine for himself into the truth of an old legend, current among the natives, of a lost mine, and of the horrible rites of the Sakrobundi fetish men of North Ashanti. Accordingly he gives up his employment, and, disguised as a Fulah merchant, sets out into the interior on a voyage of discovery. He discovers that miraculous place of treasure, the Golden Pool, but immediately after falls into the hands of the Sakrobundi priests, who condemn him to be blinded and made one of the slaves of the pool. As a hero should, he escapes at the most critical juncture, but is captured by some slave raiders, and sold into slavery. There is a damsel awaiting him on the coast, as damsels should. There is a great treasure to be won, as well as freedom. Here are the principal ingredients of a good rousing story, and the author handles them very effectively. Also, he knows his west coast very well indeed. The reviewer has spent long enough between Sierra Leone and Fernando Po to know that the local colouring has not been manufactured from works of reference.

A Pagan's Love. By Constance Clyde. (Fisher Unwin.)

THIS latest volume in "The First Novel Library" comes to us from Australia, one of the publisher's happy hunting-grounds for new talent. There was a previous Australian story in this particular series, and it dealt with the love affairs in Australia of a man from New Zealand. In a similar way, this novel, from another author, deals with the love affairs in Australia of a girl from New Zealand, and if both books had been published anonymously they might well have been taken for the work of one woman, so much have they in common. In the present book, as in its predecessor, one finds a certain cleverness and a glib facility of thought, emotion, and expression. There is nothing enduring about either work, we fear. The philosophizing is shallow in both cases, though stronger in the first than in the present one. On the other hand, the mannerisms of 'A Pagan's Love' are less pronounced than were those of 'Tussock Land,' by Mr. Arthur Adams. The first was the cleverer book, the second is the better disciplined, and perhaps the more pleasant. Many of the more sordid aspects of Sydney life are dealt with realistically here. The finish is conventional.

The Stepping-Stone. By Helen Hester Colvill. (Constable & Co.)

THIS unusually long novel has little or none of the cleverness and smartness which stand for merit nowadays. It is fuller and more leisurely than the average run of new fiction, a well-considered, carefully wrought tale. On the other hand, it is without distinction in manner and somewhat stereotyped in matter. The story is of a melodramatic nature, opening in Rome, and being carried then to an English country house, the home of an irascible baronet who has to be humoured, being given to disinheriting his children, and is not very real. The best visualized character is that of a Norwegian girl, a singer.

The Seeker. By Harry Leon Wilson. (Hoinemann.)

THIS is a clever, rather preposterous American novel, full of sophisticated colloquialism, exaggeration, and a kind of slangy preciosity which is likely to prove vastly irritating to readers who are fastidious over their English. Certainly, for a clever novel it is singularly devoid of the saving grace of restraint; but it will interest and amuse readers of a certain type, without doubt, if only by reason of the very features in it that will offend more sensitive tastes. Candour, enthusiasm, and a reckless picturesqueness are qualities which it has in abundance; and a severe editor might have made it a very respectable novel of the life-story type. A liberal pruning of its religious discussions would have been advisable, but it holds humour of a recognized and irreverent American type.

Crittenden. By John Fox. (Constable & Co.)

THE author of 'The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come' writes a better story than those we are wont to associate with huge sales and loud puffery; yet he obtains both these accessories of popularity. The probable cause of this is that, in addition to writing a very tolerable story, and possessing creditable powers of description, Mr. Fox is incorrigibly sentimental. This quality cannot be assumed or acquired; it must be real and natural, or the discerning public is made uncomfortably conscious of the trick, and resents it. It is natural with Mr. Fox, and while it will always prevent his achieving a certain standard admired by some, it will always commend him to the larger section of fiction readers. In the present tale he is concerned to some extent with his favourite blue-grass region of Kentucky, and the chivalrous men and women of the South; but the period is modern, and the story hinges on the Spanish-American war. The war scenes are good, but in no way remarkable.

The Bell and the Arrow. By Mrs. W. H. Chesson. (Werner Laurie.)

MRS. CHESSEON, who has made a reputation for herself as a writer of melodious verse, is to be congratulated on her first novel. It is clever all through, with more than a poet's cleverness. One would have expected less form and more atmosphere from her. There is atmosphere, but it is not too much, and the design of the tale is effective. It is described as an English love story, and so it is, inasmuch as it is concerned with two pairs of lovers. But it is more a novel of character. Mrs. Chesson leaves some unravelled threads, but they do not exercise our minds. There is really no reason why we should know the parentage of the child who appears in the first chapter, for in life we probably should not. But if there is a point which the author seems to wish to press home it is the value of maternity. The book is coloured with it, but not aggressively so. Indeed, the poetic qualities belonging to the author have found herein a suitable theme. Nevertheless, it is open to question if a young woman who is herself to be a mother shortly would endeavour to adopt a lodge-keeper's child out of the mere desperate maternal feelings of the animal. There is here a touch of the morbid which might easily have been avoided. Mrs. Chesson's strongest point is that she can compass an effect with apparently very little effort. Thus she opens her book with a chapter in which a schoolboy is misbehaving in church. In the next chapter he is dead, and he has left behind him somehow a trail of sadness which emerges occasionally in the book. That is like life, and it is also art. Little things are touched to large issues. Altogether this is a book of great promise, and of a considerable performance.

The Two Captains. By Cyrus Townsend Brady. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. BRADY, who is favourably known in America for some stories of the war of secession, has sought fresh fields in his new tale. Perhaps we should say stale fields, for his theme lies in the encounter of the protagonists Nelson and Napoleon. The story concerns the fortunes of a French lady who belongs to an ancient royalist family, and is young and beautiful. For hero we have a gallant and fascinating Irish captain who is one of Nelson's favourites. This Capt. Macartney is an ardent wooer, and his author considers him "a most engaging and attractive young sailor." He also assures us that we shall like Brébœuf, and on the whole we do. It would, however, have been wiser if Mr. Brady had left us to form our own opinions about his book, and not made a speech for his preface. In his speech he has a word for critics:—

"I do book-reviewing myself frequently, and therefore speak by the card. It [the preface] may save the critic the necessity of reading the book. Therefore I confidently expect that what is here set down will fall under the critic's eye (observe I do not say the critical eye). I write this for him. Let him praise the book. Let him damn it if he will. Let him ignore it if silence be to his fancy. But whether it be praise or blame, let him accord it on the merits or demerits of the book and on nothing else."

Mr. Brady makes us nervous. It seems a portentous thing to review a book. However, let us assure him that we have read his book, and consider it a brightly contrived romance of an interesting period, which suffers somewhat from the intrusion of the two gigantic historical figures. A spirited account of the battle of Aboukir Bay concludes the story.

Langbarrow Hall. By Theodora Wilson Wilson. (Harper & Brothers.)

THIS seems to be a first novel, and is in that case fairly entitled to the encouragement implied in that vague term "promise." In the first part of the book especially there is a freshness about many of the scenes and actors which speaks well for the author's powers of imagination. Her worst fault is a straining after crudely melodramatic effects. Roughly speaking, we leave all the characters, except those prematurely removed by death, permanently broken-hearted in the end. Yet, in spite of this catastrophic conclusion, the tone is, in general, healthy and cheerful. The scene is laid in Westmorland, and we are given a good deal of landscape and dialect, both managed with a respectable degree of skill.

The Seething Pot. By George A. Birmingham. (Arnold.)

THIS clever story, which seems to be written from the unusual standpoint of Protestant Nationalism, is much above the average of Irish novels, and shows an intimate acquaintance with the conditions, social, political, and religious, of the country with which it deals. The background is apparently that of the present day, but certain notable men belonging to a period of a few years back are introduced with varying degrees of success. The Nationalist leader who, for a reason less scabrous than the historical one, incurs the Church's ban, and is basely deserted by his treacherous followers, is an admirable study in characterization. His absolute devotion to Ireland, so strangely blended with contempt for the Irish, and his relations with the men who hate, fear, and obey him, are happily realized. The decadent dramatist, with his peculiar views on art and morals, and his disappointment in the Atlantic, is less successful; and the golfing Chief Secretary is a grotesque and most unconvincing caricature. To the English Government, indeed, the author, to use his own expression, never tries to be just, but the other factors in the political situation, the peasantry, the priests, and the "irreconcilable" landlords, are treated with much fairness and even sympathy.

FRENCH BOOKS.

IN Une Époque (Paris, Société Française d'Imprimerie et de Librairie), M. Gaston E. Broche discusses, from a curious point of view, some of the political ideas current in France during the eighteenth century. He seems to be an enthusiastic democrat, with, however, a touching faith in the "imperishable reality" of certain formulas which are now commonly regarded as obsolete. Employing these formulas as tests of the worth of the writers he criticizes, he arrives at some astonishing conclusions. Both Montesquieu and Locke, for example, are said to be men with fine minds impaired by a meanness of character, for the reason that M. Broche is distressed to find in the works of the great Frenchman who founded the historical method, and also in the writings of the great Englishman who defended the ideas of the Whigs in the seventeenth century, much that is incompatible with the gospel according to Jean-Jacques. For Rousseau is M. Broche's master. One might think that nowadays there was no man of learning who found in the 'Contrat Social' a definitive and an absolute theory of the State; but here is a professeur de l'Université who apparently does so. One thing only, he informs us, is wanting to complete that work, and this is "the idea of the boundless perfectibility of the soul." Since Rousseau wrote, vast stores of fresh information have been collected on the subject, better methods of study have been devised, juster ideas have been elaborated, and new problems have arisen; but of all these little trace is to be found in M. Broche's essay. It is, indeed, just the sort of work that might have been composed by some generous spirit in France towards the close of the eighteenth century.

Le Romancéro Populaire de la France. Textes Critiques par George Doncieux. Avant-propos et Index Musical par Julien Tiersot. (Paris, Bouillon.)—The death of M. Doncieux deprived folk-lore of the services of an investigator who realized the delicate beauty of the folk-songs he had made his especial study, while at the same time he was able to apply all the criteria of linguistic science and invent new ones for the purification of their texts. Readers of Romania and Melusine were familiar with his investigations of popular French songs and ballads, but the present volume, containing studies of forty-five songs, is doubly welcome, as forming a permanent collection of M. Doncieux's work, and as marking a stage in the study of these puzzling monuments of literary art.

It has been said—and in one aspect it is a mere truism—that every folk-song has a date, an author, and a country. But English experience with popular hymns, to say nothing of ballads, shows that the original form, if obtainable, is not universally preferable to the version modified by long use and the additions of later times. The date can sometimes, but very rarely, be fixed. Nigra's conclusion that historical songs are contemporary holds only when the fact is sharply crystallized, so to speak, in the song, and many ballads have an appearance of historical actuality without any real foundation. More serious difficulties present themselves in connexion with the airs. Songs, as we know, are in general composed to be sung to music already in existence, but some airs seem so particularly appropriate to the words that one can hardly avoid adopting the common theory that they came into existence together. Yet even here English experience shows us that hymn-tunes, seemingly the most intimately connected with their words, have been composed for other sentiments.

A most interesting result of recent investigation is what M. Doncieux calls the law of inverse cæsuras. In French epic poetry the first hemistich could terminate with an unaccented syllable, or not, as desired:—

"Mais cette liberté que se donnaient les trouvères est devenue pour le chansonnier, sans doute sous l'influence des types mélodiques, une règle constante: la chute du premier hémistiche est paroxytonique ou, comme nous disons, féminine, si celle du vers est oxytonique ou masculine, et réciproquement."

This law holds for all the Gallo-Roman dialects—Catalan, Provençal, Piedmontese—and all the Northern dialects. If it fails in any version of a song it is a sign that that version is corrupt. It is this community of form which enabled ballads to pass from one end of France to another, in spite of the most bewildering changes of language. We note in passing that the popular ballads retain the older and truer forms of pronunciation ("père," not "père"; "bou-elier," not "bou-eli-er," &c.) and more correctly derived conjugations. Students of popular music will find in this volume much help in the consideration of the principles which establish the text of ancient folk-songs.

THEOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Outlines of the Synoptic Record: being a Summary of the Narrative of the First Three Gospels in the Light of Modern Criticism. By the Rev. Bernard Hugh Bosanquet and Reginald A. Wenham. (Arnold.)—The title of this book states accurately its contents, but the words "modern criticism" require a slight limitation. What is meant is the modern criticism of the best scholars in the English Church. The writers have studied carefully the works of Sanday, Westcott, Wright, and Latham, and they have taken note of the productions of Lightfoot, Swete, Hort, and a few other lights of the Church. They have also derived assistance from Edersheim and Ramsay. The one German whom we have specially noticed as a source is Weiss, but information in regard to his opinions may have been derived from English writers. The authors have divided their work. Mr. Wenham has written the chapters on the synoptic problem and on eschatology, Mr. Bosanquet the rest of the book.

Mr. Wenham's chapters deserve high praise. He puts fairly and clearly the problem of the authorship to which the style, the coincidences, and discrepancies of the three Gospels give rise, and explains the methods by which it has been attempted to solve it. But his chapter on 'Eschatology' is defective, because he has not taken full note of the keen discussions on the subject which occupy so prominent a part in the theological literature of Germany, France, and Italy. He points out the difference between the Gospels of St. Mark and St. Matthew in regard to the views of Jesus concerning His Messiahship; but in his 'Eschatology' he rather throws these views into the background, apparently in the belief that the narratives have "been coloured or amplified—chiefly, it must be remembered, in words taken from the Old Testament—by the Evangelist or other Christians, whose minds were saturated with the favourite speculations of the day."

Mr. Bosanquet has done his part of the work with eminent impartiality and moderation. The one defect is that he has taken almost no note of the speculations which have recently prevailed on the Continent. The reader will get little information as to the controversies that have arisen and the theories that have been proposed in regard to the Lord's Supper or in regard to His resurrection and ascension; but Mr. Bosanquet may have acted wisely in saying little of these matters. The object of the writers of the book was to prepare a narrative based strictly on the three Gospels which would embody the results of recent investigations in England unobtrusively and impartially, and their efforts have been successful. The book deserves the warmest commendation. "It lays no claim," they say,

"to be a 'life of Christ,' but is rather to be used as a means whereby a knowledge of facts may be acquired on which to base such further study."

The authors have taken great pains to make themselves acquainted with what we may call subsidiary questions. They have excellent notes on the genealogies of St. Matthew and St. Luke, the date of the birth of Jesus, and the chronology of the Passion.

Nouum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi Latine secundum Editionem Sancti Hieronymi. Ad Codicum Manuscriptorum fidem recensuit Iohannes Wordsworth. In Operis societatem adsumto H. Iuliano White. —Partis Secundæ Fasciculus Primus. Actus Apostolorum. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—The continuation of the great work which the Bishop of Salisbury and Mr. White have undertaken will be heartily welcomed. The present fasciculus contains the Acts of the Apostles. The editing of this portion of the Vulgate is characterized by the same thoroughness, accuracy, wide scholarship, and breadth of view which rendered the first volume a landmark in the history of the Vulgate and a monument of English theological learning.

The editors first present an account of the various manuscripts which have been used in constituting the text. They refuse to divide them into families (stemmata codicum), but they separate them into classes, and indicate the nature of the manuscripts and their relation to other manuscripts, basing their remarks on the long and intimate acquaintance which they have made with each codex. They assign the highest place to the Codex Biblicorum San-Germanensis.

The text which they edit will be found not to differ much from that of the Clementine edition, and it may be doubted whether they have always chosen the best readings. They seem to have bound themselves to adhere to readings which are warranted by the MSS. which they deem the best, and to take little account of the probabilities of the narrated circumstances. The book, however, is extremely valuable, not so much for the text as for the copious apparatus criticus, which shows complete mastery of all details calculated to throw light on Jerome's version and its sources, as well as on its relation in important passages to the readings of the principal Greek MSS. and other authorities.

The editors also print the prefaces which occur in the MSS., pointing out the nature of the sources of these, and they publish for the first time the headings of the sections of the Acts as contained in three different manuscripts. These are profoundly interesting, as they are the production of a Donatist who exhibits his own peculiar beliefs in them.

Notes on the Epistles of St. Paul from Unpublished Commentaries, by J. B. Lightfoot (Macmillan), is an exact reprint of the volume published with the same title in 1895, which we noticed in The Athenæum on August 31st of that year.

The English Theologian's Model Library of Foreign Theological Literature. Compiled with the Assistance of Leading Theologians. (Williams & Norgate.)—This is an excellent catalogue, beautifully printed, well arranged, and calculated to be of great use to students of theology, but the book requires revision. Thus on p. 61 we find "Justinus, St., Opera Omnia Tom. 1. 2: Opera indubitata. Edidit cum adnotationibus, etc. Otto. 2nd Edition. 510 pp. Jenæ, 1848. 3s." On p. 80 there is a reference to the same works of Justin: "Vols. i.-v. Justinus Philosophi et Martyris Opera, 1876-1880. 11. 19s. 6d." No notice is taken of the fact that this is the third edition of the work given on p. 61, and includes, as the second edition did, both the genuine and spurious works of Justin. Then again in the list of the works included in the "Texte und Untersuchungen" of Gebhardt and Harnack mention is made of the treatise of Theophilus and of Justin's 'Apology and Dialogue' as being in preparation, whereas full intimation has been made that these books are to form part of the "Greek Christian Writers of the First Three Centuries," now appearing under the editorship of the Church Fathers Commission of the Royal Prussian Academy, Berlin. Again, we cannot see why mention should be made of Bacher's 'Agada der Tannaiten' and no mention made of the same author's 'Agada der Palästinischen Amoräer.' Of course, there are numerous omissions, as it is a catalogue of select books, but some subjects seem to be almost entirely neglected. Such books as Dr. Eibstein's 'Medizin im Alten Testament' and 'Medizin im Neuen Testament und im Talmud' ought to have a place in the catalogue.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

The Twentieth-Century Child, by Edward H. Cooper (Lane), is an amorphous book. The style is a mixture of slap-dash, slang, and fine writing; the matter a hotchpot of essays and lectures on the bringing-up of children, sketches of child-life, stories written by children (none of them worth printing), an appreciation of Miss Yonge, and, finally, a child-ghost story, a very charming version of a well-worn theme. All these things are, of course, germane enough to the subject in hand—the child of the twentieth century as Mr. Cooper has observed it. Mr. Cooper, whose fairy tales and novels of the turf are probably familiar to many of our readers, seems to have found his chief pleasure in life in playing the part of Father Christmas to a large number of children, mainly of wealthy or theatrical parents. He is, however, not unaware, to judge from a recent article in The Nineteenth Century, of the harm which even Father Christmas can do. Children are the fashion nowadays. They are allowed to be seen with their mothers, and are expected to talk. The measuring of their heads is a frequent incident at "At Homes." The cult of children, it may be observed, is coincident with the era of small families and infant phenomena. It is a reaction from the neglect, repression, or harshness of parents of former generations. Most of us have our recollections of early childhood, when all the world was wonderful, and yet the enjoyment of it was spoilt, as it seemed, by the repressive actions of unsympathetic "Olympians," to use Mr. Kenneth Grahame's happy phrase. We look back and say, "How perfectly happy we might have been then!" and reflect perhaps that we are very blasés now. The company of children renews our lost childhood. Partly in gratitude, and partly in memory of our own experiences, we determine that the children of the present day shall be perfectly happy. The result of our efforts is not all that we intend. The modern child is over-tired and over-amused. It is taught to live too fast, to form a habit of requiring to be amused, and to be kept in a constant whirl of excitement. When the whirl ceases, it is deplorably bored. The reaction, we suppose, will come. Such children will revert, it may be, to the practice of their grandmothers.

On these and other matters Mr. Cooper has many wise observations. In most cases we find him on the side of the angels. But, being a bachelor, he is, not unnaturally, devoid of the maternal instinct. He cannot blame the selfishness which deprives children of a mother's care and love, whether that selfishness takes the form of racing or political intrigue, novel-writing or social ambition. His remedy in such cases is to hire a "deputy-mother" in addition to a governess and nurse. For ourselves, we believe that, deputy or no deputy, there is no resentment more bitter or more just than that which children feel for a parent who regards them as a nuisance. Of them the biting epigram is true, "Children begin by loving their parents; after a while they judge them; rarely, if ever, do they forgive them." If English home life is worth anything—and in our opinion it is worth everything—it is worth the sacrifice which is daily made for it by innumerable busy men and women all over the country in every walk of life. We must educate our parents, not only in the knowledge of things sanitary and physiological, but also by the expression of public opinion that the neglect of children, in whatever way or for whatever cause, is a social crime.

Mr. Cooper has a genuine love of children—that is, as he wisely insists, of nice children. But his manner of writing is not always conciliatory. He expresses a hope that girls' high schools and colleges will not sink, through the increase of athleticism, to the "level of imbecile uselessness attained by Oxford and Cambridge ten years ago." It should be possible to think that athletics can be overdone without giving way to such absurd exaggeration. In the case of what were once known as young ladies' seminaries, we think the real danger is lest girls should injure themselves permanently by the games which they play with so much enthusiasm. Within the last few years the country has been strewn with the physical wrecks of young athletes who have damaged themselves at hockey. It may be that if the tendency goes on unchecked a future generation may have cause to complain, not like Mr. Cooper of "the enfeebled bodies bequeathed to us by the drunkards and gluttons who did us the honour of becoming our great-grandfathers," but of their over-exercised great-grandmothers. But generations usually pass from one extreme to the other; the pendulum swings to its utmost limit and returns. The fashion of vapours and fainting, of simpering and tears, has given way to a fashion of athletic independence and intellectual freedom. There is much talk of nerves and degeneration, but we fancy the nation is really healthier than it was. In the same way private schools, concerning which Mr. Cooper has many judicious remarks, are passing from the extreme of bad feeding, bad teaching, and bad discipline to an extreme of luxury. But as to the teaching and discipline, we notice that Mr. Cooper holds, as the result of much experience, the highest opinion of English schools.

MR. GEOFFREY DRAGE publishes in a series of "Books on Business," through Messrs. Methuen & Co., Trade Unions, a little volume in which he has performed the promise of his preface in attempting "to hold the balance level between the two parties—the employer and the employed." The result is a colourless production, in which we note no errors, but from which we do not derive any great amount of knowledge not to be obtained elsewhere. The volume seems to have been written a year ago, but there is a postscript which is of the last two or three weeks. At p. 57 the account of the Taff Vale case declares that "a private Bill to obtain the reversal of this decision is now (June, 1904) before Parliament." "Private Bill" should, of course, be "private-member's Bill," for Mr. Drage, as a former member of Parliament, knows that a "private Bill" is a very different matter. At p. 188 there is another account of the Taff Vale difficulty, and in the postscript a description of the reference of the Bill of the present year to the Grand Committee on Law, by which its fate is sealed. In the 'Conclusion' Mr. Drage departs a little from his laboured impartiality, and attributes to the trade unions a want of due regard to our decline from our former trade pre-eminence. We doubt whether this passage can be supported on investigation. The great unions, which contain far more than half the trade unionists of the country, and infinitely more than half their funds—the miners, the cotton operatives, the engineers, and the two wealthy unions which deal with similar but more limited trades than those covered by the Amalgamated Society of Engineers—show by their annual reports an exact appreciation of the situation, and one which in no respect differs from the survey now being ably accomplished for the supplements of The Times by Sir Charles McLaren, the most competent of writers among the employing class.

MR. T. A. COGHLAN, the eminent statistician of Sydney, is at the present moment on a visit to this country, and is, we believe, acting as Agent-General of New South Wales. We receive the eleventh issue of the annual volume A Statistical Account of Australia and New Zealand, 1903-4, edited by him and dated from his office in December last. It presents the usual features. The chapter on defence would be the better for some allusion to the arrangement with the Imperial Government as to the garrisoning of Thursday Island and Port Darwin.

By far the greater portion of Mr. Cecil Chesterton's Gladstonian Ghosts (Brown, Langham & Co.) appeared to us so much too political for our pages that it was not till near the end of the volume that we discovered anything which seemed fit to be the subject of notice. Mr. Chesterton appears more concerned with hurting the feelings of various schools of reformers than with setting-out doctrines of his own in form calculated to attract, and it is only in respect of what is commonly called Municipal Socialism that we find any trace of constructive policy in his book. After his discussion of this subject Mr. Chesterton continues to be reasonable, and recommends by sound argument administrative reform in various Government departments.

Borough Customs. By Mary Bateson. Vol. I. (Selden Society.)—Congratulations may be offered to the Selden Society on the choice of a new and interesting subject for its latest volume, and on its treatment at the very capable hands of Miss Bateson. The study of municipal antiquities was much hampered till recently by the difficulty of consulting the sources; but these have slowly become more accessible of late, as Dr. Gross's labours have shown; and although there is yet much to be done, Miss Bateson's "reference list of sources," arranged alphabetically under towns, illustrates the richness of the field. Urging the value to the student of local or "particular custom," she points out that it shows us "live law in the making."

We are promised a second volume, in which the evidence here collected will be discussed; but the system of classification under headings, adopted in these pages, invites and enables the reader to draw here and there conclusions for himself. The scholarly character of Miss Bateson's work is well seen in her list of sources, which forms a valuable bibliography some forty pages long. We have carefully examined its contents, collected from many scattered quarters, and have been struck by their painstaking accuracy, the only slips revealed being the minute ones of describing Richard FitzBaldwin, Lord of Okehampton, as a Redvers, and of citing "the charter roll of 1 Ric. I." (instead of the patent roll of 1 Ric. II.) for Richard I.'s charter to Colchester. The customs of the borough-moots, here recovered, may fairly be held, Miss Bateson contends, to illustrate the practice of those rural hundred-moots as to which, owing to their early decay, our evidence is very slight. In towns the royal charters gave to the local customs a prolonged existence. It would be interesting to learn to what extent the customs granted or confirmed by these charters were subsequently modified; the right of Withernam, for instance, here appears as granted by Richard I. to the burgesses of Colchester, but it was withdrawn from them, we believe, by Edward II.

As might be expected, there is much diversity in the legal practice and in the penalties. The latter are archaic in the south-east, and curiously ferocious at Portsmouth. At Sandwich those found guilty of homicide were buried alive at "Thiefdowns"; at Hastings and Dover felons were thrown from the cliffs; at Pevensey and at Fordwich they were drowned. At Portsmouth the homicide was burnt if a man, and drowned in the sea if a woman; the thief, if a man, was blinded and mutilated, if a woman was only mutilated; petty larceny was punished by nailing the culprit's ear to the pillory, "he to choose whether he will cut or tear it off." Another seaport, Waterford, was no less merciless in its customs: arson was punished by throwing the culprit into the fire, and the miller guilty of pecculation to the amount of fourpence was hanged from the beam of his mill. These and other penalties are the subject of learned foot-notes, suggestive, by analogies, of their origin. There are also archaic traces in connexion with the wager of law: in a plea of debt the custom of London was that a foreigner should adduce six compurgators, while another provision directed him to go "to the six churches nearest to the Guildhall and there swear that the oath that he made in the Guildhall was good." At Lincoln the burgess who denied a debt brought into court with him two parties of five men each, between whom a pointed knife was thrown, to decide, by its fall, which should be his compurgators. In appeal of life or limb it was the peculiar custom of the Cinque Ports to require thirty-six compurgators, as in some other parts. The old London custom of the dead man's law which prevailed in the twelfth century was abolished, we learn, in that which followed, when a witness was no longer allowed to swear on the grave of a dead man as to the testimony the deceased would have borne. Among many other curious customs were those of "Fetch and have" at Fordwich, where land was claimed by touching it with the right foot before witnesses in formal fashion; the branding with the church key for sacrilege at Dover, the exemption from attendance at the hundred court of Cardiff if the burgess had already when summoned one foot in the stirrup for a journey, and the ceremony of the bailiff with the white rod taking away the keys of a house at Hereford. The whole book is a repertory of old-world practices in mediæval England, and the erudite care with which it has been edited will lead the student to anticipate with pleasure the appearance of the promised second volume.

Machiavelli and the Modern State. By Louis Dyer. (Boston, Ginn.)—It is not easy to say anything new about Machiavelli. Any one who reads Mr. John Morley's Romanes Lecture will have recognized that. Its dignified and complacent morality and its literary charm only serve to conceal a fundamentally commonplace restatement of a well-known criticism. Mr. Dyer, however, without any of Mr. Morley's charm or Macaulay's zest, does contrive to say a good deal that is valuable in the course of these most interesting lectures. His main points are these. Machiavelli's debt to Dante is greater than is commonly recognized. The influence both of Dante and Savonarola on the development of his mind is deeper than he himself knew. They "clothed his mind with that elusive atmosphere of mystic fatalism in which at times his Prince may seem to move."

Secondly—and this is the more important—when he talks of Roman virtue, Machiavelli is really thinking of Swiss prowess:—

"The Swiss sat for the portrait he gives of the Roman people in much the same sense in which Caesar Borgia sat for the Prince."

This point the author develops with much ingenuity and learning. He shows from Machiavelli's correspondence and other sources how he shared the general admiration of the military power of the Swiss and the no less general apprehension of their becoming conquerors of a large part of the world:—

"I am of those who feel great fear of the Swiss, and yet I cannot so account them, as to think they may prove the Romans come back to life."

This extract makes clear the parallel the writer has in his mind. All this is made the more plausible when we consider the purely practical interest with which Machiavelli studied the past. Mr. Dyer very well brings out the fact that Machiavelli was the first of the moderns to strive to organize on an historical basis "a modern science of government such as that which dawned upon Plato and was wrought out for antiquity by Aristotle." In this he was the precursor of the Bodins and the Gregorys of Toulouse, the Hotmans and the Buchanans, whose writings were as much more voluminous as they were less original than his own. As Mr. Dyer says:—

"He prized an event as a chemist prizes his acid or his salt, for the reactions he could obtain by projecting it into the elements of the particular combination in politics at which he happened to be working."

This is a far more illuminating explanation of Machiavelli's method than that which describes it as "the passionless curiosity of the man of science."

SOME while ago, when noticing Mr. E. G. Gardner's admirable work 'Dukes and Poets at Ferrara,' we remarked on the neglect with which that most historical city had been treated by English writers—surprising in an age when everybody goes to Italy, and most people write books about it. However, the neglect has been handsomely repaired. Following close on Mr. Gardner's book comes The Story of Ferrara, by Ella Noyes, illustrated by Dora Noyes, in Messrs. Dent's pretty "Mediæval Towns" series. For visitors to Ferrara it would be hard to imagine a more desirable companion. The history of the city and its great house is told clearly and well, Miss Noyes giving rather more about the earlier marquises than would fall within Mr. Gardner's plan. There is also a good account of that pathetic little figure the Duchess Renée of France, whom he has not yet reached. Miss Dora Noyes's little sketches are effective for their purpose, and unpretentious.

Aristotle's Politics. Translated by Benjamin Jowett. With Introduction, Analysis, and Index by H. W. C. Davis. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—Good wine needs no bush. Mr. Davis wisely confines his introduction to half a dozen pages of blameless generalities. The analysis and the index are well done. A bibliographical note ought to have been added, so as to make it clear that this translation is reprinted from a former edition with notes. There was all the more reason for reissuing Jowett's work in this form inasmuch as, whilst the notes of the earlier volume contain little that is of value, the version itself is in his best style. It is said that no man can be Platonist and Aristotelian at once. Jowett, however, managed to render the Greek of both writers into an English at once appropriate and in its own right classical.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE have made a welcome addition to their series of "Early Novelists" in translations of The Decameron and The Heptameron, which are well got up. The rendering of the first, by Mr. J. M. Rigg, is not new, but a creditable performance. The addition of an introduction and Symonds's essay on Boccaccio is a good idea. Our copy is rather spoilt by the insertion of pp. 401 to 401 in a wrong place. Mr. A. Machen's version of 'The Heptameron' is new to us, and deserves high praise for its spirit and sense of idiom. He is fully justified in calling attention to the delinquencies of some of his predecessors, and he adds some useful hints as to the bibliography of the book.

THE same publishers have issued a popular edition of Stepniak's well-known book on The Russian Peasantry, which is timely.

To their popular series "The King's Classics" Messrs. Moring have added a reprint of The Letters of Falstaff, by James White, schoolmate and friend of Charles Lamb, afterwards printer of Fleet Street, and Gaius of the dusky company of London chimneyswoops. The little book is tasteful and neat; but, after all, the value of a reprint lies in its accuracy, and in the present instance greater vigilance might have been exercised in looking after the text. Misprints occur too frequently; on the pages numbered as below we find the following: "Irelande" (Irelande), ix, x; "There" (These), xxiii; "day" (daye), xxv; "down" (downe), xxvi; "degeneration" (regeneration), xxxv; "cuckoos" (cuckows), 3; "acres" (acre), 25; "our" (own), 30; "arch" (ach), 45; "'tis for your sake" omitted, 49; "my" (mine), 57; "inseparable" (inseparate), 75; "proccessively" (proccessively = "progressively"), 75; "him" inserted, 77; "quaint" (queint), 83; "and" omitted, 86. In some two hundred and fifty places the initial capitals of the editio princeps have been discarded, with the result that the old-world look of the letterpress is in great measure sacrificed. Surely in this particular, as in the obsolete spelling, the exemplar of the first edition should have been consistently followed. Again, there appears, at the foot of the last page of the preface in the first (1796) and so-called second (1797) editions, an erratum—"for Grandam read Grandsire"—which in Messrs. Moring's reprint is omitted from its proper place, though the misprint in question is left standing in the text. Closer search reveals the erratum hidden away amongst the author's notes, which, by the way, are here grouped at the end of the volume—not (as in the first edition) printed as foot-notes, each on its proper page. On the whole, this pretty book is of inferior worth, as a reprint, to that published by Robson, of Cranbourn Street, in 1877. Nor is it the fact that the frontispiece, drawn and engraved by W. Leney for the edition of 1796, is now "reproduced for the first time." It will be found, facing p. 180, in the third volume of Mr. Macdonald's edition of 'The Works of Charles Lamb' (Dent & Co.).

WE have received The Imitation of Christ from the Astolat Press, now described as of Great Castle Street, W. The little book is very prettily printed and got up, a desirable possession except for eyes which cannot read rather minute type. The Head of Christ, from a drawing by Leonardo, is an appropriate frontispiece. The translation is from the fourth edition by F. B., who in 1620 dedicated his version "to the honourable and vertuous Elizabeth Vaux."

PROF. F. A. WULFF, of the University of Lund, in Sweden, sends us a small brochure, entitled Petrarch at Vacluse, 1337-1353 (Lund), in which he embodies the results of his researches at the "sacred fountain" in 1901. It contains twenty-seven very good photographs, taken by his son, and a really admirable map of Vacluse and its environs on two separate scales—the larger 300 metres to an inch. Pictures of Vacluse, from Tomasini downwards, have generally been of so fanciful a kind that they give little notion of the unique beauty of the valley, marred though it is in these days by factory chimneys; and these photographs, taken together, convey a better idea of the scenery than any hitherto published in England. The title of the paper is inexact, for only seven out of twenty-nine pages are concerned with Petrarch's sojourn, the rest being devoted to a description of the neighbourhood as illustrated in the photographs, and to a theory, which Prof. Wulff is developing in a larger work, about the locality of Laura's dwelling. He belongs to the class of Petrarchists—once numerous, but now nearly extinct—who maintain, in defiance of positive statements in the Latin works and less certain indications in the Rime, that Laura's home was close to Vacluse, and that she died unmarried. He quotes the "Mira il gran sasso" from the sonnet 'Anima Bella,' but without saying that, while Petrarch there bids his sainted mistress look down from Paradise on his rustic solitude, he urges her in the same breath to leave all thought of her home—the "birthplace of his passion"—which, according to the Professor, was within a mile of the poet's house. As this was the period of his fiercest dislike of Avignon, there can be little doubt that he hero indicates that city, especially as the MS. note in his Virgil expressly mentions it as the scene of his "inamoration." But, whatever view they may take of the Professor's theory, all lovers of the poet will do well to carry this pamphlet with them in exploring the beauties of Vacluse.

WE have on our table Makers of Modern History, by the Hon. Edward Cadogan (Murray),—Racial Supremacy, being Studies in Imperialism, by J. G. Godard (Simpkin),—The Letters of Theodora, by A. L. Rouse (Macmillan),—The Art of the Musician, by H. G. Hanchett (Macmillan),—German Exercises, by H. G. Atkins (Blackie),—A Practical Course of Instruction in Personal Magnetism, Telepathy, and Hypnotism, by G. White (Routledge),—Introductory Mathematics, by R. B. Morgan (Blackie),—Modern Electricity, by J. Henry and K. J. Hora (Hodder & Stoughton),—Catalogue of the Noctuidæ in the Collection of the British Museum, by Sir G. F. Hampson, Bart. (Longmans),—St. Nicholas, Vol. XXXII. (Macmillan),—The Chaunceys, by H. A. Darlington (Nisbet),—Jack Verschoyle's Wife, by Cattieuchlan (Gay & Bird),—Sorreltop, by E. Crawford (Drane),—The House of Barnkirk, by Amy McLaren (Duckworth),—Elizabeth Grey, by E. M. Green (Blackwood),—The Creed of Christ (Lane),—The Shrine of Faith, by the Rev. T. H. Wright (Melrose),—The Quest of the Infinite, by B. A. Millard (Allenson),—The Divine Cure for Heart Trouble, and other Sermons, by the Rev. P. C. Purves (Dent),—and The Love of Heloise and Abelard: a Poem, by E. M. Rudland (Kegan Paul). Among New Editions we have How to Read the Money Article, by C. Duguid (E. Wilson),—Asia and Europe, by M. Townsend (Constable),—Thoughts for Young Men, by J. C. Ryle, D.D. (Thynne),—and The Last of the Wonder Club, by M. Y. Halidom (Burleigh).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Creed of Christ, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Gurney (A.), Amor Ordinatorius, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Millard (B. A.), The Quest of the Infinite, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Moorehead (W. G.), Outline Studies in the New Testament, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Moule (H. C. G.), My Brethren and Companions, and other Sermons, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Purves (P. C.), The Divine Cure for Heart Trouble, and other Sermons, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Scott (J. J.), The Life of Christ, extra cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Wright (T. H.), The Shrine of Faith, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Law.

McClain (E.), Constitutional Law in the United States, edited by A. B. Hart, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Bradley (J. W.), Illuminated Manuscripts, 16mo, 2/6 net.
Giotto, by B. de Sélinecourt, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Heath (D.), Miniatures, roy. 8vo, 25/ net.
Hodgson (J. E.) and Eaton (F. A.), The Royal Academy and its Members, 1768-1830, 8vo, 21/ net.
Holme (C.), The Old Water-Colour Society, 1801-1904, 5/ net.
Peters (J. P.) and Thiersch (H.), Painted Tombs in the Necropolis of Marissa (Marashah), edited by S. A. Cook, 4to, 42/ net.
Rome, painted by A. Pisa, Text by M. A. R. Tucker and H. Malleson, 8vo, 20/ net.
Sturgis (R.), The Appreciation of Sculpture, 8vo, 7/6 net; How to Judge Architecture, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Beatty (H. M.), Dante and Virgil, 18mo, leather, 2/6 net.
Binyon (L.), Penthesilea, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Euripides, The Trojan Women, translated into Verse by G. Murray, imp. 16mo, sewed, 1/ net.
L'Avocat Patelin, adapted by the Abbé Brueys, translated by S. F. G. Whitaker, cr. 8vo, parchment, 3/6 net.
Rudland (E. M.), The Love of Heloise and Abelard, 4to, 3/6 net.
Wilcox (D.), Verses from Maoriland, 12mo, 2/6 net.

Music.

Hanchett (H. G.), The Art of the Musician, cr. 8vo, 6/6 net.

Bibliography.

Courtney (W. P.), A Register of National Bibliography, 2 vols. cr. 8vo, 31/6 net.

Philosophy.

Thompson (H. B.), The Mental Traits of Sex, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

History and Biography.

Blackley (H.), Some Distinguished Victims of the Scaffold, roy. 8vo, 10/6 net.
Furse (G. A.), A Hundred Years Ago: Battles by Land and by Sea, Ulm—Trafalgar—Austerlitz, 8vo, 10/ net.
Grant (Mrs. C.), A Mother of Czars, 8vo, 12/ net.
Jebb (R.), Studies in Colonial Nationalism, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Neesima (Rev. J. Hardy), by J. D. Davis, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Robinson (A. G.), Cuba and the Intervention, 7/6 net.
Ross (William), of Cowcaddens, by J. M. E. Ross, 6/ net.

Geography and Travel.

Harper (C. G.), The Oxford, Gloucester, and Milford Haven Road, 2 vols. illustrated, 8vo, 32/ net.
Macculloch (J. A.), The Misty Isle of Skye, its Scenery, its People, its Story, illustrated, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.
Smith (A.), A Summer in Skye, 12mo, 2/6 net.

Philology.

Madan (A. C.), An Outline Dictionary, 12mo, 7/6 net.
Poole (W. M.) and Becker (M.), Lectures Françaises: Géographie et Histoire, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Some Stumbling-Blocks of the French Language and the Way to Avoid Them, by G. N. Triccoche, cr. 8vo, 4/ net.

Science.

Alphéraky (S.), The Geese of Europe and Asia, 4to, 63/ net.
Fraser (S.), The Potato, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Haeckel (E.), The Evolution of Man, 2 vols., translated by J. McCabe, roy. 8vo, 42/ net.

Hinder (H. C.), Lectures on Clinical Surgery, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Journal of Agricultural Science, Vol. 1, Part 1, 5/ net.
Moncalm (M.), The Origin of Thought and Speech, translated by G. S. Whitmarsh, 8vo, 9/

General Literature.

Balzac, Maximes, 16mo, parchment, 6/ net.
Brown (V.), The Disciple's Wife, cr. 8vo, 6/
Cahan (A.), The White Terror and the Red, cr. 8vo, 6/
Cherterton (C.), Gladstonian Ghosts, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Collins (F. H.), Author and Printer, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Conrlander (A.), Seth of the Cross, cr. 8vo, 6/
Crowe (Major J. H. V.), Problems in Manœvre Tactics, extra cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Diehl (A. M.), The Love of her Life, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Dodd (C. I.), A Vagrant Englishwoman, cr. 8vo, 6/
Drage (G.), Trade Unions, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Duncan (N.), Dr. Grenfell's Parish, The Deep-Sea Fishermen, cr. 8vo, 5/
Fiends and Angels, cr. 8vo, 5/
Graham (H.), Misrepresentative Men, 16mo, boards, 3/6
Green (A. K.), The Millionaire Baby, cr. 8vo, 6/
Gunter (A. C.), The Conscience of a King, cr. 8vo, 6/
Harrod (F.), The Taming of the Brute, cr. 8vo, 6/
Hewlett (M.), Fond Adventures, cr. 8vo, 6/
McLaren (A.), The House of Barnkirk, cr. 8vo, 6/
Mande (F. N.), The Evolution of Modern Strategy from the Eighteenth Century, 8vo, 5/ net.
Meyrick (L.), Vicar Denior, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Nugent (G.), Lectures on Company, Battalion, and Brigade
Drill, 16mo, 3/
Queer Lady Judas, by Rita, cr. 8vo, 6/
Ransome (A.), The Stone Lady, Ten Little Papers and Two
Mad Stories, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Roberts (M.), Captain Balaam of the Cormorant, and other Sea Comedies, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Salome (M.), Some Little London Children, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.
Shafer (S. A.), Beyond Chance of Change, cr. 8vo, 6/
Statesman's Year-Book, edited by J. S. Keltie, 10/6 net.
Swan (A. S.), Christian's Cross, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Sykes (J. A. C.), The Macdonnells, cr. 8vo, 6/
Ward (E. S. P.), Trixy, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Rosenzweig (A.), Kleidung u. Schmuck im biblischen u.
talmudischen Schrifttum, 3m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Bandot (A. de) et Perrault-Dabot (A.), Les Cathédrales de France, Vol. 1, Part 1, 25fr.
Hourticq (L.), Rubens, 3fr. 50.
Pottier (E.), Douris et les Peintres de Vases Grecs, 2fr. 50.

Drama.

Mendès (C.), Scarron, 3fr. 50.

Political Economy.

Pesch (H.), Lehrbuch der Nationalökonomie, Vol. 1, 10m.

History and Biography.

Boutard (Abbé C.), Lamennais, sa Vie et ses Doctrines, 5fr.
Faguet (É.), Propos Littéraires, Series 3, 3fr. 50.
Moulin (R.), Une Année de Politique Extérieure, 3fr. 50.
Stapfer (P.), Victor Hugo à Guernsey, 3fr. 50.

Science.

Poincaré (H.), La Valeur de la Science, 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Loti (P.), La Troisième Jeunesse de Madame Prune, 3fr. 50.
Raymond (Mme. A.), La Cuisine, l'Hygiène, et la Table, 4fr.

B. F. STEVENS'S CATALOGUE-INDEX OF MANUSCRIPTS RELATING TO AMERICA, 1763-83.

REFERENCE to this work has been made in The Athenæum from time to time during its progress, and we think the following account of its contents and scope will be of interest to our readers now that it is completed and bound. Mr. Stevens had been gathering material for this Catalogue-Index for nearly thirty years when he died in 1902, and had virtually finished it at that time, but considerable work in transcribing material and arranging for the binder had to be done before it could be said to be absolutely completed.

Briefly, it is a Catalogue-Index of the manuscripts in public and private archives in England, France, Holland, and Spain relating to America and the American Revolution between the Paris treaty of 1763 and the treaty of peace, signed again at Paris in 1783, by which American independence was secured. All the historical manuscripts to which access could be obtained in the countries named were carefully gone through, and note was made of every paper found, with the result that over 161,000 documents are enumerated.

More than half of these documents are in the Public Record Office, where they are found in the following series:—

America and West Indies (341 volumes), containing letters to the Secretary of State in London from the royal governors of the different provinces, viz., Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and East and West Florida, giving all the current details of their respective governments; the military correspondence of the successive commanders-in-chief, Generals Gage, Sir William Howe, Sir Henry Clinton, and Sir Guy Carleton; letters from the Superintendents of Indian Affairs, &c.; also the draft letters of the Secretary of State to them.

Board of Trade (365 volumes), consisting of letters from the same governors, addressed to the Board of Trade and Plantations, with numerous enclosures, and with the Acts of the different provincial legislatures, the Minutes of Council, the Journals of Assembly, &c.

Colonial Correspondence.—From numerous volumes relating to the West Indies, Canada, &c., have been selected papers bearing on the original thirteen American colonies.

Admiralty.—The volumes of this series contain dispatches from the admirals—Hood, Montagu, Samuel and Thomas Graves, Sir Peter Parker, Lord Howe, Gambier, Arbuthnot, Digby, Byron, Rodney, &c.—on the American and neighbouring stations, to Philip Stephens, the Secretary of the Admiralty, and journals of these admirals; letters from the naval captains on the American station to the same Secretary; orders and instructions from the Admiralty to the captains; letters to the Admiralty from the Secretary of State; description of the ships of war on the American station, &c.

Foreign Office Records.—Of these, the series "France" is naturally the fullest for American material (62 volumes). It contains the correspondence of Lord Stormont, the British ambassador in Paris, with the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, Lord Weymouth, down to March, 1778, when the rupture took place and Lord Stormont was recalled. The papers relating to the negotiations for peace in 1782 and 1783 are also here, when the commissioners from all the belligerent powers met in Paris, Richard Oswald, Henry Strachey, Alleyne Fitzherbert, and the Duke of Manchester acting on behalf of England; the first two more directly with the Americans, and the latter with France and Spain.

In the series "Holland" (29 volumes) is the correspondence of Sir Joseph Yorke—the ambassador at the Hague—with the Foreign Secretary in London till December, 1780, when the conduct of the Dutch left the Court of Great Britain no alternative but a declaration of war and brought a third European State into the contest.

"Spain" (19 volumes) contains the correspondence of the ambassador, Lord Grantham, and sundry consuls, till 1779, when Spain joined France to oppose England; also papers relating to the mission of negotiation in 1779 and 1780 at Madrid, undertaken by Richard Cumberland and Father Hussey, the Jesuit priest attached to the Spanish Embassy in London.

"German States" (18 volumes) consists of papers relating to the German auxiliaries—the Hessians, Brunswickers, Anhalt, Anspach, and Waldeck troops.

These are the principal divisions which are dealt with, but others are included.

The remaining documents in England were found in the British Museum, the Royal Institution, and the private collections of the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Abergavenny, Lord Sackville (the Lord George Germain correspondence), the Earl of Carlisle, Lord Auckland, the Earl of Dartmouth, and others.

In France the following collections are included: the Archives des Affaires Étrangères, de la Marine, de la Guerre, des Colonies, and Archives Nationales. In Holland (the Hague): Rijks Archief (Royal Archives) and Huis Archief (manuscripts of the Prince of Orange). In Spain: Archives at Alcalá, Seville, and Simancas. This class of information records the applications of the Americans to the various European Courts and the assistance given them; the consequent diplomatic relations of these Courts towards England; the correspondence of their ambassadors and ministers, as well as the interesting letters and papers of the first accredited representatives sent by these foreign Courts to the American Congress.

The Catalogue-Index itself consists of three divisions:—

I. Catalogue or short title lists of the papers in the order in which they exist in the volumes or bundles in the several archives or collections. This is in fifty large foolscap folio volumes, bound in full blue morocco.

II. Chronological Index of all the papers included in above Division I. In this division each document is thrown into chronological order, day by day, and, further, each document is much more fully described than in Division I., particulars being given of its present location, its place of origin, its date, its author, its addressee, its language, length and enclosures, with a précis or notice of its contents. Here, also, are shown the duplicates, triplicates, extracts, &c., whether in the same collection or in other archives. This division is in a hundred volumes, bound in full red morocco.

III. Alphabetical Index, containing the names of the authors and the addressees, so arranged that on the one side is shown every paper by each individual writer and to whom it was addressed, and on the other side the name of every individual receiver with the name of the writer. Where no writer is named the document is indexed under its subject-matter. This division is in thirty volumes, bound in full brown morocco.

The complete work will thus be seen to consist of 180 foolscap folio volumes of from 400 to 500 pages each, which is perhaps sufficient indication of the task which Mr. Stevens undertook, and which has at last been brought to a satisfactory conclusion. Its economic value to Americans as the sole key at present to the scattered papers containing the history of the American colonies for twenty eventful years admits of no question. Our only regret is that the compiler did not live to see the completion of his immense labour.

A LYKE-WAKE DIRGE.

Trinity College, Oxford.

THE discussion on the word "fleet," arising out of Mr. Mayhew's restoration, confirmed by the references in last week's Athenæum to the original authority, John Aubrey, illustrates the certainties and uncertainties of emendation and derivation. There is no doubt that he and Dr. Murray and Mr. F. Sidgwick are right in reading "fleet," and in identifying the word with "flet," in the phrase "fire and flet"; probably also in deriving it from "flett" with the sense of "floor."

But it is clear that the word would mean "floor," and not "floor-room" or "house-room." The first and third of the wills quoted by Mr. W. H. Legge have the full "flette-rome and fire-rome"; the second has the shortened form "fyre and flett," i.e., fire and floor. In this will, however, the words are balanced against "egresse and ingresse to the well and the oven" in a manner which suggests that there was already a popular misderivation, which had become fixed when Aubrey (not his editor) glossed "fleet" by "water," and Kennett commented on the gloss. This misderivation is no doubt responsible for the change of spelling of "flet" to "fleet," which, in its turn, produced the falsa lectio "sleet," and then Scott's absurd identification of "sleet" and "salt."

If the confusion should be pre-Elizabethan, then the original phrase would probably be "fire and flet," and the addition of "room" to both would assist the identification of "flet" with "fleet" in the sense of "water." In this case the 'Dirge' itself would be of greater antiquity than the time when the confusion became prevalent. H. E. D. BLAKISTON.

'HYMNS FROM THE GREEK OFFICE BOOKS.'

April 7th, 1905.

YOUR reviewer of my book last week excites doubts as to my capacity for the work I have undertaken, "by the extraordinary number of blunders that appear in the limited amount of Greek printed in the book." What does he mean? The Greek is not mine. If he has any objection to make to the Greek of John of Damascus and his confrères, let him say so. The Greek is theirs. If, however, he means to insinuate that by an error in transcription, or by permitting a misprint to pass unchallenged, he has discovered evidence of unfitness on my part for a work to which I have given much time and pains, he is surely ill-off for material for complaint. But is there even one error in transcription in the entire book? I challenge your reviewer to point to one. That he is bound to do, having made the bold assertion that there is an extraordinary number. A few inevitable misprints he may find in the book, but none in the Greek transcription. What he says regarding the omission of the iota adscript as being contrary to the invariable practice of inscriptions, is not according to fact.

JOHN BROWNLIE.

*.* The Greek index of Mr. Brownlie's book occupies two and a half small pages. The first line is thus printed ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς, κύριε ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς. Any eye for Greek could see at a glance that there must be something wrong when the same word is printed ἐλεῖσον and ἐλέησον. The third line has βενστοί πῶς, the fifth ταχύς εἰς, the sixth ἡ without an accent, the seventh θουργικῶ without an accent; the eighth has ἐξῆψους in one word; the tenth has τῇ for the dative of the article; the twelfth runs σήμερον κρεμᾶται ἐπὶ ξύλον, where we have a new form of a verb and an unaccented preposition; and so on in many of the subsequent lines. The next to the last, for instance, is ὁ δὲ βίος, σκιά καὶ ἐνύπνιον.

In the two pages and a half we have counted twenty-two mistakes.

The mistakes are all repeated, so far as we have noticed, when the lines are placed as the headings of the hymns. The reviewer thought that these mistakes had been introduced by some mischance, but as we discover in Mr. Brownlie's letter that he has not yet found them out, the case is worse with him than we suspected.

THE SCOTT SALE.

IN continuation of our report of the sale of the library of the late John Scott, of Largs, N.B., sold by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge March 27th to April 7th, the following high prices may be noted: Holinshed's Chronicles, Shakspeare edition, 1577, 44l. Hume of Godscroft's Families of Angus and Douglas, a hitherto unknown edition, probably printed in 1633, 60l. Proofs of the Pretender being truly James III., finely bound for the Old Pretender, 1713, 35l. James I., Essays of a Prentise in the Divine Art of Poetry, 1585, 68l.; Poetical Exercises at Vacant Hours, 1591, 80l.; Basilikon Doron, 1599, 174l.; Dæmonologie, 1597, 31l. Ben Jonson's Entertainment of K. James II. through London, uncut, 1604, 68l. Jordanus Nemorarius, Arithmetica, 1496, 68l. Knox's Liturgies, 1575, 109l. Livius, Venet., V. de Spira, 1470, 35l. 10s. Maitland Club Publications, 1828-59, 87l.

The following were the highest prices realized in the Mary, Queen of Scots, collection: Against the Scottishe Queene, that She Ought Not to Live, &c., contemporary MS., 24 ll., 100l. Unfinished and Unsigned Autograph Letter of the Queen (14 pp.), 900l. Baif, Chant de Joie sur les Espousailles du Dauphin et la Royne d'Escoce, 1558, N. Bodragan, Epitome of the Title that the Kinges Majestie hath to the Realme of Scotland, 1548, 45l. Buchanan, De Jure Regni apud Scotos, first edition, 1579, 35l. Burleigh, The Execution of Justice in England, &c., 1583, 35l. 10s. Caussin, The Holy Court, 1674, old morocco, with cipher of Charles II., 59l. P. Cockburn, In Dominicam Orationem Meditatio, printed in St. Andrews by John Scot, 1553, 201l. Collections relating to the Funerals of Queen Mary, with inserted illustrations, 1822, 75l. Defence of Queen Elizabeth for the beheading of Mary, Queen of Scots, contemporary MS. (15 ll.), 1587-8, 36l. Grande et Magnifique Triumphe fait au Mariage du Dauphin et la Royne d'Escoce (8 ll.), 1558, 85l. Discourse de la Mort de la Royne Marie (4 ll.), 1587, 114l. Documents relating to a Robbery of Jewels from Queen Mary, 1576, 108l. Harangue de la Royne d'Escoce dans les Estats de son Royaume, 1563, 101l. History of Mary, Queen of Scots, 1559-87, contemporary MS., 116l. Leslie's Defence of the Honour of Marie, Queen of Scots, 1569, 127l. A Register of the Proceedings in the Charge of Ambassador of John Leslie, Bishop of Ross (MS., 113 ll.), with arms of Prince Henry, 1573, 164l. Whole Proceedings at the Tryal of Thos., Duke of Norfolk (MS., 9 large folio sheets), 1571, 126l. Original Letters and Papers relating to Mary, Queen of Scots (from the Ashburnham Barrois Collection, where it sold for 196l.), 355l. John Stubbs's Discovery of a Gaping Gulf, 1579, 101l. Udall's History of Queen Mary, illustrated with 214 portraits, 1624, 76l.

The whole collection of works relating to Queen Mary, numbering 391 lots, realized the very large sum of 4,750l.

Literary Gossip.

MESSRS. LONGMAN hope to issue soon after Easter 'John Knox and the Reformation,' by Mr. Andrew Lang. The author attempts to get behind tradition, and, while recognizing Knox's greatness as a man and a Christian, finds him much less admirable in his public and political life. It is pointed out in the preface that "if Knox, both as a politician and an historian, resembled Charles I. in 'sailing as near the wind' as he could, the circumstance (as another of his biographers remarks) only makes him more human and interesting."

As modern history is not uninclined to canonize Knox, following Carlyle's lead, some pretty sparring may be expected.

MR. AND MRS. EGERTON CASTLE's novel 'Rose of the World,' which has been appearing in The Cornhill Magazine, will be published in book form by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. on May 8th. The "Rose" herself, in her half-awakened girlhood, married a splendid young soldier, who met his end defending a fort on the Indian frontier. In a kind of spiritual numbness, she then married a fussy lieutenant-governor, but awakened to the overwhelming fact that she was passionately in love with her first husband's memory.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is to publish a volume by Dr. William Rainey Harper, President of the University of Chicago, entitled 'The Trend in Higher Education in America.' It deals with such subjects as the university and democracy, religious education, the training of theological students, the university and commercial education, alleged luxury among college students, and Latin versus science.

THE May number of The Independent Review will include, amongst other articles of interest, a criticism, by Sir Edmund Verney, of certain recent proposals with regard to agricultural education; a summary, by Mr. Hilaire Belloc, of the recent campaign in Manchuria; and an account, by Sir Lauder Brunton, of the proposed National League for Physical Education and Improvement.

MR. MURRAY is going to publish 'Five Years in a Persian Town,' by the Rev. Napier Malcolm; 'The Life of Sir Andrew Clarke, of the Royal Engineers,' by Col. R. H. Vetch; and 'Memoirs of General Sir Henry Dermot Daly,' by Major H. Daly.

A LETTER which recently appeared asking for letters of the late Duke of Cambridge for the 'Life' now being prepared by the Sub-Dean of the Chapels Royal has given rise to widespread misapprehension. Some years ago his Royal Highness entrusted the writing of his military 'Life' to Col. Willoughby Verner, to whom he handed over all papers and documents necessary for the purpose. This book is now nearly ready for publication, and will be brought out by Mr. Murray. The work on which the Sub-Dean is engaged is the private 'Life' of the Duke, and was only begun after his death.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces for early publication 'A History of Pembroke Dock from the Earliest Times to the Present Day,' by Mrs. Stuart Peters. It will be copiously illustrated, and contain an interesting reproduction of an early plan of the town.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. will begin in the first week in May the publication of a new weekly paper called The Nursing Times, which will be conducted on strictly non-controversial lines. The aim of the publishers is to provide a useful and practical paper for nurses, brightly written and well illustrated. The new journal will deal with all aspects of a nurse's work, and many well-known authorities have already promised contributions. It is proposed to include lectures and addresses by medical and nursing experts; articles on new methods, treatments, and appliances; and accounts of nurses' work at home and abroad.

THE publication of the Ibsen letters, which were to have been issued last month by Messrs. Fox, Duffield & Co. of New York, has been delayed by an accident. Part of the manuscript of the translation was dropped into the North River by the messenger who carried it from Elizabeth, New Jersey.

MR. HENRY JAMES will lecture in Brooklyn on May 10th upon 'The Lesson of Balzac.'

WE regret to notice the death at Greenock, on Sunday last, of Mr. Allan Park Paton, for many years librarian of Greenock Watt Library. Mr. Paton published two volumes of poems, the first in 1845, the second in 1848, and wrote frequently in the public journals. He was related to the well-known Rev. Dr. Park, of St. Andrews, from whose papers he derived the material for 'A Greenockian's Visit to Wordsworth,' published in 1887. Mr. Paton had reached the age of eighty-seven.

WE referred last week to the sale of the Rowfant Library, and we may now mention a fact not previously published, namely, that the copy of the First Quarto Shakspeare, 'The Second Part of Henrie the Fourth,' 1600, sold at Sotheby's in April of last year for 1,035l., was from the Locker-Lampson collection. Nothing is said in the catalogue of the Rowfant Library as to the source of this quarto. So far as it can be traced, it once belonged to Richard Wright, M.D., F.R.S., whose "mark of possession" it bears, and whose choice library was dispersed by T. & J. Egerton on April 23rd, 1787, and eleven following days. The quarto in question was lot 1,926 in the ninth day's sale, and realized 2l. 13s., the purchaser being George Steevens. Steevens possessed two copies of the same edition, and these formed lots 1,269 and 1,270 in the sale at King's in May, 1800, one realizing 3l. 13s., and the other 2l. 15s. One of these copies eventually passed into the British Museum, and the other (Dr. Wright's), longo intervallo, found a refuge at Rowfant, and is now, we understand, in the Public Library, Boston, U.S.A.

MR. JAMES L. DOUGAN, chief librarian of the Public Library at Oxford, writes:—

"A propos of your note in The Athenæum of the 1st inst. on the Library for the Blind at Hamburg, it may be of interest to some of your readers to know of a Blind Library at Oxford which is probably unique. It is housed in the City Library, and its object is to supply every book necessary for the University examinations. It contains now nearly five hundred volumes, and the number is rapidly increasing. Most of these books have necessarily been written by hand, and are the only copies.

"The library has done much to stimulate the higher education of the blind, and applications for the loan of books come from intending undergraduates in all parts. Only recently a German gentleman, studying at Bonn, wrote to ask if he could borrow certain Anglo-Saxon literature from the library, being desirous of competing for a scholarship for a blind man at Oxford, lately founded by Mrs. Barker in memory of her son, one of the conditions of which is that the successful candidate should read for honours in English language and literature."

MR. OSBORNE'S 'Life of Dolling' is to be brought out immediately in a sixpenny edition (unabridged), by arrangement with Mr. E. Arnold, the original publisher. This is in response to many demands.

THE most important lot in the third and fourth portions of the fine library of M. E. Daguin, just dispersed at the Hôtel Drouot, Paris, was a fine copy of the first edition of the 'Cid,' 1637, a volume of 148 pages, bound by the elder Cuzin. This was bought by Mr. Pearson for 22,800 francs. At the same sale a copy of a comedy by Collé, 'La Partie de Chasse de Henri IV.,' 1770, with the arms of Marie Antoinette, sold for 6,905 francs, whilst an example of the original French translation of 'Don Quixote,' 1618, in contemporary binding, fetched 3,555 francs.

THE death is announced of M. Robert de Bonnières, a novelist and chroniquer, who at one time enjoyed considerable celebrity, but whose work is now almost forgotten. He was fifty-five years of age, and became attached when a young man to the Figaro, in which he wrote under the name of "Janus," and to the Gaulois, to the readers of which he was known as "Robert Estienne." He published in the Revue des Deux Mondes three successful romances, 'Les Monach,' 'Le Petit Margemont,' and 'Lord Hyland,' which dealt with life in aristocratic circles. He also published 'Les Lettres Grecques de Mme. Chénier,' and a volume of poems, 'Les Contes à la Reine.' Since the publication of a series of studies entitled 'Mémoires d'Aujourd'hui,' 1883, he had almost given up writing.

A GROUP of students in Florence, under Prof. Palmarini as director, have started an "Istituto delle Carte," to provide information, transcriptions, collations of MSS., photographs, &c. There are to be corresponding secretaries in all Italian towns. The idea is certainly good. The director's address is Via delle Lane, 7, Florence.

RECENT Parliamentary Papers likely to be of interest to our readers are the Annual Report on the Finances of the University of Aberdeen (4d.); and the Annual Statistical Report of the same University (1½d.).

SCIENCE

Antarctica; or, Two Years amongst the Ice of the South Pole. By Dr. N. Otto G. Nordenskjöld and Dr. J. Gunnar Andersson. (Hurst & Blackett.)

THE International Geographical Congress held in London in 1895 may be said to have begun a new epoch of Antarctic discovery. It was then recognized that the magnetic and other problems awaiting solution were too vast to be grappled with by a single expedition, and that the best chance of success lay in international collaboration within separate and distinct areas. Fortunately the world has travelled far since the close of the first epoch in 1839-40, when a French and an American expedition were competing with each other in the South Pacific to outstrip Sir James Ross, the discoverer of the Northern Magnetic Pole, who had just been sent out to the same region by the English Government. As is well known, the new idea took shape in the dispatch of three expeditions—English, German, and Swedish—in 1901, which were all to winter in their respective spheres, and carry on the necessary scientific observations simultaneously. Germany chose as her field of operations the district south of the Indian Ocean; and our own country preferred the coast of Victoria Land, where all the more important discoveries had been made under her flag. There remained for Sweden the third area beyond the South Atlantic; and here, too, there was a certain fitness in the work assigned, for the most successful single-season incursions into this quarter had recently been made by sealing vessels of the sister nation of Norway, under Capt. Larsen and Even- sen.

The volume before us records the chequered fortunes of the Swedish expedition, which owed its inception in great measure to the enthusiasm of its leader, Dr. Nordenskjöld. He was the geologist of the party—a position for which he had prepared himself shortly before by a visit to Tierra del Fuego. For the command of his vessel, the Antarctic, he was able to secure the services of Capt. Larsen, whose experience of the ice-conditions was unrivalled. Dr. Nordenskjöld modestly says: "In the matter of valuable equipment, we could not think of competing with our richer sister-expeditions." But the scientific staff was well manned. It included a zoologist, a botanist, an experienced cartographer, and a meteorologist; and, at the request of the Buenos Ayres Government, a young Argentine lieutenant, who was to assist in the magnetic work, was added to the wintering party. According to the plan of the expedition the Antarctic was to land this party on the east coast of the little-known mainland, and was then to spend the winter in South Georgia and the adjacent waters. In view of the uncertainties of ice-navigation, the policy of sending away the ship appears a doubtful one; but the reason for this was the difficulty of finding a suitable harbour. The first part of the programme was successfully accomplished. After employing the short summer in exploring work, Dr. Nordenskjöld and five companions were landed in February, 1902, at Snow Hill, in 64° 22' S. lat., where they erected a wooden hut; and the Antarctic, after narrowly escaping destruction in a storm, returned to the Falklands.

From this point the fortunes of the ship are related by Dr. Andersson, who passed a useful winter in South Georgia and Tierra del Fuego. Early in November the party turned southwards to rescue their marooned companions; and nearly a month was spent in mapping the Gerlache Channel on the western side of the mainland. This was probably the one serious mistake of the expedition, for, as the following year was to prove, the ice-conditions in these latitudes are more favourable in the spring. But it is only fair to add that the Antarctic summer of 1902-3 was one of the coldest ever known; and Dr. Nordenskjöld gives some parallel tables, which show that the mean temperatures at Snow Hill for the three summer months were lower than those experienced by the Fram in 84° N. lat., and fourteen degrees lower (on an average) than the summer temperatures in 64° N. lat. at Godthaab, in Greenland. Anyhow, the Antarctic found her way to the east coast barred, and on December 29th Dr. Andersson decided to be put on shore with two companions and a depot at a point about eighty miles north of the wintering station. It was supposed that this distance could be covered on the inland ice in a few days; and if the Antarctic did not reach Snow Hill by a certain date, the two parties were to be taken off from the depot on the western side. Both branches of this plan miscarried; for the relief party, who were without a boat, found their way cut off by an open arm of the sea, and had to winter amid great hardships at the depot; while the Antarctic, in trying to force her way to the east, was nipped in the ice, and sank on February 13th, about twelve miles from Paulet Island. All hands managed to reach the island in sixteen days over the drifting floes with a bare supply of necessaries; and there, in a hastily constructed hut, they had to eke out a subsistence for nine dreary months on seals and penguins. One sailor died from disease and exposure—an equal loss of life, though from a different cause, to that sustained by the English expedition. Meanwhile, Dr. Nordenskjöld's party, though comparatively in greater comfort, were deprived of their expected relief; and it was not till October, 1903, when on a sledging trip, that they luckily came across the "three wild men" from the depot, who were making a second attempt to join them. Three weeks later a relief ship, dispatched most seasonably by the Argentine Government, was able to communicate with Snow Hill; and on the same evening Larsen, with a boating party from Paulet Island, arrived at the station. The shipwrecked crew were taken off, and within five weeks of the time when the three parties were struggling independently for very existence, the whole company had returned to Santa Cruz and civilization.

In the rapidly increasing literature of Polar enterprise Dr. Nordenskjöld's volume will take a high place. The photographic illustrations are numerous, and so excellent that its price may be considered very moderate. The narrative is graphic, concise, and—rarest of all merits in books of this class—free from monotony. This result is partly due to the fact that it is by four different hands, but more, perhaps, to the spice of misfortune and real hardship which attended the expedition. Dr. Nordenskjöld has been well advised in finding room for Dr. Andersson's interesting account of his wanderings in South Georgia and Tierra del Fuego during the cruise of the vessel in sub-Antarctic waters. The book is also much brightened by four admirable paintings from the brush of Mr. Stokes, an American artist, who accompanied the ship during the first summer. Those who had the good fortune to inspect the delightful sketches by Dr. Wilson, shown in the London Antarctic Exhibition last autumn, will readily believe that Mr. Stokes's brilliant colours are not exaggerated. Dr. Nordenskjöld himself gives a vivid description of the marvellous sky-colouring of the Antarctic spring:—

"Above us was the vault of a cloudless sky—first of a light, then growing of a darker blue—in which the stars were slowly kindled one after another, Jupiter and Sirius, with the Southern Cross in the zenith, and then, straight in front, the flaming belt of Orion. Far down in the west comes the newly-lighted crescent of the moon; and, where the sun has gone down, the heavens glow an intense dark, blood-red, against which the sharp contours of Lockyer Island, with the precipitous headlands, the snowy dome, and the glorious row of glaciers, are distinctly lined. It grows darker and darker; more stars, and still more, come peeping out, and soon we see nothing before us but a far-reaching, fading shadow, which may be land, which may be sea."

But in winter there was another side to the shield, which he records with the same spirit and faithfulness to detail:—

"Although the scenery which surrounded us was of uncommon interest, indeed magnificently grand, it had in the long run a fatiguing and depressing influence upon us. I, at least, very much missed the presence of verdure; with what delight should we not have greeted one little blade of grass! The absence of colours was also felt exceedingly. Red, green and yellow—that is, the colours which, more than all others, have a stimulating influence upon the senses—were almost entirely wanting, both indoors and out; one saw only white, blue, brown, and those almost preternaturally fine, pale, pure tints which are so characteristic of winter in Polar lands. They can never be reproduced by the artist's brush, but they attract the beholder with wondrous power, although they seem to radiate a something which resembles the chill of death."

The thirteen chapters by Dr. Andersson are full of exciting adventure and written throughout in the liveliest vein, without a trace of self-consciousness, or even a hint that the hardships he records were excessive. Here is his account of the winter fuel arrangements in the extemporized hut, roofed with sealskins, at the depot in Hope Bay:—

"For the tent-lamp we had a flat herring-tin, which was filled with small squares of blubber in the midst of which was put a wick made of tent-rope.....At first we had much trouble in getting the lamps to burn, so that it sometimes took five or six hours to boil the penguin-soup, but by the end of the winter we had become real virtuosos in the art of turning the blubber into a burning mass of flames, smoke and soot, and all within the space of a minute or two. We called our lamps by the abusive name of 'smokers,' and not without good reason, for sometimes when the snowstorms stopped up a chimney we had made of old tins, and which led into the open air, the smoke became so dense that we could scarcely distinguish each other's faces..... Once the tent-lamp went wrong altogether—the whole mass of partly burned blubber suddenly taking fire and developing a heavy smoke, which might have suffocated the whole party had not one of us wakened and put the thing out."

The account of the shipwreck and of the nine months on Paulet Island is by Mr. C. J. Skottsberg, the botanist of the party. He has a remarkable gift of terse and graphic narrative, and his picture of the sinking of the vessel is like a series of instantaneous photographs:—

"We stand in a long row on the edge of the ice, and cannot take our eyes off her. She has neared us again, so that she is not thirty yards away. The engines are still moving; the fires are out, it is true, but there is a little steam left. The pumps are still going, but the sound grows fainter and fainter—she is breathing her last. She sinks slowly deeper and deeper; for a moment we think she is going to the bottom bows first, but she soon recovers her balance. Now the name disappears from sight. Now the water is up to the rail, and, with a rattle, the sea and bits of ice rush in over her deck. That sound I can never forget, however long I may live. Now the blue and yellow colours are drawn down into the deep. The mizzen-mast strikes against the edge of our floe and is snapped off; the mainmast strikes and breaks; the crow's-nest rattles against the ice-edge, and the streamer, with the name 'Antarctic,' disappears in the waves. The bowsprit—the last main-top—she is gone!"

The above extracts may also serve to show that the translator, who has preferred to be anonymous, has performed his task with success.

No attempt is made in this volume to give a survey of the scientific results of the expedition, which are to be published by the Swedish Government; but the collection of fossils—many of them depicted in the illustrations—was unexpectedly rich. Dr. Nordenskjöld discovered the bones of a giant penguin of the Tertiary period, much larger than any existing species; yet he found no certain remains of any land vertebrate, and the theory of an extended Antarctic continent, as a means of accounting for the existence of allied forms in the other three continents of the southern hemisphere, received no direct corroboration. On the question of an existing continent in the Antarctic area he speaks with rather an uncertain voice. But he proposes, as the title of his book suggests, that the name "Antarctica" should be given to the whole region, even if it should hereafter "prove to be a collection of large islands"; and he thinks that Victoria Land and Wilkes Land should be styled "East Antarctica," and the scene of his own researches "West Antarctica." He admits, however, that "in this part of the world the terms east and west are of unusually little significance." The geographical discoveries of his expedition are valuable, though not very extensive. The Swedish, like the German expedition, did not pass the Antarctic circle; but in many important points Dr. Nordenskjöld has corrected the maps of his predecessors. He discovered that Snow Hill and Mount Haddington are not, as Ross supposed, parts of Louis Philippe Land, but are distinct islands—the latter, which he calls Ross Island, being separated from the mainland by a long sound or channel leading into Erebus and Terror Gulf. He also claims to have proved, on a sledge expedition in 1902, that Louis Philippe Land and King Oscar Land are continuous, and not, as Larsen had fancied, separated by a broad sound. On this expedition he came across an extraordinary ice-terrace, extending eastwards for fifty miles from the mainland to beyond the Seal Islands. Over this he travelled for three days before he could make up his mind whether it was sea-ice or glacier-ice, but decided finally in favour of the latter. Yet to the last he seems uncertain on the subject; for though the Seal Islands appear on his map as mere "nunataks," Robertson, the largest of them, which abuts on the ice-terrace, is still termed an island. Dr. Nordenskjöld expresses a positive opinion that

"the Antarctic icebergs need not necessarily have their origin on land, but can also be built up on a basis of sea-ice in shallow water near the land."

This view would have some bearing on the question, lately much disputed, whether the great ice-barrier off Victoria Lands, is afloat. Capt. Scott, in his recent lecture, favoured the affirmative, but if the above principle be accepted, there would be a good deal to be said on the other side.

Dr. Nordenskjöld has provided two excellent maps, but his chapter on Antarctic exploration strikes us as incomplete, and he takes some liberties of a rather doubtful kind with the discoveries of his predecessors in other parts of the area. The naming of regions dimly seen and not properly explored is always a difficulty; but if names are to be shifted unnecessarily by each successive explorer the history of new lands will soon become unintelligible. In previous maps the name "Palmer Land" is always given to an insular mass south-west of the Orleans Channel, and De Gerlache, of the Belgian expedition, who found that this consisted of several islands (to which he gave new names), proposed to call the whole the Palmer Archipelago. Dr. Nordenskjöld, however, has transferred the name "Palmer Land" to a part of the mainland on the other side of the channel, forgetting, apparently, that Biscoe in 1832 landed on and partly described the true Palmer Land, and that Smiley in 1842 claimed to have sailed round it. Again, on the Swedish map the Bismarck Straits of Dallmann, which probably represent the southern entrance of Gerlache Channel, are not found at all, but the name is applied to a bay in the mainland many miles to the south. The problem of these straits, however, has, according to a recent telegram, been definitely solved by the returning French expedition under Dr. Charcot.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

M. GEORGES COURTY, whose researches into rock-markings in the Department of Seine-et-Oise were mentioned in The Athenæum, No. 4001, has since pursued them in the same Department at Étampes and Milly. In some exposed places, mixed up with modern figures, letters, and other penknife scratchings, he found some marks of the Neolithic type. At the Roche de la Briche he was more fortunate. Removing a natural growth of vegetation from some of the rock surface, he came upon a number of untouched petroglyphs. At Pont-Martine, near Étampes, he also discovered flint implements at a depth of nearly twelve metres, which he believes to be relics of a quaternary industry earlier than the Chellean, and designated by him "Stampienne." The same author, in his capacity of member of a commission to the high plateaus of Bolivia, made some interesting ethnographical notes on the country and its inhabitants, which he communicated to the Society of Commercial Geography at Paris at a meeting held on October 22nd, 1904.

Dr. M. Baudouin and M. Bonnemère have contributed to the Society of Anthropology of Paris a paper on the references in history to polished stone hatchets, which have all over the world been described as lightning-stones or thunder-stones, and have accordingly been the centre of much folk-lore. They quote Lucretius:—

Arma antiqua manus, unguis, dentesque fuerunt,
Et lapides, et item sylvarum fragmina rami.

But there the reference would seem rather to be to unworked stones than to worked weapons. They quote also at length from Gesner and Aldrovandus their descriptions of the keraunia, and from Michael Mercatus his more scientific observations; nor do they omit to refer to the "all-dreaded thunderstone" of Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

Three papers published by the same society relate to European anthropology—by M. da Costa Ferreira, on the capacity of the cranium and the probable ethnic composition of the people of Portugal; by Prof. A. Niceforo, on the cephalic index in Switzerland; and by Dr. L. Bolk, on the distribution of the blonde type and the brunette type in the Low Countries.

Mr. H. R. Hall has been searching, in company with Mr. E. R. Ayrton, for palæoliths in the Western Thebaid, and has published in Man for March a selection from his discoveries, which he compares very effectively with some British specimens. They support the affirmative side of the question whether real palæoliths have been found in Egypt. Mr. C. M. Woodford, local correspondent of the Anthropological Institute at the Solomon Islands, sends some additional information as to the funerary ornaments in use there, with a specimen of one now in the Sydney Museum, supplementary to Messrs. Edge-Partington and Joyce's paper on that subject, mentioned in The Athenæum,

No. 4013. A short and sympathetic notice by Dr. A. C. Haddon of Prof. F. G. B. Howes gives expression to the sense of loss anthropologists feel at his untimely death. He was for some years a valued member of the Council of the Anthropological Institute.

Since the very sudden death of Mr. T. W. Shore, a paper by him on the 'Origin of Southampton water' has been issued by the Hampshire Field Club. The paper is in the main geological, but under the heading 'Some Account of its Earliest Navigators,' Mr. Shore discussed the question in its anthropological aspect. We understand that this indefatigable student has left much manuscript material, embodying the results of his researches in various directions, and that selections from it may be published.

SOCIETIES.

ENTOMOLOGICAL.—April 5.—Mr. F. Merrifield, President, in the chair.—Mr. H. St. J. Donisthorpe exhibited specimens of a melanic Grammoptera, discovered by Mr. J. C. T. Poole at Enfield, which appeared to be distinct from any member of the genus hitherto recorded in Britain.—Mr. M. Jacoby brought for exhibition a specimen of Megalopus melipoma, an insect which so much resembles a bee that Bates had said they were indistinguishable in nature.—Mr. A. Bacot presented on behalf of Dr. Culpin specimens of Papilio macleayana and Hypocysta metirius captured in Queensland, illustrating the use of "directive" markings in the Rhopalocera in influencing their enemies to attack non-vital parts.—Mr. G. J. Arrow exhibited an example of Ceratopterus stahli, West., a beetle from Australia possessing notable powers of eripitation.—Mr. A. H. Jones and Mr. H. Rowland-Brown showed a series of Erebia alecto (glacialis), var. nicholli, Oberth., taken by them at about 8,000 ft. above Campiglio, South Tyrol, with specimens of Dasydia tenebraria, var. rocecaria, caught in the company of the *Erebia*s in the same localities: when upon the wing the two species were not dissimilar. Mr. Jones also exhibited examples of Erebia melas from the Parnassus Mountains, Greece, for comparison, and fine forms of butterflies found at Mendel, near Botzen.—Mr. K. T. Kaye exhibited a series of bred Papilio adonis from British Guiana, with the dimorphic black-and-white female.—Dr. F. A. Dixey exhibited the social web and pupal shells of Eucheira socialis, Westw., together with specimens of the perfect insect, being the actual nest from Mexico described and figured by Westwood in the Transactions for 1836.—Prof. E. B. Poulton read a note recently received from Mr. S. A. Neave, giving further evidence of the superstitious dread, on the part of the Rhodesian natives, of larvæ with terrifying eye-like markings.—The President read a note on experiments conducted by him to ascertain the vitality of pupæ subjected to submersion.—Mr. H. A. Byatt read a paper on 'Pseudacra poggi and Limnas chrysippus, the Numerical Proportion of Mimic to Model,'—and Mr. G. Bethune-Baker contributed 'A Monograph on the Genus Ogyris.'

PHILOLOGICAL.—April 7.—Prof. Gollancz in the chair.—Dr. H. Bradley made his yearly report on the M-words he is editing for the Society's 'Oxford Dictionary.' Since his last report the three editors of the 'Dictionary' had each issued a double section of his work, and Mr. Craigie had also issued a single section, though he had another double one nearly ready. Dr. Bradley had now 168 pages in type, his last word being measure, though his material was prepared further. In technical words he had had the help of experts (for manor, Sir Frederick Pollock), and Mr. James Platt had given valuable aid in the etymology and list of words of far-away lands. Dealing with special words, Dr. Bradley said that marcpane was a kind of philological romance; it probably came from early Italian, with the meanings of a small box, a weight, a coin. The Venetian coin matapanus, bearing a figure of Christ on a throne, represented, says Kluyver, the Arab manthaban, "a king that sits still." The word first occurs in English in 1494, in Fabyan's 'Chronicle,' "a march payne garnysshed with dyuerse fygures of angellys," and meant a cake of pounded almonds, sugar, &c. It was then transferred to anything exquisite or dainty, like Ben Jonson's "the very Marchpane of the Court," "A march paine wench," &c. As the sweetmeat has lately been imported from Germany, the form "marzipan" is widely used for it; indeed, "marzepaines" is found in Udall in 1542. Manure has changed curiously in meaning. It is the same word as mancurre, manu operare, to work with the hands, and meant, 1, to hold land, to manage (1430, "The tenantz dar not inhabite, maynour, nor occupye the saide toun"; 1577, "The Commonwealth of England is manured by three sortes of persons"); 2, to till land (c. 1400, "A mede maynoyrede bott lytyle"); 3, to train (1632, "manuring her as a plant"; 1561, "a soul manured with the hand of the heavenly Spirit"); 4, to enrich land with manure (the noun occurs first in 1549, "laye ther mucke and meanor upon the grene"; 1599, "Retailing theyr dung to manure landes"); 5, to spread or spill like manure (1592, "valiant Bassowes slaine, whose bloud hath bin manured to their earth"); 6, to work upon with the hand (1431, "John has selled the Underwodde, to kutt downe, and maynoure, and lede away"; 1575, "not so brytl too manure as stone"); 7, to manœuvre a ship (1569, "We were scantlye able to manure oure ship"). Manipulation was known before its verb manipulate; it is defined, c. 1730, as "a term used in the mines, to signify the manner of digging the silver, &c., out of the earth"; its chemical use dates from 1796, and its general use of handling objects for a particular purpose from 1826. But the verb manipulate seems to have been first used by Faraday in 1827, though in 1598 Florio has the Italian "Manipolare, Manipulare, to gripe with the hands, to make bottles or wads of hay. Also to arme with a gantlet, to bundle vp." The noun maslin has a profusion of forms. It is two words: 1, a kind of brass, and a vessel made of it, which has 43 different spellings; and, 2, mixed grain, or bread made of it, and generally a mixture, which has 78 spellings. The root of 1 is an unrecorded mas, early G. mess, brass; that of 2 is O.E. mestallion, from L. mistus, mixed. The figurative use is shown in 1668, Kirkmau's "pockets well lined with Maslin of Gold and Silver." Mark, sb., boundary, limit, has 22 meanings, ending with the slang and dialect "an astonishing appetite for," "a mark on strawberries and cream" (1883). The use of the word for the tract of land held by a primitive village community dates from Kemble in 1848. But his fancy that O.E. mearc was the name of a territorial organization next below the shire has no foundation. The alleged O.E. mearemot, mark-moot, has no existence; the mearemot of 971 probably means "parsley-bed." Masterpiece is formed after Dutch meesterstuk or G. Meisterstück. In 1579 the Aberdeen Guild-Rules have "the maisterstik of the person to be admittit," and in 1658 A. Fox englishes G. Meisterstück by "Master-piece." In 1660 Hexham has "een meesterstuck, a Master-peece, or a choise peece of worke." Master takes up twelve columns, or four pages, of the 'Dictionary.' It has three main senses: 1, one who has control or authority over others (with nine subdivisions, ending with "At Bowles every one craves to kisse the maister," or mark-bowl, 1579); 2, a teacher; 3, a holder of a title of office or honour. In its earliest form, c. 1000, in Ælfric's Exodus, it is "magestras," Lat. magistros. Manner and matter have a great range and variety of senses. Manner went from "the way in which something is done or takes place" to "a form of expression," behaviour, morals, conduct, habits of animals, action of a horse, polite deportment, style of execution in art, species, reason, moderation, &c. Matter takes eight columns of the 'Dictionary.' It is from a prehistoric dmateria related to the Indo-Germanic root **dem*, **dom*, occurring in domus, a house, and our timber, for which it is once used in the Englished Palladius, c. 1420 ("Nowe matere is to falle.....for pale, or hegge, or hous, or shippe"). It starts from the concrete substance out of which a thing is made, and ranges through the fluids of the body, to pus, subject-matter, chaos, something to say, theme or topic, sense, importance, reason or cause, means, element, kind, allegation, type set up, manuscript copy, affair, event, subject of dispute, &c. Dr. Bradley also dealt with mark, mart, meadowsweet, maze, and was warmly thanked by the meeting for his report and his services to the 'Dictionary.'

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—April 11.—Sir Guilford Molesworth, President, in the chair.—The paper read was 'The Maintenance and Strengthening of Early Iron Bridges,' by Mr. W. Marriott.—It was announced that ten Associate Members had been transferred to the class of Members, and that six candidates had been admitted as Students.—The monthly ballot resulted in the election of one Member, eight Associate Members, and one Associate.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.—April 4.—Prof. W. Gowland, President, in the chair.—Mr. R. N. Hall read a paper on the fort and stone-lined pits at Inyanga contrasted with the Great Zimbabwe. The walls of the fort are built upon a curved plan, and the fort itself is divided into enclosures for purposes of defence. The fort has twenty-five entrances pierced through the walls, which are themselves pierced with a great number of loopholes. The fort is also peculiar for the employment of banquettes walls, which are not met with except in a few ruins in Southern Rhodesia. Another peculiarity of the building is the absence of buttresses. The stone-lined pits are very numerous throughout Inyanga, and are usually found in clusters of twos and threes. Mr. Hall was of opinion that they were not used as slave-pits, as had been supposed, but as shelters from the variable temperature. The pits consist of a hole, lined with masonry, and a curved, paved passage, used as an entrance. In almost every case the pits have a drain running through the rampart, and another peculiarity is the erection near them of a stone monolith. Mr. Hall also referred to the hill terraces found in the neighbourhood, and in conclusion contrasted the architecture of the fort and pits with the temple and acropolis at Zimbabwe. The paper was illustrated by excellent lantern-slides. — In the discussion which followed Dr. Haddon paid a high tribute to the care with which Mr. Hall had conducted the excavations, while Dr. Garson laid stress on the fact that the ruins were a precious monument of antiquity, and as such the Rhodesian authorities had had committed to them a great trust, which it was to be hoped they would carefully guard.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- MON. Institute of Actuaries, 5 — 'On the Importance and Practicality of a Standard Classification of Impaired Lives,' Mr. S. W. Carruthers; 'Social Conditions as affecting Widows' and Orphans' Pension Funds,' Mr. S. J. H. W. Allin.
- TUES. Institution of Civil Engineers, 8 — Annual General Meeting. — Zoological, 8½ — 'Notes on Ento-Parasites from the Zoological Gardens, London, and Elsewhere,' Mr. A. E. Shipley; 'On Hybrids between Lepus timidus and L. europæus from Southern Sweden,' Dr. E. Lonnberg; 'Notes on the Muscular and Visceral Anatomy of a Leatherly Turtle (Demochelys coriacea),' Mr. R. H. Burne.
- WED. Chemical, 5½ — 'Complex Nitrites of Bismuth,' Mr. W. C. Ball. Meteorological, 7½ — 'An Account of the Observations at Crinan in 1904, and Description of a New Meteorograph for use with Kites,' Mr. W. H. Dines; 'Rate of Fall of Rain at Seathwaite,' Mr. H. R. Mill.
- Folk-Lore, 8 — 'The Snake-Ammonite Myth of Whithy' and 'Some Scotch and Irish Evil-Eye Charms and Appliances,' Mr. E. Lovett; 'Congo Folk-Lore,' Mr. R. E. Dennett.
- Geological, 8 — 'The Bica Wyke Rocks and the Dogger in North-East Yorkshire,' Mr. Robert Heron Rastall; 'Notes on the Geological Aspect of some of the North-Eastern Territories of the Congo Independent State,' Mr. Gaston Félix Joseph Preumont.
- Microscopical, 8 — 'On the Application of the Undulatory Theory to Optical Problems,' Mr. A. E. Conrady.

Science Gossip.

MR. H. B. MEDLICOTT, F.R.S., who died on the 6th inst., at the age of seventy-five, had spent the best portion of his life on the Geological Survey of India, of which he was for many years the Superintendent. Most of his writings, necessarily of a special character, are to be found in the 'Records' and 'Memoirs' of the Survey, but he was also the author, jointly with Dr. Blanford, of the first edition of the well-known 'Manual of the Geology of India.' More than fifty years ago Mr. Medlicott had written on the geological structure of parts of Ireland, and on going to India he became Professor of Geology at the Thomason College of Engineering, Roorkee. After retiring from his position on the Indian Survey some seventeen years ago, he returned to this country, received the Wollaston Medal from the Geological Society, and passed the remainder of his days in retirement at Clifton.

THAT familiar and long-established periodical, Proceedings of the Royal Society, is henceforth to be brought out in a new form. It will assume royal octavo size, and be printed in larger type than is the case at present. Also two series will appear in future, one embracing mathematical and physical papers, the other biological papers, and each part will be on sale to the public separately.

WRITING in Broad Views under the now familiar heading 'The Structure of the Atom,' an "occult student" congratulates Prof. J. J. Thomson upon having arrived at certain conclusions harmonizing with the results of occult investigation, and especially upon recognizing that the actual number of the constituent parts of the chemical atom stands "in a direct ratio with the atomic weights." This, says the occult student, was already announced to the world in Lucifer for November, 1895, as the result of "a clairvoyant study of the subject." The atom of hydrogen, he continues, consists of 18 corpuscles, and that of oxygen of 290, which, divided by 18, "gives almost exactly the value assigned by ordinary chemistry to the atomic weight of oxygen, namely 16." But until "ordinary science" uses clairvoyance, he cannot, it appears, even guess

"as to the likelihood that it will be enabled to get hold of that root number 18, the number of the hydrogen molecule, which is the clue to an accurate comprehension of those chemical phenomena vaguely classified at present under the tentative phrases 'valency' and 'atomicity.'"

If this catches Prof. Thomson's eye, he will no doubt see a dazzling vista of fresh intellectual triumphs opening before him.

F. L. writes:—

"May I correct an error in 'Research Notes' of April 8? I did not mean to say ex cathedra that the time had come when hydrogen should be recognized as divalent, but merely that this was the contention of M. de Forcrand. How the mistake in the proof escaped me, I cannot say."

DR. THEODOR KOCH, who for the last two years has been travelling in the interior of Brazil, sends a very interesting account of his travels. He followed the course of the Rio Uaupès beyond the last rapids, and spent a considerable time with the Kobéua Indians, whose religious mask dances are so curious. He made a thorough study of their language, and in their company visited the Rio Cuduiary. The whole district watered by these rivers is of great interest, as it is inhabited by a number of tribes who speak distinct dialects, and retain all their ancient habits and customs, as the nature of the river renders their dwelling-place almost inaccessible. Dr. Koch has been successful in obtaining photographs, and has a fine collection of weapons, masks, costumes, and domestic utensils.

THE new member of the Paris Académie des Sciences Morales et Politiques, in succession to M. Henri Germain, is M. Eugène d'Eichthal, who won the election easily against five other candidates. His best-known works include 'Tocqueville et la Démocratie Libérale,' 'Socialisme Communisme, et Collectivisme,' and 'Souveraineté du Peuple et Gouvernement.' M. d'Eichthal, who was born in Paris in 1844, is the son of M. Gustave d'Eichthal, a correspondent of J. S. Mill, a distinguished philosopher, and one of the most celebrated members of the École Saint-Simonienne.

AMONG recent explorers in China, Lieut.-Col. C. C. Manifold, of the Indian Medical Service, is entitled to a foremost place. He has successfully accomplished three separate journeys in that country during the last five years, and the paper in which he describes the last of them was read before the Royal Geographical Society on Monday evening last. His first journey was in 1900 from Burmah to the Yangtse Valley, and as the Boxer rising was then in full swing, it says much for the tact of the young explorer that he passed several months among the Chinese population of remote provinces, cut off from Europeans, without a single dispute or disagreeable circumstance. His second journey, in 1901-2, was from the north. Starting from Tientsin, he followed the route of the Peking-Hankau railway, then under construction; and he gave a very full and interesting account of these two journeys in a paper read before the Geographical Society in 1903. Last year he returned to China with the object of completing his surveys by a careful examination of the Han River valley, and of the approaches to the great province of Sse-chuan from the provinces of the Lower Yangtse. It is with this journey that he dealt in 'The Problem of the Upper Yangtse Provinces and their Communications.' On this last occasion Col. Manifold was accompanied by two Royal Engineer officers, viz., Capt. Barnardiston and Mahon, and the expedition was completed by five native Indian trained surveyors. For rapidity of work the expedition divided into three parties, and that under the lecturer himself took the section formed by the Han river valley immediately north of Hankau. Here Col. Manifold again came across the so-called Belgian railway, which he had followed in 1901, and he made the interesting statement, which has not yet got into the daily papers, that this line is now finished, with the exception of the bridge across the Yellow River, which appears to be a task of some magnitude. The Han valley is most fertile and productive, and the region through which the river passes is described as rich in coal and minerals. There are important towns in this part of China whose names even are almost unknown. An instance of this is Lao-ho-kou, a centre of trade beyond the ken of any merchants save the Japanese, who buy up all the varnish oil that its active citizens and their immediate neighbours can manufacture. The latter part of Col. Manifold's paper related to railway construction in Yunnan.

AN occultation of  $\eta$  Virginis by the moon will take place on Monday evening, the 17th inst.; disappearance at 8<sup>h</sup> 18<sup>m</sup>, reappearance at 9<sup>h</sup> 12<sup>m</sup>, Greenwich mean time.

GIACOBINI's new comet (a, 1905) was seen at the Lick Observatory on the 27th ult., and at several European observatories on the 28th. Its orbit has been calculated by Dr. Strömgren; the perihelion passage took place on the 3rd inst. at the distance from the sun of 1.128 in terms of the earth's mean distance, and the comet is also receding from the earth (its distance now is 0.77 on the above scale), and its apparent brightness is slowly diminishing. It is now situated in the northern part of the constellation Gemini, moving in a north-easterly direction, and will pass about five degrees due north of Castor on the 18th inst.

ANOTHER small planet was discovered by Prof. Max Wolf at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg, on the 26th ult.

MR. T. E. HEATH has recently published a book under the title 'Our Stellar Heavens: a Road Book to the Universe' (Knowledge Office), in which an ingenious attempt is made to depict the stars of which the parallaxes and proper motions are approximately known as they would be seen in three dimensions. The unit of distance is a light-year—63,000 times the distance of the sun from the earth—and this is taken as a mile on the scale. In order to represent the solid universe in section, he considers it projected on a plane at right angles to the equator, passing through the sun and the equinoxes. It is supposed to be looked at from the direction of 6<sup>h</sup> right ascension, so that the stars from 6<sup>h</sup> to 18<sup>h</sup> R.A. are shown on the right-hand side of the picture, the others on the left. To assist the conceptions, a map of the British Isles is given at the back, a mile representing a light-year, so that the sun being placed at Greenwich and taken as origin,  $\alpha$  Centauri (4.34 light-years from the sun) is placed near Bromley in Kent. By another method, equally ingenious, the stars are represented as if seen at the distance of 500 light-years from the sun, and regarded with eyes many light-years apart. In this it is intended that a stereoscope should be used, and the results are, of course, rather startling. The whole scheme is, perhaps, somewhat premature; but it is not without interest, and the author has incorporated a good deal of information about stellar magnitudes and distances.

FINE ARTS

GEORGE MORLAND.

George Morland. By G. C. Williamson, Litt.D. (Bell & Sons.)

The Life of George Morland. By George Dawe. With Notes and Introduction by J. J. Foster. (Dickinson.)

It is perhaps not to be wondered at that Morland's life has so often been written, for he fitted into the pattern which the public likes to keep in mind for the genius and the artistic temperament better than most painters who have risen to fame. It is true that he was an affectionate and faithful, though a careless husband; but this lapse into bourgeois virtue can be overlooked in view of his striking exemplification of the Bohemian life in other respects.

Of the two lives in question, Dr. Williamson's is made up mainly from George Dawe's, but with the addition of certain details from Collins's unkindly account and from the other scanty sources; while Mr. Foster's book, published as a commemoration of Morland's centenary, is a reprint of Dawe. On the whole, this is the most satisfactory way of giving Morland's life again to the public, for Dawe's life is in every way the best that has been written. It is authoritative, since the author's friendship with Morland gave him every opportunity of ascertaining the facts; he is perfectly frank without ever being malicious, and his estimate of Morland's genius shows fairness and judgment, though it certainly does not err in excessive praise. It is, moreover, agreeably written. Dr. Williamson tells the story over again in his own words, and, with the help of copious extracts from Dawe, well enough; but there is something in the flavour of the style of the period which brings the artist's character more vividly before us in the pages of his contemporary.

Morland appeared to typify all that Reynolds strove to dissipate in the popular theory of genius as a divine gift, entirely unrelated to the faculties of ordinary intelligence and thought. Here was a man who could spend half his time drinking and loafing with potboys, and who, when he was half asleep and three parts drunk, could turn out, as it were by the unconscious motions of his hand, drawings that even his creditors would take for current coin. Here, at least, it would seem that the magic, incalculable power of genius was revealed.

And in truth Morland must have had the most astonishing innate faculties; but these by themselves would not have given him his extraordinary facility. It was the severe and scholarly training of his father, who was both artist and connoisseur, that impressed certain principles of composition and design so firmly in his mind that at last, by constant repetition, they became part of the unconscious nervous impulses of his hand. Add to this his total want of serious ambition, which made him unwilling to attempt any advance, any alteration of the principles which he had assimilated in his youth, so that he was content to repeat himself indefinitely, and one gets some explanation of the apparently mysterious power he possessed. It was from the Dutchmen and from contemporary English art that he got his composition, and his technique was part of the common inheritance of the artists of his day. Another thing that was in his favour was the want of intensity in the drawing of the eighteenth century. Morland inherited a number of ready-made formulæ which passed for natural forms — which were, in fact, quite sufficient pictorial counters for natural objects, and all that was necessary was to combine these with skill and to record them with an easy, flowing touch. Morland's touch had, in fact, all the qualities that the eighteenth century admired. It was only by not thinking at all, by not striving to do anything but what he had learnt at the very outset to do with consummate ease, that Morland managed, in his short and misspent life, to produce a mass of work which, were it of a more strenuous quality, would argue a long life of arduous toil. It was this combination of an excellent early training with the total want of serious ambition that gave his works their immense popularity. They never appealed to anything that was not immediately discernible by the humblest intelligence, and they were executed with an ease and spontaneity which pleased the connoisseur by the delicacy and rapidity of the handling, and the populace by the sense of actual life they conveyed. In fact, Morland was one of the rare cases of a popular painter who is also a genuine artist, though of humble rank. He deserves, and always will deserve, a slight and effortless appreciation.

Both these lives are copiously illustrated. The collotypes in Dr. Williamson's book have the advantage of being taken from the pictures themselves, though they are not always very strong in tone. The illustrations to Mr. Foster's book are in photogravure, and, for the most part, very well done, but he has made too much use of engravings after the pictures, in which we miss, of course, the felicity of Morland's handling. A list of pictures, compiled by R. Richardson, occurs in Dr. Williamson's book, and both contain a list of engravings after Morland, of which that in Mr. Foster's book is certainly the more complete.

The Ancient Castles of Ireland. By C. L. Adams. (Stock.)—The author of this pretty book has done well to bring together pleasant gossip about the many castles which every traveller through Ireland sees on every journey. In the present case the authorities cited generally for each castle's biography are very good; but it would evidently require years of labour to master them. Some not very obvious sources, such as the Dublin Penny Journal, which was admirably illustrated by Petrie, have been used, and from it the author might have drawn many good views in addition to the excellent ones furnished by Canon Lucius O'Brien, who naturally draws these castles with much sympathy, since his ancestors owned so many of them. We do not think that the alphabetical order adopted is by any means the best. The geographical would be not only more obvious, but also more instructive. Thus the many castles of the county Dublin should have been brought together, and their relations explained. Or else the architectural classification might have been adopted, and they might have been arranged under Danish (if such exist), Norman, Tudor, &c. We might also recommend the distinction into castles still inhabited and castles in ruins. The author, indeed, tells us in each case which of them is still a residence, and the owner's name; but a complete catalogue of these ancient dwelling-houses would have been most interesting. The author also modestly acknowledges the incompleteness of the work, and only professes to give "some fortress histories and legends." We cannot, therefore, complain that, even in co. Dublin, Dalkey and Monkstown are omitted, though several far less known places are discussed. We would gladly have heard something of Gormanston and Killeen, both still inhabited by their ancient families, and of the Taaffe house in co. Meath, which has a high reputation for antiquity. Of Tudor houses, Rathfarnham, near Dublin (built by Adam Loftus), is still inhabited, and we suppose such fine mansions as Slane Castle (Lord Conyngham's) and Mitchelstown Castle (till recently Lord Kingston's) are ancient fortresses rehandled. The White Knight was the owner to whom Lord Kingston succeeded by marrying his heiress.

There is therefore, as the author knows, plenty of material for an enlarged edition of this work, which would be a most useful handbook for the traveller of a better class than the tourist, and also for the remaining gentry in each county, who generally show lamentable want of interest in the antiquities around them. But then the book must be purged of many small errors, and even of some which shock the Irish reader. Henry II. cannot have received the Irish chiefs "in Dame Street" at Dublin, seeing that no such street existed for centuries after his visit. Probably Hoggen Green, through which Dame Street ultimately made its way, or "outside Dame's Gate" is intended. The second Duke of Ormond was the son not of the first, but of the chivalrous Ossory. The representation of Granuaile carrying off the heir of Howth is not a picture in that castle, but a carving over an antique press. There is no probability that Corr Castle, near it, was the original seat, since it was merely the keep to protect a bawn, where cattle were penned at night on a peninsula threatened by sea-rovers from two sides. The real castle is certainly of great age, and was only remodelled in Elizabethan days. The hall does not occupy the whole length of the building. Carlingford Head is not one of the Mourne Mountains. Doe Castle, one of the most picturesque in Ireland, was owned till recently by the Hart family (not Harte), and was bought not by "Mr. Ards," who does not exist, but by Mr. Stewart of Ards. Irish proprietors are never called by the name of their lands, as is the case in Scotland. We conclude, therefore, with the author's next sentence on Doe:—

"The history of this castle is not altogether so clear on some points as could be wished, for the authorities seem to be greatly confused over many important points."

Though we should not have expressed ourselves thus, we are here in agreement with the author.

THE GOUPIL GALLERY.

If it were only for the three Corots which this exhibition contains, it would be noteworthy, for they are at once unusual and singularly beautiful. If we knew nothing of Corot's life, and judged him by his work alone, and if we regarded the immense number of landscapes based on a single idea of design, of colour and tone, which he produced, we should almost inevitably pronounce him an artist of great character, who, having once hit the popular taste, ruined himself by repeating his success ad nauseam. We know as a matter of fact that this was not the case, but, none the less, any one who sees much of modern painting is bound after a time to grow weary of the grey willow tree so deftly smudged in, the boat half hidden by the shore, and the pearly distance of Corot's stock composition, and to feel a corresponding sense of delighted relief when contemplating such a naïve and intensely felt motive as that of his In the Woods (No. 45), with its inviting depths of deep and yet cool green gloom, its tender glow of sunlight on the more distant tree masses, and its vaporous sky. Corot's delicate sensibility to colour is seen to perfection in pictures like this, where the green predominates, for it is in the treatment of green that most modern landscape fails, and Corot had the art to give it its full value and intensity without making it either metallic or acid; moreover, he could make its shadows transparent without making them hot. This little picture is a perfect example of this power. L'Approche du Village (58) is perhaps more in his usual key, but the Tow Horse (63) is again an unusual motive, treated with spontaneity and directness. It is indeed little more than a transcript of an effect seen early on a summer morning beside the Seine, but it is made with a fine discretion and intense poetical feeling for the charm of pale sunlight upon trees and grass from which the morning mists and dew have scarcely evaporated.

After Corot there is a gulf; Bosboom, Maris, Mauve, and Weissenbruch scarcely do more than repeat in enfeebled and sophisticated tones the motives of their French masters. The Israëls, Old and Worn (59), has another aim, and here for once comes nearer to realization than usual. Michel's Fisherman (85) has a sombre Rembrandtesque beauty, though the colour is, as usual, rather dull and opaque.

There is, however, one other artist here whose work shows up even beside Corot, and that is Hervier, who still awaits due recognition. His name is not to be found even in Muther's history, where so many minor reputations have their meed of praise. Though not belonging strictly to the Barbizon group, he was evidently in close sympathy with its aims. One of his pictures here, Returning Home (46), has something of Dupré and Jacque in it, but the design shows more research, is more deliberate and calculated, and the expression is more restrained. Another picture by Hervier, The Farmyard (1), is still more remarkable and original. He clearly had a personal style, a particular manner of suggesting relief by flat, scarcely modulated touches of opaque paint upon a dark transparent ground. He obtains thereby an effect of solidity with extreme restraint of modelling, and a quality that at times reminds one of Chardin. Hervier's sentiment for colour is, in this instance, distinct and exquisitely subtle; a pearly grey predominates, with rare accents of apricot and green.

Some romantic but rather overcharged water-colours by Cecil Lawson, a delightful drawing by Diaz, and some admirable Muirhead Bones also deserve notice.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOUR.

WATER-COLOUR painting—for it is, alas! that, and not water-colour drawing, that is for the most part shown here—is regarded as a peculiarly English art. Such as it is, it is here seen cultivated to its highest perfection. It is an odd insular performance in a secluded backwater of sentiment. It is impossible to relate it either to life or to art. It is something entirely sui generis. It has a certain prim old-maidenly distinction, its little scrupulous neatnesses and careful proprieties. It is not vulgar or ostentatious or slipshod, but almost, in its peculiar and isolated way, scholarly.

There are many little pieces here which, seen in their own private surroundings, would strike an agreeable note of refinement, would almost suggest elegance. But gathered in a gallery, with their gilt mounts and with their pictorial pretensions so accentuated, they appear at their worst. Exhibitions of oil paintings are bad enough; exhibitions of water-colours made to look like oils would be, if they were not still so surprisingly popular, altogether impossible. The general note of the exhibition is one of a refined sugary prettiness. Prettiness is, of course, always essentially vulgar; it is much further removed from beauty than ugliness; but one must admit that here prettiness almost puts on the airs of good breeding. Still one looks longingly for some frank, sincere declaration of feeling, some uncompromising contrast of tone, some wilful severity or dryness of colour. One's eye is satiated everywhere with the cloying sweetness of cheap and obvious harmonies. A certain washed-out yellowish-green is everywhere opposed to a pale greenish-blue, with notes of rose to complete the scheme. It is altogether too flattering to the eye to arouse any real emotion of beauty.

There are exceptions to this rule. Mr. Sargent's Palazzo Grimani has cruder notes; it has, too, his amazing power of construction, as witness the vigorous rendering of the key-pattern ornament round the base of the palace. Mr. J. M. Swan's Tigress and Cubs (120) has undeniable force, though the colour is perfunctory and unconsidered. Mr. Paterson's large vague cloudscapes and Mr. Cameron's river are seen in a broad manner, which would be impressive if it were not so excessively facile and summary.

Mr. Callow is almost alone in maintaining the real tradition of water-colour draughtsmanship, and this, in spite of the fact that his colour-schemes sometimes break down into pure chromolithography, as in the Hastings (93), gives to his work a real distinction. It has, in fact, what scarcely anything else here possesses, a really expressive touch, a definitely calligraphic quality, which is perhaps the most essential beauty in water-colour design.

Mr. Edwin Alexander's Peacock and Python (115) is a serious and praiseworthy effort. It shows real thought, and the artist has managed to get a definite rhythm into his design by contrasting the long, springy curves of the tail feathers with the heavy sinuosities of the snake's body. As a drawing in water colour it is, however, spoilt by over-elaborate realization, which means, in fact, want of finish, since he has stopped short in the process of condensation. The forms here arrived at require a further process of selection and elimination to make them capable of being beautifully expressed in the medium.

Mr. Albert Goodwin's Bosham (10) struck us as a drawing which might have real charm in more appropriate surroundings.

ETCHINGS AT PATERSON'S GALLERY.

This small collection contains some interesting and rather unfamiliar pieces. The examples of Rembrandt, though the finest things in the room, are in no way unusual; but the work of his eighteenth-century French imitator, Jean Pierre Norblin de la Gourdain, is very curious. For the most part he is content to be a pure imitator, working out Rembrandt's fine manner with a minute and patient finish which proclaims the taste of the eighteenth century. The result is a certain sophisticated grace, which is really the antithesis of Rembrandt's style, in spite of its extraordinary superficial likeness. But in one piece, his own portrait (No. 9), Norblin, working directly from nature, has achieved something personal and really striking.

The collection of Méryons is remarkable. There are some of his most celebrated plates—the Ministère de la Marine, with the grotesque flying-machines in the sky giving a touch of extravagance to the severe solemnity of the classic façade, the Galerie de Notre Dame, the Morgue, the splendid Bainfroid Chevrier, and the wonderful Entrée du Couvent des Capucins à Athènes, in which for once Méryon's feeling for classical serenity is untroubled by any haunting sense of dread.

Then we find some excellent Charles Keenes, of which On the Beach (27) and the Canal Lock (31) are drawn with wonderful delicacy and refinement. Some of Sir J. C. Robinson's etchings are also shown. From time to time we have had the pleasure of noticing his works at the exhibitions of the painter-etchers, and it is interesting here to see a larger number of them. They appear to us very unequal. In some he seems to have tried effects of light which eluded him; but in the Newton Manor (34), with its great cloud battlements shining through a haze of drifting rain, he shows how genuine his artistic feeling is, and how striking his success as a creator might have been. The Corfe Castle (38) is another fine plate.

Near these hang some selections from a series of thirty etchings by Manet, which Mr. Paterson is bringing out in England. Some of them are from plates never published in the artist's lifetime, from which a hundred impressions only have been taken. They all show strongly the influence of Goya, not only in the composition, but also in the actual treatment of the etched line; Les Gitanos (39), in particular, might almost be taken for one of the Caprichos. The Olympia (40), etched from the picture, is more solid in modelling, and denser in light and shade. It is a splendid plate. The rest of the exhibition is more familiar, and scarcely needs detailed notice. A selection of Whistlers, some delicate little impressions by Mr. Roussel, some familiar plates by Mr. D. Y. Cameron, and a few extremely promising designs by a Canadian etcher, Mr. D. S. MacLaughlan, complete a very interesting little exhibition.

THE NATIONAL ART COLLECTIONS FUND.

At the annual general meeting of the body which controls this important fund, held in the rooms of the Society of Antiquaries last Friday week, the first annual report was presented. It contains an account of the purchases effected during the year. These are certainly encouraging for a beginning. In many instances the Fund merely came to the aid of our museums, and in certain cases thereby turned the balance in favour of our national collections as against foreign competitors. The most conspicuous example of this is the magnificent Greek bronze relief purchased from the Hawkins sale. If it were only for this one instance of the effects of the Fund upon our national collections, we should still say that its formation was amply justified. But though as yet it has relied almost exclusively upon the ordinary subscriptions of its members, and has not put forth special appeals, the Fund has succeeded in securing at least one masterpiece of importance—namely, the early Watteau which was handed over to the Dublin Museum. The decision to allocate this to Ireland, in spite of the fact that the National Gallery is without any example of the master, seems justified when we consider that at Hertford House Englishmen have always the opportunity of enjoying Watteau at his best. It is to be hoped that Ireland is not too entirely absorbed in its efforts to secure works of modern art to respond to the appeals of a fund from which its National Gallery has already benefited so remarkably. The other picture acquired by the Fund is a Madonna by Lazzaro Bastiani, which it is intended to submit to the Trustees of the National Gallery as soon as a Director is appointed, through whom it may be brought officially to their notice. In this case the historical importance of the work is no doubt greater than its pure artistic merit, but for the understanding of the Venetian School as a whole, Bastiani, who was Bellini's contemporary and lifelong competitor, and who was moreover the master of Carpaccio, is of great importance. He is scarcely represented in any of the galleries north of the Alps, and but slightly in Italy itself. Nor is there any other known painting of a Madonna by him. He shows here a personal feeling for decorative design and space composition, though in his actual forms he was content to lean on the Vivarini and Bellini.

If only the remarkable little Madonna by Alvise Vivarini, which now lies hidden in the Director's Room at Trafalgar Square, were brought out to accompany the work of his contemporary Bastiani, the two pictures would complement in a remarkable way an admirable but rather one-sided collection of Venetian painters. No one would pretend that either Alvise or Bastiani was the equal of the Bellinis, but looking solely at the influence they had on the artists of the succeeding generation, the student cannot afford to forget their work.

Sir Edgar Vincent, in proposing the adoption of the report, hinted at a criticism which is no doubt likely to be made, when he suggested the advisability of the Fund's confining its purchases to works of supreme artistic merit, and not assisting in filling up gaps in the historical sequence of our national pictures. Nothing could be more desirable than that the Fund should have at its disposal sufficient money to acquire masterpieces, and we may well look forward hopefully to the time when adequate support for this will be forthcoming; but in the meanwhile it is a valuable though a humbler service to assist in completing the Gallery as a museum of ancient art. For the National Gallery is obliged to fulfil a dual function — that of a gallery of masterpieces and a museum. In the case of the minor branches of art we have two institutions which divide these functions between them. At the British Museum objects are arranged on an historical plan, and an effort is made to obtain as complete a series in every class as possible. At the Victoria and Albert Museum the ideal of arrangement is technical and industrial.

The National Gallery should, and we think can, fulfil both these ideals as regards the art of painting. For, indeed, if the historical selection is well made, it will be found no obstacle, but rather a help to the highest æsthetic enjoyment. If we want to understand a great master thoroughly and enjoy his work perfectly, we shall not do ill to consider him in relation to his surroundings, to examine the condition of art as he found it, and the changed tradition he handed on to his successors. Such, at all events, has been the theory acted on from time to time in forming our National Collection, else what are Bissolo, Cordeliaghi, Bartolommeo Veneto, Bonifazio, and many admirable but scarcely superlative school pieces doing at Trafalgar Square? In the presence of these and many other pictures it is, we think, useless to contend that the theory of a select group of undeniable masterpieces has been the guiding principle at the National Gallery. Indeed, many of the works of the Primitives, which we now look upon as our rarest treasures, were bought at a time when their only claim appeared to be that they assisted a wide historical survey of ancient art.

THE ABERDEEN SCULPTURE GALLERY.

ABERDEEN has set an excellent example in her new Sculpture Gallery, which was opened on Saturday last by Sir George Reid. Nowhere else in Great Britain, outside London, Oxford, and Cambridge, is there so fine a collection of casts of the best sculpture as Aberdeen now possesses. It is housed in the Art Gallery, which was erected twenty years ago, but has been so greatly enlarged and reconstructed as to be virtually a new building. The private committee which has managed the Art Gallery is responsible for the whole expense of the reconstruction, estimated at 12,000*l.* It secured the site from Gordon's College at a nominal price, and obtained a grant of 8,000*l.* from the Clark Trustees. It also induced 160 citizens of Aberdeen to present one or more casts apiece, to the total value of 3,500*l.*, so that the entire gallery is a free gift to the city. Aberdeen will now be asked to support the institution out of the rates, and to develop the collection of pictures, which at present contains very little of interest except the Kepplestone collection of artists' portraits.

The casts are arranged in a large central hall with an open balcony and a glass roof, and in spacious rooms leading from it on the ground floor. Round the hall, between polished columns, which represent all the different varieties of granite, are placed some of the best Greek and Græco-Roman statues, including a fine Attic torso of Venus from the National Museum, Rome, a Roman statue of a girl in the likeness of Polyhymnia from the Vatican, and several other works of which no English museum possesses casts. The Nike of Pæonius is placed high up on the balustrade of the balcony, where the cast is seen to even better advantage than in the British Museum. In the balcony is a good collection of Greek and Roman stelæ and votive reliefs, and round the upper part of the walls runs a portion of the Parthenon frieze. The general effect of this court, which is painted white and draped with pale green canvas, is very good, and the handsome granite pillars contrast well with the statues. In the adjacent rooms, which are lighted from side-windows and decorated in a similar manner, without the granite columns, the casts are arranged in schools. Assyrian and Egyptian sculpture is represented by a few choice pieces, such as the head of Amenophis III. from Thebes, and the well-known relief of Sargon. The Greek section includes the group from the east pediment of the Parthenon, two panels from the Treasury of Athens at Mycenæ, and a large relief from the "Harpy Tomb" at Xanthus. The Nike of Samothrace is unfortunately placed on the ground instead of being raised up on high, as in the Louvre; but this is almost the only mistake that has been made in the arrangement of the collection. The Italian section is large and well chosen. The Pisani, Orcagna, and Ghiberti are represented by ten casts; Donatello by eleven, including 'Il Marzocco,' the Florentine lion; Verrocchio by three; the Della Robbia by ten; Benedetto da Maiano by his great pulpit in Santa Croce, Florence; Jacopo della Quercia by his tomb of Ilaria del Carretto; Michael Angelo by five, including the Bruges Madonna and the Jason; and among other well-known pieces is the recumbent statue of Braccioforte at Ravenna. A small but highly interesting selection of French sculpture from the Middle Ages to Houdon and Clodion, and of German sculpture by Krafft, Veit Stoss, and Vischer, is a novel and welcome feature of the gallery, which also contains casts of Celtic crosses and monuments, and a series of inscribed tablets. These two last-named sections are specially intended for the benefit of the Aberdeen granite workers, whose monuments and tombstones might often be designed in better taste. But it is hoped that this gallery will also stimulate some of the Aberdeen youth to become sculptors, and to use their native granite, which, for public monuments, wears better than marble in our climate.

The credit of establishing the new Sculpture Gallery belongs to Mr. James Murray, chairman of the Art Gallery Committee, in whom enthusiasm and generosity are combined with great organizing power. He secured the services of Mr. Robert F. Martin, of the South Kensington Museum, to select and arrange the casts, with the help of Sir George Reid and Prof. Ramsay. Not content with raising the money for the gallery, Mr. Murray entertained at his own expense a large party of artists and art-critics from London and elsewhere, as well as Mr. Thomas Hardy, Maarten Maartens, Prof. Bury, Mr. Haverfield, Mr. Edward Robinson, Director of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, Commendatore Galli, Director of the Vatican Museum, and others upon whom Aberdeen University conferred honorary degrees. The University held a crowded reception on Friday night, and the city gave the visitors a banquet on Saturday. Aberdeen has good reason to be proud both of her new Sculpture Gallery and of the distinguished citizen who founded it. Mr. Murray's guests will never forget his princely hospitality nor his generous enthusiasm for art.

H.

'AUTUMN LEAVES' AND FORD MADOX BROWN.

3, St. Edmund's Terrace, Regent's Park, April 7th, 1905.

I OBSERVE in your paper of the 1st inst. a notice of the Whitechapel Art Gallery, including a critique of a painting named 'Autumn Leaves' ascribed to Ford Madox Brown. I affirm, without the least hesitation, that this picture was not painted by Brown. I knew him intimately from the summer of 1848, and became his son-in-law in 1874; am well acquainted with all his paintings executed from 1848 onwards, and with most of those of an earlier date. He never painted any picture named 'Autumn Leaves,' nor any composition resembling the one now at Whitechapel. He painted a picture, larger than this, named 'An English Autumn Afternoon': it is an entirely different composition, and I know the house in which it is kept. The title 'Autumn Leaves' belongs to a famous and admirable picture by Millais, and (so far as I know) not to any other work.

Your reviewer refers to a rumour that the picture ascribed to Brown was produced when he "was in Antwerp under Wappers," i.e., several years before 1848, when the English Pre-Raphaelite movement began. This rumour is sufficiently answered by saying that the picture was not painted by Brown at all. It might further be maintained, and I think with unanswerable truth, that until after the commencement of the Pre-Raphaelite movement no picture whatever of this particular type was produced in either England, Antwerp, or anywhere.

Whether the picture at Whitechapel is a good work of art, or good enough for Brown to be its painter, is a question of critical opinion which I leave undiscussed.

I do not know who painted this work; but I have a vague impression that I saw it ere now, in the early days of Pre-Raphaelitism, and I think it probable that the painter was a Mr. Rainford. This Mr. Rainford (I presume he is not now alive) was lodging in the house in Cleveland Street, Marylebone, in which Mr. Holman-Hunt and my brother took a studio in 1848. He was then a painter, or painter-student, of aims totally alien from the Pre-Raphaelite; but, seeing the methods of work adopted by Mr. Holman-Hunt, he aspired to accomplish something in the same line, and he became rather aggressively Pre-Raphaelite. His works in that direction (so far as they became known to me) were produced towards the years 1851 to 1853. One of them was exhibited in the British Institution: 'Hotspur and the Fop.'

Let me add that, if any one wishes to see a list of the works which were produced by Madox Brown, he will find one in the valuable book written by his grandson, Mr. Ford M. Hueffer, named 'Ford Madox Brown,' and published by Longmans in 1896. This list does not contain the faintest trace of any such work as the 'Autumn Leaves' now at Whitechapel.

WM. M. ROSSETTI.

BRYAN'S 'DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS.'

THE article on Leonardo da Vinci in the new edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters' contains a paragraph accepting Dr. Carotti's identification of the portrait of Cecilia Gallerani with a picture in the Czartoriski Collection at Cracow, and stating that he has "definitely proved" that 'La Belle Ferronnière' is not by Leonardo. As writer of the article, I wish to say that for this paragraph I am not responsible. By a printer's error what should have been an editorial note has become incorporated with the text.

EDWARD MCCURDY.

SALES.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE sold on the 8th inst. the following pictures: E. Verboeckhoven, Ewes and Lambs under some Trees, 199*l.* H. Fantin-Latour, Roses, 462*l.*; Grapes, 294*l.* H. W. B. Davis, "Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight," 120*l.* Colin Hunter, Landing Haddock, 147*l.*; Voices of the Sea, 199*l.* A drawing by P. De Wint, A River Scene with a barge, brought 50*l.*

The same firm sold on the 10th inst. the following. Pictures: Early German School, a Triptych, with an Emperor and Empress on horseback, and a procession, 136*l.* Gaudenzio Ferrari, The Madonna, in green and red dress, holding the Infant Saviour, 194*l.* H. Holbein, Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, 173*l.*; Edward Godsalvo, 105*l.* Holbein School, Erasmus, 135*l.* N. Lucidel, Head of a Child, in green dress, 120*l.* B. van Orley, The Madonna, in red dress with blue cloak, holding the Infant Saviour on her knee, 183*l.* Drawings: J. Downman, Lord Munster, when a boy, in blue coat, 64*l.* Lawrence (after?), Nature: the Calmady Children, 50*l.* Millais, A Highland Lassie (head of Mrs. Ruskin), 136*l.*

The same firm sold on the 11th inst. the following engravings, the property of Mr. H. G. Huggins, excellent prices being realized for many examples. After Opie: The Sleeping Nymph, by P. Simon, 34*l.*; A School, and A Winter's Tale, by V. Green, 51*l.* After Hoppner: The Sleeping Nymph, by W. Ward, 71*l.*; Lady Louisa Manners, by C. Turner, 46*l.*; Countess Cholmondeley and Son, by the same, 231*l.*; Lady Charlotte Greville, by J. Young, 29*l.*; The Daughters of Sir Thomas Frankland, by W. Ward, 588*l.*; The Duchess of Bedford, by S. W. Reynolds, 44*l.* After H. Thomson: Crossing the Brook, by W. Say, 34*l.* After Peters: The Gamblers, and The Fortune-Teller, by J. R. Smith (a pair), 81*l.* After and by J. R. Smith: The Promenade at Carlisle House, 75*l.* After J. Ward: Selling Rabbits, and The Citizen's Retreat, by W. Ward, 65*l.* After Morland: The Return from Market, by J. R. Smith, 81*l.*; A Party Angling and The Angler's Repast, by Ward and Keating, 81*l.*; The Farmer's Stable, by W. Ward, 57*l.*; Innocence Alarmed, by R. Smith, 84*l.* After Westall: Maternal Affection, by Cheesman, 28*l.* After A. Kauffman: Content and Innocence (Lady Rushout and Daughter), by Burke, 69*l.* After Lawrence: Sir Francis Baring, with Mr. Charles Baring and Mr. Wall, by J. Ward, 31*l.* After Maria Cosway: Mrs. Cosway, by V. Green, 48*l.* After Lawranson: Mrs. Edwards, by J. Jones, 40*l.* After Gardner: Mrs. Gwynne and Mrs. Bunbury, by W. Dickinson, 92*l.* After Lawrence: Marchioness of Exeter, by C. Turner, 32*l.*; Lady Aeland and Children, by S. Cousins, 54*l.* After Romney: Lady Charlotte Legge, by J. Grozer, 105*l.*; Hon. Mrs. Beresford, by J. Jones, 28*l.* After Reynolds: Lady Elizabeth Foster, by F. Bartolozzi, 87*l.*; Lady Smyth and Children, by the same, 54*l.*; Mrs. Braddyll, by S. Cousins, 52*l.*; Miss Polly Kennedy, by T. Watson, 33*l.*; The Dilettanti Society, by W. Say, 31*l.*; Col. Tarleton, by J. R. Smith, 65*l.*; Warren Hastings, by T. Watson, 52*l.*; Lady Taylor, by W. Dickinson, 42*l.*; Lady Beaumont, by J. R. Smith, 71*l.*; Countess of Carlisle, by J. Watson, 31*l.*; Miss Mary Horneck, by R. Dunkarton, 60*l.*; Ladies Amabel and Jemima Yorke, by E. Fisher, 27*l.*; Viscountess Crosbie, by W. Dickinson, 36*l.*; Mrs. Abington as the Comic Muse, by J. Watson, 33*l.*; Mrs. Musters, by J. R. Smith, 42*l.*; Mrs. Carnac, by the same, 69*l.*; Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire, by V. Green, 25*l.*; Duchess of Rutland, by the same, 30*l.*; Lady Bampfylde, by T. Watson, 90*l.*; Countess of Salisbury, by V. Green, 66*l.*; Mrs. Beresford, Mrs. Gardiner, and Viscountess Townshend, by T. Watson, 50*l.*; Mrs. Pelham feeding Chickens, by W. Dickinson, 409*l.*; Lady Elizabeth Compton, by V. Green, 525*l.*; Countess of Harrington, by the same, 682*l.*

First-Art Gossip.

THE private view of the tenth annual exhibition of the Royal Society of Miniature Painters takes place to-day at the Modern Gallery. The exhibition will be open to the public from April 17th to May 13th.

THE season at the New Gallery begins on Tuesday, April 25th.

A REPRESENTATIVE exhibition of the works of H. G. Hine, the painter of Down scenery, who died in 1895, is to be opened to-day at the Leicester Galleries.

ON the same date will be shown for the first time a series of water-colours of Sussex by Mr. Wilfrid Ball, and a collection of drawings and studies by M. Paul Helleu.

THE Association des Artistes Français (fondation Taylor) has had a windfall in the shape of a legacy of 50,000 francs. It was bequeathed by the sculptor M. Maurice Ferrary, who won the Grand Prix de Rome in 1882, and who lived at Neuilly, where he died last November. To Neuilly he has left one of his most important works, 'Le Bourreau,' and a sum of 10,000 frs. to the hospital of Levallois-Perret.

IN an interesting appreciation in L'Éclair M. Raoul Aubry points out that the new member of the Académie des Beaux-Arts, M. Denys Puech, the sculptor, some twenty-five years ago "gardait une demi-douzaine de moutons dans la montagne aveyronnaise et désespérait les gens de son village par ses allures farouches, son aspect taciturne et son obstination à ne rien apprendre."

The local priest was the first to encourage his genius, and he obtained work congenial to his tastes with a "marbrier" at Rodez, his earnings amounting to the "somme fantastique" of 75 centimes per day. In about two years he had saved 800 francs, with which he went to Paris and studied under Falguière and Chapu at the École des Beaux-Arts, winning the Grand Prix de Rome in 1884. Since then his progress has been rapid. He has won several medals at the Salon, three of his works are in the Luxembourg, others are in possession of various provincial municipalities, whilst the number of his busts of celebrities is very great, ranging from the Princess Mathilde to Coquelin and Jules Simon. There still remain two vacancies at the Académie des Beaux-Arts, the election to which is postponed until after May 6th, as many of the Académiciens are taking part in the Archæological Congress at Athens.

THE death is announced of M. Henri Frédéric Iselin, the sculptor, who was born at Clairegoutte (Haute-Savoie) in 1826. Iselin first exhibited at the Salon in 1849, to which he sent a bust of M. Marmier. His conscientious work procured him a large number of commissions, particularly from the French Administration of the Fine Arts. He obtained medals at the Salons of 1852, 1855, and 1861, and his busts are numerous. His statues include 'L'Élégance' in the foyer of the Opera-House, 'L'Observation' at the Luxembourg, and 'Le Génie du Feu' at the Louvre. He ceased to exhibit some years ago, and has lived in retirement.—The death is also announced of the engraver Adolphe Gusman, of Spanish descent, born in Paris on December 14th, 1821. He obtained a medal at the Salon in 1857 for an engraving of the 'Noces de Cana,' by Paolo Veronese, and executed many plates after Gustave Doré, Bida, Daubigny, and S. Langlois.

THE artistic remains of Menzel include a number of sketch-books and some five thousand drawings, black and coloured. The heirs intend to offer them for sale, and have given the Berlin National Gallery the right of refusal; but this gallery already possesses a large number of Menzel's drawings, so that it seems somewhat doubtful whether the Directors will avail themselves of this opportunity.

MR. MURRAY announces 'Reason in Architecture,' by Mr. T. G. Jackson, R.A.; 'The Life and Works of Giovanni Antonio Bazzi,' by Mr. R. H. Hobart Cust; and vol. iii. of 'The Arts in Early England,' by Prof. Baldwin Brown.

AT the monthly meeting of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland held this week, there was submitted an interesting communication on the excavation by the Society of the Roman fort on the Antonine Wall, near Falkirk. The fort is described in the report as "a square with rounded corners, measuring 223 feet each way in the interior space, which is surrounded by ramparts of earth and turf, with a bottoming of stones 20 feet in breadth, with two trenches in front on three sides, the fourth side being formed by the Antonine Wall." There are four gates. This system of defence is unique in Britain, but is described by Cæsar as having been used in his Gallic campaign.

THE third open meeting of the British School of Rome during the present season was held in the library of the School on April 3rd. The chair was taken by Prof. Pelham, who is President of the Executive Committee of the School. The first paper was read by Mr. T. Ashby, jun., Acting Director of the School, upon Monte Circeo, the promontory which rises abruptly from the flat coast about ten miles to the south-west of Terracina, and which, though it was never an island within the memory of the human race, has from a distance all the appearance of one, and is very likely to be identified with the magic isle of Circe. Here in early days a Roman colony was established, when the promontory still marked the frontier of Latium, as a post of observation against the Volscians. The ruins of an ancient city wall exist under the enceinte of the modern village of S. Felice Circeo (which lies at the east end of the mountain), and are connected by long walls with a citadel on the top of the ridge; but whether or no this is the site of the original colony (founded, according to Livy, by Tarquinius Superbus, according to Diodorus in 393 B.C.), the town of the imperial period seems to have been situated some distance further to the north-west, below the other end of the promontory. Considerable remains of it still exist, though it was never a place of great importance, and is, indeed, rarely mentioned. Monte Circeo appears as a resort of the Emperor Domitian, and there are scattered over it the ruins of several large villas, though their owners cannot be identified.

MR. W. ST. CLAIR BADDELEY followed with a paper upon a large and important villa upon the Colle di S. Stefano, to the south-east of the well-known villa of Hadrian, near Tivoli, of which it has until recently been believed to have formed a part. Fragments of an inscription which appears to have been erected in honour of the Vibii and Plancii Vari indicate the name of the real owners, and with this agrees the character of the construction, which dates from the reign of Hadrian. An isolated building, not far from the villa, may well have been a temple, though it is of unusual form; but the neighbourhood of some shrine is attested by the further discovery of a marble tablet bearing the words LVCV(S) SANCTV(S), which was dug out close by. The use of sanctus for sacer is noteworthy, and so is the form of the inscription itself, which must have been set up, one would imagine, at the entrance to the grove. Plans and drawings of these little-known remains were exhibited.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

QUEEN'S HALL.—London Choral Society.

MR. ARTHUR FAGGE, conductor of the London Choral Society, gave two English works at his concert at Queen's Hall on Monday evening. The first was Sir Edward Elgar's 'Caractacus,' originally produced at the Leeds Festival of 1898. Two years later came 'The Dream of Gerontius,' a work of far greater technical skill and emotional power. There are effective lines and scenes in Mr. H. A. Ackworth's 'Caractacus' poem; but there is also much that is conventional. The music, too, is unequal, some of it very beautiful, some dull. It is, however, interesting, in the case of such a composer, to hear a work in which there is great promise rather than actual achievement. The performance was rather rough. Of the soloists Mr. Dalton Baker was the best; he gave a dignified rendering of the Lament. Mr. Joseph O'Mara was announced, but sudden indisposition prevented him from appearing; his place was taken by Mr. Henry Beaumont. The second work was Dr. F. H. Cowen's clever and humorous setting of 'John Gilpin,' at the close of which the composer was summoned to the platform.

QUEEN'S HALL.—London Symphony Orchestra.

MR. GEORGE HENSCHEL was the conductor of the first of the two extra concerts given by the London Symphony Orchestra at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, and his name recalls the series of "London Symphony Concerts" which he gave at St. James's Hall from 1886 to 1897. He not only encouraged native art, but also his programmes included many Wagner excerpts and works by Brahms, of whom Mr. Henschel proved himself an able and specially sympathetic interpreter. At the present day Wagner reigns supreme even in the concert-room, while the symphonies of Brahms, or, at any rate, the first two, are favourites with the public. In developing the taste of the public for high-class orchestral music, Mr. Henschel was largely instrumental, and other men have benefited by his efforts, which at the time did not meet with the support which they deserved. With our present plethora of orchestral concerts, and with the admiration entertained towards works once considered dry or extravagant, it is well to remind the musical public of services formerly rendered by Mr. Henschel, with whose name might also be coupled that of Sir August Manns.

Tuesday's concert needs only brief notice. The programme included no novelties. Splendid performances were given of the 'Meistersinger' Overture and of the Brahms Symphony in D. Mr. Henschel's enthusiasm for these two composers is still as warm as ever, and his reception by the audience was most cordial. Miss Evangeline Anthony was heard in Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, with the orchestra under the direction of Mr. A. W. Payne. This young artist displays taste and feeling, but as yet her playing lacks soul and technical mastery. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies sang 'Wotan's Abschied,' while the 'Vorspiel and Liebestod,' from 'Tristan,' brought the concert to a successful close.

QUEEN'S HALL.—Madame Wanda Landowska's Pianoforte and Harpsichord Recital.

"J'AVOUERAI franchement que j'aime beaucoup mieux ce qui me touche que ce qui me surprend." Thus wrote François Couperin in the preface to his 'Pièces de Clavecin.' At the first of two recitals given by Madame Wanda Landowska at the Queen's Hall on Tuesday evening, she won the hearts of her hearers by her sympathetic renderings of old music. The programme bore the title 'John Sebastian Bach and his Contemporaries.' Bach was represented by his English Suite in E minor, and the lady's interpretation of the music was instinct with life and feeling, while her technique was irreproachable. We cannot understand, however, why the Allemande was omitted; it was certainly not on account of its length. Next came short pieces by Italian composers, the last being Domenico Scarlatti, whose 'Sonate Pastorale' was given without the usual modern additions. There followed Handel's Variations in E from the Fifth Suite of the first collection. France was represented, first in a group of interesting solos by Mattheson, Telemann, Rameau, Clérambault, and Daquin, and afterwards by some of Couperin's daintiest pieces: 'Les Folies Françaises ou les Dominos,' 'Le Dodo, ou l'Amour au Berceau,' and 'Muséte de Taverni.'

The Bach Suite was played on a pianoforte, but not in modern style; and no use was made of the pedal. Strictly, the harpsichord ought to have been used, but the music did not suffer by the change. Madame Landowska proved herself an admirable performer on the harpsichord in Handel's Variations, while nothing could have been more crisp and quaint than her rendering of the Couperin music. She met with a very warm but thoroughly well-deserved reception, and her second recital this afternoon ought to draw a full house. In these days of noisy music, of clever though unsatisfactory transcriptions of Bach's organ fugues, of storm and stress, of symbolism and pessimism, it is most reposeful to hear eighteenth-century music interpreted with true soul and spirit. With regard to Louis Clérambault and Couperin it may be noted that, although they were contemporaries of Bach, as regards publication of their music they were his predecessors. The examples given were, however, most welcome.

Musical Gossip.

Mlle. CAMILLE LANDI gave a song recital at the Bechstein Hall on Monday evening. Her programme was both varied and interesting. Her rendering of Marcello's Psalm 'Volgi mio Dio' was highly dramatic. Other numbers which deserve special mention were Schubert's 'An die Musik,' Bruneau's 'La Sarabande,' and Chaminade's 'L'Anneau d'Argent.' The audience was requested to refrain from applause before or after the sacred numbers, an admirable suggestion, which ought to be placed on the programmes of oratorio performances. There are even many songs not sacred after which applause is disturbing.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S 'Everyman' was performed by the Bach Choir, under the composer's direction, at Queen's Hall on Wednesday evening. The rendering of the work was highly impressive. Mr. Lane Wilson sang the important part of Everyman with declamatory power. The choir displayed earnestness and enthusiasm.

THE youthful violinist Mischa Elman made a second appearance at Mr. Charles Williams's fourth concert at Queen's Hall yesterday week, and his performance of Mendelssohn's Concerto was very astonishing. It is, indeed, strange to see a mere boy displaying the calm assurance and strong feeling of a mature artist. We only hope that all possible care will be taken to prevent overstraining either of his body or brain.

ST. MARYLEBONE PARISH CHURCH was crowded last Tuesday on the occasion of the wedding of Miss Ada Crossley. Her husband is Dr. Francis Muecke, an Australian by birth, who is at present attached to the medical staff of the London Hospital.

ANOTHER pupil of Sevcik, Robert Trebini, nineteen years of age, and of Italian parentage, will soon be heard in London.

IN The Quarterly Magazine of the International Musical Society (April to June) there is a highly interesting article by Henri Quittard, entitled 'A Forgotten French Musician of the Seventeenth Century, C. Bouzignac,' a name not to be found in the musical dictionaries, not even in Eitner's 'Quellen-Lexicon.'

RIMSKY-KORSAKOFF has resigned his professorship at the St. Petersburg Conservatoire. His opera 'Kascheg' was performed last Sunday at the Kommissarjevsky Theatre, when the students expressed with marked enthusiasm their sympathy with him.

A SPECIAL fête has been organized at Usinghen, near Wiesbaden, to celebrate the sixtieth anniversary of the birth of Prof. August Wilhelmj on September 21st.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|       |  |
|-------|--|
| SUN.  | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.    |
| —     | Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.                |
| TUES. | Royal Amateur Orchestra, 8.30, Queen's Hall.   |
| FRI.  | Queen's Hall Orchestra, 3.30, Queen's Hall.    |
| —     | Sacred Concert, 3.30 and 7.45, Crystal Palace. |
| —     | Sacred Concert, 7, Albert Hall.                |
| —     | Sacred Concert, 7.30, Queen's Hall.            |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

DUKE OF YORK'S.—Alice Sit by the Fire: a Page from a Daughter's Diary. In Three Acts. By J. M. Barrie.—Pantaloon: a Plea for an Ancient Family. By J. M. Barrie.

WHAT intentional burlesque has not been able to do for the serious drama seems in the way of being accomplished by the mockery of our latest school of dramatists. In face of the kind of satire launched against situation and sentiment by writers such as Mr. W. S. Gilbert, the late Oscar Wilde, Capt. Marshall, Mr. Bernard Shaw, and Mr. Barrie, it seems as if humanity was only created for the purpose of being satirized or caricatured, and he will apparently be a bold man who will dare in time to inspissate his play with sentiment or inform it with passion. There's "nothing either good or bad," says Hamlet, "but thinking makes it so," and the way of "turning to mirth all things of earth" may possibly with much effort win acceptance. We own, however, to finding it in the end more than a little oppressive, and to pining, even in carnival-tide, for a spot out of hearing of the tin trumpet and the mouth organ. It is improbable that Mr. Barrie will fail to supply us with pretty suggestion as well as with wit. But, while we admit that much of the laughter he provokes is of good alloy, and that there are occasionally "fancies chaste and noble," we find fatigue nearer neighbour than we had hoped or anticipated. The influence exercised by the dramatist over his public is undeniable, and the audience assembled on the first night was kept in a whirlwind of amusement. Nothing, moreover, unworthy or malodorous interfered with the enjoyment of the spectator. It seems grudging and churlish to say that an occasional sense of unreality and vapidness was inspired, and that there were moments when resentment of the coruscation set before us was as near at hand as admiration. Resisting all temptation to recapture a plot that is somewhere in the clouds, we will only say that what is shown is the effort of a romantic and extravagant young lady, a sort of modern Lydia Languish, whose notions of life are drawn from a too close study of the terminations of French plays and a familiarity with the various developments of le ménage à trois, to save her mother from a purely imaginary danger. In this gratuitous attempt she succeeds in compromising herself, but as nothing comes of her proceedings, all is well. In the conduct of the intrigue, if such it can be called, there is much that is quaint, ingenious, and whimsical. The mother and daughter, each mistrustful of the other, are admirably played by Miss Ellen Terry and Miss Irene Vanbrugh, and the general performance leaves nothing to be desired.

While no less quaint and extravagant than the companion piece, 'Pantaloone' is more dramatic. Conscious that his powers are failing and that his jokes—almost a superfluity in the part he plays—are growing threadbare, Pantaloone becomes distressed. The obstinacy of his daughter Columbine, who elopes with penniless Harlequin instead of marrying Clown, who is a man of substance, subjects him to indignities on the part of the latter which further embitter his cup. The fugitive lovers are banished from his roof, and it is not until they return with a son, who is himself a juvenile clown, that old Joey, as he is called, begins to pick up his spirits. This piece has some tenderness, and furnishes opportunity for good acting on the part of Mr. Gerald Du Maurier. The use of the machinery of the harlequinade is not wholly successful, but it is pleasant to see the characters played with a kind of poetic suggestion that is generally wanting from modern performances of the class.

SHAFTESBURY.—Othello.

THE revival of 'Othello' at the Shaftesbury attempted by Miss Tita Brand is chiefly noteworthy for the promise displayed by our younger actors, among whom, as a rule, the parts are distributed. Not wholly to be trusted are such manifestations. Young actors have a habit of coming out of the ruck only to fall back into it and drop even into the rear so soon as their performances meet with encouragement. Many features in the present representation are praiseworthy. Mr. Hubert Carter's Othello has every gift short of intensity and inspiration. Miss Tita Brand's Desdemona conveys the idea that she is clever and will be of service when more scope is furnished for latent gifts of passion with which we credit her. Mr. Henry Ainley's pleasing Cassio is more suggestive of the court than the camp, and perhaps of the grove than of either. Mr. J. H. Barnes is virile and in all respects excellent as Iago, but stands aloof inasmuch as he alone ranks as an actor of experience. Many other performances merit commendation. It is sincerely to be hoped that the promise exhibited will lead to fulfilment. Courage, taste, and discretion are shown in the treatment of the text, and the applause—most of it, though not all of it, real—with which the whole was greeted was, as a rule, well deserved.

COURT.—The Trojan Women. Translated from Euripides by Gilbert Murray.

To the literary merits of Dr. Gilbert Murray's rendering of the 'Troades' tribute has been borne. With the exception of a few weak or doubtful rhymes—such as "cup" and "hope," "bears" and "prisoners," and the like, which make us wonder why rhyming verse has been employed elsewhere than in the lyrics—the whole still commends itself as literature. Thanks to a capable interpretation, some features in which, such as the Cassandra and the Andromache are excellent, the estimate of the acting value of the play is much raised, and something like a vindication of the Euripidean method is afforded. At the close of what is treated as the opening action, when Astyanax is borne off to his doom at the reluctant bidding of Talthybius, a point of harrowing intensity is reached. The resemblance between the wailings of the captive women and those of the mourning queens in 'Richard III.' and the contrast between the sorrowings of Constance in 'King John' and of Andromache over Astyanax, call for mention under Shakspeare rather than Euripides. The latter is, however, very instructive and significant. In place of the delirious rage of Constance—more passionate and eloquent, perhaps, than anything else in Shakspeare—we have a cowed submission to the inevitable, the acquiescence in the view that woman is the legitimate spoil of the victor. The Trojan women counsel and encourage each other to accept with patience what servile ministrations may be forced upon them in their new life. In a specially noteworthy speech Andromache contemplates with shame and almost with prescience the time when she shall "stand a traitor to the dead" Hector, and mourns that

One night,.....aye, men have said it.....maketh tame
A woman in a man's arms.....O shame, shame!
What woman's lips can so forswear her dead,
And give strange kisses in another's bed?

Cassandra is not long on the stage, and it is impossible and unwise to compare her part with that in the 'Agamemnon.' Her words are, however, eminently dramatic when, with bitterest irony, she addresses Hecuba:—

O mother, fill mine hair with happy flowers
And speed me forth. Yea, if my spirit cowers,
Drive me with wrath! So liveth Loxias.
A bloodier bride than ever Helen was Go I to Agamemnon, Lord most high
Of Hellas!.....I shall kill him, mother; I Shall kill him, and lay waste his house with fire
As he laid ours.

Effective, also, is the outburst of Talthybius breaking through the spell cast on him by the woman; while among the reflective passages which prove effective may be mentioned that of Hecuba:—

O vain is man
Who glorieth in his joy and hath no fears:
While to and fro the chances of the years
Dance like an idiot in the wind.

We have little but praise for piece and performance, and trust that the coming years have much of similar work in store. Listening to Dr. Murray's lines spoken as they are, we forget, if we cannot wholly forgive, the ineptitude and inanity to which it is often our fate in these days to listen.

SHAKSPEAREANA.

A Life of William Shakspeare. By W. J. Rolfe. (Duckworth.)—This life, we learn from a publishers' note, "was written as a supplement to the New Century (subscription) edition, and for this reason has not been hitherto available as an independent work." It is now reprinted without alteration or addition.

In a brief preface Dr. Rolfe tells a somewhat mysterious story of how his original MS. was stolen, and how he had to undertake the depressing task of rewriting it. Whether, as he says, it is better for being a twice-told tale he cannot say, but he inclines to think it no worse. We, of course, are not in a position to decide. His aim, he tells us, has been to give the main facts, traditions, and conjectures concerning Shakspeare's personal and literary history, adding, so far as his limits allow, the evidence for the facts, and the reasons for accepting or rejecting the traditions and conjectures. Within his limits Dr. Rolfe may, we think, be fairly congratulated on having achieved his purpose; but he has nothing to add to the present state of our knowledge, nor do we find any of the few known facts of the poet's existence presented in any novel or striking way. Basing his work mainly on Halliwell-Phillipps's well-known 'Outlines,' &c., and quoting very largely from other commentators, he has contrived to make up a handsome book of some 550 pages, excellently printed, with ample margins and well bound. Altogether, it is a goodly volume, though, perhaps, rather heavy for the hand.

In the "Athenæum Press Series" (Ginn), which has no connexion whatever with ourselves, being of American origin, The Sonnets of Shakspeare have been edited, with an introduction and notes, by Canon H. C. Beeching. It is, as he says, an edition for students, and it should fulfil its purpose admirably, for it contains an able and temperate survey of all the best work that has been done on the subject up to date. It is probably safe to say that no two scholars agree entirely as to the problems of this most perplexing part of Shakspeare. But the present reviewer finds himself cordially in agreement with most of Canon Beeching's positions, which are stated firmly where previous expert opinion is combated, but never with the slightest degree of malice or offence. It is pleasant to see the late Samuel Butler's work on the Sonnets recognized. Whether Butler's arguments against the noble rank of the young man addressed have been answered here, may be doubted; it is shown, at any rate, that Southampton and Pembroke do not fit the place, and at present it seems a sound conclusion that with the figure known as the rival poet they remain unidentified.

The editor's contention that we have real passion and real persons behind it in this strange set of poems will have the vote of very many students of Shakspeare, who was human like the rest of us, not an impossible demigod. Canon Beeching brings forward Gray and Bonstetten, and adumbrates other parallels which seem to us in point. He collects various expressions used both in the Sonnets and in '1 Henry IV.' as showing that a later date than 1594 is probable for the Sonnets. The present reviewer is not convinced by the examples brought forward; but there is no space to enter on what must be a lengthy discussion. The notes give full credit to previous editors, and contain some interesting new matter—concerning, for instance, "buds of marjoram." We may note that even now so near London as Buckinghamshire dog-roses are called "cankers," as in Sonnet liv. Altogether the edition is so well equipped that it is not likely to be superseded for many years. Advanced scholars will find it an excellent summary of rival views, almost entirely free from the strange temper and fantasy which are a feature of latter-day Shakspearean criticism.

Messrs. Dawbarn & Ward send us a new edition of Shakspeare's Town and Times, by H. S. Ward and C. W. Ward, which is reduced in price, though it contains a few extra pages and the binding is both strong and handsome. Four photogravure plates are added, which are excellent pictures, and the volume is well calculated to give the intending visitor a good idea of the district. The authors have made a speciality of the photography of historic spots, and do their work admirably. Appendix A, concerning some of the old sports and customs, is of value. Appendix B is not critical enough to be really useful in the portion concerning recent books on Shakspeare. It contains some clumsy writing too, due, we presume, to haste. One looks in a volume like this for something above the guide-book level of style.

Dramatic Gossip.

EASTER stood once next to Christmas as a time for dramatic change. That character, long forfeited, it is likely this year to resume. Among Easter performances are the reappearance at Drury Lane of Sir Henry Irving in 'Becket'; Mr. Lewis Waller's presentation at the Imperial of 'Romeo and Juliet'; the reopening of the Great Queen Street Theatre under Mr. Philip Carr with 'The Critic'; the production of 'Chow' at the Criterion; that of 'Her Own Way' at the Lyric; that of 'Leah Kleschna' at the New; of a play promised at the Strand; of 'Two Little Girls' at Daly's; of 'John Chilcote, M.P.' at the St. James's; and of Mr. R. H. Davis's play 'The Dictator' at the Comedy. In this account, unprecedented for a period extending over little more than a week, no note is made of Mr. Tree's series of revivals at His Majesty's.

'FRANCIS OF ASSISI, SAINT AND MYSTIC,' given at the St. George's Hall on the 6th inst., is a not very successful attempt to revive the religious drama. It deals with two episodes in the life of St. Francis, and is, as might have been anticipated, gloomy and undramatic. No name of author was given, but the piece was acted by the Elizabethan Stage Society, whose weakest production it is.

THE next appearance in London of Mr. Fred Terry and Miss Julia Neilson, after their departure from the New Theatre, will be in 'Dorothy of the Hall,' in which Miss Neilson will appear as Dorothy Vernon, a part in which she was seen at Newcastle in November last. This is not to be expected before autumn.

DURING Holy Week performances of 'Othello' will be suspended at the Shaftesbury, and Miss Wynne-Matthison and Miss Tita Brand will appear in 'Everyman.'

'BESIDE THE BONNIE BRIER BUSH,' an adaptation from Ian Maclaren by Messrs. James MacArthur and Augustus Thomas, which has been played for some time in America, has been given for the first time in England at the Shakspeare Theatre, Liverpool. Mr. William Molison played Lachlan Campbell, the Kirk Elder, and Miss Lucy Wilson was the heroine Flora. No special warmth of approval was demonstrated in the reception.

MR. AND MRS. KENDAL will return to the St. James's Theatre in the autumn, and will reappear in 'Dick Hope,' in which they were first seen at the Coronet.

THE Mermaid Society will begin on the 24th inst. a new series of performances, with a representation at the Great Queen Street Theatre of Sheridan's 'Critic.' Webster's 'Duchess of Malfi' will be the second revival.

SIR CHARLES WYNDHAM, who has returned from America, finds himself unable to play, as was hoped, in the forthcoming production of 'Leah Kleschna.'

As a thanksgiving for the twelve-hundredth anniversary of the founding by St. Eadhelm of the town, bishopric, and school of Sherborne, what is called 'A Sherborne Pageant' is to be given on June 12th to 15th in the ruins of the castle. This will consist of a spectacular folk-play on the history of the town, the work of the facile and indefatigable pen of Mr. Louis N. Parker. It is a welcome sign that spectacular and histrionic exhibitions are once more to enter closely into our civic and academic life. Sherborne may be congratulated on its public spirit, and it is to be hoped that June will be as "propitious" as, according to Milton, is May.

'SCARRON,' by M. Catulle Mendès, which has been given at the Gaité, is a triumph for M. Coquelin, who presents a striking picture of the poor Cul de Jatte, as Scarron was sometimes extravagantly called. Mlle. Sylvie was Françoise d'Aubigné, the wife of the crippled poet and subsequently Madame de Maintenon; and Mlle. Gilda Darthy, Ninon de l'Enclos.

In spite of a fine performance of Geneviève, by Madame Réjane, 'L'Age d'aimer' of M. Pierre Wolff, the latest production at the Gymnase, failed to stimulate greatly the Parisian public.

'MONSIEUR PRÉÇON,' the latest novelty of M. Alfred Capus, is in three acts, and is admirably rendered at the Renaissance by MM. Guitry and Guy and Mlle. Brandès.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—S. V.—H. O.—E. G. A.—A. V.—received.

S. D.—T. A.—Forwarded.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

THE ATHENÆUM.

SCALE OF CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS.

|                         |         |
|-------------------------|---------|
| 5 Lines of Pearl ..     | £ s. d. |
| 75 " " (Half-Column) .. | 0 3 6   |
| A Column ..             | 1 16 0  |
| A Page ..               | 3 3 0   |
|                         | 9 9 0   |

Auctions and Public Institutions, Five Lines 4s., and 8d. per line of Pearl type beyond.

IN THE MEASUREMENT OF ADVERTISEMENTS, CARE SHOULD BE TAKEN TO MEASURE FROM RULE TO RULE.

Advertisements across Two Columns, one-third extra beyond the space occupied, the first charge being 3s.

JOHN C. FRANCIS,

The Athenæum Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, London, E.C.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogue post free on application.

NOW READY, COMPLETE.

In 5 vols. 21s. net each; or in half-morocco, 31s. 6d. net each.

BRYAN'S DICTIONARY OF PAINTERS AND ENGRAVERS.

A New Edition, Revised and Enlarged under the supervision of

C. G. WILLIAMSON, Litt.D.,

Assisted by a Staff of Specialists.

With about 500 Illustrations, including 40 Photogravure Plates.

Illustrated Prospectus on application.

In this Edition upwards of 1,400 New Biographies have been added, and nearly 6,000 Corrections made in Articles that have been allowed to stand. In addition to this, 250 Lives have been partly rewritten.

"No one interested in the Fine Arts can afford to be without this comprehensive and indispensable dictionary."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Will no doubt take rank among the standard publications of the twentieth century."—Studio.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

In specially designed cloth cover, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each. "The series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England."—Times.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. An Itinerary and Description—BRISTOL—CANTERBURY—CARLISLE—CHESTER—CHICHESTER—DURHAM—ELY—EXETER—GLOUCESTER—HEREFORD—LICHFIELD—LINCOLN—MANCHESTER—NORWICH—OXFORD—PETERBOROUGH—RIPON—ROCHESTER—ST. ALBAN'S—ST. ASAPH—ST. DAVID'S—ST. PATRICK'S, DUBLIN—ST. PAUL'S—SALISBURY—SOUTHWELL—WELLS—WINCHESTER—WORCESTER—YORK.

Uniform with above Series. 1s. 6d. net each.

ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH, CANTERBURY—BEVERLEY MINSTER—WIMBORNE MINSTER and CHRISTCHURCH PRIORY—TEWKESBURY ABBEY and DEERHURST PRIORY—BATH ABBEY, MALMESBURY ABBEY, and BRADFORD-ON-AVON CHURCH—WESTMINSTER ABBEY—STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

BELL'S HANDBOOKS TO CONTINENTAL CHURCHES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

CHARTRES: the Cathedral and other Churches—ROUEN: the Cathedral and other Churches—AMIENS: the Cathedral and other Churches—PARIS (NOTRE-DAME)—MONT ST. MICHEL—BAYEUX.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER.

Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUMES.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE.

Motteux's Translation, Revised. With Lockhart's Life and Notes. 2 vols.

DRAPER'S HISTORY of the INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE. 2 vols.

The THOUGHTS of MARCUS

AURELIUS ANTONINUS. Translated by GEORGE LONG, M.A. With an Essay on Marcus Aurelius by MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASCAL'S THOUGHTS. Translated from the Text of M. AUGUSTE MOLINIER by C. KEGAN PAUL.

Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

PUBLISHED TO-DAY, with 21 Portraits, Views, &amp;c., 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ITALIAN LETTERS OF A DIPLOMAT'S WIFE.

By MARY KING WADDINGTON.

** A further Series of the Correspondence of Madame Waddington, whose Letters—written while M. Waddington was French Ambassador at the English Court—aroused such widespread interest when they were published in the summer of 1903.

THE STORY OF AN INDIAN UPLAND.

By F. B. BRADLEY-BIRT, F.R.G.S. I.C.S. With an Introduction by the Hon. H. H. RISLEY, C.S.I. C.I.E., Home Secretary to the Government of India. With 20 Full-Page Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

TRACKS OF A ROLLING STONE.

By the Hon. HENRY J. COKE, Author of 'A Ride over the Rocky Mountains,' 'Creeds of the Day,' &amp;c. With a Portrait Frontispiece. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

VANITY FAIR.—"One of the liveliest and most irresistible books of memoirs that have appeared for a long time."

PUNCH.—"A vivid narrative that recalls the colour of his sometime friend, Capt. Marryat."

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A delightful book.....Mr. Coke has things to say that appeal to the heart and soul."

IN PEACE and WAR: Autobiographical Sketches. By Sir John

FURLEY, Kt., D.L. J.P., Author of 'Struggles and Experiences of a Neutral Volunteer,' &amp;c. With a Portrait. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [On May 10.]

PROBLEMS in MANŒUVRE TACTICS, with Solutions, for

Officers of all Arms. By Major HOPPENSTEDT, Instructor at the War School, Potsdam. Translated and Adapted by Major J. H. V. CROWE, R.A., p.s.c., Instructor at the Royal Military Academy. With Maps. Small demy 8vo, 6s. net. [Just published.]

SPRING in a SHROPSHIRE ABBEY. By Lady Catherine

MILNES GASKELL, Author of 'The New Cinderella' and 'Old Shropshire Life.' With 16 Full-Page Illustrations. Small demy 8vo, 9s. net. [On May 5.]

A FIFTH AND THOROUGHLY REVISED EDITION WILL BE READY
ON APRIL 18 OF

A LIFE of WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. By Sidney Lee,

Editor of the 'Dictionary of National Biography,' Honorary Doctor of Letters in the Victoria University. With 2 Portraits of Shakespeare, a Portrait of the Earl of Southampton, and Facsimiles of Shakespeare's known Signatures. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

TIMES.—"A marvel of research.....Never before has learning been brought to bear upon Shakespeare's biography with anything like the same force."

** Also the LIBRARY EDITION, in 1 vol. with 6 Photogravure Portraits, 1 Coloured Plate, and 81 Illustrations and Facsimiles in the Text, medium 8vo, 16s.

And the STUDENT'S EDITION, entitled 'SHAKESPEARE'S LIFE and WORK,' with a Photogravure Portrait of Shakespeare and 5 Facsimiles, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

TRINITY HOUSE, LONDON: Past and Present. By Walter

H. MAYO. With a Frontispiece and other Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s. net. [Shortly.]

MRS. HENRY DE LA PASTURE'S NEW NOVEL.

FIFTH IMPRESSION NOW READY.

WORLD.—"Peter's Mother' is a really fine book as fiction and as literature."

PETER'S MOTHER.

By Mrs. HENRY DE LA PASTURE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Peter's Mother is as delightful a character as the imagination of a novel-writer ever figured forth.....A better novel the reader could not desire."

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD'S NEW NOVEL.

THIRD IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

SPECTATOR.—"The most attractive and brilliant of all Mrs. Humphry Ward's novels."

THE MARRIAGE OF WILLIAM ASHE.

By Mrs. HUMPHRY WARD.

With Illustrations by ALBERT STERNER. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW YORK SUN.—"This is the best of Mrs. Ward's stories.....We have found nothing in recent fiction by which we have been more impressed and entertained."

JUST PUBLISHED.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

A VAGRANT
ENGLISHWOMAN.

By CATHERINE I. DODD.

** Miss Catherine Dodd depicts with clear but sympathetic touch many scenes of life, whether in a German University town or further afield, as it appears to a cultivated Englishwoman living in close intimacy with the professional and student classes.

SHORTLY, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE

MARQUIS'S EYE.

By G. F. BRADBY,

Author of 'Joshua Newings; or, the Love Bacillus.'

** The story tells the curious adventures which befell a good young man after an operation whereby he exchanges a damaged eye of his own for the eye of a gay French Marquis, and consequently sees life through a strangely sophisticated medium.

On MAY 8, crown 8vo, 6s.

ROSE OF THE WORLD.

By AGNES and EGERTON CASTLE,

Author of 'The Secret Orchard,' 'The Bath Comedy,' 'The Star Dreamer,' &amp;c.

Messrs. SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO. have pleasure in announcing the publication of a CROWN 8vo, 3s. 6d. SERIES,

UNDER THE TITLE OF

THE WATERLOO LIBRARY.

This Series will comprise some of the best Works of Modern Authors. The volumes will be well printed, and issued in a neat cloth binding of special design.

THE FOLLOWING VOLUMES, WITH OTHERS, OF THE LIBRARY ARE READY:—

The CRUISE OF THE 'CACHALOT.'

By FRANK T. BULLEN. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations and a Chart.

THE WHITE COMPANY.

By A. CONAN DOYLE. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations.

JESS.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations.

OTHER VOLUMES TO FOLLOW.

London: SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO. 15, Waterloo Place, S.W.

NOW READY.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

THE

NINTH SERIES

GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by

JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a List of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office,
Bream's Buildings, E.C.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION
Etab.] FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE. [1835.

Accumulated Fund over ... £6,000,000
Paid in Claims more than ... £12,400,000

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS,

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,

ACCIDENT AND DISEASE

(SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA, APPENDICITIS, &amp;c.)

BURGLARY AND FIDELITY INSURANCE.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

Established 1849.

CLAIMS PAID £4,800,000

64, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN,
And INDIGESTION, GOUT,

And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA.

Messrs. T. C. & E. C. JACK
beg to announce they have still a few Sets remaining of
CAPT. BRINKLEY'S GREAT WORK
JAPAN AND CHINA.

Only 500 Sets were retained for the English market, and of these over 450 have been subscribed
for. The work will therefore be out of print almost immediately.

Illustrated with 226 Full-Page Plates,
of which 100 are in Colour.

In 12 vols. cloth, gilt top, 14s. net per volume.

The JAPANESE AMBASSADOR in London says :
"The best authority on Japan."

The Athenæum says :—"Enormously in advance of all existing literature on the subject."

London: T. C. & E. C. JACK,
34, Henrietta Street, W.C.; and Edinburgh.

A Beautiful Edition of the greatest contemporary record of the Reign of
Henry VIII.

EDWARD HALL'S CHRONICLE
OF
HENRY THE EIGHTH

These two volumes, which are now ready, form the commencement of an important Series of Reprints of the Contemporary Histories of the Tudor and Stuart periods—great and imposing works of authentic value and of much literary charm, which have inexplicably fallen into forgetfulness.

"In Mr. Hall's gorgeous pages we have a picture of the early sixteenth century unequalled for brilliancy and interest."—Spectator.

The Series, which will include, among others, such works as CAMDEN'S QUEEN ELIZABETH, STRANGUAGE'S MARY STUART, L'ESTRANGE'S REIGN of KING CHARLES, &c., is entitled

THE LIVES OF THE KINGS.

Subscriptions are now being received for the first Two Volumes (viz., HALL'S HENRY VIII.). First published in 1542, its destruction was ordered by Queen Mary; so that it is to-day excessively rare. The merits of the work, long overlooked, are now generally recognized.

An Introduction is contributed by

CHARLES WHIBLEY,

who is also the Editor of the whole Series.

Mr. HENRY NEWBOLT has undertaken to write the Introduction to CAMDEN'S ELIZABETH, and the other numbers will be dealt with by other competent writers.

The Two Volumes of HALL'S CHRONICLES, now ready, are printed by T. & A. Constable on pure rag paper, and bound in buckram, gilt design, gilt top. The Edition for the United Kingdom is limited to 500 Copies, and the price is 16s. net per Volume. There is also an Edition de Luxe on Japanese vellum (25 Copies only) at 5l. 5s. net the Set.

Both Editions have Photogravure Frontispieces.

London: T. C. & E. C. JACK,
34, Henrietta Street, W.C.; and Edinburgh.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d. net; postage, 2d.

A LOVE GARLAND.

By FRANCIS HENRY CLIFFE,

Author of a Translation of 'The Poems of Leopardi,' &amp;c.

SCOTSMAN.—"The poem is full of filial piety, written in the measure and, as far as may be, also in the spirit of the famous elegy in which Tennyson commemorated young Hallam.....It is always graceful, sincere, and skilful enough to hold the attention of any sympathetic reader."

London: GAY &amp; BIRD, 22, Bedford Street, W.C.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

HANDBOOKS FOR ART-LOVERS.

Large 8vo, uniformly bound in linen, price 7s. 6d. net each.

HOW TO JUDGE ARCHITECTURE.

A Popular Guide to the Appreciation of Buildings.

By RUSSELL STURGIS, M.A.,

Author of 'European Architecture.'

With 84 Full-Page Photographic Illustrations of some of the Chief Buildings of the World.

"Few books have been published on the subject of architecture more valuable to the ordinary reader than this. The text is clear, concise, and to the point."

Outlook, New York.

"A marvel of condensed statement.....It contains for the layman an education in architecture."—Lamp, New York.

THE APPRECIATION OF SCULPTURE.

A Popular Handbook for Students and Amateurs.

By RUSSELL STURGIS.

With 64 Full-Page Photographic Illustrations of some of the most Notable Examples of the Sculptor's Art.

This volume treats of sculpture, both architectural and monumental, dwelling upon its history, the characteristics of the principal schools and the criticism of standard works an appreciation of which will enable the reader to understand this noble art.

PICTORIAL COMPOSITION AND THE CRITICAL JUDGMENT OF PICTURES.

A Popular Handbook for Students and Amateurs.

By H. R. POORE.

With 150 Illustrations, Reproduced from Photographs of Celebrated Pictures and from special Explanatory Diagrams.

This thoughtful and instructive volume is full of the best ideas, both of painting pictures and of properly appreciating them when painted. Probably no clearer or more satisfactory work of the kind has ever been offered to the public, and one is inclined to urge every student of the fine arts to make a careful study of its pages.

B. T. BATSFORD, 94, High Holborn, London.

DAVID NUTT,

57-59, LONG ACRE, W.C.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. XIX. APRIL, 1905. No. 3. Net, 1s. 6d.

Contents.

EDITORIAL and GENERAL.

ORIGINAL CONTRIBUTIONS:—

On 'Odyssey' xxiv. 335 sqq. J. COOK WILSON.

On 'Iliad' i. 418. R. C. SEATON.

Illustrations of Pindar. II. W. HEADLAM.

A Misinterpreted Greek Optative. J. E. HARRY.

The Date of Aristophanes' Birth. ROLAND G. KENT.

Notes on Julian. ARTHUR PLATT.

Two Notes on 'The Verrines.' W. PETERSON.

REVIEWS:—

Gaye on Plato's 'Conception of Immortality.' R. G. BURY.

Beloch's 'History of Greece.' RONALD M. BURROWS.

Zielinski's 'Clausengesetz.' ALBERT C. CLARK.

Corpus Pictarum Latinorum (Fasc. IV.). S. G. OWEN.

Greenidge's 'History of Rome.' J. S. REID.

Gardthausen's 'Augustus.' F. T. RICHARDS.

Chroust's 'Monumenta Palseographica,' XIII.-XVI.

F. G. KENYON.

Harvard Studies (Vol. XV). H. RICHARDS.

ARCHÆOLOGY:—

British School at Rome. T. ASHBY, Jun.

Déchelette's 'Pottery of Roman Gaul.' H. B. WALTERS.

On the Linear Script of Knossos. ARTHUR J. EVANS.

Monthly Record. F. H. MARSHALL.

A New Acquisition of the British Museum. H. B. W.

Archæological Summaries. H. B. W.

SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS. BOOKS RECEIVED.

CORRIGENDA.

JUST OUT.

FRENCH CORRESPONDENCE

(SOCIAL and PERSONAL) for the USE of ENGLISH PEOPLE. By B. VON HOLTHOIR. Cloth, 1s. 6d. (1s. 7d. post free).

RAPID REVIEW.—"An admirably chosen bundle of model letters.....with all the niceties of French epistolary etiquette carefully brought out. Very practical."

MESSRS. LONGMANS &amp; CO.'S LIST.

SOUTH AFRICA,

A Glance at Current Conditions and Politics.

By J. H. BALFOUR BROWNE, K.C.

8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

EVENING STANDARD and ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A lively book, which lets daylight into the actual position of affairs in a part of the world where, though war has ended, a good many burning questions remain to be settled."

STANDARD.—"This is rather a book to read than to judge of by necessarily brief extracts. It will not be likely to disappoint any one who gives it the serious attention which it fairly deserves."

SECOND EDITION, WITH AN INTRODUCTORY NOTE ON THE UNIT OF FAMILY HOLDING UNDER EARLY TRIBAL CUSTOM.

THE TRIBAL SYSTEM IN WALES.

Being part of an Inquiry into the Structure and Methods of Tribal Society.

By FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D. (Edin.), Litt.D. (Camb.).

With 3 Maps. 8vo, 12s. 6d.

The NATIONAL SYSTEM of POLITICAL ECONOMY. By FRIEDRICH LIST. Translated by SAMPSON S. LLOYD. New and Cheaper Edition. With an Introduction by J. SHIELD NICHOLSON, D.Sc., Professor of Political Economy in the University of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

ABERDEEN DAILY JOURNAL.—"It is deeply interesting as the monument of the intellectual founder of the German Zollverein."

TWO ARGONAUTS in SPAIN. By

JEROME HART. New Edition. With 36 Full-Page Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 5s. net.

HANDBOOK of HOMERIC STUDY,

By HENRY BROWNE, S.J. M.A. New College, Oxford; Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland; Professor of Greek at University College, Dublin. With 22 Plates. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

FIFTH AND CHEAPER EDITION.

The SEAT of AUTHORITY in

RELIGION. By JAMES MARTINBAU, Hon. LL.D. Harv. S.T.D. Lugd. Bat. DD. Edin. D.C.L. Oxon. Fifth and Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A DAY at DULWICH. By A. H.

GILKES, Master of Dulwich College. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. net.

MORNING POST.—"All Alleynians, both past and present, will, of course, buy Mr. A. H. Gilkes's little book, 'A Day at Dulwich,' and those who are what is known in the jargon of the day as "good judges" will read it not once only, but many times, and preserve it."

HAY FEVER.

By WALTER HERRIES POLLOCK and GUY C. POLLOCK.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

* * * This story is concerned with the adventures of a much and justly respected stockbroker, and is founded on the known action of a drug sometimes prescribed for hay fever; but, naturally, the Authors have aimed more at amusement than at scientific accuracy.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 412. APRIL, 1905. 8vo, price 6s.

1. THE HISTORY of TWENTY-FIVE YEARS.
2. EARTHQUAKES and the NEW SEISMOLOGY.
3. THREE PHASES of PASTORAL SENTIMENT.
4. TIBET.
5. LORD CHIEF JUSTICE COLERIDGE.
6. The ARAB.
7. SAINTE-BEUVE and the ROMANTICS.
8. THE WORK of JAMES McNEILL WHISTLER.
9. A LIBERAL FRENCH NOBLE of the REVOLUTION.
10. The PLAYS of MR. BERNARD SHAW.
11. The UNIONIST PARTY and the SESSION.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.
39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

MR. MURRAY'S

NEW BOOKS.

A MOTHER OF CZARS.

A Sketch of the Life of Marie Feodorowna, Wife of Paul I. and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. By Mrs. COLQUHOUN GRANT, Author of 'The French Noblesse of the Eighteenth Century.' Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

FIVE YEARS IN A PERSIAN TOWN.

By the Rev. NAPIER MALCOLM. With Illustrations by MIRZA ABRIL QASIMI YAZDI, with Photographs and a Map. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

FROM THE CAPE TO THE ZAMBESI.

By G. T. HUTCHINSON. With an Introduction by Col. FRANK RHODES, C.B. D.S.O. With many Illustrations from Photographs taken by Col. Rhodes and the Author. Square demy 8vo, 9s. net.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.
IN THE ARENA.

By BOOTH TARKINGTON, Author of 'Monsieur Beaucaire,' &c.

THE HILL.

By HORACE A. VACHELL, Author of 'Brothers,' 'Pinch of Prosperity,' &c. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by PERCY WADHAM.

[Ready next week.]

RECENT EXCAVATIONS IN THE ROMAN FORUM, 1898-1905.

By (Mrs.) E. BURTON-BROWN. New and Cheaper Edition. Illustrations and Plans. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. net.

THE SWORD OF ISLAM.

By ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E., H.M.'s Indian (Home) Service. With Illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net. [Ready next week.]

NEW AND CHEAP EDITION OF MAINE'S ANCIENT LAW.

Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. [Now ready.]

This is the only complete and copyright Edition of Sir Henry Maine's standard work.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW.

No. 403. APRIL, 1905. 6s.

1. LORD DUFFERIN.
2. The WANDERINGS of ODYSSEUS. By Gilbert Murray.
3. HIPPOCRATE TAINE: Philosopher and Critic. By H. Herbert Dodwell.
4. The CARE of the INSANE.
5. The COLLECTED WORKS of LORD BYRON. By J. Churton Collins.
6. TWO GREAT CHURCHMEN: Bishop Creighton and Canon Liddon.
7. PEARLS and PARASITES. By A. E. Shipley.
8. OUR NEGLECTED MONUMENTS.
9. The EARLY ROMAN EMPERORS. By the President of Trinity.
10. PREFERENCE: the Colonial View.
11. The CONDITION of RUSSIA.
12. WATTS and WHISTLER. By R. E. Fry.
13. The UNEMPLOYED.

NOTE on the SUGAR CONVENTION.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY'S LIST.

THE DEVOTIONAL COMMENTARY.

There is no lack of Commentaries which approach the text of Holy Scripture from the critical side; nor yet of those which, in addition to being critical, are exegetical. But it is difficult for Bible readers to find modern Commentaries dealing with the books of the Bible solely as helps to belief and to right conduct. The Religious Tract Society is now producing a Series of Volumes designed to fill this gap. Every Volume will be primarily and distinctively a Devotional Volume—a book which the Bible reader can take up day by day and find it aid him in applying the words of Holy Scripture to the needs of his own personal character and life. Each will be entirely independent of its fellows.

VOL. I. READY SHORTLY. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s.

THE BISHOP OF DURHAM ON II. TIMOTHY.

Short Devotional Studies on the Dying Letter of St. Paul.

By the Right Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Lord Bishop of Durham, Author of 'Thoughts for the Sundays of the Year,' &c.

VOL. II. READY SHORTLY.

REV. F. B. MEYER ON PHILIPPIANS.

Other additions to the Series now in preparation include Two Volumes on the PSALMS by the Rev. Dr. J. ELDER CUMMING, a Volume of ST. MARK by the Rev. J. D. JONES, of Bournemouth.

A NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.—Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

THE TABERNACLE: its History and Structure.

By the Rev. W. SHAW CALDECOTT.

With Preface by Prof. SAYCE. With Map and 18 Illustrations and Diagrams.

The CHURCH TIMES says:—"It is a brilliant piece of work, and clears up several points about the Tabernacle which were previously very obscure.....It at once overthrows the theory, put forward by the extreme school of Higher Critics, that the details connected with the structure of the Tabernacle were inventions by the post-Exilic Scribe."

The CHIEF RABBI says:—"I can well understand the intense application you have given to the study of this obscure subject."

The GUARDIAN says:—"Lucid illustrations and diagrams accompany the letterpress, and the whole book is marked by that boldness and enthusiasm which should characterize all pioneer work."

The SCOTSMAN says:—"No one can finish his education in the Tabernacle's history and structure without acquainting himself with this new text-book."

NEW EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED AND IN PART REWRITTEN BY SAMUEL G. GREEN, D.D.

THE BIBLE HANDBOOK:

An Introduction to the Study of Holy Scripture.

By the late JOSEPH ANGUS, D.D. 848 pp., 6s. net.

Part I. THE BIBLE AS A BOOK.

Part II. THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE.

Dr. MURRAY, the Warden of St. Augustine's, Canterbury, says:—"The more I look into it the more I value it. On the New Testament especially it seems to me to contain in a concise form all that a student can want to show him what are the points on which the best modern commentators are agreed, and what are the questions that are under discussion. The sobriety of judgment and the width of reading that has gone to the production of this part of the work seem to be equally remarkable."

The BRITISH WEEKLY says:—"This handbook, of more than 800 pages, contains a mass of information which cannot elsewhere be found in so convenient and compact a form."

The TIMES says:—"It is a sound and comprehensive book."

The DAILY NEWS says:—"In its new form it will be a valuable aid to the Biblical student, and to the intelligent layman who wishes to keep abreast of the latest scholarship in the realm of Biblical interpretation."

The GLASGOW HERALD says:—"It is a marvel of cheapness."

JUST PUBLISHED, large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE APOSTLE PETER.

Outline Studies in his Life, Character, and Writings.

By the Rev. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.,

Principal-Elect of Wyldcliffe Hall, Oxford; Vicar of St. Paul's, Portman Square, London.

The GUARDIAN says:—"There is good work in the book, which is likely to be useful both to Sunday-school teachers and to clergy in search of useful material for sermons."

The BRITISH WEEKLY says:—"Mr. Thomas's brief expositions are full of luminous interpretations of St. Peter's life and character."

The RECORD says:—"It is not a dull, lifeless, academic study of the apostle's life and work, but one which is obviously the fruit of a ripened Christian experience, and seeks before all things to apply the teaching of Scripture to the every-day life of the believer."

The EXPOSITORY TIMES says:—"It is a volume of scholarship of original work and insight."

THE ANTI-PAPAL LIBRARY.

A Series of Works dealing with the Principles of Protestantism and the Conflict with Rome.

Each crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

1. ROADS from ROME: a Series of Personal Narratives. Compiled by Rev. C. S. ISAACSON, M.A. With Preface by the BISHOP of DURHAM. 2s. 6d.

2. EVANGELICAL BELIEF: its

Conflict with Rome. By JOHN BROADHURST NICHOLS. Revised. With Preface by Rev. Dr. HORTON. 2s. 6d.

3. The HOMES and HAUNTS of

LUTHER. By Rev. JOHN STOUGHTON, D.D. Revised and Edited by Rev. C. H. IRWIN, M.A. Illustrated. 2s. 6d.

4. ROME in MANY LANDS. A

Survey of the Roman Catholic Church, with an Account of some modern Roman Developments. Compiled and Edited by Rev. C. S. ISAACSON. 2s. 6d.

5. The ADVANCE of ROMANISM.

A Statement and an Appeal. By Rev. JOHN BROADHURST NICHOLS. 2s. 6d.

6. OUR BRIEF AGAINST ROME.

By the Rev. C. S. ISAACSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.

[Just ready.] A succinct, clear, and conclusive manual, showing the distinct tenets of the Roman Catholic Church and why they are wrong.

SECOND EDITION JUST READY.

Demy 8vo, 430 pp., cloth gilt, with 40 Full-Page Illustrations by THEO. CARRERAS, 7s. 6d.

CREATURES OF THE SEA:

Being the Life Stories of some Sea Birds, Beasts, and Fishes.

By FRANK T. BULLEN, F.R.G.S.

The SPECTATOR says:—"Mr. Ruskin would certainly have rejoiced in Mr. Bullen's delightful collection of marine life-histories, informed as they are with knowledge and illumined by the creative imagination of the poet."

The SPEAKER says:—"Mr. Bullen has essayed the new method of telling the life-story of his sea birds, sea beasts, and fishes, with vivid details of their habits and environments, in contradistinction to the method of naturalists of the old school of supplying a weighty volume of dry facts."

The MORNING POST says:—"Mr. Bullen's book has a freshness that holds the reader."

The DAILY NEWS says:—"We scarcely knew how thrilling the life-history of these sea monsters could be till we read these restrained but intensely illuminating descriptions. It is a delightful book."

The CHURCH TIMES says:—"We read every page with interest and enjoyment."

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says:—"It is deeply interesting."

The SCOTSMAN says:—"Mr. Bullen's sketches are written with a powerful and vivid realism."

READY SHORTLY.

Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE LIFE STORY OF A FAMOUS CHINESE SCHOLAR.

JAMES LEGGE, Missionary and Scholar.

By his Daughter, HELEN EDITH LEGGE.

With 4 Portraits (1 in Photogravure) and 12 other Illustrations.

Those who knew Dr. Legge intimately will be surprised at the amount that will be new to them in this biography by his daughter. The untiring devotion of the scholar is unequalled by the ever-abounding enthusiasm of the missionary. Rare courage, that never hesitated in the presence of danger, marked his character all through. Over and over again he risked his life at the call of duty, and flinched at no difficulties which confronted him.

A HELPFUL BOOK FOR REVIVAL CONVERTS.

Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

WORDS OF HELP; On Belief and Conduct.

By the Right Rev. HANDLEY C. G. MOULE, D.D., Bishop of Durham; The Dean of NORWICH; the Revs. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, B.D.; F. S. WEBSTER, M.A.; ALEXANDER McLAREN, D.D.; R. F. HORTON, D.D.; G. S. BARRETT, D.D.; J. G. GREENHOUGH, D.D.; J. D. JONES, B.D.; W. T. A. BARBER, D.D., and other Writers. Edited by the Rev. A. R. BUCKLAND, M.A.

The great spiritual movements which are going on in our country have, it is agreed, to be followed up by careful instruction of new converts and by special endeavours to meet the many questions in regard to belief and conduct which the progress of a spiritual revival invariably brings into prominence. 'Words of Help' contains a collection of papers on just such questions from the pens of a group of our most distinguished spiritual guides.

JUST READY.

Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE ASCENDING CROSS.

The Jubilee Volume of the Bible Lands Mission Aid Society.

By the late Rev. W. A. ESSERY.

It graphically describes the progress of the Cross versus the Crescent in Syria, Palestine, Egypt, Greece, Macedonia, Turkey in Europe, Turkey in Asia, Armenia, Arabia, and Persia.

R.T.S. NEW LISTS (Gratis on application).—The CLASSIFIED LIST of Helpful Books for Preachers, Teachers, and other Christian Workers. The List of Books and Tracts in various Continental and other Languages.

LONDON: 4, BOUVERIE STREET, and 65, ST. PAUL'S CHURCHYARD, E.C.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.
Published Weekly by JOHN O. FRANCIS at Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C., and Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Agents for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Bradburne and Mr. John Menzies, Edinburgh.—Saturday, April 15, 1905.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4043.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W. LECTURE ARRANGEMENTS AFTER EASTER, 1905.

TUESDAYS. Lecture Hour, 5 o'clock.

Prof. L. C. MALL, D.Sc. F.R.S., Fellerian Professor of Physiology, R.I., and Professor of Biology, Leeds University. THREE LECTURES on 'The Study of Extinct Animals,' on TUESDAYS, May 2, 9, 16.

Rev. HENRY G. WOODS, D.D., the Master of the Temple. THREE LECTURES on 'Velasquez': 1. The Young Velasquez; 2. The Court Portrait Painter; 3. The Impressionist. On TUESDAYS, May 23, 30, June 6.

THURSDAYS, Lecture Hour, 5 o'clock.

Prof. Sir JAMES DEWAR, M.A. LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S. M.R.I., Fellerian Professor of Chemistry, R.I. THREE LECTURES on 'Flame,' on THURSDAYS, May 4, 11, 18.

Prof. J. A. FLEMING, M.A. D.Sc. F.R.S. M.R.I. Professor of Electrical Engineering in University College, London. (The Tyndall Lectures.) THREE LECTURES on 'Electromagnetic Waves,' on THURSDAYS, May 25, June 1, 8.

SATURDAYS. Lecture Hour, 3 o'clock.

Prof. MARSHALL WARD, D.Sc. F.R.S. Professor of Botany in the University of Cambridge. TWO LECTURES on 'Moulds and Mouldiness,' on SATURDAYS, May 6, 13.

JAMES GEORGE FRAZER, Esq., D.C.L. LL.D. Litt.D. Fellow of the Kingship in Early Society. On SATURDAYS, May 20, 27.

A. HENRY SAVAGE LANDOR, Esq., M.R.I. TWO LECTURES on 'Exploration in the Philippines,' on SATURDAYS, June 3, 10.

Subscription (to Non-Members) to all Courses of Lectures (extending from Christmas to Midsummer), Two Guineas. Subscription to a Single Course of Lectures, One Guinea, or Half-a-Guinea, according to the length of the Course. Tickets issued daily at the Institution, or sent by post on receipt of Cheque or Post-Office Order.

Members may purchase not less than Three Single Lecture Tickets, available for any Afternoon Lecture, for Half-a-Guinea.

The FRIDAY EVENING MEETINGS will be resumed on MAY 5 at 9 p.m., when Prof. HENRY E. ARMSTRONG will give a Discourse on 'Problems Underlying Nutrition.' Succeeding Discourses will probably be given by Prof. E. FOX NICHOLS (of Columbia University), Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G., Prof. J. W. BRÜHL (of Heidelberg University), Mr. GEORGE HENSCH, Sir WILLIAM H. WHITE, K.C.B., and other Gentlemen. To these Meetings Members and their Friends only are admitted.

Persons desirous of becoming Members are requested to apply to the SECRETARY. When proposed they are immediately admitted to all the Lectures, to the Friday Evening Meetings, and to the Library and Reading Rooms, and their Families are admitted to the Lectures at a Reduced Charge. Payment: First Year, Ten Guineas; afterwards, Five Guineas a Year; or a Composition of Sixty Guineas.

LONDON SHAKESPEARE COMMEMORATION,

1905 (MAY 1-13).—For PROGRAMME, including Performance of a Shakespeare Play, Public Dinner, Lectures, and Conversations, address Miss ELSPETH KEITH, Secretary, London Shakespeare League, 49, Southwold Mansions, Elgin Avenue, W.

LONDON SHAKESPEARE LEAGUE.

The THIRD ANNUAL SHAKESPEARE COMMEMORATION DINNER will be held on SATURDAY, May 6, 1905, at the CRITERION RESTAURANT, Piccadilly, at 8 o'clock, Sir WILLIAM COLLINS, M.D., in the Chair.—For particulars and Dinner Tickets apply Mrs. GOMME, Hon. Sec., 24, Dorset Square, N.W.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 25,000L.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G. K.T.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number 'thirty-six, the men receiving 25L and the Women 20L per annum each, and they include:—The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20L a year each for Six Widows of News-vendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25L, and One Woman, 20L, and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits, but this privilege not having been exercised until 1904, the General Pensions of the Institution have had the full benefit arising from the interest on this investment from 1887 to 1903.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25L per annum for one man, and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20L for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

PICTURES WAREHOUSED in a fine, light, dry

Warehouse.—Apply to THOMAS McLENN, 7, Haymarket, London. Terms moderate.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000L.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbotts Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbots Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 28, Paternoster Row, E.C.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S

SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

MESSRS. CARFAX OPEN their NEW

PREMISES, 24, BURY STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W., with an EXHIBITION of WORKS by Mr. JOHN S. SARGENT, R.A.

The EXHIBITION will CLOSE on APRIL 29. Open Daily, including Saturdays, 10 to 6. Admission One Shilling.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN APRIL 25, 1905.

Students can reside in the College within the Hospital Walls, subject to the Collegiate Regulations.

The Hospital contains a service of 750 Beds. Scholarships and Prizes of the aggregate value of nearly 900L are awarded annually.

Special Classes for the Preliminary Scientific and other London University Examinations, for the F.R.C.S., and for other Higher Examinations.

There is a large, thoroughly well-equipped Cricket Ground.

For further particulars apply, personally or by letter, to Mr. W. DOUGLAS HARMER, M.C. Cantab., Warden of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, E.C.

A Handbook forwarded on application.

ST. MARY'S HOSPITAL MEDICAL SCHOOL, PADDINGTON, W.

The SUMMER SESSION will BEGIN on MAY 1.

The Medical School provides complete Courses of Instruction for the Medical Degrees of the Universities of London, Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham; for the Diplomas of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons; and for the Government Medical Services.

SIX ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS in NATURAL SCIENCE, value 145L to 52L 10s., will be COMPETED for in SEPTEMBER. Students entering in May are eligible.

Handbook of Curriculum on application to the DEAN.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

(University of London).

YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

The EASTER TERM BEGINS on THURSDAY, April 27, 1905.

The College provides instruction for Students preparing for the University of London Degrees in Arts, Science, and Preliminary Medicine; also instruction in subjects of General Education.

There is a Hygiene Department and an Art School.

STUDENTS CAN RESIDE IN THE COLLEGE.

Particulars on application to the PRINCIPAL.

TWO ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS, each one tenable for Three Years at Bedford College for Women, will be offered for competition in JUNE, 1905.

Department for Professional Training in Teaching.

Students are admitted to the Training Course in OCTOBER and JANUARY.

TWO SCHOLARSHIPS, each of the value of 10L, will be AWARDED for the Course of SECONDARY TRAINING beginning in OCTOBER, 1905.

Applications should reach the HEAD of the TRAINING DEPARTMENT not later than JULY 7, 1905.

UNIVERSITY of LONDON.

WILLIAM LINDLEY STUDENTSHIP.—A RESEARCH STUDENTSHIP in PHYSIOLOGY, of the value of 160L for one year, founded in memory of the late William Lindley, and tenable in the Physiological Laboratory of the University, is NOW VACANT. Applications, accompanied by a summary of the career of the applicant, and the names of three Persons to whom reference may be made, will be received by the undersigned on or before MONDAY, May 8 next.

A. W. RUCKER, Principal.

University of London, South Kensington, S.W.

ROYAL HOLLOWAY COLLEGE for WOMEN.

(University of London)

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.—TEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS from 50L to 60L, and several BURSARIES of 30L, tenable for Three Years at the College, will be awarded on the results of an EXAMINATION to be held from JULY 3 to JULY 8, 1905. Names must be entered before JUNE 1. The College prepares Students for London Degrees, and also for Oxford Honour Examinations. Inclusive Fee, 30L a year.—For Forms of Entry and further particulars apply to the SECRETARY, Royal Holloway College, Englefield Green, Surrey.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORIALS in England or abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 24S, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

F O L K E S T O N E.
WOODLANDS PREPARATORY SCHOOL.
Rev. HENRY T. J. COGOIN, M.A. Cantab.

CITY of LONDON SCHOOL.

The Act of Parliament for establishing this School having appointed certain Professors of King's College and University College, London, to select and return to the Corporation of London the Three Candidates best qualified for the Office of FIRST or HEAD MASTER, Gentlemen who intend offering themselves as Candidates are requested to transmit not less than Twelve printed copies of their Testimonials, with the Originals, not later than SATURDAY, May 20, addressed to the SECRETARY, at the School, Victoria Embankment, E.C., where further particulars may be obtained between the hours of 9.30 and 4.

The commencing Salary will be 1,000L a year.

The Professors will meet at the School for the Examination of the Testimonials on SATURDAY, May 27 next.

April 14, 1905.

RHONDDA URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL.

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION.

The EDUCATION COMMITTEE of the RHONDDA URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL invite applications for the Office of DIRECTOR OF EDUCATION. The person appointed will be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of the Office, and to reside within the area of the Council. The Salary will be 400L per annum. Candidates must have had actual experience in similar positions and in practical teaching, as well as in the performance of the several duties set out in the Council's prescribed list.—Applications, marked "Appointment of Director of Education," accompanied by not more than three Testimonials, to be delivered to the undersigned, from whom a list of the duties can be obtained, on or before MONDAY, May 1, 1905. Canvassing, directly or indirectly, is prohibited, and will be a disqualification.

W. P. NICHOLAS, Clerk of the Council.

Public Offices, Pentre, Glam., April 8, 1905.

UNIVERSITY of BIRMINGHAM.

ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the above appointment. Stipend 150L per annum. The duties will commence on OCTOBER 2.

Applications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than SATURDAY, May 20.

Inquires may be addressed either to Prof. MASTERMAN, Queen's College, Birmingham, or to the undersigned.

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

WEST HARTLEPOOL EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

ART MASTER.

ART MASTER WANTED for the SCHOOL of ART, to commence SEPTEMBER 1.

Salary 180L per annum.

Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned.

Applications, stating age, qualifications, and experience, together with three Testimonials, to be sent in before MAY 10 to

J. G. TAYLOR, Secretary.

WARRINGTON MUNICIPAL MUSEUM.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT CURATOR.

The COMMITTEE invites applications from persons having a knowledge of Zoology and Botany, and some experience of Museum Work.

Salary 80L, rising 10L yearly to 120L.—Particulars may be had from the undersigned, to whom applications, stating qualifications and experience, with reference and copies of recent Testimonials, are to be sent not later than MAY 3.

CHARLES MADELEY, Curator.

METROPOLITAN BOROUGH of DEPTFORD.

APPOINTMENT OF SUB-LIBRARIAN.

The COUNCIL of the METROPOLITAN BOROUGH of DEPTFORD invite applications for the appointment of SUB-LIBRARIAN at a Salary of 80L per Annum.

Candidates must have had thorough experience in Public Library Work.

Applications, which must be made up in forms to be obtained from the undersigned, between the hours of 10 and 4 o'clock (Saturdays 10 and 12), should be accompanied by copies of not more than three recent Testimonials, and must be sent to me not later than 4 p.m. on THURSDAY, April 27, 1905, the envelope to be endorsed outside "Application for Sub Librarian."

The person appointed will be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of his office, and will not be allowed to undertake, or be directly or indirectly concerned in any other business than that of the Council.

Canvassing any Member of the Council, either directly or indirectly, will disqualify candidates.

VIVIAN ORCHARD, Town Clerk.

Municipal Offices, 20, Tanner's Hall, Deptford, S.E.

April 14, 1905.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 162, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

REPRODUCTIONS IN MONOCHROME OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART BY THE AUTOTYPE PERMANENT PROCESS.

Amongst the numerous Publications may be mentioned:—

SELECTIONS from

The NATIONAL GALLERY, London.

The WALLACE COLLECTION.

The TATE GALLERY.

The WALKER ART GALLERY, Liverpool.

DRAWINGS by HOLBEIN from the Royal Collection, Windsor Castle.

SELECTED EXAMPLES of SACRED ART from various Collections.

ETCHINGS by REMBRANDT.

DRAWINGS by ALBERT DÜRER.

PICTURES from the LOUVRE, LUXEM-BOURG, PARIS.

Prospectuses of above Issues will be sent free on application.

Full particulars of all the Company's Publications are given in

The AUTOTYPE FINE-ART CATA-LOGUE. Now ready, NEW EDITION, with upwards of 150 Miniature Photographs of Notable Autotypes and 23 Tint-Block Illustrations. For convenience of reference the Publications are Arranged Alphabetically under Artists' Names. Post free, One Shilling.

A Visit of Inspection is invited to
THE AUTOTYPE FINE-ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED, in LONDON or the PROVINCES, by a UNIVERSITY MAN. Has had great experience as Editor and Leader Writer. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.

SECRETARYSHIP or POSITION of TRUST.— ADVERTISER seeks APPOINTMENT as above. Highest references.—EDWARD LITTLE, M.A., 33, Marlborough Avenue, Reading.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH,
REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian.
Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—
Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent
Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience, wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. P. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL
WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci.
Tripos), 52a, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

GOOD OPENING.—An advantageous opportunity offers itself to a GENTLEMAN with Capital and Literary bent to CO-OPERATE with the ADVERTISER in ACQUIRING and EXTENDING an important SERIES of HIGH-CLASS WORKS of undoubted value. About 3,000 desirable. Principals only treated with.—Address Bona Fides, care of Montagu, Milham & Montagu, Solicitors, 5 and 6, Bucklersbury, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., PLAYS, &c., promptly and carefully TYPED. Black-and-White Illustrations. Moderate terms.—Miss GALEN, Elgin Lodge, Chadwell Heath.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptions, COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms (Shorthand or Type-writing). Usual Terms.—
Misses E. B. and I. FARRAN, Denington House, 30, Norfolk Street,
Strand, London.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated
Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE
TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVE-
LOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L.,
7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

SHORTHAND and TYPE-WRITING.—
Authors' MSS., Plays, Sermons, Reports, &c., 9d. per 1,000.
Legal and General Copying. Accuracy and Despatch guaranteed.—
Miss N. E. ROBINSON, 8, Westover Road, Wandsworth Common,
London, S.W.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BUGHES, 34, Paternoster Row.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES
BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED,
And supplied with every requisite.
Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'
The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD
FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Catalogues.

CATALOGUE No. 42.—Drawings—Engravings—
Turner's Liber Studiorum—Lucas's Mezzotints after Constable—
Engravings, Hogarth, Girtin—Etchings, Palmer, Whistler—Japanese
Colour-Prints—Illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence. Wm. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,' by Dr G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NOGATE,
Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

NOW READY, TO BE HAD POST FREE ON APPLICATION.
CATALOGUE 39.—CHINA, JAPAN, and the PHILIPPINE ISLES, from the sixteenth to the Eighteenth Century. 452 Nos.—JACQUES ROSENTHAL, Bookseller and Printseller, 10, Karl Strasse, Munich, Bavaria.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

Chief Offices—SALISBURY SQUARE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telephone No.: 12282 CENTRAL.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

This Society was established in 1862 to supply Leg Instruments, Spinal Supports, Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Artificial Limbs, &c., and every other description of Mechanical Support, to the Poor.

OVER 400 PATIENTS ARE RELIEVED EVERY WEEK.

CONTRIBUTIONS EARNESTLY SOLICITED.

Annual Subscription of £0 10 6 Entitles to Two Recommendations
Life Subscription of £5 5 0 per Annum.

Bankers—Messrs. BARCLAY & Co., Ltd., 54, Lombard Street.

RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

SECOND EDITION, fcap. 8vo, price Fourpence.

NEW TESTAMENT CHRONOLOGY:

The Principal Events Recorded in the New Testament, Arranged under their Probable Respective Dates.

By WILLIAM THYNNE LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.,

Associate of King's College, London; Lay Reader in the Diocese of Rochester.

Author of 'Celestial Motions,' 'Remarkable Comets,' 'Remarkable Eclipses,' 'Astronomy for the Young,' &c.

London: SAMUEL BAGSTER & SONS, LIMITED, 15, Paternoster Row.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED.

THE PENNY CHRONOLOGY:

A Series of Important Dates in the History of the World from the Reign of David to the Present Time.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD
BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 10 contains Manuscripts,
Early Printing, Americana, Seventeenth-Century Literature, &c.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY
PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED.
Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

W. GLAISHER'S
NEW GENERAL CATALOGUE OF REMAINDERS

(Spring, 1905)

IS NOW READY, and can be had on application.

It contains many important BOOKS, offered at a GREAT REDUCTION
IN PRICE by

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Wholesale and Export Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. REOR &
SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W.
BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea
each. Size, 12 in. by 8 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors
and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

MARLBOROUGH. — TO BE SOLD, WITH POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently Timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stabling, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet. — Solicitors, Messrs KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TO BE LET for SOME MONTHS this Spring and Summer, a WELL-FURNISHED COTTAGE, pleasantly situated near Church and Post-office, and containing Three Sitting and Five Bed Rooms, and good Offices.—Apply ESTATE OFFICE, Bunball, Stowmarket, Suffolk.

Sales by Auction.

Books and Manuscripts, including the Property of W. FRASER RAE, Esq., deceased.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, April 27, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, BOOKS and MANUSCRIPTS, including the Property of W. FRASER RAE, Esq., deceased, comprising B. F. Stevens's Facsimiles of American Manuscripts, British Museum Pre-historic, Ethnographical and Christie Collection; other Properties, containing Ackerman's Oxford Westminster Abbey, Foreign Military Gallery, and other Books with Coloured Plates—Publications of the Grolier Club—French Illustrated Books—Works on Costume—Water-Colour Drawings—Historical Works, Extra-Illustrated Books—Illustrated Horse—An interesting Collection of Pamphlets and Tracts, chiefly printed in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries—Plays—Early Poetry—Goldsmith's Traveller and Deserted Village, First Editions—and other Works of an interesting character.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Books, the Property of a well-known Amateur.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 1, at 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, the Property of a well-known AMATEUR (living in the North of England) comprising First, Early, and Rare Editions of the Poets and Dramatists of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries, including Addison, Beaumont and Fletcher, Brathwaite, Sir T. Browne, Burton, Bunyan, Carew, Cartwright, Chapman, Chaucer, Cowley, D'Avenant, Donne, Drayton, Dryden, Fielding, Gay, Goldsmith, Gower, Gray, Hayward, Heywood, Jonson, Lee, Massinger, May, Milton, Prynne, Quarles, Randolph, Rowc, Shadwell, Settle, Shakespeare, Sheridan, Spenser, Thomson, Waller, Walton, &c.; also First Editions of Modern English Classic Authors, including Barham, Browning, Byron, Coleridge, Cowper, Keats, Kipling, Landor, Rogers, Rossetti, Swinburne, Tennyson, Wordsworth, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Collection of Greek Coins, the Property of a well-known Amateur.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 2, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of GREEK COINS, the Property of a well-known AMATEUR, comprising Examples in Gold and Silver of the Ancient Cities and Kings of Italy, Sicily, Northern and Central Greece, Attica, Asia Minor, Egypt, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Illustrated Catalogues may be had.

Photographic Cameras, Lenses, and all Kinds of Accessories, Field Glasses, &c.

FRIDAY, April 28, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., a fine Lot of PHOTOGRAPHIC CAMERAS, LENSES, SHUTTERS, and all kinds of ACCESSORIES, by best Makers—Prisms and other Field Binoculars—Scientific Instruments—Tools—Electrical Instruments and Apparatus—and a large quantity of valuable goods.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Curios.

TUESDAY, May 2, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., CARVED IVORIES—Porcelain—Bronzes from China and Japan—Weapons—Native Curios from South-West German Africa and other parts—Old English China—Pictures—Prints—Ostrich Feathers—Animal Horns, &c.—and the usual Miscellaneous Assortment.

On view day prior 10 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On SATURDAY, April 29, the choice COLLECTION of MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, of the English and Continental Schools, of JOHN GABRIEL, Esq.

On THURSDAY, May 4, and Two Following Days, the important COLLECTION of WORKS of ART of the Fifteenth to the Eighteenth Centuries; OBJECTS of ANTIQUITY; and PICTURES by OLD MASTERS, chiefly of the Italian School, formed by the late EDWARD CHENEY, Esq., of Badger Hall, Shropshire, the Property of FRANCIS CAPEL-CURE, Esq.

On SATURDAY, May 6, highly important PICTURES of the EARLY ENGLISH SCHOOL and PICTURES by OLD MASTERS, comprising several fine Works by George Romney, and Examples of Sir J. Reynolds, P. R. A., T. Gainsborough, R. A., J. Hoppner, R. A., Sir H. Raeburn, R. A., and others.

THE AGE of MARIE ANTOINETTE. A Sketch of the Period of European Revival, which claims among its representatives Goethe, Prudhon, Gainsborough, and Mozart. By CHARLES NEWTON SCOTT. New and Revised Edition.

[Three-and-Sixpence.

London: The Leadenhall Press, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

8vo, cloth, price 3s. net.

THE FISH RIVER BUSH and its FAUNA. By W. O. BLACK, F.R.S. Illustrated.

Young J. Pentland, Edinburgh and London.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA. The best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, GOUT, And INDIGESTION.

And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NOW READY, with Maps and Illustrations. Price 16s. net.

A TREATISE on PLAGUE: Dealing with the Historical, Epidemiological, Clinical, Therapeutic, and Preventive Aspects of the Disease. By W. J. SIMPSON, M.D. Aberd., F.R.C.P. Lond., D.P.H. Camb., Professor of Hygiene, King's College, London; Lecturer on Tropical Hygiene, London School of Tropical Medicine; formerly Health Officer, Calcutta; Medical Adviser to the Government of Cape Colony during the Outbreak of Plague in 1901; Commissioner for the Colonial Office to Inquire into the Causes of the Continuance of the Plague in Hong-Kong. Royal 8vo, 16s. net.

LUARD MEMORIAL SERIES III. GRACE BOOK B, PART II., containing the Accounts of the Proctors of the University of Cambridge, 1511–1544. Edited for the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, with Introduction, by MARY BATESON, Fellow of Newnham College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 21s. net.

The EXISTENTIAL IMPORT of CATEGORICAL PREDICATION. Studies in Logic. By A. WOLF, M.A. Lond., B.A. Camb., Fellow of University College, London; Lecturer in Philosophy at the University of London. Crown 8vo, 4s. net.

M. TVLLI CICERONIS TVSCVLANARVM DISPTATIONVM LIBRI QVINQVE. A Revised Text, with Introduction and Commentary and a Collation of numerous MSS. By THOMAS WILSON DOUGAN, M.A., formerly Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Professor of Latin in Queen's College, Belfast, Fellow of the Royal University of Ireland. Vol. I. containing Books I. and II. Demy 8vo, 10s. net.

THUCYDIDES. Book VI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by A. W. SPRATT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. Catharine's College, Cambridge. Extra fcap. 8vo, 6s. [Pitt Press Series.]

HARVARD LECTURES on the REVIVAL of LEARNING. By JOHN EDWIN SANDYS, Litt.D., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College and Public Orator in the University of Cambridge, Hon. Litt.D. Dublin. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.]

The PRESERVATION of ANTIQUITIES: a Handbook for Curators. Translated, by permission of the Authorities of the Royal Museums, from the German of Dr. FRIEDRICH RATHGEN, Director of the Laboratory of the Royal Museums, Berlin, by GEORGE A. AUDEN, M.A. M.D. Cantab., and HAROLD A. AUDEN, M.Sc. Vict. D.Sc. Tübingen. Crown 8vo. [Nearly ready.]

KUMMER'S QUARTIC SURFACE. By R. W. T. HUDSON, M.A. D.Sc., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Lecturer in Mathematics at the University of Liverpool. [Nearly ready.]

FACSIMILES OF FIFTEENTH-CENTURY BOOKS.

A Series of 12 Photogravure Facsimiles of Rare Fifteenth-Century Books printed in England and now in the University Library, Cambridge. A Prospectus and Specimen Page will be sent on application.

THE FIRST TWO VOLUMES, NOW READY, ARE:—

GEOFFREY CHAUCER'S ANELIDA and ARCITE, from the unique Copy of the Westminster Edition of William Caxton (1477–8), 10s. net.

AUGUSTINI DACTI SCRIBE SUPER TULLIANIS ELOGANCIJS & VERBIS EXOTICIS IN SUA FACUNDISSIMA RETHORICA INCIPIT PERORNATE LIBELLUS, from the unique Copy printed at St. Albans (about 1479–80) by "The Schoolmaster Printer." 15s. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE.—New Volume.

THOMAS DEKKER.—The SEVEN DEADLY SINNES of LONDON. Printed in small quarto, upon Hand-Made Paper, from a new type designed exclusively for the University Press. This Edition is limited to 225 Copies for sale in England and America. Bound in full velvet calf, at 31s. 6d. net; and in paper boards, at 21s. net. A Prospectus, with Specimen Pages, will be sent on application.

TEXTS AND STUDIES: Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature.

Edited by the Very Rev. J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, D.D., Dean of Westminster.

VOL. VII. No. 4.—A STUDY of AMBROSIASTER. By A. SOUTER, B.A., Yates Professor of New Testament Greek and Exegesis, Mansfield College, Oxford; formerly Scholar of Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge; late Lecturer in Latin and Lecturer in Palaeography, University of Aberdeen. Demy 8vo, paper covers, 7s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE HISTORICAL SERIES.

General Editor—G. W. PROTHERO, Litt.D.

NOW READY, THIRD IMPRESSION, containing an Additional Chapter, 'Latest Developments.'

A HISTORY of the COLONIZATION of AFRICA by ALIEN RACES. By Sir HARRY H. JOHNSTON, K.C.B. With 8 Maps by the AUTHOR and J. G. BARTHOLOMEW. Crown 8vo, 6s.

London: Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane. C. F. CLAY, Manager.

NOW READY.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

THE

NINTH SERIES

GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by

JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office,
Bream's Buildings, E.C.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

CELESTIAL MOTIONS:

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES:

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

TWELFTH EDITION JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS:

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, containing an account of the Flag, with Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

ORIGINES ISLANDICÆ. A Collection of the more important Sagas and other Native Writings relating to the Settlement and Early History of Iceland. Edited and Translated by GUDBRAND VIGFUSSON and F. YORK POWELL. 2 vols. 8vo, cloth, 2l. 2s. net.

The DREAM of the ROOD. An Old English Poem, attributed to Cynewulf. Edited by Albert S. COOK, Ph.D. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

SPECIMENS of the ELIZABETHAN DRAMA, from Lyly to Shirley, A.D. 1580–A.D. 1642. With Introductions and Notes by W. H. WILLIAMS, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

CONCORDANCE to the ITALIAN PROSE WORKS and CANZONIERE of DANTE. Prepared by Members of the Dante Society, Cambridge, Massachusetts, and Edited by E. S. SHELDON and A. C. WHITE. 8vo, cloth. Subscription price, 1l. 8s. net. On publication the price will be raised to 1l. 16s. net. [Immediately.]

CÁIN ADAMNÁIN. An Old-Irish Treatise on the Law of Adamnan. Edited and Translated by KUNO MEYER, Ph.D. ("Anecdota Oxoniensia," Mediaeval and Modern Series, Part XII.) Crown 4to, paper covers, 5s.

The VETUS CLUNIACENSIS of POGGIO. Being a Contribution to the Textual Criticism of Cicero Pro Sex. Roscio, Pro Cluentio, Pro Murena, Pro Caelio, and Pro Milone. By A. C. CLARK, M.A. ("Anecdota Oxoniensia," Classical Series, Part X.) With Two Facsimiles. Crown 4to, paper covers, 8s. 6d.

ARISTOTLE'S POLITICS. Translated by Benjamin Jowett. New Edition, with Introduction, Analysis, and Index by H. W. C. DAVIS, M.A. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

The WORKS of LUCIAN of SAMOSATA. Translated by H. W. Fowler and F. G. Fowler. 4 vols. uniform with the above, 3s. 6d. net each.

CANTONESE LOVE SONGS. In 2 vols. Vol. I. Chinese Text, with a Glossary. Vol. II. Translation, with Introduction and Notes by CECIL CLEMENTI, M.A. Imperial 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net per volume.

The COPTIC VERSION of the NEW TESTAMENT, in the Northern Dialect, otherwise called Memphitic and Bohairic. With Introduction, Critical Apparatus, and Literal English Translation. Vols. III. and IV. (completing the Work). 8vo, cloth, 2l. 2s. net.

The NEW TESTAMENT in the APOSTOLIC FATHERS. By a Committee of the Oxford Society of Historical Theology. 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

The CHURCH'S TASK UNDER the ROMAN EMPIRE. By the Rev. C. Bigg, D.D. 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.
The subjects dealt with include Education, Religion, and Moral and Social Conditions.

A CRITICISM of SYSTEMS of HEBREW METRE. An Elementary Treatise. By William H. COBB. 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

The JOURNAL of THEOLOGICAL STUDIES. Published Quarterly, 3s. 6d. net. Annual Subscription, post free, 12s. net.

Chief Contents of the APRIL Number:—The LAUSIAC HISTORY of PALLADIUS. By C. H. Turner.—The GOSPEL according to the HEBREWS. By the Very Rev. Mgr. Barnes.—DOCUMENTS: CODEX TAURINENSIS (Y). By the Rev. W. O. E. Oesterley, B.D.—NOTES and STUDIES.—REVIEWS.—CHRONICLE.—RECENT PERIODICALS RELATING to THEOLOGICAL STUDIES.

The MASAI: their Language and Folk-lore. By A. C. Hollis. With Introduction by Sir Charles ELIOT. Many Illustrations and a Map. 8vo, cloth, 14s. net.

SELECT DOCUMENTS ILLUSTRATIVE of the HISTORY of the FRENCH REVOLUTION. The Constituent Assembly. Edited by L. G. WICKHAM LEGG, M.A. 2 vols. crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. net.

CASES ILLUSTRATING the PRINCIPLES of the LAW of TORTS. By F. R. Y. Radcliffe, K.C., and J. C. MILES. 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

The HERBERT SPENCER LECTURE delivered at Oxford on March 9, 1905, by Frederic HARRISON, M.A. 8vo, paper covers, 2s. net.

ANNALS of BOTANY. Edited by Isaac Bayley Balfour, M.A. M.D. F.R.S., D. H. Scott, M.A. Ph.D. F.R.S., W. G. FARLOW, M.D., assisted by other Botanists. Vol. XIX. No. LXXIV. royal 8vo, paper covers, pp. 200, with 8 Plates and 5 Figures in the Text, 14s.

Chief Contents.—The PROTEASES of PLANTS. III. By S. H. Vines.—NUCLEAR DIVISION in the POLLEN MOTHER-CELLS of LILIUM CANADENSE. By C. E. Allen.—ON the ANATOMY of ACHANGIOPTERIS HENRYI and other MARATTIACEAE. By D. T. Gwynne-Vaughan.—ON TWO NEW SPECIMENS of SPENCERITES INSIGNS. By Miss E. M. Berridge.—OPTIMA and LIMITING FACTORS. By F. F. Blackman.—The LOCALIZATION of the INDIGO-PRODUCING SUBSTANCE in INDIGO-YIELDING PLANTS. By H. M. Leake.—GEOTROPIC RESPONSE at VARIOUS ANGLES of INCLINATION. By F. C. Newcombe.

ALSO PUBLISHED BY HENRY FROWDE.

LECTURES on the HISTORIANS of BOHEMIA. By the Count Lützow. The Ilchester Lectures for 1901. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s. net.

Uniform with the above.

LECTURES on SLAVONIC LAW. The Ilchester Lectures for 1900. By Feodor Sigel. 5s. net.

London: HENRY FROWDE, Oxford University Press Warehouse, Amen Corner, E.C.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

ILLUSTRATED POCKET CLASSICS.
NEW VOLUME.

JOHN INGLESANT.

By J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net. [Tuesday.]

VOL. V. NOW READY.

DIARY AND LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I., 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II., 1781-86. Vol. III., August, 1784, to June, 1788. Vol. IV., July, 1788, to July, 1791. Vol. V., July, 1791, to April, 1802. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. FROM the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

Previously Published.

Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

The DAILY NEWS in reviewing Vol. III.—“Mr. Paul's history is one of the most welcome contributions to the story of modern times. The interest deepens as the period more nearly approaches our own. The subsequent volumes will be awaited with an increasing interest by those in any degree concerned with the history of their own age.”

1905 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE

STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World for the Year 1905. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN

TRAGEDY:

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.

NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

PRINCIPLES & METHODS OF INDUSTRIAL PEACE.

By A. C. PIGOU, M.A. F.S.S., Fellow of the Royal Economic Society. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

THE LOGIC OF HUMAN CHARACTER.

By CHARLES J. WHITBY, B.A. M.D. Cantab. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

ACADEMY.—“This book of Dr. Whitby's is very much out of the common.....He is indeed a deep and discerning student of character. We venture to say he displays more real insight into human character in any one of his chapters than your boasted novelist in all his output.....We have read this volume through twice, partly for the mere aesthetic pleasure afforded by the author's English, partly for its intellectual interest, and partly because of the pleasant taste it leaves in the mouth.”

MAURICE HEWLETT'S NEW NOVEL. FOND ADVENTURES.

Tales of the Youth of the World.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

SECOND IMPRESSION NEARLY READY.

L H A S A.

By PERCEVAL LANDON,
Special Correspondent of the Times. With an Introduction by Col. Sir FRANCIS YOUNG-HUSBAND, K.C.I.E. In 2 vols. royal 8vo, beautifully illustrated, 2l. 2s. net.

An Illustrated Prospectus, with Extracts from Reviews, sent free on application.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY IN THE PRESENT WAR.

By Capt. N. KLADO,
Of the Imperial Russian Navy.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.

In 1 vol. 6s.

M A R I A N S A X.

By Madame ALBANESI,
Author of ‘Capricious Caroline,’ ‘Susannah and One Elder,’ &c.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME OF THE KING.

Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War.

By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

“Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself.”—Times.
“Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps.”—Fall Mall Gazette.

NOW IN GREAT DEMAND.

In 1 vol. medium 8vo, with over 250 Illustrations, 18s. net.

ANTARCTICA.

Two Years amongst the Ice of the South Pole.

By Dr. OTTO NORDENSKJOLD.

“The author has as good a story to tell as any polar explorer since Nansen, and he has told it with spirit and enthusiasm.”—Times.

MR. DOWNEY'S BOOK IS THE SUCCESS OF THE SEASON.

In 1 vol. large crown 8vo, with 16 Portrait Sketches, 6s. net.

TWENTY YEARS AGO.

A Book of Anecdote.

By EDMUND DOWNEY,
Author of ‘Through Green Glasses.’

“The anecdotes are all fresh goods, and in the humour of them there is an unmistakable taste of reality which adds immensely to the flavour.”—St. James's Gazette.
“Mr. Downey has an ample collection of good stories, and knows how to tell them well.”—World.

A BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST ON CHILD LIFE AND LABOUR IN OUR BIG CITIES.

The CHILD SLAVES of BRITAIN.

By ROBERT SHERRARD. Author of ‘The White Slaves of England,’ &c. In 1 vol. 6s.

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, illustrated covers.

HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M. CROKER.

The MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO.

THE CREED OF THE CHRISTIAN.

By the Right Rev. CHARLES GORE, D.D., Bishop of Birmingham. 8vo, paper, 6d. net;
also cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

In consequence of several requests for a Cheap Edition of this Popular Work, the Publishers have decided to issue the above, but to limit the Edition to 50,000 Copies.

THE OLD TESTAMENT AND ITS MESSAGES.

By the Rev. EDGAR C. F. GIBSON, D.D.,
Bishop Designate of Gloucester. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition.]

“Dr. Gibson has studied the Old Testament, and his thoughts are new as well as true. If the publishers will give us more of this we shall be thankful.”—Expository Times.

WHY CHRISTIANITY IS REASONABLE.

By the Rev. WALTER J. CAREY, M.A. With Introduction by Canon SCOTT HOLLAND.
Cloth, 1s. net; paper, 6d. net.

[Second Edition.]

“The frank output of a living man of his own vital creed.”—Guardian.

“Very valuable.”—School Guardian.

WAS JESUS CHRIST DIVINE?

An Inquiry into the Credibility of the Incarnation. By the Rev. J. HOWARD B. MASTERMAN, M.A., Professor of History in the University of Birmingham. Cloth, 1s. 3d. net; paper, 9d. net.

[Second Edition.]

“One of the best answers.”—Expository Times.

“A masterly handling of the subject..... eminently lucid and clear.”

Western Morning News.

NEARLY READY.

THE STORY OF THE BEGINNING.

Genesis in the Light of Recent Research. By Mrs. FREDERIC GREEN. With Introduction by the Right Rev. H. E. RYLE, D.D., Bishop of Winchester. Cloth, 1s. 3d. net; paper, 9d. net.

This will be found a most valuable help to parents and teachers at the present time.

THIRD EDITION.

THE LAW OF CHURCHWARDENS

And Sidesmen in the Twentieth Century.

By P. V. SMITH, LL.D.,
Barrister-at-Law,

Chancellor of the Diocese of Manchester.

Cloth boards, 2s. net (postage 4d. extra).

“Altogether an admirable production.”

Guardian.

“Excellent; an indispensable possession for all who are called to the office of churchwarden.”
Church Times.

London:

WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & CO., LIMITED,
3, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.; and 44, Victoria Street, S.W.

SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| MR. SYMONS'S STUDIES IN PROSE AND VERSE ...   | PAGE 487 |
| THE ROMANCE OF SAVOY ...  | 488      |
| IN UNKNOWN AFRICA ...   | 489      |
| A THIRTEENTH-CENTURY ARCHIEPISCOPAL REGISTER ...  | 490      |
| WILLOBIE HIS AVISA ...  | 491      |
| NEW NOVELS ('Mid the Thick Arrows; Patricia, a Mother; Monarch, the Big Bear of Tallac; The White Causeway; The Master Mummer; A Spoiler of Men; Strange Partners; Wanted a Cook')  | 492-493  |
| BOOKS ON BALZAC ...   | 493      |
| SHORT STORIES ...   | 493      |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Italian Letters of a Diplomat's Wife; Studies in Colonial Nationalism; Slavery; Bird Life and Bird Lore; L'Eden; Reprints; Change for a Halfpenny) ...   | 494-496  |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ...   | 496      |
| HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION; THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT AT SOMERSET HOUSE; THE FIRST USE OF ARABIC AND SYRIAC TYPE IN ENGLAND; SHELLEY'S STANZA-NUMBERING IN THE 'ODE TO NAPLES'; SCOTT'S 'BONNETS OF BONNIE DUNDEE'; WORDSWORTH SOURCES; SALE ... | 496-500  |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ...   | 500      |
| SCIENCE—GREAT ZIMBABWE; REINACH'S CULTS, MYTHS, ET RELIGIONS; A GARDENER'S YEAR; A VERTEBRATE FAUNA OF THE NORTH-WEST HIGHLANDS; GEOLOGICAL LITERATURE; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ...   | 501-505  |
| FINE ARTS—RUSKIN'S COMPLETE WORKS; DRAWINGS FROM OLD MASTERS AT OXFORD; ROYAL GLOVES AND SHOES; SHRINES OF BRITISH SAINTS; MEDALS AND COINS; ARCHEOLOGICAL NOTES; SALE; GOSSIP ...  | 506-509  |
| MUSIC—GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ...  | 509      |
| DRAMA—GOSSIP ...  | 509      |
| MISCELLANEA—THE STATUES IN 'EREWON' ...   | 510      |

LITERATURE

Studies in Prose and Verse. By Arthur Symons. (Dent & Co.)

MR. ARTHUR SYMONS is one of the few critics who use literature as a sieve for the sifting of their own temperament. "I am interested only in first principles," he says, but he quickly qualifies the statement by explaining that, "to study first principles, one must wait for them till they are made flesh." He himself is the first of his "first principles," and it is the selective soul in his own flesh which chooses the things that enable it to express its sensations and moods and postures. When the choice is sure the style flows like a whispered confession; when it is uncertain the style stammers in a wavering pain. It is not easy to define the faint charm of this prose. It steals upon the senses like a fine odour, fading while it invades, invading while it fades; or it might be compared to the shadowy image of moving clouds in a quiet lake, for it is half a shadow and half an image of the vague emotions marching through the mind. In spite of all that has been written about style, it remains a mystery that defies exact analysis. When we have eliminated all the characteristics due to artifice, the verbal tricks and affectations, the conscious reiterations of phrase, there is still left an undiscovered element which eludes the coarser tests.

What is it? We might define it as personality overheard. For in the act of expression the mind unconsciously colours the vehicle of words, just as in the act of speaking the mind unconsciously colours the voice. How this colouring is transferred to the verbal rhythm we cannot tell, but we feel that it resides in the rhythm and not in the mechanical choice of words, or in the deliberate weaving of the pattern in the web of language. This secret rhythm cannot be taught. It cannot be analyzed. It is the product of a spiritual process. Behind the conscious brain sits a shaping force which makes the words move to a soundless measure, to a tune inaudible. If we could identify that central force in the citadel of egoism we could snare the very secret of life itself, for it is life, the same life that reveals itself in the dyes of sunset and moonrise, in the conscious grace of leaves and flowers, in the cry of the wind, in the grey rods of rain, and in all the shifting shows of the universe.

These essays deal with many names and themes — Balzac, Mérimée, Gautier, De Quincey, Hawthorne, Pater, Stevenson, John Addington Symonds, William Morris, Guy de Maupassant, Daudet, Hubert Crackanthorpe, Robert Buchanan, Oscar Wilde, Gabriele d'Annunzio, George Meredith, Zola, Tolstoy, and Gorki. They are full of fine and subtle thought and freshly delicate appreciation. They reveal a peculiar mastery of shades and vague tones. But it is not chiefly of their critical value that we desire to speak, for we are more keenly fascinated by the aroma of idiosyncrasy which they exhale. It is not so very important, after all, whether one agrees or disagrees with another man's attitude towards another man. Criticism might be defined, indeed, as the art of attitudes, and it is not desirable to establish a rigid uniformity in the way in which we endure and enjoy the blows of genius. Each man ought to possess his own Shakespeare in his own breast. We may be sure that the Shakespeare of Shakespeare was different from the Shakespeare of Mr. Sidney Lee or of Prof. Bradley. The man of genius is all things to all men, not one thing to all or one, and not all things to one or all.

It is possible to care less for the formulation of abstract accuracies than for the disclosures of imaginative experience. These disclosures enable us to surprise the privacies of poverty as well as the privacies of wealth, and we relish Mr. Symons's failure in the apprehension of Mr. Stephen Phillips as keenly as his success in the apprehension of Mr. Yeats. He sees nothing good in the one and nothing bad in the other, yet we feel that an accident of adjustment might have led him to see nothing bad in the one and nothing good in the other. For the most judicious critic is a prey to the whims of circumstance and the caprice of environment. There are moods in which a dandelion fills us with ecstasy, just as there are moods in which a violet pierces us with disgust. The mystery of this inner persuasion eludes our brain. A touch, and we are captured by a distaste or an obsession; a breath, and we are overwhelmed by an idolatry. Then our pride turns our momentary mood into a judgment, and the vice of consistency resists the modifying recoil. Fluidity of impression is hard to come by, and most of us fall into a polished gelidity of opinion. We are deluded by a false unity, forgetting that art is not science, and poetry is more fluctuant than algebra, that each soul is a multi-personal complexity, and that the thought of yesterday is a caricature of the thought of to-day. In his study of Oscar Wilde Mr. Symons points out subtly that Wilde

"made for himself many souls, souls of intricate pattern and elaborate colour, webbed into infinite tiny cells, each the home of a strange perfume, perhaps a poison. Every soul had its own secret, and was secluded from the soul which had gone before it or was to come after it. And this showman of souls was not always aware that he was juggling with real things, for to him they were no more than the coloured glass balls which the juggler keeps in the air, catching them one after another."

Is not this the tragedy of every artist who tries to transmute life into visible or audible form? Is it not the tragedy of the critical artist who endeavours to formulate those impressions which are the adventures of the soul among the formulated impressions of other artists? As the soul suffers its perpetual sea-change into something rich and strange, the old impressions fade into anachronisms, and the spiritual alchemy of the new experience derides the old. Mr. Symons does homage to this fundamental truth by carefully dating each of these essays, thereby hinting that the attitude of 1900 is not necessarily the attitude of 1905, and that the soul is but a varying phase of ephemeral feeling.

He is essentially modern in his passion for the outline of sensation, and in his revolt against the outline of action. He hates abstract ideas, and he winces at the touch of exteriority. He realizes that the kingdom of life is within us, and he turns away from the meaningless violence of events. The battle of Mukden is to the soul that gazes on itself an irrelevant noise less significant than the sound of far thunder, and this spiritual isolation explains the ferocity of Mr. Symons's attack on newspapers. The newspaper, he fiercely says, is "an open sewer, running down each side of the street, and displaying the foulness of every day, day by day, morning and evening. Everything that, having once happened, has ceased to exist, the newspaper sets before you, beating the bones of the buried without pity, without shame, without understanding."

Mr. Symons is stung by the energy of humanity. He does not see the Gargantuan humour of it all. He does not perceive that the comedy of the artist is as humorous as that of the man of action, and that it is as fine a joke to spend your life looking into your soul as it is to spend it in looking out of it at the harlequinade of other souls. He does not suspect the jest hidden in a man of genius like Gabriele d'Annunzio, although he sees the jest brandished publicly by Mr. Andrew Carnegie. But this is the very antinomy of humour, and he would be a rash man who should decide which is the more gorgeous fool — the man who is bemused by the shadows of the physical world outside us, or the man who is bemused by the shadows of the spiritual world within us. There is a harmony in these mysteries, and probably it is best achieved by a delicate compromise between the kingdom that is within and the kingdom that is without. The grand tragedy of life is that we die before we can arrive at the perfect state of equilibrium. Mr. Symons, like most of our modern decadents, is an imaginative voluptuary. For him nothing exists save in the mind. His criticism is, accordingly, sensitive rather than sweeping, delicate rather than robust.

He is the antithesis of Macaulay, being most felicitous in praise and least felicitous in blame. His voice loses its feminine sweetness when he scolds. He is acutely miserable in the presence of such writers as Robert Buchanan and Mr. Stephen Phillips. His misery is nervously imaginative rather than logical; it is like the misery of a man who hates cats. His temperament is that of the intellectual gourmet whose palate craves for the exotic and the bizarre. He is not fascinated by the great full-blooded giants of literature. His vivid little portrait of Ernest Dowson aches with life's keen pain—the sting of hot tears dropping on human flesh; but as a rule he writes with a cold hand, and yet his coldness is not reticence. It is coldness of blood rather than coldness of manner, a chilly temperament dominating an eager brain. By a whim of paradox, this cold temperament is full of curiosity about life, and the best of these essays is the penetrating study of Balzac. It is in the novels of Balzac that he feels "the shock of life." Here is his admirable plea for a return to Balzac's method:—

"Since Stendhal, novelists have persuaded themselves that the primary passions are a little common, or noisy, or a little heavy to handle, and they have concerned themselves with passions tempered by reflection, and the sensations of elaborate brains. It was Stendhal who substituted the brain for the heart as the battle-place of the novel—not the brain as Balzac conceived it, a motive-force of action, the mainspring of passion, the force by which a nature directs its accumulated energy, but a sterile sort of brain, set at a great distance from the heart, whose rhythm is too faint to disturb it."

This passage is significant, for it shows that even our subtlest symbolist is "half sick of shadows."

The Romance of Savoy: Victor Amadeus II. and his Stuart Bride. By the Marchesa Vitelleschi. 2 vols. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE connexion of the Stewarts with the house of Savoy was no doubt the Marchesa Vitelleschi's main inducement to put this book before the British public. But apart from dynastic considerations, the reign of Victor Amadeus II., Duke of Savoy and first King of Sardinia, is interesting to historical students for two reasons. If it was Victor Amadeus's son who really began the policy of eating up Italy like an artichoke, it was his father whose astute diplomacy and military and administrative ability made this possible by freeing Savoy from the clutches of France. And although the present royal family of Italy is descended from a younger branch, the house of Savoy is the trunk from which it springs. Had it not been for the successful resistance of Victor Amadeus II. to the tyranny of Louis XIV., and the tenacity with which his successors of the elder branch clung to the position which he had won, Sardinia, in the persons of Charles Albert and Victor Emmanuel II., would not have been able to claim the primacy of Italy when the time came for union and headship. The Marchesa has had access to both the French and Sardinian archives, and enjoyed the valuable co-operation of the late Monsignore Lanza, Court chaplain to the King of Italy; and she has not wanted encouragement and assistance in the highest quarters. The result is that her book as a dynastic record and a picture of Court life is all that could be wished, though in some other respects it may be found defective.

The tone throughout is decidedly legitimist, and some of the general historical statements are somewhat loose. In the first chapter, which is chiefly concerned with Henrietta Anne, Duchess of Orleans, who was the mother of Victor Amadeus's first wife, the traditional view as to her death is repeated in face of its recent discrediting by scientific evidence. The death of Henrietta's elder daughter, Marie Louise, wife of Charles II. of Spain, is also, with even less foundation, confidently attributed to poison.

We do not quite understand why the secret Treaty of Dover (which was certainly not in its entirety "signed by the English ministers") should be said to have "detracted considerably from the prestige" of Louis XIV., whatever may have been the case with regard to Charles II. It is surely stretching a point to charge Cromwell with having "fomented" the massacre of the Waldenses "in order to maintain his influence abroad," though he doubtless took advantage of the persecution to attempt that general union of Protestants the design of which Mazarin is rightly said to have foiled. The "days of the Guelphs and Ghibellines" seems an expression lacking in precision if intended to indicate an epoch in history; and who was "Sigismund, Emperor of Luxemburg"? Mr. Loftie, apparently, is the authority for the statement that the old Savoy Palace was destroyed by the rebels under Wat Tyler to show their vindictive sentiments towards the Duke of Lancaster for the protection he had afforded Wycliffe's followers from the rabble. Most of these things lie however, outside the main purview of the book, wherein the facts appear to be substantially accurate.

Certain peculiarities of diction betray deficient knowledge of English on the part of the author or the translator, if it has been found necessary to call in the latter. Should the latter be the case, no inkling of the fact is afforded the reader in the preface. The occurrence of some words seems to point to a translator's hand. But, again, we have such expressions as "expose" in the sense of state, set forth; "voyage" for a journey by land; and "conclusions for peace," which look as though they came from the pen of a foreigner.

Some of the phrasing would be explicable on either hypothesis, such as the frequent use of the word "combine," "combined," in a way in which no English writer ever employs it; "concerted to" for agreed to; "inseparable for," "suffer.....at," "tenure of conditions," "acquiescenceon," "ignorant from," "attributed to be," and the curious sentence: "Never let a chance slip to deteriorate from the most sincere motives of others." If these slips, and many others we have noted, should be due to shortcomings in the process of translation, we cannot compliment the publishers on the choice they have made; but on the alternative hypothesis they are easily explicable, and more readily overlooked.

Victor Amadeus II. was doubtless an able ruler, but we do not find him attractive as a man. The following appreciation of his character, which is accepted by the author as "accurate in the abstract," is scarcely flattering:—

"He was a prince with many good and an infinite number of bad qualities; he had a vivid imagination, wonderful memory, great facility for expressing his views, and serious application for [sic] affairs; he was led by ambition and a love of fame, to which he was assisted by unusual dexterity in hiding his designs. He had but small sense of justice, or enlarged views on things; he possessed greater brilliancy than solidity, a bad heart, and a strong feeling of hatred and ingratitude towards every one; his avarice was extended even to his mistresses; he had but little knowledge or sense of religion; his decisions were guided more by ostentation than unbiassed sincerity, and his judgment was perverted through his obstinacy; above all, he had a great love of his own opinions and contempt for those of others."

He made no scruple of sacrificing his subjects, the poor Waldenses, to the policy of the French king, which he was ready enough to combat in his personal interests; and when his elder son died he held the doctors responsible, charging them with neglect because the recovery predicted by the astrologers did not result from their efforts. And although his treatment by his son appears unnecessarily harsh, one cannot deny that his attempts to recover the power which he had himself voluntarily abdicated necessarily demanded firm measures. It is noteworthy that abdication developed into a kind of tradition with the Sardinian dynasty; three cases have occurred since that of Victor Amadeus II. All of them, however, unlike his, have been felicitous; the last was that of the father of Victor Emmanuel, the first King of Italy.

The picture of Victor Amadeus II. as a soldier may be quoted as a fair example of the Marchesa's style:—

"His appearance alone formed a striking picture as, seated on horseback, he surveyed the army under his command. An enormous wig fell in curls from under a three-cornered hat on to his shoulders; nothing escaped his restless blue eyes, that took note of all that was going on in the different quarters of the attack; his face bore traces of his recent illness, and his nose was slightly marked with the ineffaceable signs of smallpox; but there was no symptom of any relaxation of his wonderful vitality. Each time that the cannon boomed those near him overheard grumbling imprecations escape his lips in broken sentences against France; and as he muttered 'So France considers me her slave'—'She prohibited my journey to Venice'—'I am the hatred of Louvois,' he emphasized his grievances by striking the saddle with his fist. All the bitterness of the past years that, like a festering wound, had been eating into his soul found relief in these soliloquies."

An excellent little thumbnail sketch of Prince Eugene, his cousin and colleague, follows this.

In her chapters 'In the Waldensian Valley' (vol. i.) and 'The King and Queen of Sicily' (vol. ii.) the Marchesa gives evidence of some descriptive power. She portrays the celebrations held on the anniversary of Charles Albert's emancipation of the Waldenses in 1848, as follows:—

"On that day the churches are filled to overflowing, the boys from the different schools march to the service headed by the masters and followed by their relations; and at the close of the pastor's address Psalms are sung and poetry declaimed, after which both masters and scholars then perambulate the village streets with fifes and drums; to each boy is given a pamphlet recording the glorious deeds of his forefathers. As evening falls over the valley, bonfires burn on every hill, after which the more sedate of the villagers scatter in happy groups bound for their homes, and the stillness of the afterglow is only broken by the voices of peasants chanting evening hymns as they wind their way up the narrow tracks, past foaming waterfalls and placid streams, to their cottage doors."

We wish we could find space for a passage relating to the above-mentioned "glorious deeds" (pp. 235-6), or for a selection from the author's account of the festivities which accompanied the proclamation of the Duke of Savoy's short-lived reign as King of Sicily. Another passage to which we may invite the attention of the curious reader is that in the first volume relating to the Sindone or holy shroud, last shown in public during the Turin Exhibition of 1898. We are told that it was mended for that occasion by the sister of King Humbert, who worked with gold needles for two hours in presence of four bishops.

Amongst the twenty-six full-page illustrations, the most notable are those representing the adoration of the shroud by the Duke and Duchess of Savoy, and the features of the Marchesa di Spigno, the latter reproduced for the first time from a portrait in the monastery of Santa Maria, Pinerolo. The Marchesa was the second wife and evil genius of Victor Amadeus. A fairly satisfactory index is annexed to the book.

In Unknown Africa. By Major P. H. G. Powell-Cotton. (Hurst & Blackett.)

MAJOR POWELL-COTTON's book is chiefly concerned with sport—not, however, in the sense of that indiscriminate killing which makes some of the older travel-books such monotonous records of butchery. His object was to collect specimens for scientific purposes, and he carefully refrained from unnecessary slaughter, though forced to shoot suicidally-minded rhinoceroses with a frequency which quite bears out the statements of previous travellers as to the abundance of those animals in the Kenya country. He also took a great deal of trouble in securing photographs of live animals, with very fair results. We may mention more especially the Uganda kob on p. 253 and the waterbuck on p. 255. The Grant's gazelle on p. 435 would have made a very pleasing picture had it been larger—it is only an eighth-plate—and a little more clearly defined. But the best of the book, considered from this point of view, is the giraffe. The author was fortunate enough to secure not only two fine specimens (now mounted at South Kensington) of the five-horned variety discovered by Sir H. H.

Johnston near Mount Elgon, but also what turns out to be a new sub-species, since named after him. There are beautiful coloured drawings of both these animals. Before quitting this part of the subject we may refer the reader to a remarkable elephant story on p. 336, and the account on p. 379 of "the place where the elephants come to die," a curious rehabilitation of a supposed myth.

The route followed by Major Powell-Cotton was, first, by rail from Mombasa to Stony Athi, thence via Mounts Donyo Sabuk and Kenya to Lake Baringo, and through mountainous country to Mumias. From Mumias the general course taken was northward, till the Murosokar Hills and the upper waters of the Tarash were reached, when the party turned north-westward along the Dodinga Hills, and, after some difficulties with the wild tribes inhabiting them, pushed on to Loguren, where they found a friendly Latuka chief. From Tarangole, a few miles north-west of Loguren, they returned to the south-west, and reached the Nile at Nimule (or Lemli), by way of Obbo. Crossing the Nile, Major Powell-Cotton made his way to the Congo State station of Wadelai, and thence to Mahagi, on Lake Albert, intending to shoot in the forest country to the west, and also to explore the head-waters of the Ituri. But, finding that the game was strictly preserved—of which he had received not the slightest hint beforehand—over an area extending a month's journey from the station, he decided, as it was now the worst season of the year for shooting, to return to England by the Nile route. The whole of his travels covered a period of about twenty months.

The most interesting part of the book is that dealing with the cave-dwellers of Mount Elgon, and the little-known Suk and Turkana tribes, of whom, as well as of the Dodinga and the mysterious Tepeth (who have an uncanny reputation), some good photographs are included. The Elgon caves and their inhabitants were discovered by Joseph Thomson in 1883. He was unable to make a thorough exploration, but came to the conclusion (supported by the assertions of the people themselves) that the caves were the work of a long-vanished race, being clearly of artificial origin, while it was no less clear that the natives now living there, with the scanty resources at their command, would have found it utterly impossible to excavate them. Sir H. H. Johnston, on the other hand, who visited the caves in 1899, and found them "practically deserted," inclined to the view that they were natural cavities, perhaps slightly enlarged by the hand of man. Major Powell-Cotton sides with Thomson, the "innumerable chisel-marks" on the walls allowing, in his opinion, of no other conclusion. He was able to examine several caves, both inhabited and deserted, pretty thoroughly, and succeeded in making friends with the "Wongabuney" (Wangabuni?), as they appear to be called. The caves—in agreeable contrast to Sir H. H. Johnston's experience—were surprisingly sweet and clean, in spite of the sheep and goats habitually stalled there. The people, now that they enjoy some measure of protection against the raids of their neighbours, and of passing caravans, are gradually leaving the caves, and building their huts in the plain. The account given of the British stations on the Nile is sad reading, and should be found instructive by those enthusiasts who think patriotism consists in advocating reckless extensions of territory. No doubt most of the evils complained of are due to understaffing and other manifestations of an economy, perhaps mistaken, perhaps simply unavoidable. But there are other things which ought not so to be. These columns are not the place to discuss them, yet we cannot help quoting one or two passages deserving careful attention:—

"One thing at Nimule struck me very forcibly, namely, the entire absence of native visitors to the civil station. In the posts which I have already described there was a constant succession of chiefs and their followers coming in on one pretext and another to see the white man. Here this appeared to be severely discountenanced. On my way to the Nile the different chiefs expressed strong aversion to going near Nimule, while the Kilio Sultan even described by pantomime that people who went there were put in chains and never came back, or else had their throats cut."

This is bad enough, and, whatever the cause, fatal to good government and friendly relations; but we find (apparently) a higher and more responsible official guilty of wanton discourtesy to native power, if nothing worse:—

"I found that Limoroo [the friendly Latuka chief referred to above] had just returned from Gondokoro, his first visit to a Government station, where it seemed he had met with scant courtesy. Moreover, in return for a gift of two fine elephant tusks, he had only received an old coat and a few other insignificant trifles. He told me that never again would he set foot in Gondokoro, where apparently the official did not know the difference between Latuka's Sultan who could put 10,000 spears in the field, and a trader's porter. From Macdonald he had evidently always met with his due, and it seems a pity that this man, who has invariably treated Europeans with respect, and whose influence extends over so wide an area, should have felt himself slighted, when a little tactful attention would have encouraged his loyalty to the white man."—P. 461.

The eulogies bestowed by Major Powell-Cotton on the Congo State stations of Dufle, Wadelai, and Mahagi may strike the reader as strange; but, without entering into controversial questions, we may point out, first, that these stations seem to be fortunate in their commandants; and, secondly, that the Nile territory, or Lado tenclave, being only leased, and not permanently occupied by the King of the Belgians, the concession system, which is at the root of so much of the mischief, is not in force there.

In an appendix are short vocabularies of Masai, Nandi, Turkana, and several other languages, but these consist solely of the names of animals, and are intended for the benefit rather of the sportsman than the philologist. In any case the system of spelling adopted is somewhat puzzling. In the Swahili column—the only one of which we are in a position to judge—some words are correct according to the standard usually adopted, while others appear to be spelt phonetically, after the fashion in vogue in the days of Mungo Park and Tuckey.

Thus we find "chartu," "Mbarwarla," "nearni" (for nyani), "kema" (for kima), "numebu," which is scarcely recognizable as nyumbu, and "M'bometu, wild dog," which turns out to be mbwa wa mwitu, literally, "dog of the bush." Probably these were taken down by ear by Major Powell-Cotton himself, while the rest were written for him by a native, possibly the iniquitous Peter, whose schooling, little as it seems to have done for his moral character, would at least have qualified him for such a task. The languages given, with the exception of Swahili, however else they may be classified, are all non-Bantu. We may point out in passing what appears to be a slip on the author's part. He says (p. 477) that the Bantu Kavirondo originally came from the Obbo country. Surely the non-Bantu (Nilotic) Kavirondo are meant. See Sir H. H. Johnston's 'The Uganda Protectorate,' ii. 764-5.

The Register of Walter Giffard, Archbishop of York. Edited by William Brown. (Surtees Society.)

AMID the mass of valuable historical material, with but little dross, pertaining to the north of England, that the Surtees Society has issued, in over a hundred volumes, since its establishment in 1834, it is not a little strange that the episcopal registers of the great see of York have hitherto been neglected, with the exception of the register—or rather concise roll—pertaining to the Acts of Archbishop Gray, 1215-55. That roll was edited by the late Canon Raine as long ago as 1872, and it is satisfactory to find that this highly important work is now being resumed, after an interval of over thirty years. Of the next two archbishops, Boveille and Ludham, no registers are extant. Walter Giffard, who ruled the see and province from 1266 to 1279, left behind him a far fuller chronicle of his work than did Walter Gray, though there are some obvious gaps. It is not a little curious to find that part of the 146 folios of this register is occupied with Giffard's acts when Bishop of Bath and Wells (1264-6). This portion has already been printed by the Somerset Record Society.

In consequence of Giffard continuing to serve as a fairly active member of the royal council whilst archbishop—although he resigned the chancellorship of the kingdom on leaving Bath and Wells—a number of documents of a more or less national character appear in his register. All the more important of these documents have, however, already been made public by the late Canon Raine in 'Letters from Northern Registers' and in the third volume of 'Historians of the Church of York,' both of which appeared some years ago in the Rolls Series. Mr. Brown, in editing this register, has adopted a wise course. The parts that have been already printed are not repeated, but in each of such cases exact reference is given to the place where the transcript will be found. All mere formal documents of a brief character, such as institutions, are given in a slightly abbreviated form in English; but everything else is set forth faithfully in extended Latin. To facilitate reference, numbers have been prefixed to the documents, whilst the particular folio of the original appears in the margin. In the margin, too, is given a brief small-type English summary or heading of the contents of each Latin document. Only those who have tried their hand at such summaries know how difficult and tiresome is the work of appropriately wording these very brief generalizations, and Mr. Brown is to be congratulated on the thorough and successful way in which he has accomplished this part of his task.

The style in which such work as this has hitherto been done has been most diverse. Admirable as has been the persistent labour of many years devoted by Canon Hingeston-Randolph to the episcopal registers of Exeter, those volumes, of an elaborate index type, are not satisfactory models to be followed. Undoubtedly the best volume of episcopal registers hitherto issued is that by Mr. Baigent on the Winchester registers of bishops Sandale and Asser. The transcripts are presented with minute fulness and exactness throughout, whilst the introductions, notes, and citing of illustrative documents are beyond praise. It is not reasonable, however, to expect work of so full a character as that of Mr. Baigent, and it would be hard to find men of sufficient learning and leisure to undertake like tasks.

Warm as is the praise that can be extended to Mr. Brown's method of editing, to his marginal summaries, and to his occasional brief foot-notes, undiluted appreciation cannot in fairness be extended to the short introduction. Eleven years have gone by since Mr. Brown was commissioned by the Surtees Society to undertake the editing of the Giffard register, and therefore lack of time to prepare a suitable introduction cannot be pleaded. After reading and re-reading the eighteen preliminary pages of very large type, it is difficult to find a single point relating to ecclesiastical procedure or the social life of the times that is in any way elucidated or explained. In fact, though there are but few sins of commission in this introduction, it would have been better had it been altogether omitted. As an example of what might, with much profit and pertinence, have been discussed, mention may be made of the ordination lists of 1267-74, wherein the "titles" of the secular clerks are set forth. This subject needs much elucidation, and has come to the front in other printed registers, notably in the "Sede Vacante" registers of Worcester. This is but one of a variety of questions which occur in connexion with so exceptionally large a register as this, and which many a student would desire to see discussed on comparative principles.

Mr. Brown, in this introduction, devotes two paragraphs to remarks on "one very important class of documents in which the York registers are very rich, namely, the visitations by the archbishop of different religious houses in his diocese." To begin with, it is a mistake to say of this, or indeed of any of the York registers, that they are "very rich" in such visitations. Less than half of the religious houses of the great diocese of York were subject to the visits of the diocesan. They all had their regular system of visitations, but the Archbishop of York could not visit the twelve great Cistercian abbeys within his diocese, nor any of the houses of Gilbertine, Premonstratensian, or Cluniac foundation, nor any of the numerous friaries. His authority was limited to the Benedictine monks and nuns and the Austin canons. Archbishop Giffard succeeded in visiting the various small houses of Cistercian nuns, but had to face the vigorous opposition of the Cistercian abbots. He could not obtain admission to the one house of nuns at Brodholm, and possibly not to the Cluniac nuns of Arthington.

The following are absolutely all the visitations undertaken by Giffard or his commissaries, as recorded in his register, which is said to be so "very rich" in such matters: the Austin priories of Bolton (2), Felley, and Newburgh, the Cistercian nunnery of Swine, and the Benedictine monastery of Selby, with its cell of Snaith, that is to say, a total of seven visits. When it is recollected that there were actually fifty-six religious houses subject to episcopal visitation in this diocese, and that the diocesan was expected personally or by commission to visit them at least once in three years, the truth is that this register, instead of being "very rich" in such matters, is astonishingly meagre, for if all monastic visitations were recorded, there ought to be about one hundred and fifty instead of a paltry seven! At Bolton Priory there was a depraved prior, with the result that the discipline of the house was in a lax state throughout; whilst the Abbot of Selby, in 1274, had brought matters to a still worse condition, the epithet applied by the visitor to one of the monks, Alexander Niger, of fetidissimus, being evidently richly deserved.

There is no reason to suppose that Mr. Brown had any intention to be unfair or to give deliberately any wrong impression as to the general level of monastic life and discipline in York diocese during the thirteenth century; but the broad result of the references in the two paragraphs to the visitations and "a very low state of morals" cannot fail to impress wrongly the majority of readers, who may not have given any general attention to the subject. Common fairness ought, however, to have led the editor, if he alluded to the subject at all, to point out the negative evidence of this register. If Mr. Brown had had any wide acquaintance with episcopal registers, he must have known that, broadly, only those visitations are entered that resulted in the issue of injunctions. In such cases, where more or less serious lapses were detected, full entry was made, in order that it might afterwards be ascertained whether the reformanda had been carried out. The visitations that resulted in omne bene, or in nothing worthy of correction, would but rarely encumber the pages of a register. It is true that in some cases, as in the diocese of Norwich at a much later date, separate registers were reserved for the exclusive record of monastic visitation tours; but there is nothing whatever to indicate that such was the case in York diocese under Archbishop Giffard; indeed, the evidence is all the other way. The true study of this register bears weighty evidence as to the morality and disciplined life of the vast majority of the monasteries, for during a period of over twelve years Giffard had to find fault on only seven occasions with the fifty-six religious houses in his charge.

The Archbishop had about twenty-five Benedictine and Cistercian nunneries under his care. We know from this register that he was sufficiently well acquainted with many of them to think them worthy of his alms, and there is only one record against them, namely, in the case of the Cistercian nuns of Swine, who were visited in 1268. Amice was a backbiter, untruthful, and impatient, whilst Sybil, Bella, and Amy rebelled against the corrections of the prioress, and there was a certain laxity of discipline; but when the Archbishop forwarded his injunctions to the convent in the following March, he prefaced them by the statement that he recognized their general and commendable observance of their rule, and merely wished to assist them in freeing it from imperfections. He stated, too, that there was nothing in the discharge of his various duties about which he was more solicitous than all that concerned the religious of his diocese. Certainly they seem to have given him the minimum of trouble.

One point in this Swine visitation is of particular interest: reference is made to the two windows through which food was passed to the canons, and a charge of gossiping thereat directed against the two sisters who had charge of the windows. The association of canons with a nunnery, and the use of such windows, make it almost appear as if Swine was a Gilbertine and not a Cistercian house; but it is always stated to be the latter. Canons, however, were associated, for administrative purposes, with the older Benedictine nunneries, such as Wherwell and Romsey, in Hants; and if Mr. Brown had a more general knowledge of English nunneries and episcopal registers, he would not have seen anything unusual or out of the way in the appointment, in four cases cited in the introduction, of stewards (yconomi) to look after the temporalities of such houses. In not a few of the smaller English nunneries there was a resident religious of the other sex, termed warden or prior, whose chief duty was the management of the property and stock.

One other of the editor's misconceptions, as set forth in his paragraphs on the monasteries, may be named. After saying that matters at the dependent cell of Snaith were little better, in 1275, than at the Abbey of Selby, he proceeds at once to state that "of the clerks ministering in the (parish) church two were married." These two were obviously in minor orders and not "religious," corresponding to the parish clerks of later days. Their married state was an irregularity, but one of fairly frequent occurrence, and generally condoned. Dr. Wickham Legg, in his recent introduction to 'The Clerk's Book' of 1549, cites many instances of the recognized marriage of such clerks. A detailed strict parochial visitation of Sarum diocese in the fourteenth century, as set forth in the (unprinted) episcopal registers, shows that married parish clerks were "presented," but a small fine was accepted as the penalty. Lynd-wood goes so far as to sanction the performance of duty by such married clerks, provided they have not been married twice, and retain the tonsure and clerical dress. At all events, the offence of the parochial part of Snaith church being served by two married clerks was a comparatively trivial matter, and it would have been well for the cell if nothing more could then have been alleged against it.

Although the contents of this volume are distinctly valuable, and the editing (apart from the introduction) sound and scholarly, the same minutely scrupulous care that has usually been displayed over the Surtees Society publications is not noticeable in this instance. The long list of about forty errata at the beginning of the book by no means exhausts the slips of editor or printer that can be pretty readily detected, although none that we have noticed is of material importance. One of these careless slips is rather amusing. It is stated in the introduction that the York ordination list for Michaelmas, 1268, is the earliest existing, and that "there is no record of another occurring before 1842." This latter date is, we suppose, a misprint for 1342. If so, the statement is otherwise careless, and in contradiction to the facts in the register, for there is a list of those ordained at Kirkham in February, 1267/8, and full ordination lists are subsequently given for 1273 and 1274.

---

Willobie His Avis. With an Essay towards its Interpretation by Charles Hughes. (Sherratt & Hughes.)

AMONG the minor problems which arise in Shakspearean criticism, the value of Willobie's 'Avisa' takes a not unimportant place. Published in 1594, it attests in some prefatory verses the popularity of 'The Rape of Lucrece' within a few months of its issue. It tells of a chaste maid of low degree, who refuses the unlawful love of a noble, and marries an innkeeper. Henceforth her fidelity is submitted to a series of trials, till at last Henry Willobie — "Italo-Hispanensis" — falls in love with her at first sight, and asks the advice of his familiar friend W. S., who was just recovered of the like infection. The friend,

"because he would see whether another could play his part better then himselfe, and in viewing afar off the course of this loving Comedy .....determined to see whether it would sort to a happier end for this new actor, then it did for the old player," gave him advice not far differing from that in 'The Passionate Pilgrim,' "And to her will frame all thy ways." Willobie's suit is unsuccessful, and Avis is left triumphant. He is gone abroad on Elizabeth's service in 1594, and is lately dead in 1596. No question would have arisen as to the story if there had not been, it seems, a certain amount of ill-feeling aroused among the ladies of birth in the neighbourhood; but in 1596, while a poem dedicated to Lady Horsey reflects on the mean birth and condition of Avis, a second edition of the 'Avisa' contains a poem by Thomas, brother of Henry Willobie, and a statement by "Hadrian Dorrell" explaining that Avis was an allegory, and that no such person ever existed.

Mr. Hughes set himself the task of finding whether any place could be identified with the notes of locality given in the poem, and whether Shakspeare could be brought upon the scene in any plausible way. His conclusions are (1) that the local allusions in the poem point to Mere and Cerne Abbas, while the hostelry pointed out by H. W. to W. S. was probably situated at Mere; (2) that there are very strong reasons for believing that Shakspeare may have been in the neighbourhood of Mere about a year before the publication of Willobie's 'Avisa.' The first of these conclusions may well be correct, though Mr. Hughes's attempt to identify Avis fails, as Avys Forward was but nineteen in 1594, while Avis had been married nine years—

Then I have felt, thrice three yeares space and more

(p. 136). It is quite probable that a youth of eighteen would fall desperately in love with a pretty woman of twenty-five to thirty, and yet have sense enough to publish his poem under a veil of anonymity, while the constancy of the fair one and the indignation of the local dames at seeing her praised for it are alike comprehensible. Our editor's second conclusion depends on the acknowledged growth of intimacy between Shakspeare and Southampton during the latter part of 1593. As this was a plague year, they were possibly together in the country. Southampton's sister was married to Thomas Arundel, of Wardour (seven miles from West Knoyle, Willobie's home), who was probably living in Shaftesbury. Southampton perhaps paid her a visit there, with Shakspeare in his train. Willobie possibly went over to Shaftesbury, and there, not improbably, made Shakspeare's acquaintance. There is nothing impossible in this chain of events, but that is all one can say. There is evidence of an acquaintance between Sir Thomas Arundel and the Horseys, and as the former went abroad early in 1595 to fight the Turk, it is possible that Willobie went with him after taking his degree (February, 1594/5). Indeed, we think that with industry several more cobwebs might be gathered to support Mr. Hughes's hypothesis; as, for example, many years ago Mr. Fleay showed that it was probable that 'Troilus and Cressida' was written at two separate periods, and placed the first, on quite sufficient grounds, in 1593. Now there are two references to this story in the poem, both of which are unmistakably Shakspearean in tone as opposed to Chaucerian. What more likely than that Willobie had derived his knowledge of Cressida and Troilus, as well as of Lucrece, from the very lips of Shakspeare meditating the first draft of his play?

Mr. Hughes has done a real service in recalling the 'Avisa' to our memories, and in making almost certain the verisimilitude of her little romance; but one would rather see in the episode of W. S. the young lover's personification of the poem in 'The Passionate Pilgrim' (which had reached him in some manuscript copy under Shakspeare's name) than an actual occurrence in the great poet's life. It does not feel like him, to our mind; it is the Shakspeare of

G. W. M. Reynolds. If Mr. Hughes really believes that W. S. is Shakspeare, it was imperative on him to go a step further, to show the bearings of the incident on his conception of the dramatist's personality, and this he has not done.

As Mr. Hughes has endeavoured to reproduce the exact spelling of the original, he may be glad of a few errata, gathered in a trial collation of some of his pages: P. 4, "Your" for Yours; p. 18, l. 8, "Intist" for Intisd; l. 27, "wing'd" for winged; p. 19, l. 3, "Sheapheards" for Sheepheards; l. 26, "perelesse" for peerlesse; p. 25, l. 31, "Aboun" for Abound; p. 26, l. 8, "thy" for my; p. 28, l. 18, "she" for see; p. 30, l. 4, "patient" for patients; l. 13, "wreakfull" for wreakful; p. 31, l. 21, "sicknes" for sickness; p. 135, l. 3, "husband" for husband; l. 13, "lore" for love; p. 137, l. 6, "hath" for has. We do not think that Windet's type in 1594 could ever have produced the disagreeable impression on the men of his time that the type of the "Artistic Printing Co. (Manchester), Ltd.," has produced on us.

NEW NOVELS.

'Mid the Thiek Arrows. By Max Pemberton. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

MR. PEMBERTON continues his task of skilfully purveying fiction for the average man or woman. He is untiring and ingenious, and believes in himself, so that his readers are disposed to do so likewise. Nothing comes amiss to him, and you find him in all fields. His latest book is a compromise between a racy tale of adventure and a modern novel. It has a dramatic prologue, in which a beautiful young woman falls from a trapeze and is apparently broken to pieces. This immediately sets one wondering, for among the spectators of the tragedy have been one Philip Rose and his charge, the young Earl of Alcester. The reader's attention is at once engaged, as he puzzles over the problem of the connexion between these characters and that event. Mr. Pemberton is a cunning hand, and that is how he catches hold of you. Then we are introduced to a fashionable wedding, with Lady Dickys, and a general air of "smart society," and we learn that Mr. Quentin Caird is being married to Lord Alcester's sister. This hitches our curiosity still higher, and presently we are agog for the secret—La Belle Esmeralda was not killed, and she is Caird's wife. There you have the plot. But it is only right to say that in Mr. Pemberton's hands it is very brightly treated, and that the people are not mere shadows or puppets, but have some real human blood in them. This is true more particularly of the heroine, an attractive girl, and of La Belle Esmeralda, who does not act in any melodramatic manner, but is a reasonable, decent sort of woman. We should be inclined to say that this is one of the best stories Mr. Pemberton has written, and we are sure that it will be one of the most popular.

Patricia: a Mother. By "Iota." (Hutchinson & Co.)

"IOTA" has travelled far from the days of the 'Yellow Aster.' That novel had a trick of fluency and brightness that floated it into popularity. In her latest book Mrs. Caffyn is not merely bright, and she is not fluent at all. One feels that she has written with greater care than heretofore, and with a better appreciation of what Art exacts of her votaries. The result is much the best story she has given us. The problem is simple, but it is none the less a problem. The opening chapter is sufficiently dramatic. It describes the reading of a will, in which a young widow is deprived of the guardianship of her boy, and both are confided to the charge of the grandmother. Patricia behaves admirably in these circumstances, which are all the more intolerable as her husband was a hypocrite and a humbug. She has the alternatives of telling the truth about him to the mother who adored him and adores his memory, and of holding her tongue and suffering. The will has the inevitable effect of blackening her name in the gossiping countryside; yet the revelation of her husband's infamy would kill his mother. Patricia's sacrifice in deciding on silence is all the greater since it involves a slow estrangement from her son. Yet it is not she who finally tells the truth, but an old servant who can endure the injustice no longer. In this way do events move happily to a conclusion. But the cleverness of the novel lies not so much in its plot as in the graphic characterization. Patricia, her mother-in-law, Venour, the friend, the boy himself—all are excellently handled and life-like. It is a piece of work of which the author has reason to be proud.

Monarch: the Big Bear of Tallac. By Ernest Thompson Seton. (Constable & Co.)

THIS is the life story of a giant grizzly. In his infancy he is captured and tamed; but, after he has changed owners once or twice, "the call of the wild" will no longer be denied, and he escapes to enjoy the Arcadian simplicity of his own natural life, which is largely devoted to the slaying of men and sheep. His taste is by no means exclusively for mutton, however, and presently, a long-indulged weakness for honey having proved his undoing, he is captured by the very man who trained him as a cub, and taken to San Francisco. Mr. Seton is as picturesque and vivid as ever in this book, the writing of which shows real insight. His chapter headings are not over and above illuminative, and such extreme Americanisms as "When the semblance of his mate was gone, Gringo quit the place," rather interfere with the charm of the story—at all events, for readers upon this side of the Atlantic. But these are small matters.

The White Causeway. By Frankfort Moore. (Hutchinson & Co.)

WITH a present-day case of ten personalities in one body under investigation, we feel thankful to Mr. Moore that he has confined his attention to duality, and there is nothing so oppressively psychological in 'The White Causeway' as to frighten away those who look only for the sparkling dialogue and epigram of this author. Well-authenticated instances of annihilation of memory have been investigated by doctors, and as in the case of Olive Strickland, Arthur Garnett's betrothed, the mental balance disturbed by one catastrophe has, in several cases, been restored by a second. The best piece of character-drawing in the book is undoubtedly Lady Calthorpe—a charming type of conventional womanhood—eminently sane, healthy, tactful, and devoted; and some of the situations brought about by the heroine's loss of memory are well conceived. The hero's position becomes almost Gilbertian. "Should a man consider himself bound to a young woman who had at one time responded to his affection for her, but who had since lost all consciousness of having done so, and become indifferent to him?" In this case the man remains steadfast, and is rewarded. It seems a pity that Mr. Moore should introduce so material an incident as that of the jewelled hairpin into the most psychological part of his book—there is something almost jarring in this attempted fusion of matter and spirit—and one could cheerfully spare some of the almost prosy passages in the earlier part of the story, as well as the illustrations.

The Master Mummer. By E. Phillips Oppenheim. (Ward & Lock.)

MR. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM is obviously of opinion that the plot's the thing, for he throws every other consideration to the winds in writing his romances. We fail to find any sense of character here or any attempt at verisimilitude. The author is not regulated by these things. He is set on inventing an engrossing story, and writing it simply. The result is that he attains a measure of popularity which more scrupulous and clever novelists do not reach. It is an attraction to have a royal person in your tale; so here is a princess. Furthermore, you are bound to have a mystery if you would catch the ear of groundlings; so here is a mystery. Then there is demanded of you an engaging hero, and a plausible set of foes. All—all are present. The figure of the master mummer himself is not altogether in keeping. It is too melodramatic, and Mr. Oppenheim could have very well managed without melodrama. To be sure, the opening is thereby rendered arresting, for it starts with the murder of an English baronet. But the effect is hardly worth the trick, and we should all have swallowed the narrative more readily if that episode had not been, quite unnecessarily, dragged in. Perhaps this is to counsel perfection. Books such as this are not intended to be broken on the wheel. It is enough that they interest, serve as what we know now as anodynes.

A Spoiler of Men. By Richard Marsh. (Chatto & Windus.)

Strange Partners. By Gilbert Wintle. (Ward & Lock.)

WE put together two sensational stories which are much better written than the average of such things. Mr. Marsh supposes that by the application of a hypodermic needle in a certain place in the brain the operator can make a man an idiot or subject to his will. With this power he makes pretty play, showing considerable ingenuity in devising situations. His opening scene is mysterious enough to put readers on the stretch, and the explanations are managed without tedium.

Mr. Wintle, whose name is new to us, evidently has education, and should do in future more significant work than this account of a pair of burglars. Though their manœuvres put a heavy strain on our credulity, they are well arranged to keep the excitement going. But it is somewhat unusual to let your villains get right away at the end, even when they are old Etonians.

Wanted a Cook. By Allan Dale. (Putnam's Sons.)

ONE of the dictums of that shrewd philosopher Mr. Dooley runs: "I don't think we injye other people's sufferin', Hinnessy. It isn't actually injyement, but we feel betther for it." With something of this comfortable sensation one reaches the last pages of 'Wanted a Cook.' If such a catalogue of domestic catastrophes be possible — and we grant much to the romancing element, the conviction remains that no small modicum of truth underlies this vividly drawn picture of "home life" in New York — how fortunate ought we who live in the old country to think ourselves! The "servant question" may be an unfailing subject for tea-table discussion from John o' Groat's to Land's End, but our sufferings stop short of Anna Carter, and neither Mrs. Potzenheimer, Birdie Miriam McCaffrey, nor Madame Hyacinthe de Lyrolle can be truly said to typify the reigning deity in the average British gastronomic temple. There is a fund of humour and entertainment in 'Wanted a Cook' which makes it delightful reading.

BOOKS ON BALZAC.

Honoré de Balzac: his Life and Writings. By Mary F. Sandars. (Murray.) — No French biographer has done for Balzac what Lockhart did for Scott, Forster for Dickens. And it is due entirely to the researches of a Belgian, the Vicomte de Spoelberch de Lovenjoul, that the materials for a life of the author of the 'Human Comedy' have at length been collected. Diffident, perhaps, of his own ability to write such a critical biography of Balzac as is required, the Vicomte has generously allowed Miss Sandars to use his materials, and has also had her work translated in order to correct it in the light of his special knowledge of the subject. The result is an account of the events of Balzac's career accurate in matters of fact, and written in a light, agreeable manner. But this is all we can say in praise of Miss Sandars's achievement. It is not really worthy of the occasion. The reference on the title-page to Balzac's writings is misleading, for Miss Sandars, as she admits, has made no "attempt to give what could only be a very inadequate criticism of the books of the great novelist." Her study of his works could scarcely be more inadequate than her study of his character. She has drawn an amateurish portrait of him suitable for the library of a young ladies' seminary. Balzac, was pre-eminently a painter of the passions, writing for men who could excuse a remarkable grossness of taste in a writer of remarkable genius, and it is scarcely a matter for congratulation that the task of composing his biography should have been undertaken by a lady either too nice to explore the depths of human nature, or, happily, too ignorant of their existence to think of doing so. For Balzac's view of life was so extraordinary that in order to estimate justly the value of his ideas it is necessary to obtain the clearest conception of what he himself was. It has, perhaps, been hitherto somewhat difficult to do this, as he was a poseur extremely ingenious and fairly consistent in every attitude he adopted, but enough is now known of him to enable a biographer to portray something of the real man.

Like his father, who was the son of a farm-labourer in Languedoc, Balzac in temperament was a man of Southern France, such as Daudet has drawn in immortal traits. Imagine Tartarin of Tarascon as a novelist of genius settled in Paris at a time when the men of the middle classes, brisk, astute, and possessed by every form of ambition, were beginning to make France what now it is. Incurably romantic in his ideas, he was schooled for a moment by some unsuccessful experiences as an unpractical man of business into a woeful sense of the realities of life; but this only darkened his imagination, instead of restraining and directing it. He saw the world, as has been remarked, through his own cravings. Eager for power and glory, covetous of luxury, and desirous of success among beautiful and cultivated women of rank, he became the representative man of the period he began to describe, and in order to paint its passions in living colours he had but to look in his own heart and write. It is characteristic of Miss Sandars's delicacy that she commonly deals with Balzac's relations with women as affairs of friendship; but this is scarcely the way to understand either the man or his work.

It almost seems as if Balzac thought that it was money that made the world go round, and if the plots in his romances so often turn on matters of finance, it was because about this question revolved the phantasmagoria of his own imagination. But how puissant and luxuriant his imagination was! There were days, he said, when all things around him seemed unreal. Living in a sort of hallucination in a world of fable peopled by gorgeous incarnations of almost every form of human vice and weakness, he composed in feverish haste a strange, original, and magnificent European Nights' Entertainment. He was not, however, so original in his principal ideas as is commonly supposed. Dumas the younger, and other dramatists of the realistic school are called followers of the author of the 'Human Comedy.' But, as a matter of fact, these playwrights merely continued the traditions of the rather brutal comedies of contemporary manners of the Restoration period, in which the types of the adventurers and adventuresses who appear in Balzac's later novels were sketched while he was still writing romances in the style of Mrs. Radcliffe and Maturin. Balzac's greatness as a creator of character consists in the fact that he remodelled these types with such power that they impress themselves upon a reader's memory in almost as ineffaceable a manner as those of Molière. Yet he had strange limitations which are not revealed in this book.

These limitations are clearly pointed out in Balzac: l'Homme et l'Œuvre (Paris, Colin), by M. André Le Breton, who is a professor of the University of Bordeaux, and, writing in French, is not hampered by the English traditions concerning the young person. His is the best single volume on the subject that we have seen for some time. He has, of course, profited largely by the labours of previous critics and students of Balzac, who are duly quoted at the bottom of the pages, but he summarizes their views with admirable freshness. He has all the evidence before him that he needs as to Balzac's faults and virtues as a man, and though he is gently sardonic on the former, his attitude seems on the whole sound and judicious. Balzac, with more than a touch of Tartarin, as we have already explained, rather fostered the idea that he was a demigod, and, his fame being secure, it is as well to look closely into the strange mixture of realities and illusions on which he lived, to be cool about a classic.

In discussing the origins of the novels it is pointed out that Mrs. Radcliffe, "Monk" Lewis, and Maturin were Balzac's earliest literary progenitors in romance, authors little known in this connexion, or, indeed, to-day in any connexion to English readers. Later influences of better masters, such as the authors of 'The Vicar of Wakefield,' 'Clarissa,' 'Caleb Williams' (not "William"), Scott, and Cooper, are much more familiar, but well exhibited here. How and why Balzac broke with the wilder side of romanticism the author explains admirably. The book discusses, inter alia, Balzac's powers of realism, typified by 'Eugénie Grandet,' and excess of imagination, shown in 'Cousin Pons.' As he nears the end the author seems to grow unfair in his attacks on some of Balzac's famous figures. We are prepared to maintain, for instance, that Eve Chardon is "sublime," and in no way a "monstre." After all, we think that Prof. Le Breton may be described as an advocatus diaboli, but he has written so well that his book might with advantage be made available to English readers.

In his Aspects of Balzac (Nash), Mr. W. H. Helm is rather descriptive or reflective than critical, as his title might suggest. He gossips freely and with abundance of humour (which seems occasionally introduced for the purpose of mollifying the general reader) concerning the characters in Balzac's immense world, and sets down the main conclusions about the novelist which most expert readers have reached. We have recently dwelt on the long "slabs" of matter which make his beginnings so dull and unpromising. En revanche, Mr. Lang has boldly stated in his last book that Balzac is easy French; so the ordinary man, led on by Mr. Helm's enthusiasm, should read him. The greater part of the book is reprinted from The Empire Review, and does not therefore attempt the subtlety which appeals to the specialist. So far as he goes, Mr. Helm is good on Balzac's style, though we should have liked to see an account of the pseudo-scientific element in his vocabulary. Two articles run through the women and men of Balzac, and another deals with Balzac's idea of the English and his admiration for various English authors. In 'Balzac and Dickens' essential differences between the French realist and the "respectable English author" are well indicated. The wonderful reality to both of their own creations might have been dwelt upon, and also the fact that they both spoke of themselves by nicknames in the third person. 'Literary References in Balzac' seems to us the most interesting article. Here the influence of Sterne and Richardson is rightly pointed out.

Honoré de Balzac: Contes Choisis is one of the series of "Classiques Français" (Dent), edited by Mr. D. S. O'Connor. The little volume, of the convenient size known as pott octavo, is charmingly produced, with a bibliography at the end, and a French introduction by M. Paul Bourget. He writes cleverly, but displays no great subtlety. However, the stories should need no introduction, and in this form, unnumbered with notes, are likely to win new admirers.

SHORT STORIES.

The Old Cantonment. By B. M. Croker. (Methuen.) — Mrs. Croker is upon familiar ground in the story which gives its name to this collection of the favourite number of short tales—thirteen. And upon familiar ground, Anglo-Indian ground, Mrs. Croker can be very entertaining; more so, for example, than when she takes her characters to Monte Carlo and such places, where, for her, are triteness and a tendency to be dull. But stories like 'The Old Cantonment,' 'The Little Brass God,' and 'The Missing Link' show the author at her best, and are pleasant reading. The book as a whole must be pronounced a little scrappy and journalistic. 'On the Grand Trunk Road,' for example, cannot by any stretch of imagination be called a story at all. It is a short magazine article, of only average merit. Similar criticism applies to several other chapters in a volume which has not been well considered. There are parts of the book, however, which will please all Mrs. Croker's admirers.

The Wedding of the Lady of Lovell and other Matches of Tobiah's Making. By Una L. Silberrad. (Constable.)—Words like "more" and "less" sound ungrateful in connexion with an author one admires; but we must say we like Miss Silberrad more in sundry of her modern stories, and less in the old-world adventures in this new book of hers. Yet, as regards actual writing and imaginative quality, this sheaf of short stories is above the usual, if not her usual, level. Those who enjoy tales of true love that at the outset never run smooth, but are designed to end well, should read these. Though they are disconnected, a connecting link runs through them. The god of the machine who here (under Providence, as he might himself have said) makes all straight is a certain stout Dissenter named Tobiah. He manages somehow to be always in the thick of the fight or the fun, as the willing or unwilling, yet never too unwilling, aid in the devices of the blind god—if we dare mention the two in one breath. Here, as elsewhere, Miss Silberrad has a way of her own—a pleasant way.

Captain Balaam of the Cormorant. By Morley Roberts. (Nash.)—This little book holds half a dozen seafaring yarns, in the concoction of which Mr. Roberts is a careless adept. There is nothing to show that they have previously appeared in any other form, yet the reviewer read 'Captain Balaam of the Cormorant' last year. The whole batch of six are magazine stories, and have not that polish which publication in book form demands. Mr. Roberts is not only prolific, he is prodigal, as a writer. His fund of material is rich, his gift for story-telling considerable, and he is master of a vivid and telling style. But of late, at all events, his work has indicated haste. He knows enough of seafaring life to avoid various remarks he has placed in the mouths of characters in 'Captain Balaam.' There are phrases which only extreme carelessness could lead so capable a writer and man of the world to pass. This is a pity. Mr. Roberts should show more respect for his attainments. The tales are entertaining. Our—perhaps somewhat ungracious—complaint is that they might have been so much better.

The Peradventures of Private Pagett. By Major W. P. Drury. (Chapman & Hall.)—An ex-private of the Marines turned landlord is the Mulvaney who recounts these eight stories. They are not without merit and interest as pictures of that amphibious soldiery "invented by King Charles the Second (before his head was cut off) for the purpose of preventin' mutiny in the fleet." True, his humour is as ponderous as his person (according to the portrait and sketches by Mr. A. W. Rackham) and most of his language. But there is an Odyssean air of personal experience about his "It was this way, look"; and the breezy versatility of the Royal Navy and its "Jollies," afloat and ashore, redeems the book from the mediocrity of what may be described as "railway literature." The ghostly side of things appears in 'The Signal Guns of Gungapore'—the ghastly in a telepathic dream of the sinking of H.M.S. Victoria in 1893.

Tales from Spain. By J. G. P. (Greening & Co.)—We have no means of knowing whether the author of this collection of tales has a personal knowledge of Spain, or is merely attracted by its opportunities for romantic situation. Probably the latter hypothesis explains why he has turned author. There is no particular reason why he should on any other ground. He is a novice at telling stories, and those he has to tell have not much point or climax. They are innocent diversions, laudably plain and simple-minded. There is nothing occult or elusive about them. Yet there is a certain agreeableness of flavour which helps them along. The stories deal with other centuries than ours, and some deal with the Inquisition.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MRS. WILLIAM WADDINGTON'S first book met with some success. Her second, published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., under the title Italian Letters of a Diplomat's Wife, January-May, 1880, February-April, 1904, is better. Unfavourable criticism on the first was easy, but the volume, on the whole, pleasant, and so it is with the second. Madame Waddington's gossiping simplicity disarms the critic, and pleases a wide, though hardly a chosen, public. The present book and the former overlap. It will be remembered that, in the letters from London, M. Waddington was Ambassador to the Court of St. James. In the present volume we find him, on ceasing to be Prime Minister of France, going to spend the spring at Rome before he became, if he ever did become, "a diplomat." Representation of France at the Congress of Berlin did not constitute a diplomatic function in the ordinary sense of the word, though it was with M. Waddington, as with Disraeli, service under a Foreign Office. Mrs. Waddington takes us behind the scenes, but rather among the stage carpenters than among the actors. She is indiscreet, but hardly too much for the critic, and hardly enough for the gaping crowd. There is an account of the visits of condolence paid by the wife of the President to fallen Cabinet Ministers, from which it appears incidentally that such visits were paid by Madame de MacMahon even after "the 16th May," commonly though incorrectly called a coup d'état—certainly an unusual and barely constitutional dismissal. After the resignation of the Marshal, it seems, too, that Madame de MacMahon, calling on Madame Waddington, came on Madame Grévy paying an official visit. The scene is extremely curious, and reminds one of similar difficulties in 1814 and 1815, as described by the chroniclers of the Restoration. Everybody seems to have behaved well in trying circumstances, especially the fourth person, the Russian Ambassador, who would, if necessary, have "saved the situation," being on good terms with each of the three ladies. Some of the indiscretions will amuse Americans. The private opinions entertained by American Consuls-General and their wives, when they happen to be great people, about the American Ministers and their wives stationed in the same capital, are of this nature. Mr. Marsh held a high position at Rome. The Government of the United States sent thither the famous writer Eugene Schuyler (whose wife was a near relation of Mrs. Waddington), and strained relations were the result, although in the earlier days, when Eugene Schuyler had been Consul-

General at St. Petersburg, and "Governor" Curtin the American Minister, the relations between these two distinguished men were of the most pleasant nature. Mrs. Waddington writes:—

"They don't seem very pleased with Marsh—our Minister. Always the same old story and jealousy—the ministers consider themselves so far above a consul. But really when the Consul-General happens to be Schuyler and his wife King, one would think these two names would speak for themselves—for Americans, at any rate."

In her present, as in her former book, Mrs. Waddington continually amazes us by the extreme freshness of mind which she brings to the consideration of situations which we are apt to think understood by all the world. There is a long account of the Empress Frederick when visiting Rome as Crown Princess. Mrs. Waddington, in spite of the situations which she and her husband had filled, expected to "find her very formal and German." After conversations with the Crown Princess she thinks it necessary to explain that "she is naturally a Protestant, but very liberal, and quite open to new ideas."

The careless editing which was noticed in Madame Waddington's first book is rather worse in the second, most of the slips being of a description easily avoided, such as the misspelling of French words which are correctly given on other pages. Some of the mistakes are singular, from the fact that they concern the names of well-known persons in diplomacy, and even in the French diplomatic service. Most of them, however, are obvious, and not calculated to mislead the reader; but one has puzzled us. There are repeated allusions to "Comte d'Aulnay" (apparently a French diplomatist), and also to the beauty of his wife. We think that the reference must be to Comte d'Aunay, but, if so, the constant repetition of the error is odd, as the present Senator was a well-known colleague of M. Waddington, and his wife a member of the American colony in Paris to which Madame Waddington belongs.

SIR RICHARD JEBB once wrote to The Times to explain that he was not the "Richard Jebb" whose Studies in Colonial Nationalism (Edward Arnold) are before us. We do not wonder, for there is an extraordinary diversity about Mr. Jebb's views, and his style would be likely to alarm a staid professor. We do not attempt to reconcile all the various opinions expressed by Mr. Jebb, nor to praise such examples of his style as are to be found in his final chapter; but we recognize that in portions of his book—some of which have seen light already in reviews—he gives facts as to colonial opinion which are of high importance, and which are almost invariably ignored "at home." Mr. Jebb appears to hold the tenets which used to be, and perhaps still are, those entertained by Mr. Deakin—commonly known in Australia as "the allied nations" view. All who have studied the expression in Canada, in Australia, and in New Zealand of the opinion of the electorate are aware that there is no common "colonial view," and that the Australian elector entertains opinions which are in many points diametrically opposed to those attributed to him by uninformed British sentiment. On the other hand, Mr. Jebb is, to put it mildly, not a Free Trader, and he appears to accept Mr. Chamberlain's economic views without adhering to the British form of Imperialism. This, as they think it, making the best of both worlds is, we may assure Mr. Jebb, more irritating to sentimental home Imperialists than is Little Englandism itself. In his preface our author takes the bull by the horns, and declares that the new commercial policy implies the "substitution of alliance for federation, of the colonial ideal for the English ideal..... Alliance recognizes separate national aspirations; federation aims at national unity." If Mr. Chamberlain reads this preface he may be trusted to make a wry face at the words quoted. All may agree that Mr. Jebb is right when he tells us that "in no two of the four great self-governing colonies is the predominant Imperialism quite the same thing." Our only doubt is whether Imperialism in any sense of the word can be said to be dominant in Australia. The contingents were sent out amid much cheering. So much and no more may be conceded. Further, Mr. Jebb explains that under the new system "questions affecting the American continent would be settled at Ottawa instead of at London." This again is hardly a prospect to attract the British Imperialist, who has made up his mind that under no circumstances whatever will he hold a stiff upper lip against the United States, and who, after spending his money on naval bases useless except on the theory of a possibly hostile America, has suddenly withdrawn the garrisons of St. Lucia and of the other posts which had been armed against the United States up to the present year. Mr. Jebb thinks that Canadian "firmness" towards the United States would be "tempered by moderation." It is highly probable that what might seem moderate at Ottawa would be calculated to alarm the arm-chair Imperialist in Downing Street. A little, but not much, light is thrown by this book upon a recent controversy as to Lord Salisbury's opinion of the Chamberlain scheme. It has been hinted by Mr. Chamberlain that Lord Salisbury was a party to negotiations which preceded the last Colonial Conference, and Mr. Jebb points out that the bald report we have of the proceedings undoubtedly suggests that there had been some attempt beforehand to prepare the way for the proposal which coupled colonial preference with colonial contribution towards our armies or our fleets. Mr. Jebb discusses the interesting proposals made by Mr. Seddon for an Imperial force, and he seems more clear than we are that Australia would have rejected such suggestions if made in the right way, at the right place, and the right time. The main objection to all such plans as those put forward by Mr. Jebb is that they give to the few white people in Australia an undue share of control over the destinies of that Indian empire which must always stand next to England in the minds of home statesmen, not only on account of its stupendous bulk in all the totals of the Empire, but also because it contributes so enormous an amount towards the upkeep of our military strength.

Slavery. By Bart Kennedy. (Treherne & Co.)—Most books describing the life of the poor are at best biography. 'Slavery' is autobiography. It is perhaps the first attempt at the use of this method in the universe here described. The most sympathetic writer is describing from outside how things ought to look, or how things might look, in a mind reared in the grey street and tenement dwelling, and from the first in direct contact with the realities of poverty and contempt. Mr. Kennedy, under the thinnest guise of fiction, has attempted the record of the memories of his own bleak childhood. The scene is set in the child mind: the story is of the life of one Jim, and the outward stage on which the drama is played is Manchester under its smoke cloud and the neighbouring countryside. This drama is of real life—not of stage convention. All the characters, except the one central figure, are continually changing. They enter, they make their bow, say their allotted part, and then vanish, and their places are taken by others. They appear, that is to say, as mere phenomena, whose only interest lies in the position they occupy in the pictorial universe in which the individual is for ever enclosed, solitary. Material things also occupy a similar function. From the cloudy continuum of the child consciousness there gradually crystallize out definite impressions of an austere grey world, as life becomes definite when viewed from a cellar dwelling and through experience of want and perplexity. Mr. Kennedy here reveals himself as extraordinarily sensitive to the appeal of this external stimulus. The workhouse leaves the first indelible impressions; the successive factories provide scenes full of colour and movement, in the leaping furnace flames and shadows; the boy's bathing in the half-stagnant canal gives the joy of physical well-being; the little Catholic chapel offers the experience of mystery and enchantment to a mind starved of beauty; the first hearing of great music at a popular concert opens the entrance to a new world. Jim, though still young when the book closes, has passed through a variegated experience. He has fallen into the "depths," and rejoiced in a day's snow-shovelling with the unemployed. He has served in cotton-mills and at glass-making and as a railway porter, in iron-works, locomotive-works, with the Lancashire Militia. All the while the inner life has continued, the mind, untrained, and from the centre of its limited existence, fretting over the meaning of it all. He is left at the end nourishing the hope of a revolution which in one outburst of fire and blood will make all the crooked things straight.

Every man can write one interesting book—the sincere record of his experience of life. Sincerity is the prevailing note of Mr. Kennedy's most interesting volume. It is the navy become for once articulate. The style is rough, unformed, explosive, mere fragments of English hurled at the reader, but conveying an impression of picturesque description, of strength and sincerity. The matter is of the kind which runs through the mind of the intelligent workman as he pursues the monotony of his daily toil. Sometimes things go well and his heart is uplifted; then prosperity passes and the world seems full of blackness. There are periods of fierce outburst against society, jealousy of the rich, hatred of a system which appears to crush human life into wretchedness. He will rail against machinery and its effects in the displacement of labour. He will call for a vast uprising to overturn the world. Then, again, he will realize the unfitness of his fellows, the impossibility of these doing any better if they are for a moment exalted. Individual hope for a time runs high; through music and his trained voice he will crawl out of the abyss and ultimately find his place amongst those to whom have been given life's good things. Then, again, the first failure produces discouragement; the dreams pass into the accustomed apathy, and the man recognizes again that his place is amongst his fellow-slaves. It is a mournful, somewhat disquieting picture; but it is written from the heart of a real experience, with a determination to reveal how modern life impresses the mind of those who work, for the most part silent, at the base of society in the cities of England.

Wild life and nature have been the diversions of Mr. Bosworth Smith, who was a well-known master at Harrow, and has written weightier works than Bird Life and Bird Lore (Murray). His contributions to history and biography, however, can hardly have been so agreeable as this product of his leisure hours. Most of the chapters have already appeared in periodicals, but we are glad to have them in this handsome volume, which is illustrated, and might have been more profusely illustrated with advantage. It does not pretend to deal exhaustively with bird life; the author has his favourites. But incidentally he touches on the habits and traditions of most of our English birds. Birds, he says, "have been to me the solace, the recreation, the passion of a lifetime"; and his object in these pages is to communicate to others that recreation, and to urge the preservation of birds.

These aims are fully realized (or should be) in his interesting book, which does not boast itself as scientific, but belongs rather to the same category as White's 'Selborne' and Waterton's books on natural history. It is pleasantly and allusively classical, for Mr. Bosworth Smith is a ripe scholar, and it is written in a style which is always accurate and often picturesque. The raven, oddly enough, has the most space at its disposal, although the owl runs him close. Here is an anecdote for which the author vouches. A friend of his was catechizing some Devon children on the 'Te Deum,' and asked,

"What are cherubim?" The answer promptly came back, 'White owls, sir,' and revealed a belief among his parishioners of which he might otherwise have remained ignorant. 'What are seraphim, then?' 'Brown owls, sir.' 'What do you mean by "To Thee Cherubim and Seraphim continually do cry"?' 'It means that the white owls are always screeching, and the brown owls always hooting, before God.'

An old print which is reproduced shows a cockney sportsman shooting a white owl, and the legend is 'Cherubim Shooting.' Why is the owl always mobbed by small birds if it appears in the daytime? Mr. Bosworth Smith thinks it is because it is an unfamiliar figure. Certainly the small birds have no reason to treat it as an enemy, for in 706 pellets of the barn owl were "found the remains of 2,525 rats, mice, shrews, bats, and voles, while there were only twenty-two small birds, and those chiefly sparrows." So the owl is and remains the farmer's friend, though by no means all farmers recognize this fact. The cuckoo, one knows, is hustled by birds because of its likeness to the hawk, but in respect of the owl the instinct of the hedge-row seems at fault. Mr. Bosworth Smith is sound on the sparrow, the one bird he cannot be fond of; yet he reminds us of his virtues, which are, after all, rather drab virtues. You see our author is prejudiced, and cannot find it in him to abominate the meanest thing that flies. He has an affectionate eye on all. He notices a peculiarity of the swifts:—

"The old bird never, under any circumstances, cared to leave her nest while I was climbing the ladder to see how it was getting on, but calmly or even callously sat on, allowing herself to be removed without so much as a flutter of the wings or the faintest effort to escape, and to be held in my hand while I examined at my leisure her big round eye, able in the middle of her flight, at the rate of a hundred miles an hour, to detect and intercept an insect."

But pleasant as all this gossip is, the book is not confined to it. One chapter describes with affection the old thatched rectory at Stafford where the author's early days were spent. It is a sympathetic study, and Mr. Bosworth Smith is an ardent partisan of thatch. He offers an interesting proof of its "antiseptic qualities." In 1902 an old cottage was being stripped of thatch, and a brown-paper parcel was found embedded in the roof:

"It contained a roll of white linen, 25 yards long, which, together with the invoice and a letter dated 1791, had been sent by a firm at Gloucester to a tradesman at Ledbury. The roll of linen was absolutely dry and unspoilt, not even spotted by damp, and the covering of brown paper likewise."

In his later years Mr. Bosworth Smith has been so fortunate as to live at Bingham's Melcombe, near Dorchester, which, if we may judge from the illustrations, is a divine haunt of ancient peace, worthy of so fervent a lover of birds. As he admires and appreciates Waterton, one may suppose that he emulates him also in enfranchising all birds on his estate. So must it become a bower of song in springtime, and a delight all the year.

L'Eden, by M. Sebastian Voirol (Paris, Librairie Molière), is a curious book, unsatisfactory, confused, lacking in conclusion, but nevertheless calculated to arrest attention. The scene is laid in the earliest days of the great Egyptian monarchy, and the author gives rein to his imagination in a style which, subject to French judgment, we think striking, and in a fashion hardly suited to the tastes of the British public.

MR. FROWDE sends us in his wonderful "Oxford Bijou Editions" Morning Prayer, Collects, and Psalms, and Evening Prayer with similar additions. These tiny books are not toys, in spite of their size, but contain very readable type.

WE pointed out briefly the merits of a one-volume collection of English and Scottish Popular Ballads in the "Cambridge Edition of the Poets" published in the United States. The volume now appears in England with the imprint of Mr. Nutt, and unchanged, except for a somewhat simpler binding, which we prefer. All English admirers of ballads will do well to secure it, for it gives a great deal in a handy form.

MESSRS. ROUTLEDGE have paid Mr. Grant Richards's "World's Classics" a close tribute of imitation in their "New Universal Library," which is of the same size and form. They are including some interesting volumes, somewhat, we are glad to see, off the beaten track. Lessing's Laocoon, in the late Sir R. Phillimore's translation of 1874, is a sound piece of work.—George Brimley's Essays are half-forgotten, and will repay perusal. They represent good, solid criticism in the fifties.—Jeffrey's Essays on English Poets and Poetry from The Edinburgh Review, some of which are famously inadequate, fill another volume. So vivacious and lucid up to his own lights was Jeffrey, that some brief preface might have been added, pointing out that his criticism does not represent the judgment of the present age, or, indeed, that of his own entirely, since Scott more than once pointed out that Jeffrey had no feeling for poetry, and consequently was not qualified to review it. Bagehot's article on 'The Edinburgh Reviewers' might have been referred to.

IN Change for a Halfpenny (Alston Rivers) the ingenious authors of 'Wisdom while you Wait' have made, on the whole, fair fun of the halfpenny press, and chiefly of the Daily Mail. The illustrations are capital, and there are comic advertisements. As before, some of the jokes are too bookish to have a wide appeal, but there is plenty to amuse, and the authors are unflagging in their ingenuity.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Anderson (Sir R.), "For Us Men," 8vo, 2/6 net.
Newton (B. G.), The Ideal Mother, cr. 8vo, 7/6
Texts and Studies: Vol. 7, No. 4, A Study of Ambrosiaster, by A. Soutar, 8vo, sewed, 7/6 net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Adam (Robert), Artist and Architect, with an Account of his System, 4to, 10/6 net.
Garden Colour, by Various Authors, 4to, 21/ net.
Nuremberg, painted and described by Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Bell, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Jacob (V.), Verses, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Neldig (W. J.), The First Wardens, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

Music.

Macfarren (W.), Memories, 8vo, 7/6

Political Economy.

Pigou (A. C.), Principles and Methods of Industrial Peace, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

History and Biography.

Paul (H.), A History of Modern England, Vol. 3, 8vo, 8/6 net.
Shorthouse (J. H.), Life and Letters, edited by his Wife, 2 vols. 8vo, 17/ net.
United States, by W. E. Chancellor: Part 2, 1698-1774, 8vo, 15/ net.
Wright (M. R.), The Republic of Chile, 4to, 42/ net.

Geography and Travel.

Cheshire, by W. M. Gallichan, illustrated by E. Hartley, 12mo, 2/6 net.
Firth (J. B.), Highways and Byways in Derbyshire, 8vo, 6/ net.
Hutchinson (G. T.), From the Cape to the Zambesi, 9/ net.
Malcolm (N.), Five Years in a Persian Town, 10/6 net.

Philology.

Browne (H.), Handbook of Homeric Study, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Cicero, Tusculanarum Disputationum Libri Quinque, edited by T. W. Dougan, Vol. 1, Books 1 and 2, 8vo, 10/ net.
Thucydides, Book 6, edited by A. W. Spratt, 12mo, 6/

Science.

Allen (C. W.) and others, Radiotherapy and Phototherapy, roy. 8vo, 22/6 net.
Atherton (W. H.), An Introduction to the Design of Beams, Girders, and Columns in Machines and Structures, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Buel (A. W.) and Hill (C. S.), Reinforced Concrete Construction, 8vo, 21/ net.
Herries (W.) and Pollock (G. C.), Hay Fever, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Lack (L. A. H.), An Introduction to Physiology, 8vo, 8/ net.
Longridge (C. C.), Gold Dredging, roy. 8vo, 10/ net.
Roger (G. H.), Infectious Diseases, their Etiology, &c., roy. 8vo, 30/ net.
Simpson (W. J.), A Treatise on Plague, roy. 8vo, 16/ net.

General Literature.

Frenssen (G.), Jörn Uhl, translated by F. S. Delmer, 6/ net.
Fuller (A.), A Bookful of Girls, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Gulick (S. L.), The White Peril in the Far East, 3/6 net.
Ireland (A.), The Far Eastern Tropics, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
Kennedy (S. R.), The Lodestar, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Marigold, by the Author of 'Jewel Sowers,' cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Marlow (L.), The Puppets' Dallying, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Raine (A.), Hearts of Wales, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Rennison (R.), Mixed Relationships, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Riego (Mlle.), Selected Works, Vol. 2, edited by Mrs. R. Turnbull, 4to, 2/6 net.
Turner (R.), Peace on Earth, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Wells (H. G.), A Modern Utopia, cr. 8vo, 7/6

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Cernik (B. O.), Die Schriftsteller der noch bestehenden Augustiner-Chorherrenstifte Oesterreichs von 1600 bis auf den heutigen Tag, 10m.
Maurer (F.), Völkerkunde, Bibel u. Christentum, Part 1, 5m.
Monnier (J.), La Descente aux Enfers, 7fr. 50.
Wabnitz (A.), Histoire de la Vie de Jésus, 7fr. 50.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Annales du Musée Guimet: La Légende de Koei Tseu Mou, Chen, 15fr.
Clère (J. F. C.), Causeries, Souvenirs, et Réflexions sur la Peinture, 3fr. 50.
Speck (B.), Handelsgeschichte des Altertums, Vol. 3, Part 1, 7m.
Vitry (P.), Les Villes d'Art Célèbres: Tours, 5fr.

Bibliography.

Cim (A.), Le Livre: Part 1, Historique, 5fr.

History and Biography.

Baudrillart (A.), Quatre Cents Ans de Concordat, 3fr. 50.
Bourgeois (E.), Manuel Historique de Politique Étrangère, Vol. 3, 6fr. 50.
Rieder (K.), Regesta Episcoporum Constantiensium: Vol. 2, 1293-1383, Part 7, 11m.

Education.

Parisot (E.), Un Éducateur Mystique, J. F. Oberlin, 5fr.

Philology.

Geiger (W.), Dipavamsa u. Mahāvamsa u. die geschichtliche Ueberlieferung in Ceylon, 4m. 50.

General Literature.

Claretie (J.), Brichanteau Célèbre, 3fr. 50.
Daudet (E.), L'Espionne, 3fr. 50; Gisèle Rubens, 3fr. 50.
Provins (M.), Le Fond Secret, 3fr. 50.
Saussey (V. du), Femme, Amour, Mensonges, 3fr. 50.
Vernon (Y.), Claire Maret, 3fr. 50.

HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS COMMISSION.

SOME RECENT REPORTS.

MSS. of the Earl of Mar and Kellie.—Although this collection cannot be regarded as one of the most complete of its kind, it will perhaps be found to contain as many important historical documents as could be reasonably expected to have survived an act of attainder, a disputed peerage claim, and an official association with the reigns of Mary Stuart and her son. In addition to the very interesting papers of the Regency period, there are some which will possibly be found to supplement the printed materials available for the fiscal administration of the northern kingdom during the reign of James VI. Between the years 1616 and 1631 the office of Lord Treasurer was held by John, second Earl of Mar, and the official memoranda preserved here in this connexion are of exceptional value. Amongst these are directions from the king, dated in 1621, for the reduction of what is described in the index as the "Civil List" of the Crown, and the casuistry employed by James in evading his obligations in this quarter is eminently characteristic. From the death of the second earl to the succession of the sixth of his line in the later Stuart period few papers of any description are preserved amongst these muniments. The bulk of the collection is concerned with the events which immediately preceded and followed the union with England, and with the negotiations for the conclusion of that much-debated measure.

The abstracts of the MSS. included in this Report have been prepared with much care and judgment by the editor, the Rev. Henry Paton, who was responsible for the preparation of an earlier Report on the Wedderburn MSS. Perhaps, however, the calendar of the earlier documents suffers from a brevity of form which constrains the editor to speak of Bulls by a pope, and of a "Passport" by a king, when letters of credence appear to be indicated. Some explanation also seems to be required in respect of the so-called mandate by Queen Mary in 1566, in the form of a joint precept by the king and queen attested as a warrant. Such a diplomatic medley, coupled with the very contentious nature of its purport, might almost afford cause for doubting the authenticity of this instrument, which might well have been printed in its original form.

The Dropmore MSS., Vol. IV.—Foreign historians have long since realized the fact that the most interesting ministerial correspondence of this country during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries must be looked for anywhere but in the national archives. Amongst these supplementary sources the State Papers preserved at Dropmore may perhaps be regarded as second only in historical importance to the collection formed two centuries earlier at Hatfield House. The present volume includes the papers written between November, 1797, and March, 1799, and, as before, these deal equally with domestic and foreign affairs. Under the former head the French invasion of Ireland and the procedure connected with the administration of the Militia Acts receive considerable notice. The confidential letters of the Marquis of Buckingham to Lord Grenville, commenting on the measures adopted for stamping out the rebellion, certainly afford disagreeable matter for reflection, though the writer's severe criticisms upon the organization of the national defences may be discounted to some extent by the uncompromising attitude which he had assumed towards the policy of certain of his colleagues upon this question. Amongst the documents printed here is the text of an intercepted letter from Matthew Tone, giving an interesting account of the landing of the French expedition, and expressing a confident anticipation of its success. On the very same page is printed a letter from the Marquis of Buckingham, describing Tone's arrest and execution.

Of far greater importance, as supplying a valuable context to the diplomatic correspondence of the period, are the papers dealing with the foreign policy of England during the inception of the second coalition against France. These papers, which occupy the greater part of the present volume, enable us to realize very clearly the objects which Pitt and Grenville had in view throughout the course of the negotiations with the continental Courts, whilst the information conveyed by Thomas Grenville, and by the agents Stamford and De Luc, supplies a void in the official series. The general impression derived from a perusal of these intimate dispatches is certainly favourable to the view of the intelligence and independent initiative displayed by Lord Grenville in the conduct of the Foreign Department.

Royal Institution: American MSS., Vol. I.—This important collection may be considered to have formerly belonged to the head-quarter staff of the British army in America during the revolutionary war. Its value consists in the preservation of a series of official documents which is scarcely represented in the archives of the War Department. These documents are, in fact, the military orders of the commander-in-chief in America issued to the divisional commanders and individual officers. They are analogous to the legation archives which also have no been preserved in official custody before the beginning of the last century. As might have been expected, the military correspondence preserved in this collection chiefly relates to the campaign in the Southern States—Georgia, Carolina, and the Floridas—though there are also many references to Nova Scotia, and some to Canada and the north-western borders. In addition to the actual correspondence we find numerous miscellaneous papers of considerable value, including statistical records connected with the service inquiry of 1781 and proceedings for the relief of American loyalists. These documents may be regarded as supplementing the records in official custody, whilst the official dispatches of the military commanders addressed to the British Government are for the most part duplicated in the public archives. The papers included in this volume extend from the year 1776 to 1781.

It will be evident that for an intelligent and exact arrangement and description of a collection of this nature the editor must possess a thorough knowledge of the existing sources. In this respect the Commissioners were fortunate in securing the services of the late B. F. Stevens, whose remarkable researches in the official archives for the whole of the revolutionary period have been frequently noticed in these columns. With the assistance of his famous manuscript index, Mr. Stevens and the capable assistants who still continue his work were able to discover the precise relationship and consequent importance of almost every document included in this Report. The same critical apparatus was employed, it will be remembered, in the Report on the Dartmouth MSS., also prepared by Stevens. In the present case the effect is even more impressive, and the saving of space by curtailing the description of documents already printed, or mere duplicates, must be considerable. An edition of this kind stands absolutely alone amongst official calendars of modern State papers, and although its production was no doubt facilitated by the exceptional circumstances of the case, it will at least be invaluable as an object-lesson in the diplomatic description of historical documents of this period as striking as that which Dr. R. L. Poole has already provided in recent Reports of the Commission upon the mediæval muniments of certain cathedrals.

The Stuart Papers, Vol. II.—The second instalment of the Windsor collection comprises the papers between March and September, 1716. Whether these papers, in spite of their curious interest, are worth the detailed description awarded to them in this bulky volume we entertain considerable doubt. In respect both of matter and style one of these Jacobite letters is much like another, and a resolute editor, armed with a key to the cipher, could make very short work of these monotonous effusions without much loss of historical or literary interest.

In one aspect the main contents of the present volume may be considered as the sequel to the family papers of the Earls of Mar referred to in connexion with another Report. The latter are chiefly concerned with the doings of the sixth earl previous to his adhesion to the Jacobite cause. Here we have a record of his official correspondence in the capacity of Secretary of State to the Pretender. Perhaps the most noticeable feature of this singular correspondence is the audacity displayed by the exiles and their English sympathizers in the face of the severities which their unfortunate partisans in Northern Britain were even then suffering at the hands of the triumphant Hanoverians. A new project was at this time under consideration for the simultaneous invasion of England from the south-east and south-west. The chief difficulty by which the conspirators were faced seems to have been to furnish a plausible excuse for the tardy arrival and precipitate departure of the Pretender himself from the scene of the late rebellion. Even the long official experience of the "Duke" of Mar was unequal to this delicate task. This Report, like the preceding one, has been skillfully prepared by Mr. Blackburne-Daniell, the learned editor of the Rolls Calendar of Domestic State Papers for the reign of Charles II.

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT AT SOMERSET HOUSE.

April 10, 1905.

IN your issue of May 30th, 1903, you were kind enough to insert a letter of mine drawing public attention to the grievances of those using the Literary Search Room at Somerset House. Since that letter appeared, several important changes have been carried out by the authorities. To begin with, the then senior attendant, who for many years ruled the room and its frequenters, has passed into well-earned retirement, his place being filled by a much younger man. The hours have been extended from half-past three to four, which enables workers to put in a fair day's work. Seats are granted to applicants much more readily than formerly, and the fourteenth seat, previously only granted as a favour, has now been permanently added to the accommodation of the room. Nor is this all. Rumours are afloat that some additional books of reference are to be placed at the searcher's disposal.

As I was the first to call attention to the restrictions placed on workers in the room, I feel sure you will allow me to congratulate the authorities on these improvements and to assure them that they have the gratitude and thanks of myself and my fellow-workers.

At the same time, while we greatly appreciate the improved conditions, we venture to hope that, while they are on the path of reform, they will carry out in due time other and even more needful alterations.

Above all, their attention, and that of the Treasury, is earnestly directed to the present illegible state of the calendars. No satisfactory search for a lengthened period can be made from them, and it is necessary to send for those in the public room upstairs, which means additional work for the attendants.

Not only should an effort be made to restore these calendars, but also to make the set complete, so that it would be unnecessary to bring the calendars from upstairs at all.

In the second place, we submit, with all respect, that the electric light should have been installed in Room No. 9 before it was installed in Room No. 32. The Literary Search Department in Room No. 9 is below the ground-floor, with an outlook into an area, and is never, at the best of times, too well lighted, whereas Room No. 32 is on the ground-floor, overlooking the Embankment, and is in every sense a well-lighted apartment. But at any rate, when the electric light was carried into the passage adjoining Room No. 9, the omission to carry it into the room requires explanation.

Again, it would be much appreciated if the authorities could increase the number of registers permitted to one reader in a day. It is not as though all the readers in one day required the full number. Probably not half do so, and if the number was increased from eight to ten, the total of volumes carried in a day would only be slightly in excess of the present number, and would not impose any hurtful strain on the physical powers of the attendants.

I repeat that I and my fellow-workers are grateful for what has been done. We are grateful that the authorities are beginning to recognize that the day of chaining up and muzzling the unfortunate person who wants to see a will, as if he was a dangerous lunatic, is gone for ever, and we live in hopes that one of these days the Literary Search Department at Somerset House will be all that could be desired.

ARCHIVIST.

THE FIRST USE OF ARABIC AND SYRIAC TYPE IN ENGLAND.

Oxford.

THE use of Arabic and Syriac type in England can be carried a few years further back than Mr. Talbot Reed was able to do in his 'History of Old English Letter Foundries' (London, 1887), which is the recognized authority on such points. He did not find any book in which Arabic occurred earlier than 1648, when Miles Flesher printed at London a work 'De Siglis Arabum.' And of Syriac he says that it "did not make its appearance in England till the middle of the seventeenth century"—in fact, not till the prospectus and specimen of Walton's Polyglot were issued in 1652.

In turning over a volume of the Thomason Civil War Tracts at the British Museum lately, I was struck by a profusion of types of both languages in the margins of 'A Discovery of the Rebels' and 'The Great Antichrist,' both by "J. V., Prisoner," and dated 1643. Thomason has noted that the author was Vicars, who was not the well-known John Vicars, author of the 'Parliamentary Chronicle,' but John Viccars, an Oriental scholar, who was concerned with the preparation of the Polyglot mentioned above. And on reference to Viccars's one great work, the 'Decapla in Psalmos' (Londini, apud Robertum Young, Anno M.D.C.XXXIX.), the position became clear. The 'Decapla' is a commentary on the Psalms from sources written in ten languages, and the title expressly states that it was "Novis Typis Arab. & Syriacis Donatus." Here, then, is the first use of Arabic and Syriac printing in England, in 1639. The whole fount is displayed on the last leaf of the prefatory matter, and even Arabic and Syriac ligatures are to be found in it.

The dedication to Archbishop Laud states that "Decapla hæc, post annum integrum sub prælo κλυδωνιζόμενα, novis Typis Syriacis & Arabicis (sumptibus haud exiguis) adornata, in lucem emittuntur." This carries back the actual printing to 1638, and fits in with the letter from John Greaves of February 10th, 1637/8 ('Domestic State Papers,' vol. 381, No. 75), where a rather indefinite mention is made of a purchase of Oriental punchcons (and matrixes?) by a Mr. Browne on the Continent. This letter is mentioned by Mr. Talbot Reed. Even the "J. V. Prisoner" is cleared up in the same dedication, where the author speaks of himself as "post septennii vincula captivus."

It is interesting to note that in this very year 1639, when Dr. Thomas Greaves printed his oration 'De Linguae Arabicæ utilitate' and wished to print an Arabic sentence, it is found in some copies written in Arabic, and in some copies printed in Hebrew type! The first Arabic printing at Oxford was in 1648, and the first Syriac in 1661. FALCONER MADAN.

SHELLEY'S STANZA-NUMBERING IN THE 'ODE TO NAPLES.'

46, Marlborough Hill, St. John's Wood.

IN connexion with your review of Mr. Hutchinson's edition of Shelley's poetry, your readers may be interested to know—and I am sure Mr. Hutchinson will—that complete evidence exists on the subject of the numbering which Shelley meant to be adopted for the divisions of the 'Ode to Naples.' Since my last annotated edition of Shelley was published I have unearthed and acquired a manuscript which settles the matter. The text of the poem is laboriously written in the hand of Claire Clairmont on eight octavo pages, spaces being left for three foot-notes, which are supplied in Shelley's writing. The text is touched up by Shelley throughout. He has carefully attended to the clearness of the numeration, and he has initialed the poem at the end "P. B. S." The transcript was evidently meant for printer's copy, and has been folded up as if to enclose in a letter—perhaps another proffered liberality to Hunt for The Examiner, not made use of!

The numbering of divisions turns out to be precisely that supplied by Mr. Hutchinson on rejecting Mr. Locock's suggested numeration, and the last hope is taken away from those who would like to clear Shelley of the imputation of calling two introductory stanzas epodes. This he unquestionably did, although, curiously enough, the long introductory note below them is not in this manuscript—not that the note is to be, therefore, rejected, although, in regard to text, the revised transcript, of course, takes, as a revision of the Oxford holograph, the same position as Mrs. Shelley's copy of 'The Mask of Anarchy,' revised by Shelley, takes towards his not fully revised holograph of that poem.

The foot-notes to the 'Ode to Naples' exercised me somewhat, I remember, before I decided to attribute them positively to Shelley. The most interesting point about these notes was to have it on his own express authority who were the "dead Kings of Melody" in Epode II. a; and here the time-honoured statement "Homer and Virgil" stands in his handwriting.

H. BUXTON FORMAN.

SCOTT'S 'BONNETS OF BONNIE DUNDEE.'

THE Capel Cure collection of autograph manuscripts and historical documents, which Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge will sell next month, will include the autograph manuscript of Scott's poem 'The Bonnets of Bonnie Dundee,' as originally written, in ten verses of eight lines. This song is introduced into the drama of 'The Doom of Devorgoil,' and the various interesting alterations made before the poem was published will be fully indicated in the sale catalogue. The note which accompanies the MS. contains the following passage:—

"I send the promised verses only two or three of which need be sung, you can assure Miss — [name cut out] in.....my best hand, the stile is somewhat pithy, but a little must be allowed for a great grandson of a Killiecrankie man."

The song was written at Christmas, 1825, and in his diary of December 22nd of that year Scott notes:—

"The air of Bonny Dundee is running in my head to-day, I wrote a few verses of it before dinner, taking the key-note from the story of Clavers leaving the Scottish Convention of Estates, 1688-9. I wonder if they are good. Ah, poor Will Erskine, thou couldst and wouldst have told me, I must consult J.B., who is as honest as was W.E. But there, though he has taste too, there is a little of the Big Bow-wow about it. Can't say what made me take a frisk so uncommon of late years as to write verses of free will. I suppose the same impulse which makes birds sing, when the storm has blown over."

W. R.

WORDSWORTH SOURCES.

BOWLES AND KEATE.

THE literary influence of William Lisle Bowles on Coleridge has often been exploited, although not always with enough discrimination and attention to detail. Has the possibility of an influence by Bowles on Wordsworth ever been seriously examined? Wordsworth, who must early have become acquainted with some of Bowles's "soft strains," was likely for several reasons to give them a more sympathetic hearing than is nowadays accorded Coleridge's prime favourite.

In Coleridge's lines 'To a Young Lady' (1792) the couplet

My soul amid the pensive twilight gloom
Mourned with the breeze, O Lee Boo! o'er thy Tomb, might easily savour of the "pensive" Bowles, especially if the latter's poem 'Abba Thule's Lament for his Son Prince Le Boo' were prior in composition. Lacking the needful editions of Bowles, I cannot answer on the question of priority. However, 'Abba Thule' was in existence before a threnody by Wordsworth, to which it bears a resemblance worthy of notice. I refer to 'The Affliction of Margaret —.'

The Fenwick note records, with trustworthy assurance, that 'The Affliction of Margaret —' "was taken from the case of a poor widow" in Penrith, whose "sorrow was well known"; "she kept a shop, and when she saw a stranger passing by, she was in the habit of going out into the street to enquire of him after her son." Upon such basis in real life Wordsworth builds his elaborate conception of the shadings and fluctuations of hope and fear and uncertainty in the unhappy Margaret, ignorant of the fate of her "bold," "well-born," "well-bred," and "beauteous" child. Whether or not in the attainment of his idealized picture the poet was at all supported by the inferior yet sometimes admirable imagination of Bowles may be left to the judgment of the reader. The conception of Bowles's 'Lament' is roughly the same as that of Wordsworth's poem, centring in "Abba Thule's" distraction over the inexplicable non-return of his "brave," "bland," and "beauteous" prince, and his self-questionings in the effort to explain this grievous enigma:—

Has the fell storm o'erwhelmed him! Has its sweep Buried the bounding vessel in the deep!
Is he cast bleeding on some desert plain!
Upon his father did he call in vain!
Have pitiless and bloody tribes defiled
The cold limbs of my brave, my beauteous child!

a passage badly echoed by the personification of Mania in stanza xxiv. of Bowles's 'Hope: an Allegorical Sketch':—

Now ravingly she cried: The whelming main—
The wintry wave rolls over his cold head;
I never shall behold his form again;
Hence flattering fancies—he is dead, is dead!
Perhaps on some wild shore he may be cast,
Where on their prey barbarians howling rush,
Oh, fiercer they, than is the whelming blast!
Hush, my poor heart! my wakeful sorrows, hush!
He lives! I yet shall press him to my heart
And cry, Oh no, no, no,—we never more will part!

Although this feeble stanza may prove not uninteresting on comparison with Wordsworth's poem, it is rather the preceding passage, ll. 55-60 of the more praiseworthy 'Lament,' that seems to offer a fairly demonstrable parallel to 'The Affliction of Margaret —,' stanza viii.:

Perhaps some dungeon hears thee groan,
Maimed, mangled by inhuman men;
Or thou upon a desert thrown
Inheritest the lion's den;
Or hast been summoned to the deep,
Thou, and all thy mates, to keep
An incommunicable sleep.

Coleridge annotates the name Lee Boo in the couplet quoted above with a reference to a book of travels that turns out to be the source of Bowles's 'Lament.' This is, namely, "An Account of the Pelew Islands.....composed from the Journals and Communications of Captain Henry Wilson, [&c.] By George Keate: London, 1788" (Fourth Edition, 1789). Keate's was a popular narrative in a large contemporary literature of travel, eagerly read by Coleridge and Wordsworth. Coleridge's avidity for such works ought to be more narrowly examined; and Wordsworth's reading of itineraries, for example in 1798, deserves most careful scrutiny. There is no doubt that it formed an essential feature of his preparation for the great poem then incipient. He read, I believe, practically all voyages by land or sea that friends could place at his disposal, gaining a fund of information that reappears also in his lesser narratives and descriptions. Accordingly, following so obvious a clue as Bowles's and Coleridge's familiarity with Keate, we need not be surprised to find in the 'Account' something of possible utility in the study of 'The Affliction of Margaret —.'

Keate's narrative includes a detailed recital of how King Abba Thulle sent his beloved son out from the Pelew Islands to visit England with Capt. Wilson; of Lee Boo's extraordinary "ease," "affability," and "good-breeding"; of his success in making friends; finally, of his sudden death (1784), and his burial "in Rotherhithe church-yard." It may be that the popular memory of this ingenuous youth was preserved until Wordsworth's acquaintance with London (the grave, it seems, is still marked), for "the concourse of people at the [funeral] was so great, that it appeared as if the whole parish had assembled to join in seeing the last ceremonies paid to one who was so much beloved by all who had known him in it" (Keate, p. 389). "The India Company" erected a tablet over his grave, where as a schoolboy Coleridge may indeed have "mourned," although he afterwards inexactly recalls the tomb as at Greenwich.

Meanwhile, the trustful father is in total ignorance of his son's mischance. Keate's reflections on the possible feelings of "the good Abba Thulle" in his far-off home are of peculiar interest, because of their similarity to the alterations of hope and fear in the afflicted Margaret. The island king, having ascertained that Lee Boo was to be gone thirty-six "moons" at the longest, had contrived a calendar in the shape of a knotted line by which to reckon the elapsing time of separation. Then comes the compiler's gratuitous embellishment:—

"As the slow but sure steps of Time have been moving onward, the Reader's imagination will figure the anxious parent, resorting to this cherished remembrancer.....When verging towards the termination of his latest reckoning, he will then picture his mind glowing with parental affection, occasionally alarmed by doubt—yet still buoyed up by hope;.....Lastly, he will view the good Abba Thulle, wearied out by that expectation, which so many returning moons since his reckoning ceased, have by this time taught him he had nourished in vain.—But the Reader will bring him back to his remembrance, as armed with that unshaken fortitude that was equal to the Trials of varying life.—He will not in him, as in less manly spirits, see the passions rushing into opposite extremes—Hope turned to Despair—Affection converted to Hatred.—No—After some allowance for their natural fermentation, he will suppose them all placidly subsiding into the Calm of Resignation!—Should this not be absolutely the case of our friendly King—as the human mind is far more pained by uncertainty than a knowledge of the worst—every reader will lament, he should to this moment remain ignorant, that his long-looked-for Son can return no more."—Keate, pp. 392, 393; cf. 'The Affliction of Margaret —,' stanzas i., ii., v.; 'The Forsaken,' i. l. 6. &c.

What response Keate's appeal to his reader may have found in Wordsworth's imagination will be evident, I think, to all who consult that marvellous study 'The Affliction of Margaret —,' with its "overflow," 'The Forsaken.' I shall not discuss the delicate relations between Wordsworth's "case" in real life and the materials that he amplified from what seems his literary source. Still it may be in place to note that the poet's eye was probably struck by the illustration on p. 364 of Keate's 'Account,' representing 'Prince Lee Boo, second Son of Abba Thulle,' "drawn by Miss Keate," "engraved by T. Kirke." Assuredly it is An object beauteous to behold.

Wordsworthians will readily bring to mind the connexion between the "Youth from Georgia's shore" in 'Ruth' and the frontispiece, "Mico Chlucco, the Long Warrior, King of the Siminoles," in Bartram's 'Travels.' It is not uncharacteristic of Wordsworth to fuse the lineaments or trappings of an aborigine in his projection of one who "spake the English tongue."

BARTRAM.

Wordsworth's obligation to the naturalist William Bartram having long been a matter of comment, Prof. Knight embodied in his later edition of the 'Poems' (1896, vol. ii. pp. 105—108) a number of the foot-notes to 'Ruth,' indicating various adaptations from the American's captivating 'Travels' (cf. Dowden, 'Poems by Wordsworth,' 1898, pp. 378-9; Athenæum, August 12th, 1893; January 27th, February 24th, 1894). As a matter of fact, the poet's real indebtedness to this impassioned scientist would not be wholly laid bare by a mere citation of the numerous parallels in both, however advantageous such preliminary might be. One may assume that Bartram's ideal (Introduction, pp. xxiv, xxv) of an essential, all-pervading moral intelligence "which animates the inimitable machines" of nature, sufficiently approaches Wordsworth's "moral life" in "every natural form" to warrant a deeper study of Bartram.

While running through Bartram's romantic descriptions in order to fix their responsibility for some of the images in Coleridge's 'Kubla Khan'—cf. 'Travels through North and South Carolina, Georgia, East and West Florida,' &c., Part II. chap. v. (Philadelphia, 1791, pp. 165 ff.)—the present writer incidentally made note of a few passages that may add to our understanding of Wordsworth.

In 'The Prelude,' Book III., Wordsworth, dissatisfied with conditions at Cambridge, figures forth (ll. 427-41) an ideal spot for an educational community:—

Oh, what joy
To see a sanctuary for our country's youth
Informed with such a spirit as might be
Its own protection; a primeval grove,
Where, though the shades with cheerfulness were filled,
Nor indigent of songs warbled from crowds
In under-coverts, yet the countenance
Of the whole place should bear a stamp of awe
A habitation sober and demure
For ruminating creatures; a domain
For quiet things to wander in; a haunt
In which the heron should delight to feed
By the shy rivers, and the pelican
Upon the cypress spire in lonely thought
Might sit and sun himself.

In other words, the poet would transport his country's youth to the banks of the Alatamaha, in Georgia. As the Pantisocrats planned to unite their brotherhood of the golden age at some point along the Susquehanna—name of dulcet sound—so Wordsworth would situate his ideal school of nature beside the "peaceful stream" where Bartram, "secure and tranquil," meditated on scenes "as yet unmodified by the hand of man."

"I ascended this beautiful river," says our naturalist (pp. 48-9),

"on whose fruitful banks the generous and true sons of liberty securely dwell, fifty miles above the white settlements.....My progress was rendered delightful by the sylvan elegance of the groves, cheerful meadows, and high distant forests, which in grand order presented themselves to view. The winding banks of the river, and the high projecting promontories, unfolded fresh scenes of grandeur and sublimity. The deep forests and distant hills re-echoed the cheering social lowings of domestic herds. The air was filled with the loud and shrill whooping of the wary sharp-sighted crane. Behold, on yon decayed, defoliated Cypress tree, the solitary wood-pelican, dejectedly perched upon its utmost elevated spire; he there, like an ancient venerable sage, sets himself up as a mark of derision, for the safety of his kindred tribes."

The "wood-pelican" figures again on p. 150:—

"This solitary bird does not associate in flocks, but is generally seen alone;.....he stands alone on the topmost limb of tall dead Cypress trees, his neck contracted or drawn in upon his shoulders, and beak resting like a long scythe upon his breast: in this pensive posture and solitary situation, they look extremely grave, sorrowful and melancholy, as if in the deepest thought."

Similarly, Wordsworth's "crowds in under-coverts," composed, we may imagine, of "all little birds that are," may be traced to more than one section in Bartram:—

"At the cool eve's approach, the sweet enchanting melody of the feathered songsters gradually ceases, and they betake themselves to their leafy coverts for seclusion and repose."—Pp. 81, 82; cf. pp. 105-6.

Again:—

"In the spring of the year the small birds of passage appear very suddenly in Pennsylvania, which is not a little surprising, and no less pleasing: at once the woods, the groves, and meads, are filled with their melody, as if they dropped down from the skies. The reason or probable cause is their setting off with high and fair winds from the southward; for a strong south and south-west wind about the beginning of April never fails bringing millions of these welcome visitors"—P. 288; cf. 'The Rime of the Ancient Mariner,' ll. 358-62.

What Wordsworth takes from Bartram is hardly more interesting than what he neglects, and what he accepts with satisfaction by no means more than what he uses for purposes of disapproval. In ll. 427-41, Book III., 'Prelude,' it will be noticed, his appeals to the senses are visual and oral solely; in particular, he introduces nothing in the way of scented flower or shrub, although Bartram's landscape blossoms with "many an incense-bearing tree." This omission may be natural in a man with Wordsworth's defective sense of smell. The poet's adaptation, however, is in other ways more subdued than the rich sensuousness of his original might often permit, a result owing here partly to his temporary aim at an effect of quiet; owing elsewhere, perhaps, to a tacit criticism of Bartram's lack in imaginative restraint. The excessive richness of sub-tropical life and colour is not entirely to Wordsworth's liking. As he turns again from the ideal to the existent university, observe his method of disparagement:—

Alas! Alas!
In vain for such solemnity I looked;
Mine eyes were crossed by butterflies, ears vexed
By chattering popinjays; the inner heart
Seemed trivial, and the impresses without
Of a too gaudy region. 'Prelude,' Book III. ll. 441-6.

Cf. Bartram, 82, 91, 172; Introduction, xxviii, xxix, &c.

More mildly he depicts (ll. 329-36) his own "vague and loose indifference" in Cambridge days:—

The memory languidly revolved, the heart
Reposed in noontide rest, the inner pulse
Of contemplation almost failed to beat.
Such life might not inaptly be compared
To a floating island, an amphibious spot
Unsound, of spongy texture, yet withal
Not wanting a fair face of water weeds
And pleasant flowers.

Here Wordsworth, like Chateaubriand in the Prologue to 'Atala,' derives his image of a "floating island" from Bartram ('Travels,' pp. 88, 89, 426). "Pulse," in strange metaphorical usage, is common to both Bartram and Wordsworth. For the poet's self-criticism in "noontide rest," compare 'Stanzas written in my Pocket-Copy of Thomson's "Castle of Indolence,"' ii. ll. 8, 9,—

Retired in that sunshiny shade he lay;
And, like a naked Indian, slept himself away—with Bartram, p. 107:—

"How happily situated is this retired spot of earth! What an elisium it is! where the wandering Seminole, the naked red warrior, roams at large, and after the vigorous chase retires from the scorching heat of the meridian sun. Here he reclines, and reposes under the odoriferous shades of Zanthoxylon.....whilst the balmy zephyrs fan him to sleep."—Cf. p. 137.

Wordsworth's ill-concealed dissatisfaction with a too languid or "too gaudy region" is illustrated in the luxuriant descriptions with which his "youth from Georgia's shore" allures the guileless Ruth. It is a mistake to suppose (cf. Academy, Oct. 27th, 1897) that the poet's own best taste is reflected in the per-fervid stanza:—

He told of the Magnolia spread
High as a cloud, high over head!
The cypress and her spire;
—Of flowers that with one scarlet gleam
Cover a hundred leagues, and seem
To set the hills on fire.

Properly interpreted, this enticing stanza discloses the sensuous vision of a character condemned by the poet—of the panther-like youth who has accepted a dangerous education from nature. The highly-coloured source of the latter three lines is not included in Prof. Knight's foot-notes. It is found on p. 323 of the 'Travels':—

"The epithet fiery, I annex to this most celebrated species of Azalea, as being expressive of the appearance of it in flower, which are in general of the colour of the finest red lead, orange and bright gold.....the clusters of the blossoms cover the shrubs in such incredible profusion on the hill sides, that suddenly opening to view from dark shades, we are alarmed with the apprehension of the hills being set on fire."

The youth himself seems to be a modification of a half-breed mentioned by Bartram, pp. 506, 507:—

"The young mustee, who came with me to the Mucclases from Mobile, having Chactaw blood in his veins from his mother, was a sensible young fellow, and by his father had been instructed in reading, writing and arithmetic, and could speak English very well. He took it into his head, to travel into the Chactaw country; his views were magnanimous, and his designs in the highest degree commendable, nothing less than to inform himself of every species of arts and sciences, that might be of use and advantage, when introduced into his own country, but more particularly music and poetry; with these views he privately left the Nation, went to Mobile, and there entered into the service of the trading company to the Chactaws, as a white man; his easy, communicative, active and familiar disposition and manners, being agreeable to that people, procured him access every where, and favored his subtilty and artifice."—Cf. 'Ruth,' stanzas v., vi., viii., &c.

On p. 507 this "young Orpheus," who had "learned all their most celebrated new songs and poetry," chants a tale that greatly moves a young Chactaw slave-girl—an orphan, as it happens; and on p. 508 is a description of the "quick and sensible effect" of "these doleful moral songs or elegies" of the Chactaws; "a stranger is for a moment lost to himself as it were," and "in danger of revealing his own distress unawares." Coleridge intimated that he knew a source for Wordsworth's scenery in 'Ruth.' It is remarkable that no editor has ever identified the degenerate hero of that poem with Bartram's "young mustee."

The poet, of course, with unconscious freedom of selection and invention, moulds this personage for a special design, putting into his heart "the impresses" "of a too gaudy region," and storing his mind with Bartram's most unmeasured language. One may fancy that there is an implied censure of Bartram himself in some of the youth's attributes, since, for all his scientific interests, this naturalist shows an undeniable predilection for Whatever in those climes he found Irregular in sight or sound.

Witness his "subtle, greedy alligator":—

"The waters like a cataract descend from his opening jaws. Clouds of smoke issue from his dilated nostrils. The earth trembles with his thunder."—P. 118.

Incidentally, there is a criticism of Coleridge deducible from Wordsworth's lines just quoted, if the tumultuous imagery that passes from Bartram into 'Kubla Khan' be taken as indication of the dreamer's "kindred impulse" to "voluptuous thought," as well as of Mr. Kipling, who (cf. 'Wireless') regards Coleridge's "savage place," "holy and enchanted," with its "woman waiting for her demon-lover," as the high-water mark in English poetry.

Nevertheless, Wordsworth's imaginative acceptance of Bartram is in the long run sympathetic, as is shown by the frequency with which scenery and diction from the 'Travels' rise to the surface in his purest and most characteristic poetry. A justly famous passage in 'The Recluse' (ll. 198-229), describing "the evolutions" of waterfowl "over the Lakes of Rydal and Grasmere," if it is connected with something similar in Bartram, well exemplifies the poet's complete mastery in adapting an artistic source. As a professional ornithologist Bartram was deeply interested in the flight of birds:—

"Behold the loud, sonorous, watchful savanna crane.....in detached squadrons. They raise their light elastic sail:.....they all rise and fall together as one bird; now they mount aloft, gradually wheeling about, each squadron performs its evolution, incircling the expansive plain, observing each one their own orbit; then lowering sail, descend on the verge of some glittering lake; whilst other squadrons, ascending aloft in spiral circles, bound on interesting discoveries, wheel round and double the promontory, in the silvery regions of the clouded skies, where, far from the scope of the eye, they carefully observe the verdant meadows on the borders of the East Lake; then contract their plumes and descend to the earth;.....they confer and treat for habitation; the bounds and precincts being settled, they confederate and take possession."—Pp. 146-7; cf. pp. 149, 190.

So much for "waterfowl." What of the "night bird"? All readers know Wordsworth's gifted boy who Blew mimic hootings to the silent owls, and recall the unwonted terms in which their answers are announced ('Prelude,' V. ll. 374-377):—

..... and they would shout
Across the watery vale, and shout again,
Responsive to his call, with quivering peals,
And long halloos and screams, and echoes loud.

Is it pure coincidence that Bartram employs similar diction for the same bird?—

"I was awakened and greatly surprised by the terrifying screams of Owls.....screaming and shouting, which increased and spread every way for miles around, in dreadful peals vibrating through the dark extensive forests, meadows and lakes."—P. 135.

Other, more peculiar, diction may come from Bartram. Prof. Dowden once suggested (Athenæum, February 24th, 1894) an explanation for the "collocation" of pulse and machine in the lines:—

And now I see with eye serene
The very pulse of the machine, by a like "collocation" in the 'Travels' (p. 179):—

"At the return of the morning, by the powerful influence of light; the pulse of nature becomes more active, and the universal vibration of life insensibly and irresistibly moves the wondrous machine."

The suggestion is defensible, since one may discover in Bartram's conception of natural phenomena a possible foundation for more than one unexpected combination in the poet. For example, in 'Ruth,' which is "saturated" with Bartram,

The engines of her pain, the tools
That shaped her sorrow,

—namely,

rocks and pools,
And airs that gently stir
The vernal leaves—betray a philosophy not wholly foreign to Bartram's notion of an immanent spirit penetrating all the individual mechanisms of nature. And again, the dictum in 'Stanzas suggested.....off Saint Bees' Heads' (l. 157),

Matter and spirit are as one machine, is wholly in keeping with the creed in the 'Travels,' and more likely to have come from them than from other sources sometimes advanced for Wordsworth's "pantheism." The most typical expression of that creed is put in the form of a question, in a passage already referred to:—

"If then the visible, the mechanical part of the animal creation, the mere material part is so admirably beautiful, harmonious and incomprehensible, what must be the intellectual system, that inexpressibly more essential principle, which secretly operates within? that which animates the inimitable machines, which gives them motion, impowers them to act, speak and perform, this must be divine and immortal?"—Introduction, pp. xxiv, xxv.

Have we not here in queried form something like that "pulse" which the serene, undoubting eye of the poet beholds in his 'Phantom of Delight'?
LANE COOPER.

SALE.

MESSRS. HODGSON included in their sale last week the following: Gould's Birds of Europe, 5 vols., 33l. Seeborn's Monograph of the Turdidæ (Family of Thrushes), 2 vols., 13l. 5s. Lord Overstone's Tracts on the National Debt, Paper Currency, &c., 4 vols.,

10l. 15s. Harleian Society's Publications, from the commencement to 1904, with the Register Section, 83 vols., 30l. Privately Printed Visitations by Foster, Metcalfe, &c., 17 vols., 15l. 10s. The Index Library from 1888 to 1904, 32 vols., 6l. 10s. Yorkshire Archaeological and Topographical Association's Journal, 18 vols., and Record Series, 34 vols., 12l. 7s. 6d. Whitaker's Richmondshire, 2 vols., 7l. Folk-Lore Society's Publications, a complete set to 1902, 51 vols., 20l. Villon Society's Publications, 22 vols., 18l. 7s. Wordsworth's Ode to Charles Lamb, the rare privately printed issue, 20l.

Literary Gossip.

IN the Cornhill Magazine for May Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge criticizes the 'Redistribution of the Fleet'; Mrs. Frederic Harrison gives some recollections of the 'French Refugees to England in 1871-2'; and Mr. Richard Barry, the American war correspondent, describes the 'Siege and Fall of Port Arthur.' Sir Rowland Blennerhassett writes an appreciation of Arthur Strong, the late Librarian of the House of Lords; while an anonymous writer begins a series of articles entitled 'From a College Window.' Dr. W. H. D. Rouse touches the Greek question in 'A Plea for the Useless'; Prof. Bonney writes, in view of the recent discovery in the Premier Mine, of 'A Home of Diamonds'; and Mr. Leonard Huxley contributes a poem, 'The Rock Garden.'

AMONGST the papers in the May issue of Chambers's Journal will be 'Deer Forests, Economically Considered,' in which the monetary value of these to the Highlands is shown. Mr. John Oxenham has a paper on Sark as a holiday resort; Mr. T. H. Escott writes on 'Social Pioneers of Science'; Mr. A. F. Steuart revives, from an old journal, the story of a journey with Sir Walter Scott to the Continent in 1815; and the Rev. Reginald A. Gatty gives a popular account of how to recognize and gather flint arrow-heads and scrapers in England in a paper entitled 'The Home of the Pigmies.' There are also several travel and holiday papers.

A TRANSLATION into Urdu of Miss Gabrielle Festing's volume 'From the Land of Princes,' which was published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. in the late autumn of last year, is being made by Mr. S. Warman, editor of The Arya Gazette, Lahore.

MR. MARTIN J. BLAKE is engaged on compiling the second volume of the 'Blake Family Records,' which will contain a calendar of documents relating to the family during the seventeenth century, in continuation of the first volume, which contained those concerning the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The work will include some interesting facts about the "plantation" of the province of Connaught with English settlers in 1635, and the fourteen ancient "Tribes" of Galway. It will be illustrated by facsimiles of documents, coats of arms, pedigrees, ancient seals, &c., and will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock.

THE Bunbury letters which Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge will sell by auction in about a fortnight are of considerable literary interest, and some of them (since they come from the family) have probably never been printed. Of the two by Goldsmith, a long one, of four pages quarto, written in 1771, is addressed to Mrs. Bunbury, the beautiful sister of "the Jessamy Bride," and is a mixture of verse and prose. The second letter is to H. W. Bunbury, and in part relates to 'She Stoops to Conquer.' There are many important and interesting letters from Charles James Fox and from the first and third Lords Holland, and others addressed to various members of the Fox family. Four letters by Pope to Lord Strafford (July-October, 1725) deal largely with Sir Godfrey Kneller; eleven letters are by Matthew Prior, and addressed to Sir Thomas Hanmer (1706-16), to whom is also addressed a letter by Swift from Dublin of October 1st, 1720.

JUST as we go to press we are sorry to see the death on Friday last week of an admirable classical scholar, Mr. Franklin T. Richards, of whom we hope to have an extended notice next week.

SIR HERBERT STEPHEN writes:—

"In your notice, on the 15th inst., of Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff's 'Notes from a Diary, 1896-1901,' you say: 'Surely the saying of J. K. S. is spoilt, and should run "Heaven lies about us in our infancy, and we lie about ourselves in our old age." I cannot, at this moment, refer to Sir Mountstuart's volume, and do not know what version of the little jest he has published; but if he recorded it in or after 1896, he probably did not hear of it until some time after my brother's death, which happened in 1892. The words in which, if I remember right, my brother repeated the phrase to me, soon after he first used it, were: 'It may be true that Heaven lies about us in our infancy, but that is no reason why we should lie about Heaven in our old age.'"

The version of 1900 in the 'Notes from a Diary' agrees with our correspondent's account. Our own appeared in print much earlier. Both are good.

THE London School of Economics and Political Science announce for the opening of the summer term evening lectures from May 1st to 5th in the following order:—Monday: 'The Law of Nations concerning Neutrality,' by Dr. Oppenheim; Tuesday: 'Currency, Banking, and the Money Market,' by Prof. Foxwell; Wednesday: 'Illuminated Manuscripts,' with lantern illustrations, by Sir E. Maunde Thompson; Thursday: 'Immigration,' by Mr. Herbert Samuel, M.P.; and Friday: 'The Geographical Conditions of Modern International Politics,' by Mr. H. J. Mackinder.

THE Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge will issue the following publications early in May: 'This Church and Realm'; 'Modern Criticism and the Book of Genesis,' by the Rev. H. A. Redpath; 'Some Types of Devotional Life in the Church of England in the Nineteenth Century,' by Canon Bodington; 'The Foundations of a Happy Life,' by the Very Rev. C. T. Ovenden; 'The Difficulties of Unbelief,' by the Rev. Innes B. Wane; 'The Freedom of the So-called Free Churches, illustrated by the History of the Free Church of Scotland,' by the Rev. A. J. C. Allen; 'Some Post-Reformation Saints,' by the late Canon Overton; 'The Puritans and the Tithes,' by the late T. Hancock; and 'The Fall of Le Grand Sarrasin,' by the Rev. W. J. Ferrar.

THE idiosyncrasies of the sale-room would form a long and interesting chapter in the history of literary bypaths. For a certain book in the recent John Scott sale a buyer gave a commission of something like five times the amount he had paid for a similar copy in stock. Another case occurred in the recent sale in New York of Bishop Hurst's library. Some years ago W. R. Benjamin, the bookseller, purchased Hawthorne's set of Shakspeare in fourteen volumes, in each of which was Hawthorne's autograph. Benjamin made various efforts to sell the set, but no one cared to purchase; at last Bishop Hurst gave him forty-five dollars. At the bishop's sale the other week the set was the object of very keen competition, and at last realized 1,400 dollars.

It has been decided, on the initiative of the Revue Politique et Littéraire, to celebrate the centenary of Auguste Barbier, who was born in Paris on April 28th, 1805, and died at Nice on February 14th, 1882. His long list of works includes a translation of Shakspeare's 'Julius Cæsar' into French verse (1874). One of his earliest and most famous works, 'Iambes: la Curée,' was inspired by the intrigues which centred round the new king after the Revolution of July, and appeared in the Revue de Paris of August, 1830. Barbier was elected to the Académie Française on April 29th, 1869, and his "éloge" at that place was delivered by the Bishop of Autun on April 19th, 1883.

PIERRE LOTI's new book, 'La Troisième Jeunesse de Madame Prune,' has just appeared, and, says the Débats, has reached its twenty-ninth edition in two days. A similar success by a stylist in England would be impossible.

THE Parliamentary Papers of the week include a Return dealing with Agricultural and Technical Instruction Schemes, Ireland (2d.).

SCIENCE

Great Zimbabwe, Mashonaland, Rhodesia: an Account of Two Years' Examination Work in 1902-4 on behalf of the Government of Rhodesia. By R. N. Hall. With an Introduction by Prof. A. H. Keane. (Methuen & Co.)

THE great interest which was excited in 1891 by the discoveries of the late Mr. Theodore Bent (to whose memory Mr. Hall very gracefully dedicates this volume) will induce many readers to consult this record of more recent, more prolonged, and more thorough investigations on the spot than Mr. Bent had the opportunity of making. Mr. Hall read a paper on the subject before the British Association at Cambridge in August, 1904, and this work (pp. xliii + 459) gives a full and detailed account of all that has been discovered not only in the limited area of 945 by 480 yards explored by Mr. Bent, but also in the range of 2 by 1½ miles over which the ruins extend, so far as they have yet been examined. They probably cover a much larger area still.

The city of Great Zimbabwe doubtless owed its importance to the gold-mining industry, which continued to be practised during many centuries. Ornaments of manufactured gold have been found in association with the oldest form of relics. Gold ornaments have been found buried with corpses, in some cases in such quantity as to weigh seventy-two ounces. It will be inferred from this that the ruins relate to different periods of time. The more interesting features, the great conical tower, and other portions of the group of buildings enclosed within the massive elliptical walls, called the elliptical temple, are of very high antiquity. Mr. Hall's theory is that after the departure of the ancient builders and occupiers the temple became a ruin, and that in the course of some centuries of neglect a considerable portion of the south wall and the whole of the west wall were destroyed by natural causes, being exposed to torrents of rain and storm-water descending from the hills.

The "elliptical temple," as a whole, forms a group of buildings 833 ft. in circumference. The striking feature of its construction is that the plan is curvilinear. The more ancient parts of the outer wall are marvels of careful and orderly masonry in regular courses of dressed stone, surmounted by a chevron pattern for 265½ ft. Over the pattern are granite monoliths, and traces of small circular towers. In the interior the most interesting objects are the conical towers, which are within what is called the sacred enclosure, and are approached by a narrow parallel passage inside the eastern wall. The larger of the conical towers was, in 1891, 32 ft. high, but it has, unfortunately, suffered considerable dilapidation since that time. The circumference at the base is about 57½ ft., gradually diminishing to 30 ft. at the height of 27½ ft., where the broken portion of the summit commences.

The smaller conical tower has been almost wholly destroyed, only three to six feet in height being left. It is all solid masonry, 21½ ft. in circumference at base, and nearly 20 ft. at 4 ft. above the base. Much of the destruction has taken place within the last few years. Assuming that these towers had an astronomical object, Schlichter and others have calculated a date of about 1100 B.C. for their construction. The parallel passage between high walls narrows at places to 2 ft. 6 in.

The most remarkable relics found in these ruins are the bird effigies in soapstone, and the representations of the phallus. Of these latter at least 100 have been discovered, showing that the veneration of the reproductive principle formed an important part of the cult of the builders. The bird effigies are supposed to be connected with the worship of the Sabæan Venus, Almaquah.

On the hill above the ruins of the elliptical temple are the remains of a fortress to which has been given the name of the acropolis. It is designed on the same curvilinear method as the other buildings.

Among the approaches is a rock passage even more narrow than the parallel passage of the temple, for at one point it is less than 2 ft. wide. In the acropolis, as in the temple, though the ruin began centuries ago, it is melancholy to find that much damage has been done during the last few years, so that in parts the paths are dangerous. At the most westerly point of the ruins is what is called the western temple, built at a height of 220 ft. above the valley on the summit of the precipitous side of the hill, whence a splendid view of the ruins of the valley is obtained. The remains of the curved western wall, with its wide summit, along which are alternating monoliths and conical towers, adjoin those of this building. Another temple is on the eastern side.

Mr. Hall has done well in limiting the scope of his work to the accurate and detailed description of the actual facts under his observation, and not indulging the temptation to wander in the seductive paths of theory. His book will be found most valuable by any members of the British Association who may be induced to make these ruins a part of their South African research.

In the introduction which Prof. Keane has contributed to the volume he commends the method which Mr. Hall has adopted of stating only the facts that he has accumulated, and leaving the inferences to be drawn from them to the independent work of others. Dr. Keane himself goes further, and maintains his opinion that the true source of these wonderful prehistoric remains is in South Arabia, Phœnicia, and Palestine. He contends that the Semitic treasure-seekers reached Tarshish, the present Sofala, through Madagascar; and in answer to the criticisms with which his theory has been met he adduces the evidence of intercourse between the Jews and that island, even in pre-Solomonic days, collected by M. Grandidier. A curious circumstance is that, though no inscriptions have yet been discovered, an object having the signs of the zodiac carved round the rim was found near Great Zimbabwe. Dr. Keane seeks to show that this object may be of high antiquity, as the ancient Babylonian calendar had the zodiacal signs, which, according to Prof. Sayce, had been marked out before 2000 B.C.

However fascinating these researches into hoary antiquity may be, the great value of Mr. Hall's work consists in its ample and careful description of the ruins as they are, and in the plans and photographs which illustrate it.

Cultes, Mythes, et Religions. Par Salomon Reinach. Vol. I. (Paris, Leroux.)

M. SALOMON REINACH is the most learned of vivacious and the most vivacious of learned writers. Unlike most of the erudite, he sees no virtue in dulness; indeed, he has no temptations that way. His knowledge is amazingly wide in range; he is not of those foreign savants who first discover the existence of an idea after it has been current in England for a generation. As neither our space nor our knowledge enables us to touch on all of the topics in these collected essays, we must indicate their width of range. The author deals with tabu, totemism, totemistic survivals among the Celts; totemism and exogamy; totemism and the domestication of animals; the theory of sacrifice; tabus on ladies' legs; the origin of marriage; the history of folk-lore (two pages!); art, magic, and totemism (palæolithic and actual); 'L'Amphidromie'; art and Druidism; incest and modesty; ritual floggings; Celtic gods and altars; the boar as a Breton totem; Galatian religion; androphagous carnivora in Gallo-Roman art (more totems); prayers for the dead;

'The Golden Bough'; donkey worship; Satan; apostles among anthropophagi; Zarza (Samuel); L'Abbé Loisy; Antoinette Bourignon; and a few minor themes.

We shall confine our remarks to totemism. M. Reinach, in 1900, introduced this theme to persons who had never heard of it—Mommson and other German savants—and to others who, if they had heard of it, knew but little of it—the members of the Académie des Inscriptions. "You can't think how ignorant these boys are," said Walter Scott, as a child, when asked why he was not playing with the other boys in the square. But M. Reinach playfully enlightened the Académie just mentioned and the learned Teutons.

M. Reinach speaks of a British critic who complains that "totems have been as much overdone [abusés] as solar myths." In fact, while solar myths and totemism are both veræ causæ of stories, customs, and so forth, they have been applied hastily, without criticism and without sufficient evidence, as keys to locks which they do not open at present. For instance, the cat as a totem has been used to explain Clan Chattan, with its cat crest, in defiance of Gaelic history and hagiology. The dog totem has been tried as an explanation of the name Glencoe, which probably means "the narrow glen," while the adjacent Coalisnacoon, "the dog's ferry," and Achnacon, no more imply a prehistoric dog totem than does the Isle of Dogs. If the theory of totemism in Greek religion has not been overdone, then the theory of the "corn spirit" in animal form in Greek religion has been abusé enormously.

Then we hear of totem sacrifice and totem sacraments, of which M. Reinach makes great use, following Robertson Smith. "Till the totem sacrament is vouched for by some more real proof, it had better fall out of speculative theology" (we may add out of speculative sociology), says Dr. E. B. Tylor (Journal of the Anthropological Institute, Aug.-Nov., 1898, pp. 136-48). In a Napoleonic spirit M. Reinach formulates a "code du totémisme," with twelve articles (pp. 17-26). Certain beliefs and practices among ancient civilized races are represented as survivals of totemism. But it is first necessary to prove that these practices veritably occur among races, like the Australians, which are known to be really totemic. In the cases of keeping a specimen of the totem animal as a pet, of burying him when dead, of apologizing to him when he has to be killed, of sacrificing him ritually with lamentations, for example, we do not think that the customs are proved, by the evidence cited, to be performed by totemists in the case of their totems. Of the Californian buzzard rite, the Zuñi turtle rite, Dr. Tylor justly remarks that the former "explains itself without supposing that the bird was a totem"; and as to the second he remarks, "Mr. Frazer has since changed his opinion of this rite, taking it as a case of transmigration of souls" (op. cit., p. 145). But M. Reinach mainly depends on Mr. Frazer's collection of cases in 'Totemism' (1887). Each case demands criticism on its merits, and in some instances we think that the animals in question are not totems, but animal familiars of individuals, naguals, manitus, nyarongs, or yunbeai, to use native terms for such familiars. We cannot say that such or such a classical custom is a survival of totemism before we have proved that in totemic society the custom actually prevails, and so is able to survive. Again, in actual totemic society some tribes (local tribes occupying large areas of territory) bear animal names in Australia. But the tribes, as tribes, do not treat their animal namesakes "with the decencies of a totem," as Charles II., according to Bishop Burnet, did not treat Nell Gwynne "with the decencies of a mistress." The savage tribe, as a tribe, has no totem in Australia. In Africa the tribe often has, as a tribe, a name-giving respected animal. Following African analogy, the Hirpi in Samnium (Wolves) may present a survival of much modified totemism, and some of the Roman gentes (as the Porcii) may be in the same case; and this applies to the Egyptian nomes. These appear to be legitimate presumptions of totemic survival; not so the Samoan custom of breeding owls as birds of omen. The omen-birds of Borneo and of Rome do not appear to be connected by evidence with totemism.

Dr. Tylor has protested against the conveyance of totems into the book on Samoa by Dr. Turner. "On reference to the original passages in Dr. Turner's book, it will be found that neither totems nor totem clans are there, either by name or description" (op. cit., p. 142). To prove in detail that Samoan "family gods" with animal vehicles are a development of totemism—not of "nyarongism"—would require minute criticism. We have not made the necessary studies, and offer no opinion; the totemic theory is plausible and attractive, more we cannot at present say. As to the widespread savage belief that totem kins descend from their name-giving totem, M. Reinach justly thinks that the myth is "a hypothesis suggested to totemists by tabus of which they do not know the origin, or perhaps by the traditional designations of their kins" (p. 26). The assumption by men "of the names of objects, in fact, must have been the commencement of totemism," as Mr. Howitt remarks ('Native Tribes of South-East Australia,' p. 153). Given the kin-names and the long-surviving savage theory of the rapport between the name and those who bear the name, and the whole of totemism inevitably follows.

We now turn to M. Reinach's acceptance of Mr. Jevons's theory, "the only explanation of the domestication of animals and plants" (pp. ii-iv). Now ought we not to study totemism first among the most primitive races, where it is most vigorous—say in Australia? Has M. Reinach found three cases of a man or a kin domesticating or making a pet of a plant or an animal in Australia because it was the man's or the kin's totem? We do know one doubtful example; but we have heard, once or twice, of a man making a pet of his yunbeai (an Euahlayi word) or nyarong, or personal "animal familiar." But a yunbeai is not a Dhé, is not a totem.

On the other hand, in countries where we find domesticated animals, we see, at most, only possible survivals of totemism; and it is a mere guess to say that these domesticated animals were once totems. In Australia each kin only spares its own totem (if it even does that), and as the man and the children, with male kin, spare what the mother kills, while the mother and the children, with female descent, kill what the man spares, how can totemism there lead to the domestication of animals?

In Australia a pet of the totem species of the mother would not, for any "religious" reason, be spared by the hungry father, uncles paternal, and so forth, while any man, woman, or child of another totem who came by would have no "religious" reason for not bagging the pet. It would scarcely be tamed in these circumstances, unless the owner of the pet were a medicine man, and the animal his yunbeai. Where totemism, as among the Bantu, has left only possible traces, one tribe (a large local community) is named after the alligator, another after the baboon, another after the lion—are any named after sheep or ox? Yet the tribes named after wild animals domesticate sheep and oxen; not lions, alligators, or baboons, their Siboko. As these name-giving animals of tribes (baboon, alligator, &c.) are probably survivals of the totems of the chief local totemic group within the tribe in the remote past, while other totemic names within the tribe have died out, how can it have been totemism that—in these tribes—domesticated sheep and oxen? We must postulate an Ox kin and a Sheep kin with many other kins in the primitive tribe. What has become of them? The problem is difficult. Given a number of tribes of which two have for Siboko—name-giving respected animals—sheep and ox, how does this fact induce all the tribes having tameless animals for their Siboko to domesticate oxen and sheep, to which they owe no reverence, for their animals are not their Siboko? M. Reinach states the process of domestication thus: The totem, though usually spared, is eaten rarely, and religiously, in a totem sacrament (a rite for which evidence is sadly to seek, as we have said). These rare religious ceremonies, practised on animals now grown tame because they are usually spared (which they cannot be where every one not of their totem kills and eats them), become des ripailles, greedy feasts. Yet M. Reinach insists that early pastoral peoples do not, except on rare occasions, eat their flocks and herds. Next "religion" deserts the animals, or concentrates itself on one of them, such as the bull Apis.

M. Reinach rejects the idea that tamable animals were first kept as pets, and then multiplied. The hungry savage would eat his pet. Not necessarily, or always, we reply, in countries where there were not only animals capable of domestication, but also cereals, maize, potatoes, and so on, capable of being cultivated, as in Africa. The savage, having such food, need not eat "the little black pig," like Sir Pitt Crawley, or the pet lamb, or the fatted calf, which becomes the milk-yielding cow. M. Reinach's refutation is not so conclusive as he supposes. He argues that, left to his appetites, the savage would exterminate all the game, and has only been checked by "religion," and that "religion" is totemic (pp. 91-2). The reply is that the savage never exterminates the game, though only a small fraction of a tribe has any totemic reason for sparing any given animal. Cockney sportsmen, not red men, exterminated the buffalo. But seven-eighths of the members of the Iowa tribes had no "religious" reason for sparing the buffalo; they were of seven other totems. If absence of religion alone prevents the extermination of an animal, the buffalo would have been exterminated. Many totem kins do not spare their totem animal, and when they do they help other men to kill it. Yet the animal is not exterminated. We do not know how animals came to be domesticated, but it is not proved to have been by aid of totemism. The sheep, ox, pig, and fowl might be spared by their human namesakes, but would be hunted by all the other totem kins and groups in the tribe. Thus the explanation of M. Reinach is not la plus simple et la plus facile. It cannot be accepted (1) till we have proof of the wide prevalence of totemic sacraments; (2) till we learn how the tame totem animals escaped the pursuit of tribes or groups whose Siboko or totems were wild animals; (3) and why the tribes or groups which have not animals capable of domestication for Siboko or totems, but tameless animals, came to domesticate the useful animals which are not their totems or Siboko.

We have tried to work out a theory of the domestication of totemic animals, and have failed. The thing could not be done where all men, except men of the sheep totem, might chase and kill the sheep. The animal could not become tame in these circumstances. It could only become tame if not one kin out of thirty, or one local group out of thirty, but a whole local tribe, occupying alone a wide range of country, had the sheep for their Siboko, and scrupulously respected the animal. In that stage of progress totemism would, in its main features, be extinct. The practice of keeping flocks might spread to other tribes. We do not know such a case as we have supposed, unless it existed in a nome of civilized Egypt. Does M. Reinach think that this very peculiar state of affairs has existed in all original centres of the domestication of sheep, cattle, horses, dogs, swine, fowls, asses, camels, llamas, and so forth? It is a hypothesis like another; but where are the proofs? Moreover, as a truly totemic tribe advances to reckoning of descent through males, or even to matrimonial classes with female descent, it is apt to treat its totem animal like any other, and to lose all sense of religious connexion with it. In tribes where this occurred, totemism could not lead to the domestication of animals. We must not theorize in a hurry!

A Gardener's Year. By H. Rider Haggard. (Longmans & Co.)—Three hundred and ninety-six pages of fairly solid matter, a plan, an index well arranged, and twenty-four illustrations go to make up this latest contribution to gardening literature. The author does not conceal the fact from the first that he is most keen about the culture of orchids, and it is of orchids that we hear most throughout his account of the wet and stormy year of 1903, and it is very interesting to learn how much may be done by a keen servant and a master who knows, without a long purse and a large staff. This book will not have been written in vain if it helps to dispel the delusion that the orchid is only the rich man's flower.

Nor do we wish to imply that other gardening topics are neglected. The flower garden, the kitchen garden, the fruit trees, the lawns, their successes and failures, their difficulties and treatment, all receive due notice in their various seasons. Again, Mr. Haggard is nothing if not practical; he helps in the work, he counts the cost, and knows what he is talking about. And yet there are one or two points on which we find it difficult to agree with him. Roses, we think, can be well grown on a gravel soil, and this is the view taken by Foster Melliar in his 'Book of the Rose' (pp. 44, 45, in the new edition). Nor is Mr. Haggard's list quite up to date, if we may say so: there are many newer sorts than those which he mentions which most rose-growers would put in the first twenty-five for a beginner's list. Again, we cannot agree with Mr. Haggard when he says on p. 237 that sweet peas have not improved since 1893. Many growers, we believe, would say that no flower has undergone such changes for the better in size of bloom, in number of blooms on one stalk, and in the careful selection of self-coloured and daintily tinged varieties. But these are only small points; on the whole, we are grateful to have this book of the garden written by a lover of nature and flowers, one to whom "the hopes and fears that kindle hopes" in the garden are a never-failing source of interest and occupation.

A Vertebrate Fauna of the North-West Highlands and Skye. By J. A. Harvie-Brown and Rev. H. A. Macpherson. (Edinburgh, Douglas.)—This, the eighth volume of a well-known and valuable series of contributions to the natural history of Scotland, necessarily awakens mournful feelings, for it opens with an 'In Memoriam' of T. E. Buckley, the coadjutor of Mr. Harvie-Brown from the commencement. Nor is this all, for closely follows an obituary of the Rev. H. A. Macpherson, whose name appears on the title-page, and who was the author of a chapter on the topography of Skye, as well as of numerous remarks—bearing his initials—on the fauna of that large island and the vicinity. The loss of these accomplished naturalists can only be appreciated by those who enjoyed the privilege of their friendship or acquaintance, and the circle is wide. An excellent likeness of Buckley forms the centre of a medallion plate; below is a portrait of Macpherson associated with the basaltic columns of Kilt Rock, Skye; above is John Wolley, with an osprey and its nest in the background; while to the right are Evander McIver and Sir Francis Mackenzie—esteemed local observers.

Besides Skye—to which allusion has been made—the area under consideration includes West Ross and that portion of West Sutherland which sends its waters to the North Minch, as far as Cape Wrath. In this respect the present volume serves as a supplement to the first of the series, which dealt with Sutherland, Caithness, and West Cromarty, and was published in 1887. A good deal has, however, been learnt in eighteen years, and it is, therefore, very satisfactory to have information up to date, as in the present case. Mr. Harvie-Brown boldly states that to him the principal interest of this area consists in proving that its fauna is comparatively poor, because he considers that such ought to be the case, owing to isolation by sea on the one side and by mountain ranges on the other. This subject is treated at some length in an important chapter devoted to 'Faunal Position.' It may be observed that, in spite of poverty in species, which we have been warned to expect, the lists of the mammals, birds, &c., together with the narratives, cover rather more than 370 pages, in addition to the introductory 100 which are now under notice. Very interesting are Mr. Harvie-Brown's records of his visits to former haunts, especially in 1903, and among the more attractive is the account of the island of Handa. A map is given of this grand resort of rock birds, and there are also several illustrations, the finest being a photogravure (facing p. 332) of kittiwakes and guillemots on the ledges of the stupendous cliffs. There is also a view of the rock-wall which the fulmar petrel has selected for its nesting-place since its arrival on that island, about the beginning of this century. The chapter on 'Climate and Change' affords food for reflection, and may be studied with advantage by those landowners at whom Mr. Harvie-Brown shakes the finger of warning with regard to the wholesale afforesting of ground "to please a fashion and temporarily increase the rents of sporting tenants." With an earnestness marked by italics, he continues:—

"Already I can see the first result in the wholesale destruction of heather and the consequent departure of the grouse. Both root and branch of heather is burned out of the ground, and a most aggressive vermin is sure to follow—(rabbits)—when the bracken springs up after a lapse of century-buried seed. Then shall the deer-grass fail unless the rabbit is exterminated, the bracken got rid of, and the heather restored—three processes, I believe, which will exercise the minds of the Lairds of Highland property in the future as scarcely any of their past experiences have done. Sixteen male ferrets turned down however in The Parc of Lewis in 1900 succeeded in clearing off almost every rabbit on the peninsula in two years: and then the ferrets died also, or wandered in search of virgin hunting-fields."

This is as much as our space will permit upon the subject; but the indictment extends over several pages, and we agree in the main with the author's views, though they might have been more concisely stated.

Passing to the mammals, we may notice Macpherson's evidence as to the occasional visits of the walrus to the Skye waters as of interest, and also two illustrations of the great grey seal, reproduced from photographs furnished by the late Henry Evans, an admirable naturalist, who observed everything, and told his friends his experiences, but printed next to nothing. The remarks on the red deer which frequented the neighbourhood of Cape Wrath as late as 1830 deserve attention; and the history of the existing "forests" is carefully traced. On p. 145 is a "speaking" likeness of old John Sutherland, of Inchnadamph, exclaiming, "I never killed an osprey"; and details of the nesting-places of that handsome bird of prey occupy nearly thirty pages of great interest. Some of the most effective of the many photogravures illustrate sites which know the osprey no more as a breeding species, among them the ruins of Ardvrack Castle, Loch Assynt, on which the writer saw the remains of the fish-hawk's nest nearly thirty years ago. Two, or at most three pairs of this long-winged bird are all that can be counted as breeding in Scotland in this century, and the high prices offered to the egg-stealer by collectors of "British" specimens may easily and speedily lead to extirpation. Besides the photogravures there are in the text nearly a dozen sketches of nesting-places of the osprey, and we can imagine some bird-lover making a pilgrimage with this illustrated guide-book in his hand to the former homes of a vanished species. Mr. Harvie-Brown's remarks upon the decadence of the red grouse in the north-west of Scotland should be read in connexion with his warning (already quoted) respecting the destruction of heather, followed by the increase of rabbits and bracken. Attention is very properly drawn to the three species of large gulls which regularly hunt for and destroy eggs, young game, and poultry; but after these very sensible remarks we are surprised that Mr. Harvie-Brown should roundly abuse a man who had, for his own reasons, destroyed the eggs of a colony of the great black-backed gull: a species which is, in proportion to its numbers, the very worst robber of the three.

About the fish of this area there was nothing of importance to be said, and for that excellent reason there is no entry under this heading; while the scanty Reptilia and Amphibia require only a couple of pages. The illustrations have been already praised; the letterpress is of more than usual interest, especially as regards the osprey; and a good coloured map is followed by an adequate index.

GEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Geology: Processes and their Results. By Thomas C. Chamberlin and Rollin D. Salisbury. (Murray.)—This is the first part of a text-book of geology written on advanced lines by two distinguished American professors, one of whom controls the department of geology and the other that of geography in the University of Chicago, whilst both hold official appointments under the Geological Survey of the United States. To an English reader the volume has about it a welcome freshness; for though it traverses the ground which must necessarily be trodden by every geological teacher in taking a general review of the science, it will be found that many of the subjects are treated in a way which markedly contrasts with that in which they are usually handled by English writers. Readers of the Journal of Geology, published in Chicago, will, however, be more or less familiar with some of the recent views of the authors and others whom they quote.

The study of geology may be approached from various sides. In this work the writers have chosen the reasonable course of leading the student first to the study of the natural agencies which are now acting upon the face of the earth, and then using the knowledge so acquired for the interpretation of the phenomena of the past. The historical element is properly emphasized throughout the work. It is only natural that the authors should illustrate their subject by examples drawn mainly from American sources; but though these may tend to widen the views of the English student, illustrations of a more familiar character would probably prove on the whole more useful to him. There is, for example, a folding table of analyses of river-waters and another of spring-waters, but in both cases these are exclusively American. Again, the beautiful little tinted maps, of which a large number are distributed through the work, are all maps of American localities. The advanced student, however, will probably prefer these to hackneyed illustrations taken from English text-books; and it must be remembered that it is for the advanced student that the work under review is primarily intended. At the same time it is written for the most part in a very readable style, so that it may be taken up with advantage outside the classes of a college.

It is not surprising that a large section of the work should be devoted to the action of running water, and the work which it accomplishes in sculpturing the surface of the earth, for this is a theme which has been fruitfully studied in recent years by many geologists and geographers in the United States, notably by Prof. Russell, Dr. Gilbert, and Prof. Davis. Glaciers, too, as seen in the States, in Alaska, and in Greenland, receive ample attention. These, like all the other subjects discussed in this volume, are freely illustrated by views taken from photographs and beautifully reproduced.

In the course of a long and suggestive chapter on the origin and descent of rocks, the authors introduce a new scheme of petrological classification and nomenclature. Reform is undoubtedly needed in the matter of rock-names, for the present system, if such it can be called, is involved, inconsistent, and altogether unsatisfactory. Still, it may be doubted whether the scheme here outlined will, with its unfamiliar terminology, overcome the conservatism of geologists in this country, notwithstanding its undoubted ingenuity, and the fact that it has been elaborated by such distinguished petrologists as Cross, Iddings, Pirsson, and Washington.

It is evident that Messrs. Chamberlin and Salisbury's volume is intended to be the first part of a complete treatise on geology, though the title-page carries no reference to its being vol. i. If the continuation prove equal in merit with the instalment now issued, the whole will undoubtedly become a favourite work of reference with geological students on both sides of the Atlantic.

An Introduction to the Geology of Cape Colony. By A. W. Rogers. (Longmans & Co.)—In this volume the Director of the Geological Survey of Cape Colony gives a general description of the structure of the country, illustrated by numerous sections and a coloured geological map. It is a work which will be found of much use to the student of South African geology, since it contains in a compact form a good deal of information to be found otherwise only by reference to numerous scientific journals and official reports. The time has not yet come for writing a detailed account of the colony, for many parts have yet to be surveyed; but sufficient is known to enable the geologist to form a good general idea of the structure of the country. It is virtually a shallow basin, filled with strata of the Great Karroo system, reposing in an almost horizontal position, whilst the edges of the cup consist of older rocks, more or less folded, known as the Cape system and the Pre-Cape rocks. The Table Mountain sandstone, which is responsible for some of the most characteristic scenery of the country, including, of course, Table Mountain itself, belongs to the Cape system.

Geological interest centres in the Karroo beds, which cover the greater part of the colony, and appear to be strata of freshwater origin deposited in a vast sheet of water connected with the hypothetical continent of Gondwanaland, which is supposed to have stretched across part of Africa, India, and Australia. The deposition of the Karroo strata must have extended over a long period, probably from the Carboniferous to the Trias. The Dwyka conglomerate, near the base of the Karroo system, which has been the subject of much discussion, is regarded by the author as a deposit of glacial origin; and, indeed, it would be difficult to reach any other conclusion in face of the mass of evidence which has now accumulated. The famous Glossopteris flora, found in the Ecca beds above the Dwyka series, is closely related to the assemblage of plants occurring in the Gondwana system elsewhere. In the lacustrine deposits of the Karroo period are preserved numerous relics of that reptilian life which existed in unsurpassed variety in the South African area, and included such remarkable forms as Pareiasaurus and Dicynodon. Dr. R. Broom, of Stellenbosch, has contributed to Mr. Rogers's volume an interesting chapter on these reptiles, in which he discusses the suggestive relation in which the types known as Theriodonts stand to mammals.

To those members of the British Association who intend to visit South Africa in the autumn this volume will be peculiarly welcome. Not the least interesting part of the book is that in which Mr. Rogers describes the volcanic pipes that have become famous as the great repositories of diamonds. When these pipes were first discovered, some five-and-thirty years ago, their true nature was not recognized, but it is now generally believed—though much about them still remains obscure—that they represent channels drilled by subterranean explosions, and filled with an altered volcanic product, the material called kimberlite, which is associated with various rock-fragments forming a breccia or tuff. The author regards these pipes, which are undoubtedly later than the Karroo period, as probably of Cretaceous age, but with regard to the origin of the mineral which invests them with such peculiar interest he has no new views to offer. The origin of the diamond remains, in fact, as mysterious as ever.

Landscape in History, and other Essays. By Sir Archibald Geikie. (Macmillan & Co.)—Sir Archibald Geikie has brought together in this volume ten essays and addresses, forming a collection which may be fitly regarded as a companion to his earlier series of 'Geological Sketches.' About half the volume is devoted to the study of British scenery. In the graphic delineation of topographical features the author has few rivals, whilst in the analysis of scenery which couples scientific precision with poetic feeling he stands alone. His description of landscape rather recalls the style of Hugh Miller—to whom one of these essays is devoted—but his wealth of scientific knowledge is vastly greater than that which Miller was ever able to command. Whilst Sir Archibald's wide experience in the field as a professional geologist has led to his intimate acquaintance with British scenery in every phase, his constant use of the hammer has in no way lessened the power of his pen, and the volume of essays under review, like his former collection of 'Sketches,' forms a charming contribution to the literature of his favourite science.

The leading essay, from which the new volume borrows its main title, represents an address delivered some years ago to the Oxford University Scientific Club. The writer's object is to show how the scenery of the British Islands has influenced the course of national history and the development of national character. This subject has frequently been touched upon by historians, but then historians are usually not geologists. Changes in the surface of the land, whether resulting from the operation of natural agencies or from human interference, may obviously tend to affect in a marked manner the progress of civilization. This is perhaps most strikingly seen in the insularity of Britain, which has been effected partly by depression of the land and partly by denudation of the coast-line since early man first made his appearance in this part of the world.

In the second essay the author illustrates the influence of scenery in stimulating the imagination by cleverly contrasting the mythology of ancient Greece with the legends of the Teutonic races, which arose under very different physical surroundings from those of Southern Europe. As to the modern method of analyzing scenery in the light of geological science, it is held, not without good reason, that it supplies abundant material for the exercise of the imagination in recalling the panorama of the past.

"In dissipating the popular misconceptions which have grown up around the question of the origin of scenery, science has put in their place a series of views of nature which appeal infinitely more to the imagination than anything which they supplant. While in no way lessening the effect of human association with landscape, science lifts the veil that hides the past from us, and in every region calls up a succession of visions which, by their contrast with what now presents itself to the eye, and by their own unlooked-for marvels, rivet our attention. Scenes long familiar are illumined by 'a light that never was on land or sea.' We view them as if an enchanter's wand were waving over us, and by some strange glamour were blending past and present into one."

The lessons taught by the superficial features of the earth, when their deep meaning is revealed to the eye of the geologist, were not altogether unheeded by Tennyson; but "there remains a boundless field for some future poetic seer." So says Sir A. Geikie in his essay on 'Landscape and Literature'—an essay which is perhaps the most notable in the present volume. In this admirable sketch, which represents the Romanes Lecture of 1898, it is shown how the lowlands of England, offering rural repose to the gentle spirit of Cowper, inspired his graceful verse; how the Scottish lowlands, with their rapid streams, influenced the poetry of Thomson and the bolder verse of Burns; how the character of the upland scenery, so well marked in the south of Scotland, affected the Border ballads and the poetry of Scott; how the mountain scenery of the English lakes finds reflection in Wordsworth, while the rugged vigour of the Scottish Highlands, with all their grandeur and gloom, has left its mark on Macpherson's Ossianic poems. But notwithstanding the poetic treatment of scenery in the past, Sir Archibald believes that, with the extension of geological knowledge, "the bond between landscape and literature will be drawn closer than ever."

More than twenty years ago Sir A. Geikie delivered at the Royal Institution a course of five lectures on the origin of the scenery of the British Islands, and an epitome of these is here reprinted from Nature. Being only an abstract of the discourses, it contrasts in style with the previous essays, the aim here being conciseness so far as is consistent with clearness. Then follows the author's well-known address as President of the British Association at the Edinburgh meeting in 1892, in which he deals with his favourite subject of James Hutton, the illustrious philosopher of Edinburgh, and Hutton's epoch-making work 'The Theory of the Earth.' Another British Association address which finds a place in this volume is one delivered by Sir A. Geikie to the Geological Section at the Dover meeting in 1899. It deals in a masterly manner with the fascinating subject of Time as an element in geological history.

The remaining contributions to the volume include a review of 'Darwin's Life and Letters'; a graceful tribute to the work of Hugh Miller, containing some interesting personal reminiscences, as recorded at the centenary celebration of his birth at Cromarty; a thoughtful address on 'Science in Education,' delivered to the students of Mason University College, Birmingham; and, finally, an admirable sketch of the geological structure and history of the Roman Campagna—a sketch due, we believe, to studies carried on during a winter spent, a few years ago, in Rome and its neighbourhood.

SOCIETIES.

GEOLOGICAL.—April 5.—Dr. J. E. Marr, President, in the chair.—Lieut.-Col. B. M. Skinner and Messrs. T. Adamson, M. Burr, T. Crook, W. A. Parker, and Herbert I. C. Turner were elected Fellows.—The following communications were read: 'On the Divisions and Correlation of the Upper Portion of the Coal-Measures, with Special Reference to their Development in the Midland Counties of England,' by Mr. R. Kidston, and 'On the Age and Relations of the Phosphatic Chalk of Taplow,' by Messrs. H. J. Osborne White and Llewellyn Treacher.

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.—April 12.—Mr. C. H. Compton, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. Emanuel Green exhibited a fine example of a moneyer's weight of bronze, Portuguese, of about A.D. 1600, and equivalent to the weight of 3½ 12s. of our coinage.—Dr. W. de Gray Birch exhibited an Egyptian vase of terra-cotta, supposed to be of about 5000 B.C.; also a very elegant vase from Cyprus, of about 1500 B.C., both of the character known as libatory vessels.—Mr. C. Dack, of Peterborough, read a paper on 'Folk- and Weather- Lore of Peterborough and District' in continuation of one he read a few years ago. Peterborough being situated at the junction of the four counties of Northampton, Huntingdon, Cambridge, and Lincoln, forms, as it were, a centre for so many sayings that it becomes somewhat difficult to make a selection. Mr. Dack therefore confined his account to those proverbs he had himself heard used within a radius of twelve miles, and the folk- and weather-lore he had learnt from old and young. In the local proverbs Peterborough is almost always associated with pride, from pre-Reformation days even to the twentieth century, as in the following:—

Crowland as courteous as courteous may be,
Thorney the bane of many a good tree,
Ramsey the rich and Peterborough the proud;
Sawtre by the way, that poor abbaye,
Gave more alms than all they.

Or again:—

Ramsey the rich of gold and of fee,
Thorney the flower of the Fen countree,
Crowland so courteous of meat and of drink,
Peterborough the proud, as all men do think;
And Sawtre by the way, that old abbaye,
Gave more alms in one day than all they.

In another rhyming verse Peterborough is called poor and proud. Another old proverb says:—

If in the Minster Close a hare
Should for herself have made a lair,
Be sure before the week is down
A fire will rage within the town.

Amongst the large number of weather-lore predictions may be cited the following:—

When the clouds of the morn to the West fly away,
You may safely rely on a settled fair day.

Rain in the East, three days at least.

"As the weather is the first twelve days of January, so it will be for the next twelve months."—An interesting discussion followed, in which the Chairman, Mr. E. Green, Mr. Milward, Mr. Rayson, and others joined.

LINNEAN.—April 6.—Mr. A. C. Seward, V.P., in the chair.—Miss H. C. I. Fraser, Miss D. F. M. Pertz, and Miss E. R. Saunders were admitted Fellows. Marian, Lady Busk, Miss L. J. Clarke, Mr. R. I. Pocock, and Mr. W. Wise were elected Fellows.—Auditors were elected: for the Council, Mr. H. W. Monckton and Mr. G. S. Saunders; for the Fellows, Mr. H. Druce and Mr. H. Groves.—Mr. W. Botting Hemsley exhibited a number of specimens and drawings of pitchers of Nepenthes, supplemented by slides, prepared by Mr. L. Farmar, to illustrate the various types of pitchers and their marvellous glandular systems.—Prof. R. J. Harvey Gibson gave the substance of his paper on 'The Axillary Scales of Aquatic Monocotyledons.'—Mrs. L. J. Veley presented a paper, 'A Further Contribution to the Study of Pelomyza palustris (Greeff),' illustrating her remarks with a series of lantern-slides.—Dr. D. Prain read a note on 'Mansonieae, a New Tribe of the Natural Order Sterculiaceae,' and exhibited specimens and diagrams of a species of the tribe, sent to the Calcutta Botanic Garden by Mr. F. B. Manson, of the Indian Forest Department. The species is the type of a new genus, Mansonia, J. R. Drumm. MSS. Its nearest ally is an African genus, Triplochiton, Schum., which has been made the basis of a new natural order, Triplochitonaceae.

HISTORICAL.—April 13.—The Rev. W. Hunt President, in the chair.—The following were elected Fellows: Canon T. Scott Holmes, the Rev. A. J. Carlyle, the Rev. F. W. Weaver, and Mr. C. E. Wade.—A paper was read by Miss E. M. G. Routh on 'The English Occupation of Tangiers (1661-83),' giving the results of the author's researches among the State Papers at the Record Office for the purpose of supplementing the printed literature upon this subject.—A discussion followed, in which the President, Col. E. M. Lloyd, the Hon. Secretary, the Director, and Mr. A. N. Butt took part.

MATHEMATICAL.—April 13.—Dr. E. W. Hobson in the chair.—The following papers were communicated: 'On Irreducible Jacobians of Degree Six,' by Mr. P. W. Wood, 'Ordinary Inner Limiting Sets in the Plane or Higher Space,' by Dr. W. H. Young, and 'Note on a Hypergeometric Function,' by the Rev. F. H. Jackson.—Informal communications were made as follows: 'Fermat's Numbers and the Converse of Fermat's Theorem,' by Mr. A. E. Western, and 'On the Strains that accompany Bending,' by Prof. A. E. H. Love.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

WED. British Numismatic, 8.
THURS. Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Discussion on 'The Problem of the Alternate-Current Motor applied to Traction.' Paper on 'The Alternate-Current Series Motor,' Mr. F. Greedy.

Science Gossip.

THE former scholars of the eminent French surgeon Prof. Léon Labbé, member of the Institut and of the Académie de Médecine, last week gave a pleasant proof of their admiration by presenting him with a medal struck in his honour by Patey. On the one side of the medal is a portrait, "sérieux et méditatif," of M. Labbé himself, and on the other a scene inspired by an incident in the career of the popular surgeon. The medal was presented by Prof. Lannelongue, the president of the committee.

It is not generally known that there is still a very considerable length of the frontier between Burma and China undelimited. This strip is in the Upper Irrawaddi region north of Myitkyina. It is not merely undelimited, but it is unknown, and the ignorance of the Chinese about it is as great as, if not greater than, our own. For this reason a special degree of interest, if not importance, attaches to the joint Anglo-Chinese expedition which is visiting this region at the present time, and which is not expected to return before the month of June. Mr. Litton, H.B.M.'s Consul at Teng-yueh, and Mr. Leveson, Deputy Commissioner of Bhamo, represent the British Government, and their escort consists of forty Gurkhas and Kachin Military Police under a native officer. The Chinese representative is the Taotai of Teng-yueh, and he has an escort of the same strength as the British. The expedition left Kuyung, in Chinese territory, at the beginning of the month.

A VISUAL observation of Jupiter's sixth satellite was obtained by Mr. Hammond on January 8th with the 26-inch refractor at the Naval Observatory, Washington.

Two new small planets have been discovered at the Königstuhl Observatory, Heidelberg—one by Prof. Max Wolf on the 3rd inst., and the other by Dr. Götz on the 6th.

THREE new variable stars have been detected by Madame Ceraski, examining photographic plates taken by M. Blajko at the Moscow Observatory, to be called var. 44, 1905, Andromedæ; var. 45, 1905, Tauri; and var. 46, 1905, Cassiopeiæ respectively. The second of these is B.D. +25°.732, and the magnitude 8.9 is assigned to it in the 'Durchmusterung,' but in several of the Moscow plates last February (and on other occasions) it was registered below the tenth. M. Blajko observed it visually on the 14th, 15th, and 16th ult., and found it of the 8.5 magnitude, and reddish in colour. The third is identical with B.D. +57°.342, where it is stated to be of the 9.4 magnitude, but on the plates it appears several times much fainter, and even below the tenth magnitude. M. Blajko observed it visually on the 17th ult., when the magnitude was found to be 9.0. Prof. Turner writes in the same number (4010) of the Astronomische Nachrichten in which these announcements appear that Mr. T. H. Astbury, of Croft Villas, Wallingford, has found the star 48 in the constellation Auriga to be variable, with a range of about half a magnitude, from 5.0 to 5.5. The period is probably a few days only in length, but though the variability has been confirmed by Mr. Stanley Williams, who observed a maximum on the 30th ult., the actual period is still uncertain. The star will be reckoned as var. 47, 1905, Aurigæ.

PROF. WENDELL, of the Harvard College Observatory, has ascertained that the small planet Eunomia, No. 15, is subject to a variability in brightness, amounting to about half a magnitude.

WE have received the Report of the Director of the Kodaikanal and Madras Observatories for the year 1904. Mr. C. F. Butler, who had been for a considerable time in charge of the former as Acting Director, left it on February 1st, 1904, and since that date Mr. Michie Smith has resumed the whole responsibility, Mr. R. L. Jones continuing to superintend the operations, wholly of a meteorological character, at Madras as Deputy-Director. At Kodaikanal the astronomical work has chiefly related to solar physics, some results of which have already been noticed in The Athenæum. The year in question was exceptionally favourable for such work, and there were only twenty-two days on which some observations of the sun could not be obtained. There was a marked, but by no means uniform increase in the number of spots over previous years; the sun had not been wholly free from spots since the 23rd of September, 1903, but there were several days in 1904 on which only one group was visible. The Magnetic Observatory is now under the Survey of India, and details regarding it no longer find a place in this Report. Meteorological and seismological observations have been carried on as before. The rainfall at Kodaikanal was abnormally low, amounting for the year to only 46.62 inches falling on 86 days, as against an average of about 64 inches falling on 130 days. Thunderstorms were very numerous during March, April, and May. The highest wind record for a day was 824 miles on the 7th of June. The highest shade temperature recorded was 77°·3 on the 6th of April, and the lowest 39°·9 on the 7th of January. At Madras the rainfall was very much below the average in all months except July; the fall for the whole year was only 20.64 inches, which is more than twenty-eight below the average. The highest temperature recorded was 103°·5 on the 3rd of June, and the lowest 61°·2 on the 1st of February.

FINE ARTS

The Complete Works of John Ruskin. Library Edition. Edited by E. T. Cook and Alexander Wedderburn. Vols. III.-XV. (George Allen.)

WITH a good many of Ruskin's positions and theories, especially in technical matters of art, we have found it impossible to agree. But his genius and outstanding importance for his times are beyond question. His was—as, we think, Mazzini pointed out—a most analytical mind, and his very waywardness led him to afford unexpected illuminations in the wide field over which he roamed. He touched nothing without adorning it, and his influence is, perhaps, more widely disseminated in the literature of to-day than that of any other master of science, art, or philosophy, with the single exception of Darwin. No writer with a pretence to prophetic power appeals to so many different classes, or is so widely quoted. This is mainly due to the fact that he is the most splendid master of English in the last century. The professional critic of style, who has after some years of experience an instinctive distaste for ornament, discovers that Ruskin, fine, full, and free as he is, is not overloaded with a burden of words that cries for removal. He is essentially English, too; he is not always peddling with little Gallicisms like Thackeray, Germanizing the language like Carlyle, or laying on sonorous Latinisms like De Quincey. No single phrase in Ruskin starts up and compels admiration as carefully chosen to brighten indifferent English; his writing is all of a piece, wonderfully level and fluent. He is in prose the chief inheritor of the glories of our English Bible. Nor is he wholly sombre, like the ordinary fanatic or devotee; his desperate zeal did not prevent him from indulging a rare gift of irony and humour which put him above most preachers, at any rate as far as honour in their own country goes. The beauty of such a book as 'Sesame and Lilies' is known to everybody, but passages of similar wide appeal are to be found everywhere in more technical works, such as 'The Seven Lamps of Architecture.' Here, for instance, from the opening pages is a paragraph concerning the unknown architects of the grandest of our ecclesiastical monuments:—

"All else for which the builders sacrificed all their living interests and aims and achievements has passed away. We know not for what they laboured, and we see no evidence of their reward. Victory, wealth, authority, happiness—all are departed, though bought with many a bitter sacrifice. But of them and of their life and toil upon earth, one reward, one evidence remains to us in those grey heaps of deep-wrought stone. They have taken with them to the grave their powers, their honours and their errors—but they have left us their adoration."

His friends and disciples have certainly raised the best of tributes to his memory in this stately and imposing edition. It could not have been done in better taste, or with more laborious love. The page is large, and printed in beautiful type with ample margins. The introductions and appendixes are wonderful in their detail and elaborateness. Thus Mr. E. T. Cook writes a most interesting preface to 'The Stones of Venice,' in which Ruskin's retorts to reviewers show that he was, if dispirited, by no means frightened out of his considerable powers of vituperation. Everywhere notes supply illustrations, verifications, additions so completely that, complicated as any commentary on Ruskin must be, by reason of his changes of opinion, this may with perfect confidence be declared the definitive edition. The labour of editing must have been very great, but those who were responsible have their reward in knowing that their names are inseparably connected with their master and friend, and that, difficult as he was to please in the matter of presenting his work, he could have found here little or nothing to correct.

The illustrations are rendered with admirable fidelity and effect, and many facsimiles of Ruskin's own letters serve to brighten the bibliographical side of the edition, which is more correct than any that has appeared, for a number of small misprints current in former issues have not escaped the eagle eye of the annotators. We can well believe that, like Boswell, they "have sometimes been obliged to run half over London, in order to fix a date correctly." But we think that they are bound to receive from every one who looks at their work the praise which he despaired of obtaining. In an age like the present, incurious of accuracy and full of incompetent commentators, who often obscure what they pretend to explain, this edition is an outstanding monument almost without parallel.

Selected Drawings from the Old Masters in the University Galleries and in the Library at Christchurch, Oxford. Chosen and described by Sidney Colvin. Part III. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)—Once more we have to acclaim a remarkable performance on the part of Mr. Colvin and the Clarendon Press. The third part of this admirable publication is as delightful and as worthy of its origins as its predecessors. The drawings are, as before, reproduced superbly; they are all of them either of real significance artistically or of historical importance, and, as usual, Mr. Colvin's notes are scholarly, lucid, and to the point, while his quotations of authorities are thoroughly complete. Once more, therefore, it becomes a pleasant duty to thank him for the great service which he is rendering to students by the publication of this series. The present portfolio contains, perhaps, rather more that is open to discussion than has been the case before, and on one or two points we venture to disagree.

The first drawing is a life-sized head in profile of a young woman with a fanciful headdress, presumably intended for a saint in an altarpiece. Mr. Colvin ascribes it to Verrocchio. That it belongs to his atelier there can be no doubt. Mr. Berenson gives it to a pupil. Mr. Colvin—rightly, we think—refuses to separate it from the well-known drawing of a head in the Malcolm Collection, which almost all connoisseurs, including Mr. Berenson, ascribe to Verrocchio himself. With him we fail to see any difference of hand between these two drawings, while the likeness to the head of an angel in the Uffizi, also given to Verrocchio by most authorities, is very striking. Mr. Colvin is, therefore, likely to find almost complete agreement with him in this attribution. We confess to an inability to see the hand of so distinguished a master in any of these drawings, which must stand or fall together. In all alike we find the same rather common type of nose, with swollen nostrils, the articulation of which with the face is unduly accented, the same dull and heavy touch in the drawing of the hair, which is disposed in thick curls, of which the rhythm lacks spring and variety. We have here, too, what seems to us a similar want of taste in the heavy convolutions of the headdress. In fact to us this drawing, and the others usually ascribed to Verrocchio, with the exception of the masterly drawing of 'Putti' in the Louvre, have the marks of an ill-defined group of imitators, of whom Botticini was one and the author of the 'Madonna' in the National Gallery (No. 296) another. It is rather to the latter that we are inclined to ascribe this work. But we frankly confess that this view is heretical, and that orthodox criticism will support Mr. Colvin. It seems, however, worth while to record a vivid personal impression, in spite of the consciousness that it is not likely to be shared by others.

The next sheet contains two drawings by Leonardo, one, of the early Florentine period, of surpassing beauty. It must be one of the earliest attempts at the pyramidal composition of the group of two women with two children which occupied him from time to time throughout his life, until it took final form in the 'St. Anne and the Virgin' of the Louvre. The other Mr. Colvin rightly recognizes as part of a composition for the washing of the Disciples' feet. Then follow two brilliant and sketchy Filippino Lippi, then two Michelangelos, the second a drawing of a dragon. The head is almost precisely similar to that of the serpents in the 'Plague' of the Sistine Chapel, and one wonders whether it was a fanciful idea worked out at the same time. On the back of this is the celebrated sheet of studies with the legend "Andrea abbi pazienza" in Michelangelo's own handwriting. There is little or nothing here that can clearly be recognized as the master's. Next come two very imposing designs of sibyls, which have till recently received the highest honour; but though we resented their attribution at a first glance, we finally agreed with Mr. Colvin, who follows Wickhoff and Berenson in ascribing them to the late imitator Passerotti.

After this come two battle-scenes, ascribed heretofore to Raphael, but by Mr. Colvin regarded as copies, on the ground of the superiority of another version of one of them which is in Mr. Wayne's collection, and which he reproduces as evidence of his conclusion. Here we find ourselves unable to see eye to eye with Mr. Colvin. To us the comparison, which he so thoughtfully enables us to make by the additional reproduction, is overwhelmingly in favour of the Oxford drawing. It would require too much space to establish the reasons of our impression, but one instance may suffice. The neck of the kneeling prisoner in the Oxford drawing is admirably articulated with the fore-shortened torso; in Mr. Wayne's it is stuck on with a collar of flesh which has no anatomical significance. But indeed it is rather a question of the vitality and expressiveness of the line than of superior knowledge that proclaims to us the originality of the Oxford drawings.

Coming now to the Venetians, we have a most delightful and rare Giulio Campagnola, then a typical Domenico Campagnola, then an impressive study from the head of Michelangelo's 'Giuliano de' Medici,' ascribed with great probability to Tintoretto.

The German drawings are very good. First we have a naïvely realistic water-colour landscape of a mountain valley by Dürer, belonging to the period of his first journey to Italy. We suppose that the ugly dark blotches in the sky are due to the blackening of body-colour in the original. If this is so it seems a pity that they were not oxidized first, as they mar the beauty of the drawing. Then there are two drawings by Altdorfer, one of which, the 'St. Nicholas rebuking a Tempest,' seems to us among the finest and most imaginative of that artist's creations.

For the Rubens portrait which follows Mr. Colvin allows to the sceptical an alternative attribution to Cornelis de Vos, which, we confess, seemed to us probable before reading his note. Then come Rembrandt's portrait of his father, two Claudes, and a magnificent Watteau. Altogether it is a selection which makes us eager for Part IV.

Royal and Historic Gloves and Shoes. By W. B. Redfern. (Methuen & Co.)—Mr. Redfern is right in thinking that no attempt has hitherto been made fully to illustrate the subject that he has chosen for this monograph. In the opening paragraph of the preface he says:

"From the outset my aim has been to give accurate and reliable illustrations of royal and historic gloves and shoes, trusting to these for success rather than upon any literary display, that part of the matter having already been efficiently done by several well-known authors."

Mr. Redfern and his publishers are to be heartily congratulated on having carried out this idea to such a successful issue. With some trifling exceptions, every one of the seventy-eight fine plates of this volume have been specially taken for this work from the existing article, either by photography, or by careful water-colour drawing executed by the author. As for the letterpress, the information contained in the introductions to the two sections of the work, together with the descriptions of each plate, appears to be sufficient, accurate, and useful. The volume ought specially to appeal to artists, lovers of embroidery, curators of museums, and, in some respects, general antiquaries.

It would have made the book still more valuable had the author included a bibliography of each subject. At all events, he might at least have referred those who desired further information to Beck's 'Gloves: their Annals and Associations' (1883), and Dutton's 'Boots and Shoes of our Ancestors' (1898). It scarcely seems suitable to include in such a work as this illustrations and accounts of mailed gauntlets or steel mittens. Had these been omitted, room might have been found for several historical examples which we look for in vain. Such are the gloves attributed to Mary, Queen of Scots, in the Ashmolean Museum; the top-boots worn by the Duke of Marlborough at the battle of Blenheim, in Mr. Dutton's collection; and the shoe of silk brocade of the Duchess of York, 1791, in the collection of Mr. Kingham.

A study, however, of the large number of remarkable and authenticated examples so nobly illustrated in this volume soon effaces slight disappointment as to a few particular instances. The beautiful and delicately embroidered gloves of Henry VIII., in the possession of Mr. Alfred de la Fontaine, form a most attractive frontispiece; it is a masterpiece of colour-printing. Another highly interesting coloured plate supplies a picture of the left-hand glove of a pair belonging to the great William of Wykeham, which are preserved in the treasury of New College, Oxford. These gloves are upwards of five hundred years old and are in a remarkable state of preservation:—

"They are made of crimson, purl knitted, silk, embroidered on the backs and cuffs with gold, now faded and tarnished. The octagon designs round the cuffs are separated by small squares of green silk; a double band of gold embroidery encircles each finger and thumb. The entire length of the gloves, from the tip of the middle finger to the edge of the cuff, is 9½ inches. The cuffs are lined with crimson silk: the circles on the back of the hand, with their sixteen flame-pointed arms worked in gold, surround the sacred monogram."

It is supposed that these gloves were worn by the bishop at the opening religious ceremonial of "St. Mary's College of Winchester in Oxenford" on April 14th, 1386.

About the most interesting relics recorded in this volume, from an historic point of view, are the plain gloves and boots worn by Henry VI. at the battle of Hexham, and left behind by that monarch when he was concealed at Bolton Hall. They are now in the Free Public Museums, Liverpool. The gloves are of fine brown Spanish leather, lined with deerskin, tanned with the hair on; the gauntlets reach to the elbow, but could be turned down at will. The boots are of like leather, and similarly lined; they partake of the character of gaiters, and are fastened from the ankles to the knees by a series of small buttons.

Perhaps the finest example of English sixteenth-century glove embroidery occurs in the white kid gloves, embroidered with gold gimp wire, which belonged for a brief period to Queen Elizabeth. They were presented to the queen by the University on the occasion of her progress to Oxford in 1566, and were left there at the termination of her visit. They are now in the Ashmolean Museum, and are in almost perfect preservation.

Among other gloves here described and illustrated, and well authenticated, are examples that belonged to Lord Darnley, to James I., Charles I., Charles II., Oliver Cromwell, and Queen Anne; whilst shoes or boots of Queen Elizabeth, the Queen of Bohemia, Charles I., the Duke of Gloucester, and Queen Anne are also figured. The most priceless relic, if we could be sure of its genuineness, is, undoubtedly, the gloves of Shakspeare. These are a pair of grey buckskin, with gold thread embroidery. The gauntlets have a gold fringe sewn on to an edging of pale pink silk. They are now the property of Dr. Horace Furness, the well-known Shakspearean. These gloves were sent by John Ward, of Leominster, to David Garrick, in 1769, when preparations were being made for a Shakspeare jubilee at Stratford-on-Avon. The letter in which Ward said they had been given to him by a descendant and namesake of William Shakspeare in 1746 is still extant. Their subsequent descent, through Mrs. Siddons and Mrs. Kemble, to their present owner is authentic.

A large number of examples of different periods, of both gloves and shoes, not identified with particular individuals, royal or otherwise, also form part of this comprehensive work. For this purpose, the collections in various museums have been largely drawn upon. In the case of shoes, four of the best plates are from examples in the Northampton Museum, one of the best arranged that we have seen.

Shrines of British Saints. By J. Charles Wall. "Antiquary's Books." (Methuen & Co.)—This is a good subject, and one that is well handled by Mr. Wall. After certain comprehensive general statements on the shrines of saints, a chapter is devoted to the shrines of St. Alban and St. Amphibalus, the remains of which have of late been pieced together in an ingenious manner, after more than three centuries of disruption. This is followed by chapters on the shrines of virgins and matrons, of prelates and priests, and of royal saints. The concluding section deals with the destruction of English shrines in the sixteenth century.

The present work is an attempt, as explained in the introduction, to picture, both by illustration and letterpress, the various classes of shrines raised in Great Britain to honour the memory and relics of her saints, and particularly to describe the construction of the greater shrines.

"These structures should be better known, some for the sake of the saint, others for the sake of the shrine; others, again, reveal to us some of the customs of our forefathers, or how they became the means of swaying human passions. Raised to stimulate devotion, they occasionally stirred envy and covetousness, and tended to provoke even more grievous sins. The numerous legends which, in the minds of the simple, enfolded many of the shrines in palls of wondrous mystery, and thereby begot greater awe and reverence in the person of the pilgrim, have not been entirely overlooked, many of them being deeply interesting, even if mainly fabulous."

The story of the extraordinary amount of guile and deceit practised by the monks of St. Albans to retain the relics of their saint, and of the cunning covetousness displayed by the monks of Ely for a like purpose, seems almost incredible. The stripping of St. Albans of precious metals and jewels, to the value of 1,500*l.*, by Abbot Geoffrey for the benefit of the starving poor in a time of grievous famine is a far pleasanter tale.

One of the curious results of the strange custom of dismembering the bodies of saints was the making of shrines or reliquaries that took the form of that member of the body a piece of which was enclosed, such as the head, arm, foot, or hand. The construction of such reliquaries gave scope for the exercise of the highest art of the goldsmith and jeweller. When it took the form of a head it was usually called a chef. The British Museum has an early example (eleventh century) of the head of St. Eustace, which is here figured. This instance is of wood, overlaid with silver, partly gilt; round the head is a fillet set with stones and paste, among them being two antique gems. The neck rises from a square plinth, the sides of which have small silver effigies of the Apostles beneath arcades. This chef formed part of the treasures of the cathedral church of Basle, and was sold in the year 1834. The early shrine or case of St. Lachtin's arm, of beautiful engraved native workmanship, in the museum of the Royal Irish Academy, forms another of the illustrations. It is of bronze, but the hand is of silver, as well as the enriched base of the arm. Mr. Wall aptly remarks that it is this description of reliquary that has led from time to time to undeserved charges of fraud, made by those who were ignorant of or wilfully misrepresented the usual nature of such shrines. Thus "a head of St. Eustace" or "an arm of St. Lachtin" did not of necessity imply that the whole head or the whole arm was enclosed in such a reliquary, but merely—as was well known and understood by the faithful—that a fragment of bone from that particular part of the saint's body was therein enclosed. Doubtless there were cases of fraud in relics; but when the truth is known about these member reliquaries, it becomes obvious that there is no need for cynical surprise at a saint possessing several heads in different localities.

These pages do not profess to embrace any scheme of tabulating the almost numberless shrines which are known to have existed, or of enumerating the relics of British or foreign saints formerly preserved in our national churches. Nevertheless, the volume fairly exhausts all the more important examples, and brings together, after a helpful fashion, between two covers a vast amount of information hitherto widely scattered among hundreds of books and manuscripts. Mr. Wall is well up to date; not only is there an account of the discovery of the relics of St. Eanswythe in the parish church of Folkestone, but also of the still more recent finding of the lead-enwrapped and inscribed relics of St. Candida, in the church of Whitechurch, Dorset. Nor is the small relic of the great St. Boniface, the Apostle of Germany, still preserved in the church of Brixworth, Northamptonshire, overlooked. One omission that we note is any reference to the bringing of a relic of St. Germain from France to the old former cathedral church of Cornwall, at St. Germans, in the fifteenth century, as mentioned in the episcopal registers of Exeter. Though no remains of the actual shrine exist, there can be no doubt that the beautifully enriched chapel at the east end of the south aisle was built for its reception. To this relic local pilgrimages were made. There is ample room, by-the-by, for a book on English pilgrimages, which would make a good companion volume to this on shrines.

The illustrations are at once numerous, aptly chosen, and good of their respective kinds. There are twenty-seven page plates, and upwards of fifty blocks in the text. A few of them are reproductions from other works, but most of these are from archaeological journals and books seldom seen by the general public. Several of them are from specially taken photographs, whilst many are drawings executed by the author. Among the latter is the suitable frontispiece, which is a happily conceived conjectural restoration of St. Bede's shrine in the beautiful Galilee of the cathedral church of Durham. The highly interesting description of this shrine given in the sixteenth-century 'Rites of Durham' is faithfully portrayed. According to that authority the shrine stood upon a monument of blue marble three feet high, supported by five small pillars, one at each corner and one in the middle:—

"The uppermost stone whereon St. Bede's feretory stood had three holes at each corner, into which irons were fastened to guide the cover when it was drawn up or let down. This cover was of fine wainscot, very curiously gilded and appointed, to draw up and down over the shrine, as they list to show the sumptuousness thereof."

Mr. Wall has selected for illustration the moment when the guardian of the relic is causing the finely wainscoted cover to be drawn up to show the richness of the actual shrine to a devoutly kneeling visitor. A picture like this makes the realization of the arrangement and accessories of an important shrine of mediæval England far easier than any amount of printed description.

Almost the only fault to be found with the pictures is that one or two of them illustrate subjects of which there is apparently no account to be found in the text. For instance, an effective drawing of a small 'English Reliquary of Latten,' of bold and effective design, at the top of plate iv., has no description except the brief title printed below it. We believe this to be taken from an example in the Victoria and Albert Museum, though it is not so stated. On the very last page of this book, however, is an account of a similar latten reliquary found in a Somersetshire cottage, which is described in vol. x. of The Archaeological Journal. Is it possible that this can have found its way to South Kensington? It might be well to inquire what other examples of this kind of effective English metal workmanship—dating, we suppose, from circa 1400—are extant. There is certainly another in the collection of Mr. William Bemrose, of Derby.

MEDALS AND COINS.

Italian Medals. By Cornelius von Fabriczy. Translated by Mrs. Gustavus Hamilton. (Duckworth.)—The need of a good book in English on the Italian medals of the Renaissance has been supplied by the translation of a work published in Germany two years ago in a much less attractive form. The reproductions of medals, instead of being scattered about the text, are now gathered into an orderly arrangement on separate plates, while the examples of Vittore Pisano and Matteo de' Pasti have been reproduced afresh in the full size of the originals. The paper and printing are far superior to those of the German edition. The translation has had the benefit of revision by Mr. G. F. Hill, who has left the body of Herr von Fabriczy's text unaltered, merely adding an occasional correction or indicating a new discovery in a foot-note. The translator has done her task well, but we have found two cases of inaccuracy which only a careless reader could let pass unchallenged. Both occur in the account of Cellini, who is said to have designed his medal of Clement VII. "on the occasion of the erection by the Pope of the celebrated fountain at Orvieto." The Pozzo di San Patrizio is not a fountain erected, but a well sunk in the rock, with two distinct staircases constructed by Sangallo, one for descent to the level of the water, the other for returning. A second medal by Cellini is said to have "a thickness, entirely unusual in medals, of 14 cm." A medal about five inches thick would be, indeed, unusual, but for "thickness" Mrs. Hamilton should have written diameter.

The book is not a complete history of Italian medalists or a catalogue of their works, nor does it enter sufficiently into detail to satisfy the special student, but as a comprehensive and critical survey of the leading quattrocento and cinquecento medals it may be highly recommended to the layman who has felt their fascination—be it Pisano or Pastorino that appeals to him—and wishes to understand the place of the medal in the general development of Italian art.

Les Médailleurs et les Graveurs de Monnaies, Jetons, et Médailles en France. Par Natalis Rondot. (Paris, Leroux.)—This fine volume is the outcome of fifty years of research in the national and provincial archives of France, in the course of which M. Rondot is said to have made 120,000 extracts from original documents bearing on medalists and the designers and engravers of coins, tokens, and seals. He had published part of his stores of learning in the shape of monographs on several artists connected especially with Troyes and Lyons; but this general survey of the whole field, from the twelfth century to the nineteenth, including notices of 1,194 die-engravers or medalists born before 1800, remained unpublished, and not entirely completed, at the author's death in 1900. It has been edited by M. H. de la Tour, who has added greatly to the utility of the work by supplying an index (the order of the notices of artists being chronological) and thirty-nine plates of coins, tokens, and medals chosen from the stores of the Bibliothèque Nationale. The list of errata does not correct the statement on p. 157 that Jean de Candida worked till 5031 (for 1503); but it is difficult to find graver fault, or indeed any fault at all, with this valuable book of reference. The first part of M. Rondot's work, consisting of about a hundred pages, is devoted to an historical and critical survey of the coins of France, from an artistic point of view, and an account of the origin of medals, their introduction into France, and their popularity and merit at different periods. Apart from the portrait medal of the Duc de Berry, described in his inventory of 1416, but not extant, the series of French medals opens with one issued in 1451 (two years after the date of the last work of Pisanello) to commemorate the expulsion of the English from every part of France but Calais.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL NOTES.

PROF. SAYCE has returned to the charge about his derivation of the Hebrew word Yahveh, or Yeho. On the authority of a proper name in Mr. C. H. W. Johns's 'Assyrian Deeds and Documents,' he declares that Au is merely the Semitic form of the Sumerian A, this last being the name of the sun-goddess. From this he claims that a Syrian proper name Au-bihdi, recorded by the same author, is "obviously identical with Yau-bihdi, the name of a king of Hamath, which is also given as Ilû-bihdi by Sargon," and that Au and Yau were equivalent to Assyrian writers. He further adduces a West Semitic name, Yaum-ilu, or "Yeho is god," occurring in a Babylonian document of Hammurabi's time, and a lexical tablet making Yau one of the equivalents of the ideograph il, or god. We have it, therefore, that in Prof. Sayce's opinion the name Jehovah can be traced to that of the Sumerian sun-goddess A, which seems far enough off. But M. Oppert will have none of this identification, and is likely to say so with some vehemence when his attention is drawn to its restatement.

For the present, however, M. Oppert has other quarrels on his hands. His attack on Father Scheil's reading of an inscription in Persian cuneiform (for which see The Athenæum No. 4017) has brought upon himself much clumsy abuse from an anonymous writer in the Orientalische Literaturzeitung, and the dissemination in Paris of a French translation of the same under the title 'Invidia Doctorum.' M. Salomon Reinach, who chronicles this very Prussian reprisal with excellent temper, while describing his octogenarian colleague as "vieillard illustre, mais irascible," declares that the translator writes French "comme un nègre," and says, with justice, that the discourteous assailant ought at least to have given his name.

The details of M. Legrain's discoveries at Karnak are given in the current number of the Recueil de Travaux, and prove quite as interesting as was anticipated. As has been already announced in the daily papers, his chief discovery was that of a pit or well, in which, when the water was at last removed, there appeared no fewer than 457 statues of one kind or another, and nearly 8,000 bronze figures of Osiris and other gods. M. Maspero's opinion, here recorded, that the pit was a favissa into which were cast things past service belonging to the cult, would not lead one to suppose that they were all in a good state of preservation; but M. Legrain's own theory seems to be that they were thrown in all at one time and in haste. From them he is able to show that the site of ancient Thebes covers treasures going much further back than has hitherto been thought possible, and he hopes that further excavations may lay bare monuments as archaic as anything hitherto found at Abydos or Negadeh, Hieraconpolis or Saqqarah. Meanwhile he tells us of a new king, Mer-ankh-Ra, a Mentuhotep of the eleventh dynasty, who seems to have been the sixth of that name. There are also a Usertsen IV., a Neferhotep III., and a Sebekhotep VIII., to be added to the list of kings in the shadowy period between the twelfth and the fourteenth dynasties; and we hear for the first time of a joint reign shared between Heru-seb-khanut II., evidently the last Tanite king of the twenty-first dynasty, and the Libyan soldier Sheshonq I., who was probably King Solomon's suzerain. M. Legrain is also able to establish from his discoveries regular pedigrees of some of the kings of the twenty-second dynasty, including Sheshonq himself, Osorkon II., and a Horsiesi, who seems to have reigned conjointly with the last-named. The article will clear up several disputed points in the history of Egypt, but the full effects of M. Legrain's find will only be seen when his monuments are published, which will probably come to pass in several numbers of the gigantic Catalogue of the Cairo Museum. This mode of publication, though defensible, is a severe tax on the resources of Egyptologists, the Catalogue having already extended to some seventeen large volumes, costing on an average some 2*l.* apiece.

Meanwhile M. Maspero has returned to a subject always near to his heart, and urges in the same number of the Recueil that Manetho's statements with regard to the eighteenth and nineteenth dynasties require correction. His view is that Manetho, in the form in which he has come down to us, does not distinguish between historical facts which he was in a position to verify and popular tradition, as exemplified in the "Leper" story of the Exodus and elsewhere, and has therefore often mentioned the same king twice under slightly different names. This is likely enough to have been the case in the earlier dynasties, as there are some signs that the length of different reigns has been manipulated either by Manetho or his transmitters in the interests of a mystical chronology, which would make historical events occur in regular cycles. But M. Maspero now declares that Manetho's lists of the eighteenth and nineteenth dynasties can in no way be reconciled with the series of kings given in the Abydos and other tables, or with the actual monuments that we have recovered. He would therefore have us believe that kings like Manetho's Khebros, Misphragmouthosis, and Misaphris never had any real existence, but were legendary monarchs like Sesostri or Osymandyas, to whom the popular imagination attributed, in exaggerated form, the real deeds of the different Amenhoteps and Rameses. M. Maspero's authority in matters Egyptological is so great that everything that he says deserves respectful attention; yet, if his views prevail, a good many cherished idols will be shattered.

The death of General di Cesnola, late Director of the Metropolitan Museum at New York, seems to offer a favourable opportunity to the Revue Archéologique for reviving the very heated controversy that sprang up some years ago with regard to the antiquities claimed to have been dug up by him at Cyprus and their authenticity. M. Salomon Reinach, now one of the editors of our excellent contemporary, publishes in the current number two letters addressed by Di Cesnola to himself in 1882-3, and says plainly that Di Cesnola there mingled falsehood with truth, and that the supposed "treasure" of Curium never existed in that place. He also bestows some pity upon Mr. Pierpont Morgan and our countryman Sir Purdon Clarke, who succeeds Di Cesnola in the Directorship of the Museum, for the trouble they will have in verifying the genuineness and provenance of the objects committed to their charge. We have no doubt that they will succeed in this, and, we hope, without too much scandal or blackening of the memory of the dead.

M. René Dussaud has, for the moment, quitted his Syrian studies and raises in the Revue de l'Histoire des Religions several 'Questions Mycéniennes.' He labours to show that the goddess who was associated with the Cretan Zeus was the deified Earth, and that the pair were afterwards celebrated in the worship of Zeus and Hera. Generally he would identify the Cretan rites with many of those which the Greeks were supposed to have inherited from the Pelasgi. Among these was apparently included the custom of human sacrifice, which he has no doubt was practised, at any rate, at Mycenæ. The article, though it contains nothing very new, is worth reading, and he gives a good many reasons for believing that the curious Mycenæan habit of depicting lions and other animals in the attitude of heraldic "supporters" had a ritual significance.

SALE.

ON the 15th inst. Messrs. Christie sold the following. Drawings: P. De Wint, A River Scene, with barges and boat, 52*l.* D. G. Rossetti, Hesterna Rosa, 315*l.* Pictures: W. Müller, Low Life, 183*l.* J. Holland, Venice, 152*l.* D. G. Rossetti, Head of a Lady, in green dress, holding some snowdrops, 115*l.* T. S. Cooper, Cattle and Sheep by a River, 294*l.*; Cattle in a Pasture, 126*l.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

AT the Doré Gallery Mrs. Alastair Murray and Miss M. Dawkins have opened an exhibition of their water-colour drawings.

THERE is now on view at 48, Boulevard Haussmann, Paris, a collection of paintings and engravings by Mr. William Nicholson. It will be open till the 29th, and the illustrated catalogue is the work of M. Octave Uzanne.

EXCEPT for one drawing, the caricaturist Willette is unrepresented in the Luxembourg, but one of his important pictures is to find a home there. This is the vast composition known as 'Parce, Domine,' familiar to all visitors at the now defunct Chat Noir, for which the late Rodolphe Salis gave the artist 240 francs. The picture was sold some months ago privately to M. Théophile Belin, the well-known Paris bookseller, by Madame Salis for 3,000 fr. Curiously enough, 'Parce, Domine,' was refused at the Salon of 1884. M. Belin, who is an old friend of the artist, has a remarkable collection of Willette's works.

THE monument to Victor Hugo offered to the city of Rome by the Ligue Franco-Italienne will be officially inaugurated on May 6th. The Ligue will be represented by M. Édouard Lockroy, former vice-president of the Chamber of Deputies, by M. Beauquier, president of the Ligue, and by other prominent members of the same association. The Comédie-Française will be represented by M. Frédéric Febvre, who will read a discourse by M. Jules Claretie. The Paris Municipal Council will also be represented, and the Government will send a delegate, who has not yet been nominated.

Two interesting art sales were held at the Hôtel Drouot, Paris, at the end of last week. One of these consisted of pictures and drawings by Toulouse-Lautrec and Steinlen. Some, if not all of those by the latter were at one time in the collection of that notorious chansonnier Aristide Bruant, and served to illustrate Bruant's two collected editions of verses. The Steinlen drawings, for the most part, realized only small prices, 500 francs being paid for one called 'Au Bois de Boulogne,' and 300 fr. for 'Au Bois de Vincennes.' The highest price paid for any one picture by Toulouse-Lautrec was 4,500 fr. given for 'A Montrouge.' The second sale comprised the first part of the water-colour drawings and sketches by Daniel Vierge. The pen-drawings for the 'Pablo de Ségovie' sold well, one alone fetching 1,050 fr., another 770 fr., and many of the others varied between four and five hundred francs each.

MUSIC

Musical Gossip.

HERR BRONISLAW HUBERMAN appeared at the Philharmonic Concert at Queen's Hall on Thursday evening last week, and played the solo part of Tschaiikowsky's Violin Concerto in D. The rendering of the music was thoroughly artistic, but there was a certain lack of life, of warmth in the tone. The violinist met with a cordial reception. The revival of Dvorák's Symphony in D, performed under the composer's direction at a Philharmonic Concert more than twenty years ago, was welcome. The music is clever and characteristic, and far more natural than that of many more modern works. Dr. Cowen gave an excellent performance of the work. His programme also included the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's Octet, arranged for orchestra by the composer himself, and it was rendered with all due delicacy.

MADAME WANDA LANDOWSKA's second recital took place at the Queen's Hall on Saturday afternoon. The programme began with Voltes by Byrd and Morley from the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and other quaint specimens by Prætorius and Jacques Champion de Chambonnières; these were played some on a large, some on a small harpsichord. Then came 'Laendler' and Valses by Schubert on a Pleyel pianoforte of similar action and tone to one of the composer's period; next Waltzes by Weber, Schumann, &c., on a modern instrument, and, finally, a group of Chopin Valses. The talented artist again displayed both skill and taste, but as she is an admirable exponent of old music, and has the old instruments to hand, it would have been interesting to hear her play more of it.

THE "New Trio" (MM. Richard Epstein, Louis Zimmerman, and Paul Ludwig) gave a chamber concert at the Æolian Hall on Saturday afternoon, and their highly finished performance of Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in E flat, Op. 70, No. 2, deserves mention.

THE revival of Gluck's 'Armide' last week at the Paris Opéra is an event of great interest. It had not been given there for about eighty years. It was to be revived in 1866, and Berlioz, that great admirer of Gluck, was to superintend the rehearsals, but the scheme was abandoned.

HUMPERDINCK's new opera was produced at the royal opera-house, Berlin, yesterday week, under the direction of Richard Strauss. It is entitled 'Die Heirat wider Willen,' and the libretto, written by the composer himself, is based on Dumas's 'Les Demoiselles de Saint-Cyr.' The work was received with great enthusiasm, but time will decide whether this was meant to express satisfaction, or whether it was merely a compliment to the composer of 'Hänsel und Gretel.'

HERR VAN DYCK is taking time by the forelock. He announces for 1913 a performance of 'Parsifal' at the "Théâtre Léopold II.," as the new theatre to be inaugurated next year at Ostend is named.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

SUN. Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.
— Sunday League, 7, Queen's Hall.
THURS. Madame Amy Harrison's Concert, 3, Bechstein Hall.
FRI. Madame Arctowska's Vocal Recital, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.
— Herr Ignaz Friedmann's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
SAT. M. Lamond's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.
— Mozart Society, 3, Portman Rooms.

DRAMA

Dramatic Gossip.

As a species of solemnization of the season, performances of the old morality play of 'Everyman' have been substituted at the Shaftesbury Theatre during the present week for those of 'Othello.' Out of some reverential feeling, doubtless, no names of actors were in the programme appended to the characters. The play was given without a break, and the audience was requested not to applaud. Miss Edith Wynne-Matthison was recognized in the part of Everyman, in which she has won golden opinions in England and America; and Miss Tita Brand repeated her impressive performance of Knowledge. The presentation has lost, however, most of its archaic simplicity, is overweighted with superfluous characters, and was too funereal even for its subject, which is, of course, the grave.

THE part in 'Leah Kleschna' intended for Sir Charles Wyndham will be played on the 27th inst. by Mr. Leonard Boyne.

'A QUESTION OF HEARTS' is the title of a play by Mr. Leo Trevor which is to be produced by Mr. Arthur Bouchier.

ON May 3rd the Comedy Theatre will reopen for one month with 'The Dictator,' a play by Mr. Richard Harding Davis which has been favourably received in America. The original cast, headed by Mr. William Collier, will visit London for the purpose of appearing in it.

TERRY'S THEATRE is to reopen with a new play, the nature of which is as yet undeclared. The theatre will subsequently, it is stated, pass into the hands of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, who will—not for the first time—be his own manager, and produce a play of his own.

No special popularity attended the performance of Racine's 'Esther' given by Madame Bernhardt under conditions recalling those of its original production.

AT next Monday's performance of 'The Critic' at the Great Queen Street Theatre by the "Mermaid Repertory Theatre," the gallery will, it is stated, be thrown open free.

MISS ROSINA FILIPPI will give at the Court Theatre, on the afternoon of May 15th, a presentation of 'Belinda,' an adaptation by herself of Rhoda Broughton's novel.

A NEW play by Mr. Pinero is promised by Mr. George Alexander for the beginning of next year.

'THE MONKEY'S PAW' will be revived this evening at the Haymarket. It will be replaced on May 6th by 'The Creole,' a one-act play by Mr. L. N. Parker, in which Mr. Cyril Maude will enact Napoleon Bonaparte.

HENRY THORNTON CRAVEN, well known a generation ago as an actor and a dramatist, died at his house, Elms Road, Clapham, on the 13th inst. Born in London on February 26th, 1818, he was in his eighty-eighth year, and was said to have been, a few days ago, the oldest living actor. He first appeared on the stage in 1840, produced his first play, 'Bertram the Avenger,' at North Shields in 1842, and made his début in London at the Royalty under Fanny Kelly. He was seen at Covent Garden under Henry Wallack; Drury Lane, where he was Orlando in 'As You Like It' to the Rosalind of Mrs. Nisbett; the Adelphi, the Lyceum, the Strand, the St. James's, and other houses, at many country theatres, and in Australia. As an actor he is best remembered for his successful imitation of Robson. Among his plays may be counted 'The Village Nightingale,' the heroine of which was played at the Strand by Miss Eliza Nelson, whom he subsequently married; 'The Post Boy,' Strand, October 31st, 1860; 'The Chimney Corner,' Olympic, February 21st, 1861, in which Robson made a hit as Peter Probit; 'Miriam's Crime,' Strand, October 9th, 1863; 'Milky White,' in which he played finely as the hero, Strand, September 28th, 1864; 'One Tree Hill,' Strand, April 17th, 1865; 'Meg's Diversion,' New Royalty, October 17th, 1866, which ran for 330 nights; 'The Needful,' first played in Liverpool, and transferred to the St. James's January 1st, 1868; 'Philomel,' Globe, February 10th, 1870; 'Barwise's Book,' Haymarket, April 20th, 1870; 'Coals of Fire,' Court, November 20th, 1871; 'Too True,' Duke's Theatre, January 22nd, 1876. He played himself in most of his own pieces after the death of Robson. He had been long silent except for issuing, in 1876, a novel called 'Old Time.' For some time he had been in failing health.

SOME interest was inspired by the production at the Comédie Française of 'Shylock; ou, le Marchand de Venise,' by Alfred de Vigny. Written after his marriage with his neglected English bride, Lydia Bunbury, had directed his attention to the English stage, this rendering was less successful than his 'More de Venise,' produced at the Comédie Française, October 24th, 1839, and subsequently revived. We fail, indeed, to trace any previous performance of the present piece. Mlle. Lara was a not too satisfactory Portia; M. Leloir created, however, a favourable impression as Shylock. Jessica was played by Mlle. Yvonne Garrick.

'IL ÉTAIT UNE BERGÈRE,' a one-act piece of M. André Rivoire, produced also at the Comédie Française, is a sentimental rendering of a well-known story. A princess has used two of the three wishes granted her by a fairy god-mother in disturbing the loves of a shepherd and shepherdess, then good-naturedly uses the third in reuniting those she has severed.

At the Vaudeville 'La Retraite' has been less successful than was expected, and has been withdrawn to make room for 'L'Armature,' a three-act comedy.

MISCELLANEA

THE STATUES IN 'EREWHON.'

7, Mansfield Street, Portland Place, April 9th, 1905.

READERS of 'Erewhon' will all remember the mysterious statues standing at the top of the pass, which wailed and chanted as the wind blew through certain perforations in their heads. In Giovanni Villani's 'Chronicles,' v. 29, I find a story which may have given Butler the notion of these inanimate wardens of the marches:—

"In the year of Christ 1202 a race of men who were called Tartars issued from the mountains of Gog and Magog, and some declare that these were sprung from those tribes of Israel which Alexander the Great confined within the limits of the hills aforesaid, so that they might not mix with other peoples, and that, on account of their cowardice, they had remained there unto this time, believing that the host of Alexander was still anear. For, when they were first driven into the mountains, Alexander caused to be made by cunning art certain mighty trumpets, which he placed in the hills, so that they gave a loud blast whensoever the wind blew, whereat the Tartars were terrified amain, believing that the army was still encamped there. But, according to the story, the screech-owls, of which there were vast numbers in the mountains, did great hurt to the trumpets by building their nests inside them, so that when the wind blew they no longer made any sound. Whereupon the Tartars, having plucked up courage to climb the mountains, discovered the trumpets, and how they had been set up to hold them in check by fear."

This is, of course, a variant of the Gog and Magog legend, familiar to all students of the fabulous history of Alexander the Great. The general form of this tells how Alexander drove certain unclean races of cannibals into the mountains, and by the help of the gods caused the ranges to close in around them, leaving only a narrow defile, which he sealed with the Caspian Gates. This pass Col. Yule, in his edition of Marco Polo, identifies with the pass of Derbend, which is called in Turkish Demir Kâfi, or the Iron Gate.

I can find no mention of trumpets, save in Villani. Perhaps some of your readers may be able to give the source of his remark.

W. G. WATERS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—D. C. B.—W. M. R.—G. W. C.—received

H. C. B.—Many thanks.

M. M. P.—Unsuitable for us.

J. B.—We cannot insert any more on this subject.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogue post free on application.

THE ART GALLERIES OF EUROPE.

With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net each.

The ART of the LOUVRE. By Mary KNIGHT POTTER.

The ART of the PITT PALACE. By JULIA DE W. ADDISON.

The ART of the VATICAN. By MARY KNIGHT POTTER.

FOURTH EDITION, post 8vo, 5s. net.

HOW to LOOK at PICTURES. By ROBERT CLERMONT WITT, M.A. With 35 Illustrations.

"This book, which we have read with great pleasure, shows that the author has both wide sympathy and knowledge, and it cannot but be largely helpful to those who wish to increase their interest in pictures. A better gift for people who are dimly 'fond of pictures,' but who regret that they 'know nothing about them,' could not be found." Spectator.

NEW EDITION, REVISED, crown 8vo, 5s. net.

CITIES and SIGHTS of SPAIN. A Handbook for Travellers. By Mrs. A. LE BLOND (Mrs. Malo). With numerous Illustrations and Maps. With a Note by Mr. G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., on the coming Total Eclipse of the Sun.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

In specially designed cloth cover, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each.

"The series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England."—Times.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. An Itinerary and Description—BRISTOL—CANTERBURY—CARLISLE—CHESTER—CHICHESTER—DURHAM—ELY—EXETER—GLOUCESTER—HEREFORD—LICHFIELD—LINCOLN—MANCHESTER—NORWICH—OXFORD—PETERBOROUGH—RIPON—ROCHESTER—ST. ALBAN'S—ST. ASAPH—ST. DAVID'S—ST. PATRICK'S, DUBLIN—ST. PAUL'S—SALISBURY—SOUTHWELL—WELLS—WINCHESTER—WORCESTER—YORK.

Uniform with above Series. 1s. 6d. net each.

ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH, CANTERBURY—BEVERLEY MINSTER—WIMBORNE MINSTER and CHRISTCHURCH PRIORY—TEWKESBURY ABBEY and DEERHURST PRIORY—BATH ABBEY, MALMESBURY ABBEY, and BRADFORD-ON-AVON CHURCH—WESTMINSTER ABBEY—STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

BELL'S HANDBOOKS TO CONTINENTAL CHURCHES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

CHARTRES: the Cathedral and other Churches—ROUEN: the Cathedral and other Churches—AMIENS: the Cathedral and other Churches—PARIS (NOTRE-DAME)—MONT ST. MICHEL—BAYEUX.

SECOND EDITION, with New Preface, 8vo, 6s. net.

JAPANESE ILLUSTRATION. By EDWARD F. STRANGE, M.J.S. With 88 Illustrations and 8 Coloured Plates.

Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

LIGHT and WATER. An Essay on Reflection and Colour in River, Lake, and Sea. By Sir MONTAGU POLLOCK, Bart. With 39 Photographic Illustrations and numerous Diagrams.

THE ALL-ENGLAND SERIES. HANDBOOKS OF ATHLETIC GAMES.

Illustrated, small 8vo, cloth, 1s. each.

CRICKET. By F. C. Holland (Surrey County XI.).

CRICKET. By Hon. and Rev. Canon LYTTELTON, Head Master of Eton.

ROWING and SCULLING. By Guy RIXON.

GOLF. By H. S. C. Everard. Double vol. 2s.

CYCLING. By H. H. Griffin, London Ath'etic Club, N.C.U. C.T.C. Double vol. 2s.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

FROM DUCKWORTH & CO.'S LIST.

THE BOOK OF THE DAY.—SECOND LARGE IMPRESSION.

THE VICISSITUDES OF EVANGELINE.

By ELINOR GLYN, Author of 'The Visits of Elizabeth.'

Coloured Frontispiece, crown 8vo, 6s.

"She is at this moment our leading novelist of modern manners."—Sphere.
 "Mrs. Elinor Glyn set all society laughing. The clever, satiric pages will find thousands of readers."—Daily Express.
 "Mrs. Glyn possesses the power of presenting scenes in such a way that they appear to be acted under our very eyes. She tells her tale in simple, nervous language. We watch her characters with unfailing interest, because we feel we are looking at real men and women. She knows what to say and what to leave unsaid. This gives a vitality to her book."—Standard.
 "An attitude to life which is actual, and has not hitherto discovered a mode of expression. A book like this must interest every one. The lightness, ease, and elasticity of style are quite distinctive. As a relief from the more conventional forms of fiction, Evangeline's method is most refreshing."—Pull Mail Gazette.

THE HOUSE OF BARNKIRK.

By AMY McLAREN, Author of 'From a Davos Balcony.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It has what we too seldom get and what is never without its charm—a picture of kindly, well-bred people who talk and act in a perfectly natural manner."—Times.

THE GREY BRETHREN.

By MICHAEL FAIRLESS, Author of 'The Roadmender.'

Uniform with 'The Roadmender.' Cloth, 2s. 6d. net; leather, 3s. 6d. net.

THE ITALIAN POETS SINCE DANTE.

By WILLIAM EVERETT.

Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

A study of the language and poetry of Italy, accompanied by a series of verse translations.

BY THE AUTHOR OF 'A MAGDALEN'S HUSBAND.'

THE DISCIPLE'S WIFE.

By VINCENT BROWN.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A notable book, a long way above the common run."—Morning Leader.
 "Here is good stuff and admirable material. Mr. Brown's is a book worth considering. Marie Durnford is admirable to her finger-tips."—Daily Mail.

G O S S I P.

By BENJAMIN SWIFT. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Neither intricate nor unpleasant in plot; easy and polished in style. There is humour, and a story that is treated with novelty. The locality is described in a style that puts the place before our eyes. He will before long rank high among our novelists."—Globe.

VELAZQUEZ.

By AUGUSTE BRÉAL, Author of 'Rembrandt.'

With 50 Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

Ask your Bookseller to show you all the Volumes issued in

DUCKWORTH'S POPULAR LIBRARY OF ART.

Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 2s. 6d. net.

REMBRANDT.
DÜRER.
ROSSETTI.

WATTS.
LEONARDO.
MILLET.

GAINSBOROUGH.
FRED WALKER.
BOTTICELLI.

FRENCH IMPRESSIONISTS.

CRITICAL STUDIES AND FRAGMENTS.

By the late S. ARTHUR STRONG, M.A.,

Librarian to the House of Lords and to the Duke of Devonshire at Chatsworth.

With a Memoir by LORD BALCARRES, M.P.

Royal 8vo, buckram, gilt top, 16s. net. 4 Portraits and 23 other Illustrations. Photogravure Frontispiece.

JUST OUT. WRITE FOR PROSPECTUS.

AUGUSTE RODIN.

By CAMILLE MAUCLAIR,

Author of 'The Great French Painters,' 'French Impressionists.'

With 40 Illustrations, Photogravure Frontispiece. Crown 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

"The most complete and authoritative account. M. Maclair has the advantage of being an intimate friend.....Many photographs of unusual excellence."—Daily Chronicle.
 "M. Rodin is now on one of his visits to London, and the public interest in the Michael Angelo of our time is more than ordinarily acute. We could have no better guide than M. Maclair.....giving us this illuminating study of a genius."—Daily News.

METAPSYCHICAL PHENOMENA.

By Dr. JOSEPH MAXWELL.

With Prefaces by Sir OLIVER LODGE and Prof. CH. RICHET.

Large crown 8vo, 10s. net.

[In the press.]

This book is a most important contribution to the scientific and methodical study of the phenomena variously known as "spiritistic," "occult," or, to use the term now suggested by M. Richet, "metapsychical."

IDEALS AND REALITIES IN RUSSIAN LITERATURE.

By PRINCE KROPOTKIN.

Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

[Just out.]

ALBERT DÜRER. By T. Sturge Moore.

With 4 Copper-plates and 50 Half-Tone Engravings. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

VERROCCHIO. By Maud Cruttwell.

48 Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

MEDIÆVAL ART, A.D. 312-1350.

By W. R. LETHABY.

With 60 Plates and many Original Drawings by the Author. Pott 4to, 8s. 6d. net.

GIOTTO. By Basil de Sélincourt.

45 Illustrations. Pott 4to, 7s. 6d. net.

THE POEMS OF T. STURGE MOORE.—Square 8vo, each 1s. net.

From the TIMES Literary Supplement:—"One and all they are the work of a poet—a poet with a strong and thoughtful mind, a rich vocabulary, and a growing mastery over his thought and language."

- I. The CENTAUR'S BOOTY.
- II. The ROUT of the AMAZONS.
- III. The GAZELLES, and other Poems.

- IV. PAN'S PROPHECY.
- V. TO LEDA, and other Odes.
- VI. THESEUS, MEDEA, and LYRICS.

DUCKWORTH & CO. 3, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' NEW LIST.

THOMAS CRANMER AND THE ENGLISH REFORMATION. 1489-1556.

By A. F. POLLARD, M.A.,

Author of 'Henry VIII.,' 'England under the Protector Somerset,' &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated, 6s.

"The strong, sweeping stroke, the vigorous phrasing, lucidity, and mastery of the period exhibited in Prof. Pollard's 'Henry VIII.' are shown to even greater advantage in his new book on 'Cranmer.'.....Mr. Pollard's interpretation of Cranmer's character is, we are convinced, the correct one."—Bookman.

"Like all Mr. Pollard writes, this work is restrained but expressive in style. On occasion his narrative becomes picturesque and glowing.....It is a book alike for the learned and the unlearned."—Yorkshire Observer.

"The picture of the times which the author presents is illuminating."—Newcastle Chronicle.

"Mr. Pollard's 'Cranmer' is an interesting contribution to the literature of the Reformation."—Southport Guardian.

"Prof. Pollard deals with Cranmer's character and career with insight and discrimination, and has produced a well-balanced and generally satisfactory book concerning him."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Prof. A. F. Pollard has given us what is in the best sense of the word a biography—a critical, comprehensive account of the man and his work, written without any spirit of partisanship."—St. James's Gazette.

'CRANMER' is the Sixth Volume in the "HEROES of the REFORMATION," of which a full Descriptive Prospectus will be sent on receipt of Name and Address.

The UNITED STATES, 1607-1904. A History of Three Centuries of Progress in Population,

Politics, Industry, Commerce, and Civilization. By W. E. CHANCELLOR and F. W. HEWES. Handsomely printed in Pica Type, and with numerous Illustrations and Maps. In 10 vols. 8vo, cloth extra, 15s. net per vol.

A narrative and descriptive history of the progress of the American people through three centuries.

The volumes will contain diagrams and tables showing the successive stages of our industrial and financial development, comprehensive maps presenting the record of the territorial expansion of the nation, and a series of portraits, from steel plates or in photogravure, of representative national leaders.

Volumes ready:—

Vol. I. COLONIZATION, 1607-1697.

Vol. II. COLONIAL UNION, 1698-1774.

Send for Descriptive Circular.

MAN'S RESPONSIBILITY; or, How, and Why, the Almighty introduced Evil upon the Earth.

By THOMAS G. CARSON. 8vo, cloth, 3s. net.

This book not only traces the introduction of evil to the hand of the Almighty Himself, but it shows why it has been introduced, and the means by which its introduction has been effected. It also propounds a new theory of the Origin of Species, and also a means of averting the worst consequences of government by political parties.

CONSTANTINE the GREAT. The Reorganization of the Empire and the Triumph of the Church. By J. B. FIRTH, Author of 'Augustus Caesar,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, fully illustrated, 5s.

[No. 39 in the "Heroes of the Nations,"

"It is a book which ought to be in the hands of all cultured men and women."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Firth wrote an admirable biography for the series on 'Augustus Caesar.' He has now written a no less satisfactory monograph of the first Christian Emperor."—Scotsman.

The KAISER AS HE IS; or, the Real William II. (Le Véritable Guillaume II.). By Henri de

NOUSSANNE. Translated into English by WALTER LITTLEFIELD, Author of 'The Truth about Dreyfus,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"It is as a whole a witty, keen, and incisive arraignment of the Kaiser from a French point of view."—Daily Chronicle.

"Every chapter has more or less anecdotes of the Kaiser's private and public life."—Birmingham Post.

NEW FICTION.

A SELF-MADE MAN'S WIFE. Her Letters to her Son. Being the Woman's View of certain famous Correspondence. By CHARLES EUSTACE MERRIMAN, Author of 'Letters from a Son to a Self-made Father.' Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"They are cleverly illustrated, and make a book which should amuse every one who takes it up, and prove especially welcome to those who already know its natural predecessors."—Scotsman.

WANTED, a COOK. By Alan Dale. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

An uproariously funny comedy novel of a self-conscious couple in contact with the servant question, the farce and satire of the æsthetic-home-life-in-a-flat paradox, told in Mr. Dale's brightly entertaining manner, all centering about the ludicrous predicaments with "Cook."

"The book is to be recommended for perusal in an idle hour."—Glasgow Evening News.

"There are delicate situations, which are handled most artistically, and the book is full of fresh humour."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"There is a laugh in every page."—Scotsman.

MY LADY of the NORTH. The Story of a Gray Jacket. By Randall Parrish, Author of 'When Wilderness was King.' Crown 8vo, cloth extra, with 4 Illustrations in Colour, 6s.

"There is a freshness and vigour about the work that strongly recommend it to the good graces of the lover of narrations of exciting adventure."—East Anglian Daily Times.

"Mr. Parrish writes with vigour and charm, and his characters are strongly yet subtly drawn."—Bacup Chronicle.

"There is a comic man with a virago and a mule who relieves some tragic situations, and the book is very well illustrated."—Athenæum.

JIU-JITSU.

JAPANESE PHYSICAL TRAINING.

PHYSICAL TRAINING for WOMEN by JAPANESE METHODS.

PHYSICAL TRAINING for CHILDREN by JAPANESE METHODS.

JIU-JITSU COMBAT TRICKS.

The PHYSICAL CULTURE LIFE.

By H. IRVING HANCOCK. 5s. net each.

All these volumes are most excellently and numerously illustrated with Full-Page Photographs taken from life. They are a handy size—7½ by 5½ inches—and well produced in cloth. We will send any volume on receipt of a remittance.

Write for illustrated Prospectus.

OUR NEW ILLUSTRATED ANNOUNCEMENT LIST IS NOW READY, AND MAY BE HAD ON APPLICATION.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 24, Bedford Street, Strand, London, and New York.

Editorial Communications should be addressed to "The Editor"—Advertisements and Business Letters to "The Publisher"—at the Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Published Weekly by JOHN O. FRANCIS at Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C., and Printed by JOHN EDWARD FRANCIS, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Agents for Scotland, Messrs. Bell & Bradburn and Mr. John Menzies, Edinburgh.—Saturday, April 22, 1905.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4044.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.
32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly — MAY 3, 1905, ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING, 4.30 P.M. Election of Council and Officers; Proposed Alteration of Rules.
GEO. PATRICK, Hon. Sec.

ROYAL INSTITUTION of GREAT BRITAIN,
ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, W.

MONDAY, May 1, at 5 o'clock, ANNUAL MEETING of the Members.
TUESDAY, May 2, at 5 o'clock, Prof. L. C. MIALL, D.Sc. F.R.S., FIRST of THREE LECTURES on 'The Study of Extinct Animals.' Half-a-Guinea the Course.

THURSDAY, May 4, at 5 o'clock, Prof. Sir JAMES DEWAR, M.A. LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S., FIRST of THREE LECTURES on 'Flame.' Half-a-Guinea.

SATURDAY, May 6, at 3 o'clock, Prof. MARSHALL WARD, D.Sc. F.R.S., FIRST of TWO LECTURES on 'Moulds and Mouldiness.' Half-a-Guinea.

Subscription to all the Courses in the Season, Two Guineas.

FRIDAY EVENING, May 5, at 9 o'clock, Prof. HENRY E. ARMSTRONG, Ph.D. LL.D. F.R.S., on 'Problems underlying Nutrition.'

MRS. BURTON-BROWN will give a COURSE of FOUR LECTURES on 'GREAT EPOCHS of CLASSIC ART,' with Lantern Slides, at 20, HANOVER SQUARE, on TUESDAY, May 2, MONDAYS, May 8 and 15, and TUESDAY, May 30, at 8.30 P.M.
Tickets 3s.; or 10s. 6d. the Course.

ROYALTY THEATRE, W.—The ELIZABETHAN STAGE SOCIETY in 'ROMEO and JULIET,' now for the first time given from the Original Text in Elizabethan Costume on a Model Stage of the Fortune Playhouse.

FRIDAY and TUESDAY, May 5 and 9, at 8.30.
SATURDAY and THURSDAY, May 6 and 11, at 3.

Last Production of the Society. Stalls, 7s. 6d. and 6s.; Dress Circle, 5s. and 4s.; Upper Circle, 3s.; Admission, 2s. 6d. and 2s.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

ANNIVERSARY DINNER, THURSDAY, May 18, 1905.
Rev. Dr. BUTLER, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, in the Chair.

The object of the Fund is to assist Authors in Distress. Among those who have been compelled to seek assistance from the Fund are many distinguished Authors, whose fame is the proudest inheritance of their countrymen, and the simple mention of whose names would bear startling testimony to the value of the Society. But suppression of names, and of circumstances which might indicate names, is obviously essential, and it is not easy, therefore, to bring home to the Public the value of the work done by the Fund.

Annual Subscriptions or Donation will be thankfully acknowledged. Applications for Dinner Tickets should be sent to the Secretary before MAY 9.

The List of Stewards will be published in the Times on Monday, May 15. A. LEWELYN ROBERTS, Secretary.
7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

ARTISTS' GENERAL BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION for the RELIEF of DISTRESSED ARTISTS, their WIDOWS and ORPHANS.

President—Sir EDWARD J. POYNTER, Bart., P.R.A.

The ANNIVERSARY DINNER will take place at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Métropole, on SATURDAY, May 6, at 7.15 o'clock.

The Right Hon. LORD ALVERSTONE, P.C. G.C.M.G., Lord Chief Justice of England, in the Chair.

Dinner Tickets, including Wines, One Guinea.

Donations will be received and thankfully acknowledged by

Sir ASTON WEBB, R.A., Treasurer.
WALTER W. GULESS, R.A., Hon. Sec.
DOUGLAS G. H. GORDON, Secretary.

41, Jernyn Street, S.W.

LONDON SHAKESPEARE COMMEMORATION,
1905 (MAY 1-13).—For PROGRAMME, including Performance of a Shakespeare Play, Public Dinner, Lectures, and Conversazione, address Miss ELSTER KIRBY, Secretary, London Shakespeare League, 49, Southwold Mansions, Elgin Avenue, W.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

MESSRS. CARFAX OPEN their NEW PREMISES, 24, BURY STREET, ST. JAMES'S, S.W., with an EXHIBITION of WORKS by MR. JOHN S. SARGENT, R.A.
The EXHIBITION will CLOSE on MAY 6. Open Daily, including Saturdays, 10 to 6. Admission One Shilling.

ROYAL HOLLOWAY COLLEGE for WOMEN.
(University of London)

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.—TEN ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS from 50l. to 60l., and several BURSARIES of 30l., tenable for Three Years at the College, will be awarded on the results of an EXAMINATION to be held from JULY 3 to JULY 8, 1905. Names must be entered before JUNE 1. The College prepares Students for London Degrees, and also for Oxford Honour Examinations. Inclusive Fee, 30l. a year.—For Forms of Entry and further particulars apply to the SECRETARY, Royal Holloway College, Englefield Green, Surrey.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.
Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GARRIBAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

FRENCH DOCTOR'S FAMILY in the QUARTIER LATIN, PARIS, very highly recommended to Students and others.—Apply Dr. PAUL CHAPMAN, 1, St. John Street, Hereford.

LYTHAM, LANCASHIRE.

KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL.

The GOVERNORS of the LYTHAM SCHOOL CHARITIES being about to obtain Plans for the building, between Lytham and St. Anne's-on-the-Sea, of a PUBLIC SECONDARY SCHOOL, with accommodation for Two Hundred Boys as Day Scholars, and planned with a view to extension when required, invite applications for the immediate appointment of a HEAD MASTER for the SCHOOL.

The Scheme enables the Governors to pay the Head Master a minimum sum of 400l. per annum, which sum they will be prepared to increase by means of further capitation payments as circumstances justify. The Master will also have a Residence provided for him.

From the time of appointment to the opening of the School (when the Head Master will take up his duties and the stipend commence) the Governors will require him to give advice and assistance from time to time as to the general arrangement of School Buildings and Grounds, for which a retaining fee of 100l. and reasonable expenses will be paid.

A Candidate must be under the age of 45, a Graduate of a University in the United Kingdom or the British Possessions, and his name must appear in Column B of the Register of Teachers kept under the Order in Council of March 6, 1902.

Written Applications, stating qualifications, and accompanied by not more than three Testimonials, to be addressed to Wilson, Wright & Wilson, Solicitors, 6, Chapel Street, Preston, so as to be received not later than MAY 20, 1905.

WOLVERHAMPTON GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

Applications are invited for the HEAD-MASTERSHIP of this SCHOOL, which will be vacant at the end of the forthcoming Summer Term. The School is a First Grade Secondary School, and is regulated by a Scheme of the Charity Commissioners.

The School is situated on the West (or Shropshire) side of the Town, and the site of the Buildings, with the Head Master's House, Grounds, Playgrounds, and Cricket Field, occupies a site of about twelve acres. The number of boys on the School Register averages about 200.

The Head Master must be a Graduate of some University within the British Empire. His Salary will amount to about 650l. per annum, made up of a fixed stipend and head money calculated on the number of boys in the School.

He will also be entitled to take in Boarders. There is accommodation for thirty, and he will be required to reside in the private residence attached to the School.

Applications, with six copies, and copies of not more than four recent Testimonials, must be sent in not later than MAY 8, 1905. Selected Candidates will be required to send twenty-five printed copies of Application and Testimonials, and to give the names of four persons from whom personal inquiry may be made. Original Testimonials are not to be sent until asked for. Personal canvas of the Governors will disqualify.

Further particulars may be obtained from
NEVE, CRESSWELL & SPARROW, Solicitors,
Wolverhampton. Clerks to the Governors.

CITY of LONDON SCHOOL.

The Act of Parliament for establishing this School having appointed certain Professors of King's College and University College, London, to select and return to the Corporation of London the Three Candidates best qualified for the Office of FIRST or HEAD MASTER, Gentlemen who intend offering themselves as Candidates are requested to transmit not less than twelve printed copies of their Testimonials, with the Originals, not later than SATURDAY, May 20, addressed to the SECRETARY, at the School, Victoria Embankment, E.C., where further particulars may be obtained between the hours of 9.30 and 4.

The commencing Salary will be 1,000l. a year.

The Professors will meet at the School for the Examination of the Testimonials on SATURDAY, May 27 next.

April 14, 1905.

COUNTY of LONDON.

SECONDARY SCHOOLS.

L.C.C. SYDENHAM TECHNICAL INSTITUTE, SYDENHAM HILL, AND L.C.C. MANOR MOUNT SCHOOL, FOREST HILL

APPOINTMENT OF HEAD MISTRESSES.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the Appointments of HEAD MISTRESSES as follows:—

1. L.C.C. SYDENHAM TECHNICAL INSTITUTE, which will be opened in SEPTEMBER NEXT as a SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS. There will also be associated therewith Evening Classes for Girls and Young Women in Literary, Art, and Commercial Subjects, and in Domestic Economy and the Elements of the Experimental Sciences bearing on the same.

2. L.C.C. MANOR MOUNT SCHOOL, which will be reopened in SEPTEMBER NEXT as a SECONDARY DAY SCHOOL for GIRLS. The Head Mistresses must have had experience in the Work of Secondary Schools.

The commencing Salary has in each case been fixed at 300l. a year.

Applications must be made, on or before MAY 15, on forms which, together with full information as to the Appointments, may be obtained by forwarding a stamped and addressed envelope to the undersigned.

L.C.C. SCHOOL OF CARRIAGE BUILDING, IN CONNEXION WITH THE REGENT STREET POLYTECHNIC.

The LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL invites applications for the Appointment of HEAD MASTER of the above School. The Salary will be 275l. per annum, rising by two annual increments of 37l. 10s. per annum to 350l. per annum.

Applicants must be experienced Draughtsmen and Designers, and must have a Practical Acquaintance with the several Trades involved in Carriage Building and in Body Making for Motor Cars. Evidence will also be required of their ability to teach.

Applications must be made, on or before MONDAY May 15, on forms which, together with full information as to the Appointment, may be obtained by forwarding a stamped addressed foot-exp envelope to the undersigned.

G. L. GOMME, Clerk of the Council.
L.C.C. Education Offices, Victoria Embankment, W.C.,
April, 1905

MUSICAL TRADE PAPER.—WANTED, a young, energetic EDITOR. Must know something of the Music Trades and Musical Criticism, and be willing to devote full time until proficiency is attained.—Apply, in first instance by Letter, to Box 1001, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFE-JUAN, HAVRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 243, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

GEORGE BUCHANAN QUATER-CENTENARY, 1906.

PRIZE OF ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS.

In view of a celebration of the Four-hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Buchanan, the distinguished Scotsman and Humanist (1506-1582), to be held in St. Andrews in April, 1906, J. Peddie Steele, Esq. M.D. LL.D. Florence, has offered a PRIZE OF ONE HUNDRED GUINEAS for the best ESSAY on 'Sixteenth Century Humanism as illustrated by the Life and Work of George Buchanan.'

The Competition is open to all ALUMNI of the FOUR SCOTTISH UNIVERSITIES.

The length of the Essay is not to exceed what may be read aloud within one hour.

Each Essay submitted must be enclosed in a sealed packet, bearing on the outside the motto selected by the Competitor, and the words "George Buchanan Quater-Centenary—One Hundred Guinea Prize Essay." The name or address of the Competitor must not appear on the Essay or on the sealed packet enclosing it, but the Essay is to be accompanied by a sealed note containing the Competitor's name and address, and a signed declaration that the Essay is his or her own production. On the outside of this note the motto selected by the Competitor ALONE is to be written.

Essays must be either type-written or printed.

If, in the opinion of the Examiners, no Essay submitted is of sufficient merit, the Prize will not be awarded.

The successful Essay will become the property of Dr. Steele.

All Essays must be sent to the Secretary, The University, St. Andrews, Scotland, and must be in his hands on or before THURSDAY, February 15, 1906. Essays received after that date will be disqualified.

ANDREW BENNETT, Secretary.

The University, St. Andrews, April 24, 1905.

TEACHERS' REGISTRATION COUNCIL.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the PROVISIONAL LISTS of TEACHERS registered in the Teachers' Register will be OPEN for PUBLIC INSPECTION and COPYING, free of cost, during Two Calendar Months, commencing on MONDAY, May 1, 1905, at the Offices of the Council, 49 and 50, Parliament Street, Westminster, S.W.

By Order,
G. W. RUNDALL, Registrar.

CITY and COUNTY BOROUGH of CHESTER.

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

A LIBRARIAN WANTED. Salary 100l. per annum, rising by annual increments of 10l. to 150l. per annum if services satisfactory.

Applications, in Candidates' own handwriting, stating age (not under 25 nor more than 40) and qualifications, with three Testimonials, to be addressed to me at the Town Hall, on or before MAY 15.

Experience in a Public Library indispensable.

The Librarian will be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of the Office.

Personal applications must not be made to Members of the Free Library Committee or the Town Council.

By Order,
J. H. DICKSON, Town Clerk.

Town Hall, Chester, April 26, 1905.

UNIVERSITY of BIRMINGHAM.

ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY.

The COUNCIL invite applications for the above appointment

Stipend 150l. per annum. The duties will commence on OCTOBER 1. Applications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than SATURDAY, May 20.

Inquires may be addressed either to Prof. MASTERMAN, Queen's College, Birmingham, or to the undersigned,

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

WARRINGTON MUNICIPAL MUSEUM.

APPOINTMENT OF ASSISTANT CURATOR.

The COMMITTEE invites applications from persons having a knowledge of Zoology and Botany, and some experience of Museum Work.

Salary 80l. rising 10l. yearly to 120l.—Particulars may be had from the undersigned, to whom applications, stating qualifications and experience, with reference and copies of recent Testimonials, are to be sent not later than MAY 3.

CHARLES MADELEY, Curator.

WANTED, JUNIOR ASSISTANT in LITERARY

DEPARTMENT of COLLIERY GUARDIAN. Previous experience not essential. Good general education and knowledge of German and French. Nominal Salary during probation.—Apply MANAGER, 30 and 31, Fumival Street, Holborn, E.C.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED, in

LONDON or the PROVINCES, by a UNIVERSITY MAN. Has had great experience as Editor and Leader Writer. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 933, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY

ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 932, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRANSLATION, REVISION, RESEARCH,
REVIEWING, INDEXING, and other LITERARY WORK, or non-resident Secretaryship. Classics, French, German, Italian.
Special Subjects, Mythology and Literature. Varied experience.—
Miss SELBY, 53, Talbot Road, W.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent
Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings,
Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL
WORK and INDEXING.—Apply Miss PETHERBRIDGE (Nat. Sci.
Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated
Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—THE CAMBRIDGE
TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.O.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVE-
LOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Ram-ington), 8d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L.,
7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS,
ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per
1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING.—SERMONS, AUTHORS' MSS.,
&c., carefully and promptly executed, 8d. per 1,000 words. Unsolicited Testimonials.—Miss A. MASSIE, Strathairly, New Barn, Longfield, Kent.

TYPE-WRITER.—Miss E. M. TIGAR, 64, Maitland Park Road, Haverstock Hill, N.W. PLAYS and MSS. of every description. Carbon and other Duplicate or Manifold Copies. Established 1884.

LATIN accurately TYPE-WRITTEN and GREEK
COPIED with correct Accentuation.—MUNSON, St. Winifred's
No. 1, Ledger's Road, Slough.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879.
The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BEACON, 34, Paternoster Row.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES
BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED,
And supplied with every requisite.
Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'
The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.O.

Catalogues.

FREDERICK MULLER & CO.,
Amsterdam, Doelenstraat 10,

Have just published a

NEW CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

ON

GEOGRAPHY, TRAVELS,

DISCOVERIES, COLONIZATION,

NAVIGATION, ETHNOGRAPHY

(America, Asia, Africa, Australasia).

The Priced Catalogue (3,500 Items) is sent free on application.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,' by Dr O. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORRIS,
Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Ainsworth; Books illustrated by G. and H. Cruikshank, Philz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—
WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY
PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS,
and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED.
Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile,
price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

W. G. LAISHER'S
NEW GENERAL CATALOGUE OF REMAINDERS
(Spring, 1905)

IS NOW READY, and can be had on application.
It contains many important BOOKS, offered at a GREAT REDUCTION
IN PRICE by

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Wholesale and Export Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

H. H. PEACH, Antiquarian Bookseller, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD
BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 10 contains Manuscripts,
Early Printing, Americana, Seventeenth-Century Literature, &c.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROSE &
SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors
and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W.
BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea
each. Size, 12 in. by 8 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

WANTED TO PURCHASE any BOOKS,
PRINTS, &c., relating to FANSHAWE Family.—Apply G.
PRICE, Bookseller, Ware.

Sales by Auction.

Rare and Valuable Books, including the Library of the late
Dr. FREETH, removed from the Manor House, Fotherby, Lincs.

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 9, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock, RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, comprising Issues from the Kelmscott Press (including the Chaucer), the Doves Press, and Essex House Press—the Wallace Collection by Emile Molinier, 2 vols.—Reproductions of the Works of Great Masters, by Sir Martin Conway—Sir Joshua Reynolds by Sir W. Armstrong, Edition de Luxe—Williamson's
George Morland, Large Paper, &c., 2 vols.—Foster's Miniature Painters, 2 vols., and other Modern Fine-Art Books—Stow's Survey of London, Best Edition, 2 vols., and other Topographical and Antiquarian Books—Ackermann's Microcosm of London, 3 vols. old blue morocco—Lacroix, Costumes Historiques de la France, 10 vols.—
Hakluyt's Voyages, 12 vols.—French Historical Memoirs, a Complete Set, 50 vols.—Howard Furness's Variorum Shakespeare, 13 vols.—fine
Library Editions and Editions de Luxe of Fielding, Byron, Lever, Dickens, Whyte-Melville, and others, in handsome calf and morocco bindings—the Italian Novelists, Japanese Vellum Edit.—Thackeray's Journey from Cornhill to Grand Cairo, with an Original Pen and Ink
Sketch by the Author inserted, and other First Editions—Oscar Wilde's De Profundis, on Japanese Vellum, and others by the same—Books on Sporting—Series of the Microscopical, Paleontographical, Geological, and Telegraph Engineers' Societies' Publications—an extensive Collection of Standard Works in History, Mathematics, Classics, and Divinity.

Catalogues on application.

The Library of the late C. C. MASSKY, Esq., removed from 124, Victoria Street, S.W. (by order of the Executrix).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., EARLY in MAY, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising a Collection of Books on Astrology, Spiritualism, and the Occult Sciences, both English and Foreign—Series of the Psychological Research Society's Proceedings and Journal—The Spiritualist, Light, Mind, &c.—the Philosophical Works of Hegel, Kant, Rosmini, Shadworth Hodgson, Martineau, Caird, Du Pr I, and others—the Writings of (1) Pepys, Walpole, Gibbon, Grote, Motley, Froude, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

Curios.

MR. J. C. STEVENS'S NEXT SALE of CURIOS will take place on TUESDAY, May 2, and will include, as usual, CURIOS of every description and from ALL PARTS.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale.

Catalogues may be had on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Scientific Apparatus, Surveying and Drawing Instruments, fine Microscopes, &c.; also a Copy of Encyclopædia Bri- tannica in Revolving Bookcase.

FRIDAY, May 5, at 12.30.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., SCIENTIFIC INSTRUMENTS and APPARATUS, including 5-in.
Transit theodolite, nearly new—14-in. Surveyors' Level (Stanley)—a magnificent Set of Drawing Instruments—a Binoocular Microscope (Beck), with Accessories—a Powell & Leland's Portable Microscope, almost new—and a Zeiss Field Glass; also Photographic Apparatus, &c.

Curios.

MR. STEVENS has received instructions to OFFER for SALE on TUESDAY, May 9, a most interesting COLLECTION of CURIOS from all Parts of the World, formed by the late Dr. DRESSER, Barnes. To be sold without the least reserve.

Catalogues on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Valuable Books, the Property of a well-known Amateur.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 1, at 1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS, the Property of a well-known AMATEUR (living in the North of England), comprising First, Early, and Rare Editions of the Poets and Dramatists of the Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Centuries, including Addison, Beaumont and Fletcher, Brathwaite, Sir
T. Browne, Burton, Bunyan, Carew, Cartwright, Chapman, Chaucer, Cowley, D'Avenant, Donne, Drayton, Dryden, Fielding, Gay, Goldsmith, Gower, Gray, Hayward, Heywood, Jonson, Lee, Massinger, May, Milton, Prynne, Quarles, Randolph, Rowe, Shadwell, Settle, Shakespeare, Sheridan, Spenser, Thomson, Waller, Walton, &c.; also First Editions of Modern English Classic Authors, including Barham, Browning, Byron, Coleridge, Cowper, Keats, Kipling, Landor, Rogers,
Rossetti, Swinburne, Tennyson, Wordsworth, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

A Collection of Greek Coins, the Property of a well-known Amateur.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 2, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of GREEK COINS, the Property of a well-known AMATEUR, comprising Examples in Gold and Silver of the Ancient Cities and Kings of Italy, Sicily, Northern and Central Greece, Attica, Asia Minor, Egypt, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Illustrated Catalogues may be had.

The Library of the late FREDERICK CLIFFORD,
Esq., K.C.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, May 4, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of the late FREDERICK CLIFFORD, Esq., K.C., of 24, Collingham Gardens, S.W. (sold by order of the Executors), comprising the Bibliographical Writings of T. F. Dibdin, and other Works relating to Bibliography—Bordell's Illustrations to Shakespeare—Publications of the Burlington Fine-Arts Club—Ackermann's Westminster Abbey—La Borde Choix de Chansons, and other Eighteenth-Century French Illustrated Books—Modern French Literature—Works on Costume—Mrs. Frankau's Eighteenth-Century Colour Prints—Pyne's Royal Residences, Large Paper—Marital Achievements of Great Britain, and other Books with Coloured Illustrations—Classical Literature—History—Biography—Voyages—Travel, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Coins and Medals, including the Collection of the Right Hon. the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE
will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 8, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of COINS and MEDALS, the Property of the Right Hon. the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O., comprising Coins in Gold and Silver of Edward III., Henry VI., Henry VII., Henry VIII., Edward VI., Elizabeth, James I., Charles I.,
Oliver Cromwell, Charles II., William and Mary, William III.,
George I.—Medals in Gold of Charles II., Anne, George I., George II., Queen Caroline, &c.—and a Series of Foreign Coins in Gold, Silver, and Bronze; a small COLLECTION of GREEK ROMAN, and other COINS, the Property of a FELLOW of the SOCIETY of ANTIQUARIES; the COLLECTION of H. W. SMITH, Esq., including a rare Noble of Edward III., and Coins in the Three Metals of various Reigns; also the small but choice COLLECTION of W. W. HLEST, Esq., comprising English Coins in Gold and Silver, in unusually fine condition, mostly acquired from well-known Cabinets.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS
respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On MONDAY, May 1, MODERN PICTURES and DRAWINGS.

On TUESDAY, May 2, ETCHINGS by J. M.
Whistler, C. Meryon, Sir F. Seymour Haden, and A. H. Haig—Artists' Proofs after J. L. E. Meissonier, Sir E. Landseer, and others—Mezzotint Portraits by S. Cousins, R.A., &c.

On WEDNESDAY, May 3, a PORTION of the COLLECTION of OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE formed by EDMUND JAMES, Esq., of the Middle Temple.

On THURSDAY, May 4, and FRIDAY, May 5, the CAPEL-CURE COLLECTION of WORKS of ART.

On SATURDAY, May 6, the CAPEL-CURE COLLECTION of PICTURES by OLD MASTERS, and other important Pictures.

Valuable Books, including several Small Private Libraries;
also a Collection of Autograph Letters.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on THURSDAY, May 11, and Following Day, at ten minutes past
1 o'clock precisely, valuable BOOKS in ALL BRANCHES of LITERA-TURE, from various PRIVATE SOURCES; also an important COL-LECTION of AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and DOCUMENTS.

AMICABLE LIBRARY, LANCASTER.

Funded in 1768.

ALL the BOOKS (14,000 Volumes) to be SOLD by AUCTION by Mr. G. H. PETTY, at the LIBRARY, on MAY 9, 10, and 11.

Catal. (price 6d.) can be obtained from the AUCTIONEER, 62,
Market Street, Lancaster.

THE EDITOR of 'The BOOK-LOVERS' MAGAZINE' would be glad to receive CONTRIBUTIONS, preferably Illustrated, for the forthcoming (Sixth) Volume.—20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

JOURNAL of the INSTITUTE of ACTUARIES.
No. CCXX. APRIL, 1905. Price 2s. 6d.

Contents.

On Staff Pension Funds. By George King, F.I.A., F.F.A., one of the Vice-Presidents of the Institute of Actuaries, Consulting Actuary.
With Discussion.

Correspondence.
Changes in Pure Premium Policy-Values consequent upon Variations in the Rate of Interest or the Rate of Mortality, or upon the Introduction of the Rate of Discountance. By George James Lidstone, F.I.A., Actuary of the Alliance Assurance Company, Limited.
With Discussion.

On Mortgages of Expectancies under Wills. By James Robert Hart, F.I.A.

Note on the Methods followed in the Registration of Deeds affecting Land in Scotland. By A. Graham Donald, M.A., F.F.A., A.I.A.
London: C. & E. Layton, Farringdon Street.

For Continuation of Magazines see p. 516.

WARD, LOCK &amp; CO.'S LIST.

NEW FICTION.

NOW READY.

THE MASTER MUMMER. E. Phillips Oppenheim.
 THE MASTER MUMMER. BY E. Phillips Oppenheim.
 THE MASTER MUMMER. E. Phillips Oppenheim.

6s.
6s.

DUNDEE ADVERTISER.—“The Master Mummer’ is a remarkable novel, such as only E. Phillips Oppenheim can write. No other author could make the wildly extravagant not only natural, as make-believe goes, but actually moving. It is a beautiful story that is here set within a story.”

6s.
6s.

E. Phillips Oppenheim. THE MASTER MUMMER.
 E. Phillips Oppenheim. THE MASTER MUMMER.
 E. Phillips Oppenheim. THE MASTER MUMMER.

New Novel.

THE CRIMSON BLIND. 6s.

By FRED M. WHITE.

SOUTHPORT VISITOR.—“A wildly improbable but fascinating story is here unfolded. Those who love romances of the nerve-thrilling and pulse-leaping order will here find their heart's desire. The plot—or plots, for there is enough material out of which to construct half a dozen ordinary novels—are worked out with much ingenuity, and the reader's attention is riveted on the narrative from the opening chapter to the last.”

THE JACKAL. 6s.

By COULSON KERNAHAN.

THE WESTMINSTER GAZETTE said that Mr. Kernahan's ‘Seoundrel & Co.’ “would make a dead man's flesh creep.” Yet this book is tame in comparison with ‘The Jackal.’ The plot is one of the most extraordinary ever conceived, and the book is at once a fascinating love romance, a detective novel, and an absorbing soul study in crime.

THE KING'S SCAPEGOAT. 6s.

By HAMILTON DRUMMOND, Author of ‘For the Religion,’ ‘The Seven Houses,’ &amp;c.

YORKSHIRE POST.—“Deserves a place in the very front rank of historical romances. Its figures are drawn with the skilful hand of an artist in words, its incidents are highly dramatic, and its plot powerfully and consistently developed. Briefly, it is a very masterly book.”

A COURIER OF FORTUNE. 6s.

By ARTHUR W. MARCHMONT.

MORNING LEADER.—“The book is the best Mr. Marchmont has written, which is high praise.”

THE CONSCIENCE OF A KING. 6s.

By ARCHIBALD C. GUNTER.

SCOTSMAN.—“Mr. Gunter has a facile and energetic pen, and an adacious imagination, qualities which are conspicuous in this entertaining and notably successful novel.”

THE ROOT. 6s.

By ORME AGNUS,

Author of ‘Sarah Tuldon,’ ‘Zike Mouldom,’ ‘Jan Oxber,’ ‘Love in Our Village,’ &amp;c.

TO-DAY.—“Mr. Orme Agnus writes with a very genius of insight of the people of the West Country.....The inimitable humour of the chapters is as sly and sure almost as anything in Mr. W. W. Jacobs's ‘Light Cargoes.’”

THE LATE GUY BOOTHBY'S REMARKABLE NOVEL.

A CRIME OF THE UNDER SEAS. 5s.

By GUY BOOTHBY.

SPEAKER.—“Is quite the equal in art, observation, and dramatic intensity to any of Mr. Guy Boothby's numerous other romances, and is in every respect most typical of his powers.”

READY TO-DAY.

A NEW NOVEL
A NEW NOVEL
A NEW NOVEL

3s. 6d.

NOW READY
NOW READY
NOW READYB
Y

ROGER TREWINION.
 ROGER TREWINION.
 ROGER TREWINION.

B
YJOSEPH HOCKING
JOSEPH HOCKING
JOSEPH HOCKING

3s. 6d.

JOSEPH HOCKING
JOSEPH HOCKING
JOSEPH HOCKING

SHILLING

GUIDE-BOOKS.

Cloth bound, round corners.

SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED.

FURNISHED WITH EXCELLENT MAPS AND PLANS.

Printed in clear Type, on good Paper.

“BETTER GUIDE-BOOKS ONE COULD NOT WISH FOR.”—Graphic.

ENGLAND AND WALES.

|                   |                     |
|-------------------|---------------------|
| ALDEBURGH.        | LLANDRINDOD         |
| BATH.             | WELLS.              |
| BEXHILL.          | LONDON.             |
| BIDEFORD.         | LOWESTOFT.          |
| BLACKPOOL.        | LYME REGIS.         |
| BOURNEMOUTH.      | LYNTON and LYN-     |
| BRIDLINGTON and   | MOUTH.              |
| FILEY.            | MARGATE.            |
| BRIGHTON and      | MATLOCK.            |
| HOVE.             | NEWQUAY.            |
| BROADSTAIRS.      | NORTH WALES         |
| BUXTON.           | (Northern Section). |
| CANTERBURY.       | NORTH WALES         |
| CHANNEL           | (Southern Section). |
| ISLANDS.          | PENZANCE.           |
| CLIFTON, BRISTOL. | PLYMOUTH.           |
| CROMER.           | PORTSMOUTH.         |
| DARTMOOR.         | RAMSGATE.           |
| DAWLISH.          | SCARBOROUGH.        |
| DEAL.             | SHERWOOD            |
| DOVER.            | FOREST.             |
| EASTBOURNE.       | SIDMOUTH.           |
| ENGLISH LAKE      | SKEGNESS.           |
| DISTRICT.         | SOUTHSEA.           |
| EXETER.           | SOUTHWOLD.          |
| EXMOUTH.          | STRATFORD-UPON-     |
| FALMOUTH.         | AVON.               |
| FELIXSTOWE.       | SUTTON-ON-SEA.      |
| FOLKESTONE.       | SWANAGE.            |
| HARROGATE.        | TEIGNMOUTH.         |
| HASTINGS.         | TORQUAY.            |
| HERNE BAY.        | WESTON-SUPER-       |
| ILFRACOMBE.       | MARE.               |
| ILKLEY.           | WEYMOUTH.           |
| ISLE OF MAN.      | WHITBY.             |
| ISLE OF WIGHT.    | WOODHALL SPA.       |
| LEAMINGTON.       | WYE VALLEY.         |
| LIVERPOOL.        | YARMOUTH and the    |
|                   | BROADS.             |

List of Scotch, Irish, and Continental Guides

POST FREE ON APPLICATION.

THE NINETEENTH CENTURY and AFTER. MAY.

The DEFENCE of the EMPIRE:

- (1) IS OUR RESERVE of WARSHIPS AMPLE? By Sir William H. White, K.C.B., late Director of Naval Construction.
- (2) IS NOT INVASION POSSIBLE? By Major-General Frank S. Russell, C.M.G.
- (3) UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING for LADS. By the Right Hon. the Earl of Meath.
- (4) The DEARTH of OFFICERS By Colonel the Earl of Erroll.
- (5) COMMON-SENSE TRAINING for RECRUITS. By Lieut.-Col. Alsager Pollock.

The BLACK PROBLEM in SOUTH AFRICA. By Roderick Jones, South African Editor, Reuter's.

ENGLAND and RUSSIA in AFGHANISTAN. By Amcer Ali, C.I.E., late Judge of the High Court, Calcutta.

The BALANCE of POWER in EUROPE By O. Eltzbacher.

The SEPARATION of CHURCH and STATE in FRANCE. By the Comte de Castellane, Député des Basses Alpes.

The NEED for NATIONAL NURSERIES. By Miss K. Bathurst, late Inspector under the Board of Education.

WHAT IS the RAISON D'ÊTRE of PICTURES? By H. Heathcote Statham.

SOME NOTICEABLE BOOKS. By Walter Frewen Lord.

THEN and NOW. By the Lady Napier of Magdala.

The AFTER-DINNER ORATORY of AMERICA. By Daniel Crilly.

The POLITICAL SITUATION. By Herbert Paul.

London: Spottiswoode & Co., Ltd., 5, New Street Square, and 54, Gracechurch Street, E.C.

THE CORNHILL MAGAZINE For MAY. Price One Shilling.

Contents.

ROSE of the WORLD. Book III. Chaps. 6-8. By Agnes and Egerton Castle.

The REDISTRIBUTION of the FLEET. By Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, G.C.B.

FRENCH REFUGEES to ENGLAND in 1871-2. By Mrs. Frederic Harrison.

A HOME of DIAMONDS. By Prof. T. O. Bonney, D.Sc. F.R.S.

The LITTLE YELLOW MAN.

ARTHUR STRONG. By Sir Rowland Blennerhassett, Bart.

The ROCK GARDEN. By Leonard Huxley.

A PLEA for the USELESS. By W. H. D. Rouse, Litt.D.

SEA-PAINTING and SEA-MYTH. By Arthur F. Wallis.

PORT ARTHUR, its SIEGE and FALL. A Contemporary Epic. By Richard Barry.

The FOURTH TIME. By W. Philip Groser.

FROM a COLLEGE WINDOW. I.

The KING'S REVOKE. Chaps. 10-11. By Mrs. Margaret L. Woods.

London: Smith, Elder & Co. 15, Waterloo Place.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE For MAY.

Beautifully illustrated. 1s. net.

THE ADMIRABLE WHOOPLE. Nelson Lloyd.

THE AWAKENING OF THE TREES. Frank French.

AMID THE ORCHARDS. Mary Findlater.

THE MARBLE MOUNTAINS. Edwin B. Child.

LIFE ON A TUSCAN FARM. T. R. Sullivan.

&c. &c.

AND MANY COLOURED ILLUSTRATIONS.

London: Wm. Heinemann, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

MAY ISSUE NOW READY. Price SIXPENCE.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

HAY FEVER. By Walter Herries Pollock and Guy C. Pollock. Concluded.

SYDNEY SMITH. By the Rev. Canon Vaughan.

FENG. By H. L. Norris.

The CAFÉ in the STRAND. By May Kendall.

The WAY of a WOMAN. By "Ben Bolt."

The DEMETER of CNIDOS. By St. John Lucas.

ARAB HOSPITALITY. By Louisa Jebb.

WILD WHEAT. Chaps. 12-14. By M. E. Francis (Mrs. Francis Blundell).

AT THE SIGN of the SHIP. By Andrew Lang.

Longmans, Green & Co. 39, Paternoster Row, London, E.C.; New York and Bombay.

THE LITERARY ASPIRANT

is the Publication for aspiring Literateurs. Obtainable only by Subscription, 1s. Yearly.—7, Oxendon Street, Leicester.

PROCEEDINGS of the ROYAL SOCIETY.

This Publication will be issued in future in royal 8vo size, in Two Series:—

A. MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL SCIENCES.

B. BIOLOGICAL SCIENCES.

Each Series will form a complete Journal in itself, and may be obtained separately, as issued, or in completed Volumes.

The First Parts of the New Series are now ready, namely:—

No. A 507, pp. 1-87, with 1 Plate, price 2s. 6d.

No. B 507, pp. 1-137, price 4s.

Sold by Harrison & Sons, 45, St. Martin's Lane, London, W.C.

PROPOSED BUILDING at the EAST END of the MALL: Architecture at the Royal Academy; Artisans' Cottages in America; The Building Trades Exhibition; The Sanitary Institute; Illustrations of Proposed House at Reigate, and Houses at Bickley and Triscombe; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column), &c.—See the BUILDER of April 29 (4d.); by post, 4½d.—Through any Newsagent, or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

BLACKWOOD

FOR MAY

CONTAINS

A Retrograde Admiralty.

Sir James Browne and the Harnai Railway.

By Colonel G. K. SCOTT MONCRIEFF, C.I.E.

Reminiscences — Archæological Researches in Cyprus.

By Sir R. HAMILTON LANG, K.C.M.G.

Mountaineering of To-day.

The Parson's Man.

The Mystics.

By the Author of 'John Chilcote, M.P.'

A Radical Change.

By J. K.

Richard Hartley, Prospector.

By DOUGLAS BLACKBURN.

Musings Without Method. — Lord Milner's Return.

Mr. Balfour and Lord Beaconsfield.

A Study of the Russo-Japanese War. V.—Port Arthur.

By CHASSEUR.

The Creation of an Imperial Militia Service and the Reinforcement of India in Time of War.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
Edinburgh and London.

HARPERS' MAGAZINE.

Features of the rich and varied Contents for MAY (now ready):—

HOW the SUN PLAYS with ELECTRICAL APPARATUS is graphically described in an illustrated Article, 'Magnetic Storms and the Sun,' by E. W. MAUNDER, F.R.A.S., of Greenwich Observatory.

The CONSORT of EDWARD I. The Story of Queen Eleanor's romantic end is discussed, and the famous Funeral March described by THOMAS A. JANVIER. JOSEPH PENNELL illustrates the Article by Drawings of the Crosses that commemorate and mark the route of the Procession.

EIGHT COMPLETE STORIES maintain the policy of making Fiction by the Best Authors an important feature of the Magazine.

A STRIKING EXAMPLE of TERRITORIAL EXPANSION is given in an Article on the United States by JOHN BASSETT MOORE, LL.D.

The LATEST NEWS of ANCIENT EGYPT. See illustrated Article on the Temple of Susinak at Susa by JACQUES DE MORGAN, Honorary Director-General of the Antiquities of Egypt.

TRAGEDIES in INSECT LIFE are related by HENRY C. MCCOOK, Sc.D. LL.D., in his illustrated Article, 'The Huntress Wasps.'

PREHISTORIC EMIGRATION from Asia to America. See 'An Ethnological Paradox.' Illustrated.

The CRADLE of the BENEDICTINE ORDER is described by W. L. ALDEN in his illustrated Article on the picturesque Italian hillside town Subiaco.

A WEALTH of ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS. There are over 70 Illustrations in this Number (15 of which are Full-Page Drawings). These include the work of HOWARD PYLE, JOSEPH PENNELL, and ALBERT STERNER'S Illustration of Mrs. Humphry Ward's Novel.

MR. MURRAY'S

NEW BOOKS.

SECOND IMPRESSION IN THE PRESS.

MR. HORACE A. VACHELL'S

NEW NOVEL.

THE HILL. 6s.

With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by PERCY WADHAM.

BOOTH TARKINGTON'S

NEW WORK.

IN THE ARENA. 6s.

A MOTHER OF CZARS.

A Sketch of the Life of Marie Feodorowna, Wife of Paul I. and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. By Mrs. COLQUHOUN GRANT, Author of 'The French Noblesse of the Eighteenth Century.' Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

THE SWORD OF ISLAM.

By ARTHUR N. WOLLASTON, C.I.E. With Illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

FROM THE CAPE TO THE ZAMBESI.

By G. T. HUTCHINSON. With an Introduction by Col. FRANK RHODES, C.B., D.S.O. With many Illustrations from Photographs taken by Col. Rhodes and the Author. Square demy 8vo, 9s. net.

FIVE YEARS IN A PERSIAN TOWN.

By the Rev. NAPIER MALCOLM. With Illustrations by MIRZA ABRI'L QASIMI YAZDI, and Photographs, with a Map. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A CHEAP EDITION, paper covers, 1s. net.

IRELAND IN THE NEW CENTURY.

With an Epilogue Replying to his Critics. By the Right Hon. Sir HORACE PLUNKETT, K.C.V.O. F.R.S.

THE MONTHLY REVIEW.

Edited by CHARLES HANBURY-WILLIAMS.

No. 56. MAY, 1905. 2s. 6d. net.

FREE MEALS for UNDERFED CHILDREN. F. H. Barrow.

"The WHIMSICAL TROUT." W. Earl Hodgson.

MUSIC as a FACTOR in EVERYDAY LIFE. Arthur Somervell.

The PEOPLE of LITTLE EGYPT. David MacRitchie.

SOME ASPECTS of the AUTOMOBILE. E. A. Greathed.

WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR. Walter Sichel.

The HUNT for the POLITICAL SECRET. Michael MacDonagh.

A WORKSHOP of ROMAN CHRISTIANITY. M. A. R. Tucker.

IRISH EDUCATION. "Irishman."

The MAJOR COMPLAINS. B. B. B.

IMMORTALITY. A. St. John Adcock.

ON the LINE.

BEAUJEU. Chaps. 16-19. H. C. Bailey.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

SWAN SONNENSCHN & CO., LTD.

THE PRINCIPLES OF PHYSIOLOGICAL PSYCHOLOGY.

By Prof. W. WUNDT.

A Translation of the Fifth and wholly Rewritten (1902-3) German Edition by Prof. E. B. TITCHENER, M.A.

In 3 vols. Vol. I. with 156 Illustrations, demy 8vo, 12s.

"Anything more finished and judicial than Wundt's description of the anatomy of the brain we have never met anywhere."—Academy.

"Prof. Titchener has done his part of the work with notable success."—Scotsman.

THE GROWTH OF THE ENGLISH MANOR.

By Prof. P. VINOGRADOFF. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Seems likely at once to take rank as a leading authority upon its subject."—Scotsman.

"Prof. Vinogradoff's method and the mastery of the details of his subject combine to produce a notable book."—Academy.

VOLUME II. OF

THE STUDENT'S TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY.

By ADAM SEDGWICK, M.A.,

Fellow and Lecturer of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 21s.

NEW EDITIONS OF

HANDBOOK OF SYSTEMATIC BOTANY.

By Dr. E. WARMING.

Edited by M. C. POTTER, M.A., Professor of Botany in the Durham College of Science. 610 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s.

AN ELEMENTARY TEXT-BOOK OF BOTANY.

By Dr. SIDNEY H. VINES, M.A. D.Sc. F.R.S.,

Sherardian Professor of Botany in the University of Oxford.

483 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 9s.

THE ANGEVIN EMPIRE.

(Henry II., Richard I., and John.)

By Sir JAMES H. RAMSAY, Bart., M.A. Maps and Illustrations. 12s.

"Sir James Ramsay's learned and careful narrative will earn him the gratitude of all students of the Angevin period."—Times.

REWRITTEN EDITION OF DR. A. RUSSEL WALLACE'S

THE WONDERFUL CENTURY IN THE AGE OF NEW IDEAS IN SCIENCE AND INVENTION.

By ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, Author of 'Island Life,' &c.

Entirely Revised, and now First Illustrated with 107 Pictures, 540 pp., 7s. 6d. net.

LIBRARY OF PHILOSOPHY.

Edited by J. H. MUIRHEAD, M.A. (Oxon.),

Lecturer on Mental and Moral Philosophy and Political Economy in the Mason University College, Birmingham.

Large 8vo, each vol. 10s. 6d. net, except where otherwise stated.

HISTORY of PHILOSOPHY. Dr. J. E. Erdmann.

Vol. I. ANCIENT and MEDIEVAL. 15s.

[Third Edition.]

Vol. II. MODERN. 15s.

[Fourth Edition.]

Vol. III. SINCE HEGEL. 12s.

[Third Edition.]

Vol. IV. CONTEMPORARY. By Prof. F. UEBERWEG, Edited by MAX HEINZE.

[In preparation.]

PHILOSOPHY and POLITICAL ECONOMY. Dr. J. Bonar.

HISTORY of ÆSTHETIC. Dr. B. Bosanquet.

APPEARANCE and REALITY. F. H. Bradley. 12s. net.

[Third Edition.]

RATIONAL THEOLOGY SINCE KANT. Prof. O. PFLEIDERER.

[Second Edition.]

NATURAL RIGHTS. Prof. D. G. Ritchie.

LOGIC. Prof. Sigwart. 2 vols.

ANALYTIC PSYCHOLOGY. G. F. Stout. 2 vols.

A PRACTICAL FRENCH GRAMMAR.

By F. W. AVELING, M.A. B.Sc.,

Presiding Examiner B.A. B.Sc. London University. Crown 8vo, 3s.

THE FOURTH DIMENSION.

By C. H. HINTON, Author of 'Scientific Romances,' &c.

Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

"Prof. Hinton has done well to attempt a treatise of moderate size, which shall at once be clear in method and free from the technicalities of the schools."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW LIGHT ON THE SHAKESPEARE-BACON CONTROVERSY.

THE SHAKESPEARE STORY.

By GEORGE PITT-LEWIS, K.C. Ex-M.P., Author of 'Taylor on Evidence,' &c.

Crown 8vo, paper covers, 1s. 6d. net.

THREE NEW VOLUMES OF

THE "SOCIAL SCIENCE SERIES."

Each crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH CORN LAWS.

By J. S. NICHOLSON, M.A. D.Sc.

THE PHILOSOPHERS AND THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

By P. A. WADIA,

Professor of History and Political Economy, Gujarat College, Ahmedabad.

THE BIOLOGY OF BRITISH POLITICS.

By CHARLES H. HARVEY.

A NEW EDITION OF

FRANCES POWER COBBE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

1 vol. crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HINTS TO RECITERS.

By the late CLIFFORD HARRISON.

Pott 8vo, leather, 2s. 6d. net; cloth, 2s. net.

GOD AND THE AGNOSTICS;

Or, the End of the Age of Faith.

By AN ENGLISHMAN. 6s.

"A book of some originality. His work is largely critical."—Times.

THE SCIENTIFIC BASIS OF MORALITY.

By G. GORE, LL.D. F.R.S.,

Author of 'The Scientific Basis of National Progress,' &c.

Pp. viii-600, 10s. 6d. net.

A NEW EDITION OF PREMATURE BURIAL.

By WALTER R. HADWEN, M.D.

Being a New and Revised Edition of Mr. William Tebb and Col. Ed. Terry Vullum's Book. Crown 8vo, 6s.

IMPORTANT TO OFFICERS AND STUDENTS OF MILITARY HISTORY. NOW READY, the First Volume of the "Special Campaign Series," entitled

FROM SAARBRUCK TO PARIS.

By Lieut.-Col. Sisson Pratt.

With 10 Sketches and Maps. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

A QUEEN OF UNREST.

The Story of Juana of Castile, Mother of Charles V.

By HARRY TIGHE, Author of 'Archie Wynward.' Crown 8vo, 6s.

TWO NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

WHEN THE WORLD WENT WRY.

By M. F. WILSON,

Author of 'When the Swallows Come Again,' 'How the Dreams Came True,' &c.

"Well written, and in many parts exceedingly graceful."—Glasgow Herald.

"A story that all through controls attention."—Dundee Advertiser.

BENDISH.

By WILLIAM ST. CLAIR, Author of 'Prince Baber and his Wives.'

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. FROM the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.
Previously Published—Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

ILLUSTRATED POCKET CLASSICS,
NEW VOLUME.

JOHN INGLESANT.

By J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net.

VOL. V. NOW READY.

DIARY AND LETTERS OF MADAME D'ARBLAY

(1778-1840). As Edited by her Niece, CHARLOTTE BARRETT. With Preface and Notes by AUSTIN DOBSON. With Photogravure Portraits and other Sketches. In 6 vols. Vol. I., 1778 to June, 1781. Vol. II., 1781-86. Vol. III., August, 1785, to June, 1788. Vol. IV., July, 1788, to July, 1791. Vol. V., July, 1791, to April, 1802. 8vo, 10s. 6d. net each.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ANDREW DICKSON WHITE, Formerly United States Ambassador at Berlin and St. Petersburg. With Portraits. In 2 vols. 8vo, 30s. net. [Tuesday.]

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN

TRAGEDY:

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

'THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. Annual Subscription, 16s.

The MAY Number contains:—

NEW PORTRAITS of a GROUP of BRITISH AUTHORS: George Meredith, Mrs. Humphry Ward, Austin Dobson, Andrew Lang, Edmund Gosse, George Bernard Shaw, Gilbert K. Chesterton. From Photographs by ALVIN LANGDON COBURN.

The CHATEAUX of TOURAINE. II. LOCHES and LANGEAIS. By RICHARD WHITEING.
And numerous other Stories and Articles of General Interest.
** Also ready, Vol. LXIX. Price 10s. 6d.

ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR CHILDREN.

ST. NICHOLAS.

Price 1s. Annual Subscription, 12s.

** Also ready, Vol. XXXII. Part I. Price 6s.

THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by I. ABRAHAMS and C. G. MONTEFIORE.
Price 3s. 6d. Annual Subscription, post free, 11s.

Contents:—Mr. Lucien Wolf on "The Zionist Peril." By Israel Zangwill.—An Eighth-Century Genizah Document. With Facsimile. By I. Abrahams.—The Arabic Portion of the Cairo Genizah at Cambridge. Ninth Article. By Dr. H. Pirschfeld.—Ezekiel and the Babylonian Account of the B. luge. Notes on Ezek. XIV. 12-20. By the Rev. Samuel Daiches.—Some Talmudic Fragments from the Cairo Genizah, in the British Museum. By Herbert Loewe.—Maimonides on Superstition. By H. S. Lewis.—The God of Sinai and Jerusalem. By Grey Hubert Skipwith.—The Itinerary of Benjamin of Tudela. Continued. By Marcus N. Adler.—The Mendelssohnian Programme. By Prof. Max L. Margolis.—Allgemeine Einleitung in die Jüdische Literatur des Mittelalters. Concluded from Vol. XVII. p. 359. By Prof. M. Steinschneider.—The Talmudical Particle הוּלָךְ. By Prof. W. Bacher.—Note to J. Q. R., XVII. 279. By the Same.—The High Priest's Procession. By Dr. L. Belleli.—The High Priest's Procession and the Liturgy. By I. Abrahams.—Critical Notices.—Bibliography of Hebraica and Judaica. Autumn, 1904, to March, 1905. By I. A.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LIMITED, London.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

SECOND IMPRESSION NEARLY READY.

L H A S A.

By PERCEVAL LANDON,
Special Correspondent of the Times. With an Introduction by
Col. Sir FRANCIS YOUNG-
HUSBAND, K.C.I.E. In 2 vols.
royal 8vo, beautifully illustrated,
2l. 2s. net.

An Illustrated Prospectus, with Extracts
from Reviews, sent free on application.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY IN THE PRESENT WAR.

By Capt. N. KLADO,
Of the Imperial Russian Navy.

"An interesting book, and proof of its author's astuteness and ability."—Standard.

VOLUME II. of FRIEDBERGER
and FROHNER'S VETE-RINARY PATHOLOGY,
Translated by Capt. HAYES
and Edited by JOHN DUN-
STAN, M.R.C.V.S., will be READY EARLY in MAY,
price 10s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.

In 1 vol. 6s.

MARIAN SAX. By Madame Albanesi.
Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One
Elder,' &c.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME of the KING. Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War. By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.
"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times.
"Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."
Pall Mall Gazette.

NOW IN GREAT DEMAND.

In 1 vol. medium 8vo, with over 250 Illustrations, 18s. net.

ANTARCTICA. Two Years amongst the Ice of the South Pole. By Dr. OTTO NORDEN-SKJOLD.
"The author has as good a story to tell as any polar explorer since Nansen, and he has told it with spirit and enthusiasm."—Times.

MR. DOWNEY'S BOOK IS THE SUCCESS OF THE SEASON.

In 1 vol. large crown 8vo, with 16 Portrait Sketches, 6s. net.
TWENTY YEARS AGO. A Book of Anecdote. By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of
'Through Green Glasses.'
"The anecdotes are all fresh goods, and in the humour of them there is an unmistakable taste of reality which adds immensely to the flavour."—St. James's Gazette.
"Mr. Downey has an ample collection of good stories, and knows how to tell them well."—World.

A BOOK OF GREAT INTEREST ON CHILD LIFE
AND LABOUR IN OUR BIG CITIES.

The CHILD SLAVES of BRITAIN.
By ROBERT SHERRARD, Author of 'The White
Slaves of England,' &c. In 1 vol. 6s.

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, illustrated covers.

HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M.
CROKER.

The MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

FREE OPINIONS

FREELY EXPRESSED.

BY

MARIE CORELLI.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR IMMEDIATE PUBLICATION.

The FAR EASTERN TROPICS:

Studies in the Administration of Tropical Dependencies.
By ALLEYNE IRELAND. With a Coloured Map.
Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

The FIRST ROMANOV (1613-1725).

A History of Moscovite Civilization and the Rise of Modern Russia under Peter the Great and his Forerunners. By R. NISBET BAIN, Author of 'The Pupils of Peter the Great,' &c. With 8 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

PSYCHOLOGY. A Study of the Structure and Function of Human Consciousness. By JAMES ROWLAND ANGELL, of the Department of Psychology in Chicago University. 7s. 6d. net.

The LIFE of REASON. By George
SANTAYANA, Professor of Philosophy at Harvard University. 2 vols 5s. net each.

The CITIZEN: a STUDY of the INDIVIDUAL and the GOVERNMENT. By NATHANIEL SOUTHGATE SHALER, Professor of Geology in Harvard University. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS:

The JAPANESE SPIRIT. By Y.

OKAKURA. With an Introduction by GEORGE
MEREDITH. Fcap 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"These Lectures are compendious and explicit in a degree that enables us to form a summary of much that has been otherwise partially obscure, so that we get nearer to the secret of this singular race than we have had the chance of doing before."—From Mr. MEREDITH's Introduction.

CATHERINE DE MEDICI and the
FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL,
Author of 'Women and Men of the French Renaissance,' &c. With 12 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

JOHN GRAHAM of CLAVER-
HOUSE, VISCOUNT of DUNDEE, 1648-1689. By C.
SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated. Demy 8vo,
12s. 6d. net.

The KING in EXILE (CHARLES II.).

By EVA SCOTT, Author of 'Rupert Prince Palatine.'
Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

The SUN and the SERPENT. A

Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDFHAM. With 33 Full-Page
Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

URBAN VIII. By William Nassau

WEECH, M.A., late Scholar and Longstaff Exhibitioner of New College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

A HISTORY of the ANCIENT

WORLD. By GEORGE STEPHEN GOODSPEED,
Ph.D., Professor of Ancient History in the University of Chicago. With Illustrations, Maps, and Plans.
Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

This volume surveys the whole history of the Ancient World from the earliest Oriental civilization to the crowning of Charlemagne as "Emperor of the Romans" in 800.

SEXTI PROPRIETI OPERA OMNIA.

With a Commentary by H. E. BUTLER, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

"No serious student of Propertius can in future afford to dispense with Mr. Butler's interesting and elucidating edition."—School Guardian.

PENTHESILEA. A Poem. By

LAURENCE BINYON, Author of 'The Death of Adam,' &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

The GARDEN of EDEN: Kempton

Park once upon a Time. By EDITH A. BARNETT, Author of 'A Champion in the Seventies,' &c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO., LIMITED,
16, James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

SATURDAY, APRIL 29, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  |     |     |     |         |
|--|-----|-----|-----|---------|
| MR. WELLS'S MODERN UTOPIA  | ... | ... | ... | 519     |
| GREEK THINKERS   | ... | ... | ... | 520     |
| CATHERINE DE' MEDICI AND THE FRENCH REFORMATION  | ... | ... | ... | 521     |
| JERUSALEM UNDER THE HIGH PRIESTS   | ... | ... | ... | 522     |
| EARLY VOYAGES TO SPITZBERGEN   | ... | ... | ... | 522     |
| NEW NOVELS (Bloomsbury; Duke's Son; Bartram of Beltana; Beverly of Graustark; Constance West; The Knight of the Needle Rock; A Dreamer's Harvest)  | ... | ... | ... | 523-524 |
| NAPOLÉONIC LITERATURE  | ... | ... | ... | 524     |
| KNOX AND THE REFORMATION   | ... | ... | ... | 525     |
| DANTE LITERATURE   | ... | ... | ... | 526     |
| MEDIEVAL LITERATURE  | ... | ... | ... | 527     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The Government of Greater Britain; The Statesman's Year-Book for 1905; Canada as It Is; Review of Canadian History; Pierre Loti's New Book; Bentham's Life and Work; The Outdoor Handybook; What is History? Dr. Cunningham on English Industry and Commerce in the Middle Ages; Three Old English Texts; New Editions) | ... | ... | ... | 527-529 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS  | ... | ... | ... | 529     |
| F. T. RICHARDS; CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS; BELCEPHON AND ASMENOTH; JUAN VALERA; THE SCOTT SALE  | ... | ... | ... | 530-531 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP  | ... | ... | ... | 531     |
| SCIENCE—THE SOCIETY OF APOTHECARIES; MORPHOLOGY AND ANTHROPOLOGY AT CAMBRIDGE; ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES; TOTEMISM AND THE DOMESTICATION OF ANIMALS; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP   | ... | ... | ... | 532-534 |
| FINE ARTS—TISSOT'S OLD TESTAMENT; THE ART OF THE LOUVRE; PROCESS ENGRAVING AT THE VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM; THE VASARI SOCIETY; THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AT ATHENS; GOSSIP   | ... | ... | ... | 535-538 |
| MUSIC—BRETHOVEN AND SCARLATTI; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK  | ... | ... | ... | 538-539 |
| DRAMA—ROMEO AND JULIET; SHAKESPEARE AT HIS MAJESTY'S; WHAT PAMELA WANTED; HER OWN WAY; GOSSIP  | ... | ... | ... | 539-540 |

LITERATURE

A Modern Utopia. By H. G. Wells. (Chapman & Hall.)

IN his new book Mr. Wells completes his philosophy of life, and expresses his intention of resuming work as an imaginative writer. He declares that he wrote 'Anticipations' to "clear up the muddle in my own mind about innumerable social and political questions." But 'Anticipations' did not achieve its end:—

"I have a slow constructive, hesitating sort of mind, and when I emerged from that undertaking I found I had still most of my questions to state and solve."

Thus 'Mankind in the Making' came to be written as a further attempt at self-education. With that Mr. Wells confesses that he acquired "a certain personal certitude upon which I feel I shall go for the rest of my days." There remained the task, then, of settling accounts with a number of questions opened up by these two books; hence the present volume, with which as a sociological writer the author threatens to take leave of us. He has cleared up his doubts; he has made his profession; he is content to let things end so.

Mr. Wells has given to this book a more definite personal note than characterized its predecessors. And this seems inevitable from the nature of the case. He is right in believing 'Mankind in the Making' to be less attractive from a literary point of view than 'Anticipations,' and perhaps that is the chief reason why he has returned to imaginative writing in his third book. His intention here has been to fuse personalities with the ideal unrolled and unravelled in his pages; and he says boldly:—

"I have written into it as well as I can the heretical metaphysical scepticism upon which all my thinking rests, and I have inserted certain sections reflecting upon the established methods of sociological and economic science."

This is frank, and it is true. Mr. Wells is a great heretic; he is essentially a heretic. But heretics may be the directors of future philosophy; they may in the event turn the course of human thought. Let us see wherein Mr. Wells's heresy exists, and how it affects his views as established in the body of his philosophy. This is set forth in an interesting appendix to the book, which originally was read as a paper before the Oxford Philosophical Society:—

"My opening scepticism is essentially a doubt of the objective reality of classification. I have no hesitation in saying that is the first and primary proposition of my philosophy."

That is to say, Mr. Wells begins by making war on logic. Logic, he concludes in effect, was shaped long before there was any conception of biology or inductive science. And logic must come into line with the discoveries of natural science. Approaching logic "over the bracing uplands of comparative anatomy," Mr. Wells discovers that there is infinite variation in all organisms, and even in all atoms, and consequently that every organism is "unique," and that there can be no fixed boundaries to species or genera or classes in any sphere of life or fact. This "discovery of the unique" is of the essence of Mr. Wells's philosophy; nor is it possible to deny that his attack upon orthodoxy is damaging. It is probable that he pushes his advantage too hard, but to discuss that would lead us too far from the present book. It is sufficient to say that with this key to Mr. Wells's philosophy it is possible to follow him through all these engrossing and stimulating chapters.

This Utopia, of which so many have dreamed dreams, takes form with definition in Mr. Wells's mind. It is a world state, not a mere city, such as was Plato's; and there is a world-language. The question of race, which receives a chapter to itself towards the close of the book, naturally intrudes on us here and at once. What will be the constitution of this Utopia? Mr. Wells is openly, and almost contemptuously, a foe of the racial idea. He speaks of J. R. Green's "grotesque insistence upon Anglo-Saxonism":—

"The Briton forgetting his Defoe, the Jew forgetting the very word proselyte, the German forgetting his anthropometric variations, and the Italian forgetting everything, are obsessed by the singular purity of their blood, and the danger of contamination the mere continuance of other races involves.....The natural tendency of every human being towards a stupid conceit in himself and his kind, a stupid depreciation of all unlikeness, is traded upon by this bastard science. With the weakening of national references, and with the pause before reconstruction in religious belief, these new arbitrary and unsubstantial race prejudices become daily more formidable. They are shaping policies and modifying laws, and they will certainly be responsible for a large proportion of the wars, hardships, and cruelties the immediate future holds in store for our earth."

This view follows on Mr. Wells's conception that the individual is infinitely variable, and consequently counts above arbitrary and conventional species and genera. But here we must again object that he pushes his argument too far. He says very truly that there is probably no pure race in the world. But it would be absurd to deny that certain qualities and characteristics are predominant in certain races. How would Mr. Wells explain the conquering Aryan race which settled on a continent and edited the civilizations of the autochthonous peoples? It would be ridiculous to class it with the Hottentots or the Bushmen. Race is made by association, habit, morals, and climate; it does not leap full-armed out of Jupiter's head. Yet when developed it is still race. Mr. Wells apparently thinks that it would be possible to level up, or level down, all peoples to the same status. It would only be possible, so far as we can see, by the endosmosis of intermarriage.

But if we grant the equable homogeneity of a world state, what salient features would it present? Mr. Wells has to decide between Socialism and Individualism, and it is interesting to notice how he does it:—

"To the onlooker, both Individualism and Socialism are, in the absolute, absurdities; the one would make men the slaves of the violent or rich, the other the slaves of the State official, and the way of sanity runs, perhaps even sinuously, down the intervening valley..... In the very days when our political and economic order is becoming steadily more Socialistic, our ideals of intercourse turn more and more to a fuller recognition of the claims of individuality. The State is to be progressive, it is no longer to be static, and this alters the general condition of the Utopian problems profoundly; we have to provide not only for food and clothing, for order and health, but for initiative. The factor that leads the World State on from one phase of development to the next is the interplay of individualities; to speak teleologically, the world exists for the sake of and through initiative, and individuality is the method of initiative. Each man and woman, to the extent that his or her individuality is marked, breaks the law of precedent, transgresses the general formula, and makes a new experiment for the direction of the life force. It is impossible, therefore, for the State, which represents all and is pre-occupied by the average, to make effectual experiments and intelligent innovations, and so supply the essential substance of life. As against the individual the State represents the species, in the case of the Utopian World State it absolutely represents the species. The individual emerges from the species, makes his experiment, and either fails, dies, and comes to an end, or succeeds and impresses himself, in offspring, in consequences and results, intellectual, material, and moral, upon the world."

How then is this perfect State to be governed? The answer is, by "voluntary nobility." There are four classes in the State: the Poietic, the Kinetic, the Dutil, and the Base. "The former two constitute the living tissue of the State; the latter are the fulcra and resistances—the bone and cover of its body." Caste has no place here; it is a question of the evolution of the fittest. But the government will be in the hands of certain select persons who are called the Samurai, and who, as Mr. Wells sees clearly, must resemble Plato's guardians. These rulers are volunteers, and must live according to a system which includes a regimen of food, the interdiction of tobacco, wine, narcotic drugs, meat, usury, acting, singing, and the like (on the ground that these weaken and corrupt the spirit), and a vow of chastity. Celibacy, however, is not exacted, and some will see in this a weakness of the edifice. But Mr. Wells has a thorough programme in respect of marital arrangements. He will not hear of the "human stud farm," which Plato was the first to adumbrate; and this once more on the score of the divinity of the individual. "In the initiative of the individual above the average lies the reality of the future, which the State, presenting the average, may subserve, but cannot control." Motherhood is to be subsidized by the State, for the State's prime interest is in the children. Licences are granted for marriage only after due inquiry—a regulation which is not so widely different from Plato's conception. The chastity of the wife is the one essential, but "a reciprocal restraint on the part of the husband is clearly of no importance whatever, so far as the first end of matrimony goes, the protection of the community from inferior births."

It is difficult to follow Mr. Wells in this reasoning. But, indeed, the whole constitution, as he lays it down, challenges argument, contention, and question. Still, it is an amazingly able constitution, and one wonders that it should be the outcome of a single mind. It is certain that the author has only intended to offer suggestions—main tracks through an unexplored country—for the use of future thinkers. We regret that our space will not suffer us to enlarge on many of the topics treated in this astonishing book. It is a piece of work which embodies imaginative science at its highest, and where the reader differs from the author most he will find him most suggestive. There has been no work of this importance published for the last thirty years; and it is possible and permissible to hope that some ideas sketched in it will fructify in the future.

Mr. Wells has deliberately chosen a medium for the expression of his ideas, and he will not find his readers all at one in approval of it. It is in a thin vein of fiction that this Utopia is pictured forth, but the fiction is so slight that its irruption and emergence at intervals hardly lend interest, and may even be said to distract. However, that is a mere nothing. The ideas are here, and the ideas count. A tribute of respect is necessary to the satirical pictures by Mr. E. J. Sullivan. To-morrow Mr. Wells returns to his fiction; but we must express a hope that, in returning, he will not abandon for ever a thesis which he has developed with such remarkable skill, pertinacity, and imagination.

---

Greek Thinkers. By Theodor Gomperz. Vols. I.-III. (Murray.)

THE first of these volumes of the authorized English edition of 'Griechische Denker' appeared in 1901, while the second and third volumes were published together at the beginning of the present year. Much credit is due both to Mr. Laurie Magnus, who translated the first volume, and to Mr. G. G. Berry, who undertook the others, for the manner in which they have executed a somewhat laborious task. And since the work of translation has been personally supervised by Prof. Gomperz, the reader can rest assured that his latest opinions are presented here with complete fidelity. It may be well to add, in order to obviate a possible misapprehension, that these three English volumes correspond to two volumes in the German original; and as we are promised, in the "author's preface" (vol. i. p. viii), that "the work.....will be completed in three volumes," it will be seen that another volume, dealing with post-Platonic thinkers, is still to be expected. It may be said with confidence that Prof. Gomperz has succeeded admirably in accomplishing his design of composing "a comprehensive picture" of the development of Greek thought, in which the historical setting of the narrative, the background of the picture, is "not unduly contracted." This breadth of purview, which attempts to survey at once all the various intellectual movements which mark each successive period of Greek history, is perhaps the most striking feature of Prof. Gomperz's method. He incorporates in his work, by way of "historical relief,"

"portions of the story of religion, of literature, and of the special sciences indispensable to an understanding of the speculative movement, its causes and effects."

And it is this catholicity of method which, by refusing to isolate the speculative movement proper from the movements of kindred branches of thought, differentiates the present work from most, if not all, previous attempts to present the history of Greek philosophy. In evidence of its comprehensive scope, it is enough to point to the special chapters in vol. i. devoted to 'Orphic Systems of Cosmogony,' 'The Physicians,' 'The Historians—Hecataeus and Herodotus,' 'The Advance of Historical Science' (which treats of 'The Constitution of Athens' and Thucydides); and to the opening chapters in vol. ii., on 'Changes in Faith and Morals,' in which account is taken of the tragic poets, and on 'Athens and the Athenians.'

'Greek Thinkers' possesses another noteworthy feature, which should serve to enhance its popularity with the "wide circles of cultivated readers" for whom it is designed by its author. It is written in a vigorous, lively style. Where most historians are content to supply an abstract record which aims only at correctness, Prof. Gomperz presents to our eyes a concrete picture. He seeks to vivify his "Thinkers," and to clothe the dry bones of their fragmentary speculations with the flesh of living personality. That is to say, he possesses the fine gift of historical imagination, and he uses his gift with a courage that wins success. As an example of his manner, the description of Xenophanes may be cited (vol. i. pp. 155 ff.): "The aged minstrel.....followed by a slave who carried his guitar and his slender household utensils," as he wandered through the provinces of Greece—"the poor rhapsodist, who regarded a palatable meal as the fit reward of artistic fame"—was, in reality, "the greatest and most influential innovator of his age"—a "philosophic and religious missionary," whose "perilous activity was screened by his minstrel's calling." Not less arresting is the picture of Heraclitus (p. 60):—

"Solitude and the beauty of nature were the muses of Heraclitus. He was a man of abounding pride and self-confidence, and he sat at no master's feet.....The great poets of his country fed his childish fancy, and filled it with gorgeous images, but they afforded no lasting satisfaction to his mature intellect."

Prof. Gomperz knows also the trick of the happy phrase; and this, combined with the power of producing from his store of learning apt illustrations and appropriate modern instances, helps to lend to his exposition the seasoning of spice which tickles the reader's palate. Thus he characterizes Prodicus as the earliest of the pessimists; Hippias is "a kaleidoscopic genius," "the Leone Battista Alberti of the fifth century"; Socrates, like Benjamin Franklin, is "an enthusiast of sobriety"; the Megarians are dubbed "the ancient Herbartians," because of their attitude towards the problem of predication; the Cyrenaic doctrine of pleasure is elucidated by means of a comparison with Benthamism; and Tolstoy is adduced as a parallel to the Plato of 'The Republic'—"a prince among artists violently rooting up the love of art from his own soul."

One of the first problems that face the historian of pre-Socratic philosophy has regard to the order of treatment. No arrangement can be devised which is wholly free from objection, for the simple reason that the chronological order is not coincident with the order of intellectual sequence. The difficulty comes before us especially in the case of such thinkers as Heraclitus, Xenophanes, and Leucippus. Prof. Gomperz groups Heraclitus with the nature-philosophers of Miletus, Xenophanes with the later Eleatics, and Leucippus with the later Atomists. But, as he himself admits, there are obvious objections to this arrangement; for, to mention but one of them, Heraclitus was influenced undoubtedly by Xenophanes as well as by Pythagoras. And there is much to be said for an order of treatment which would bring both Heraclitus and the Pythagoreans into closer juxtaposition with Parmenides and his disciples, even at the expense of ousting Xenophanes from his superficially correct position at the head of the Eleatics.

Considerations of space preclude us from dealing with points of detail in Prof. Gomperz's exposition. His judgments are always well considered, and he speaks with the authority of a specialist. He professes to approach philosophic questions from a point of view which "is not that of any one-sided or exclusive school." Yet, from a number of phrases scattered through the volumes, one is led to suspect that he is not free from a bias towards the positive or "scientific" tone of mind. This appears in the enthusiastic terms in which he expounds the achievements of Leucippus and the Atomists, and in the sympathetic interest he shows in the minutiae of the early physical and astronomical theories, and especially in the physiology of the Hippocratic writers, the medical schools of Cos and Cnidus. The treatment of the Sophists, on the one hand, and of Plato on the other, evinces a similar tendency to depreciate metaphysics in the interests of science or "common sense." Prof. Gomperz endeavours, on the lines of Grote, to rehabilitate the Sophists. Most of what he says about these apostles of "enlightenment" is excellent, and serves to correct popular opinions on many points. But to hold a brief for the Sophists ought not to necessitate the prosecution of Plato on a charge of defamation and "coarse invective." Yet our impartial historian is delighted, apparently, to find this occasion of upbraiding Plato for wilful and jealous misrepresentation. It would seem from this that the "empiricist" can never be wholly in touch with the born idealist; they are naturally tuned to a different pitch. It is hardly surprising, therefore, that the account here given of Platonism is disappointing. Prof. Gomperz spends, indeed, a volume and a quarter in expounding Plato and his dialogues. We can have no complaint against him on the ground of quantity. Yet there is one thing lacking—the secret of Platonism, which eludes all but the very elect. To attempt to expound the Master-idealist without a mind to which the mystical and transcendental is naturally congenial, is assuredly to court failure. The mere readiness to accept as conclusive the results of Lutoslawski's "stylo-metric" method, as applied to the Platonic dialogues, indicates in itself a tone of mind ill suited to render sympathetically the best of Platonism. It should be observed, however, that although Prof. Gomperz follows the popular modern fashion of ascribing to Plato an "earlier" and a "later theory of Ideas," he does not agree with Lutoslawski in supposing the "later" theory to involve the abolition of "ideas" and the substitution of "souls." He maintains, rather, that the change consisted in a revision of the list of the ideas, together with an increasing tendency towards personifying and deifying them.

Much more satisfactory, to our mind, is the treatment accorded to Socrates and the minor Socratics. In Socrates, as "the founder of intellectual radicalism," the "guiding star" of whose thoughts is "usefulness or expediency," Prof. Gomperz finds a congenial subject. His examination of the value of Xenophon's memoirs is admirably done, and fully justifies the final verdict that "it is one of the most amusing, and yet one of the most depressing caprices of literary destiny that has handed his works down to us among the authorities on the history of philosophy."

The most important of the original contributions to the knowledge of Greek thought which these volumes contain is the study of the Hippocratic treatise 'On the Art,' on which the author has written a separate monograph showing its close kinship to the manner of Protagoras.

The notes, which are placed at the end of the first and third volumes, furnish the necessary references to authorities and explanations of points of detail. Some acquaintance is shown with the work of English scholars—the studies in Plato of Prof. Lewis Campbell are eulogized, and "Jackson's comprehensive dissertations" are judged to contain "a good deal of truth, mixed with a little error," and an unsuccessful "attempt to prove Plato the precursor of Berkeley." To Mr. Adam's solution of the 'Nuptial Number,' and other writings, no reference is made. The indexes, also in vol. i. and vol. iii., do not, as a rule, record the names mentioned in the notes, although otherwise well executed.

Catherine de' Medici and the French Reformation. By Edith Sichel. (Constable & Co.)

IN this handsome volume we have before us not the Catherine of St. Bartholomew and the wars of the Catholic League, but an earlier manifestation, the Regent who was still smarting under the wrongs suffered under a Catholic régime, and who yet leaned towards the Huguenots rather than the Guises. That this daughter of Italy, a niece of one Pope and a cousin of another, ever had any real tendencies towards Protestantism, as Miss Sichel thinks, we take leave to doubt, in spite of some utterances she quotes and certain actions she records, both to be attributed to diplomacy. Still, it is not to be denied that Catherine's conduct towards the Huguenots gave real anxiety to Spain, and her attitude just before the religious wars, especially at the Council of Poissy, affords some justification for the coupling of her name with the attempted French Reformation, a movement towards which her essentially political mind was profoundly indifferent.

Though we have read with much pleasure the varied contents of a volume which its author modestly terms "a study of persons," we must enter a protest against the hybrid name which appears on its title-page, and in a slightly different form on the paper cover of the book. We note, too, that in the bibliographies "Médicis" alternates with "Médecis." Catherine de Médicis is surely the form in which the name should appear. Whilst upon this topic we may remark also upon the oddity of such agglomeration of English and French as "Memoirs de." This last, if it be a misprint, is one that consistently recurs. Usually, as is fitting, French forms are retained.

The book opens with a general appreciation of Catherine, which we believe to be substantially just. The spirit which it shows is the right one:—

"History is not written in black and white, but in subtle greys and half-tints, and studying some character from the past is often like looking at a figure in a faded fresco on which we cannot get a full light. At first we see its robes as black; then, as we search more closely, and grow accustomed to the obscurity, we find that the draperies are not of one colour, but of manifold twilight shades, and it is only for the sake of convenience that we use positive terms at all."

Moral indifference, an absolute disregard of anything but what served her positive purposes, which were summed up in the word "power," is the true note of Catherine's character. Although she doubtless exercised a most baneful influence upon her time, she was as far as possible from being what is ordinarily conceived of as a wicked woman. Even the most unscrupulous of Huguenots did not attack her conduct as wife; and the present author has not, in our opinion, done justice to her really strong family feeling. Her powers of mental endurance, however, are fully brought out in the chapter which tells of her relations with her husband, Henri II., who gave his mistress, the Duchesse de Valentinois, the virtual position of queen, and even placed his children under her care. The iron entered into a soul which was to begin with none too rich in the milk of human kindness, despite an easily assumed bonhomie, born of the capacity to act a part. It is likely enough that Catherine felt something approaching affection for her husband; but her alleged tendresse for Condé appears highly improbable, and it certainly did not serve its supposed object.

Most interesting is the analysis of the strange connexion between Henri II. and Diane, "the most matter-of-fact woman in the world," and past the prime of a far from dazzling beauty. With a fine disregard of conventionality, Miss Sichel dares to describe it as

"in all ways a happy marriage, save for the grimly pathetic figure of Catherine, who stood between them like the ghost of some past entanglement—anything but the lawful wife."

It was, in fact, a real union of souls, bringing out the best that was in both man and woman. The comparison of Diane with Madame de Maintenon is more than plausible; yet one scarcely thinks of Scarron's relict as a widow "in the grand style," as was doubtless Madame de Valentinois, the Grande Sénéchale.

On the death of her husband Catherine obtained power and revenge. But her position as Regent was far from secure, owing to the influence of the Guises, whose relative, the young Queen of Scotland, was now also Queen of France for a short space. By the by, by a strange slip of the pen (p. 96), Miss Sichel makes Charles IX. succeed to the throne before his elder brother. The Regent attempted to play off the Bourbons against the duke and the cardinal, till she was foiled by the greater decision of the latter, and was ultimately obliged to fall into line with them or risk her power. None the less we may fairly infer that, so far as she had any convictions, they were represented by the "Politiques," whom for a time the Regent upheld. But events forced her hand.

One of the most interesting chapters in the book is that upon Jeanne de Navarre, commonly called Jeanne d'Albret, the mother of Henri IV. She is sometimes thought of as an austere bigot; but in reality, as Miss Sichel points out, she had not the religious temperament, and the Reformation appealed to her rather as the cause of liberty than the cause of religion. This woman, indeed, dared to reproach Calvin, the Protestant pope himself, with the cruelties sanctioned by him in the name of religion. Other proofs of signal courage she gave, such as rejecting cosmetics "in a day when it was almost thought improper to be natural," and resisting her husband when he went over to Catholicism. The story of how she won from her father the gold box containing his will by singing a Bearnese ballad during the birth of her son—the future founder of the Bourbon monarchy—is one of the most picturesque in history. Of all the women who, as the author maintains, were the real leaders of the Huguenot party, she was the most notable.

At the Council of Poissy we behold Catherine playing the part of mediator between the warring religions; but no one really had confidence in her sincerity. Languet, the Huguenot, expressed at the time an opinion of her to which the Cardinal of Lorraine would have subscribed:—

"Of one thing I am certain: to whatever side fortune veers, the Regent's chief care is to rule, and neither the Papists nor the Reformers will make her gamble away her destiny."

She was no doubt thoroughly frightened when she overheard, through the tube specially constructed for the purpose, a proposal made by one of the Guise triumvirate, in presence of Antoine de Bourbon, her quondam ally, to throw her into the Seine. Henceforth, till she openly took the Catholic side, she did little enough to help the Huguenots by such action as her embarrassing conference with Condé. Miss Sichel is probably not far from the truth in setting down the failure of the French Reformation primarily to racial characteristics, and secondarily to want of solidarity among the Huguenot party. But we doubt if she could maintain her thesis that if "the new Dissenters" had been left alone they would have given no offence—an assertion which is in apparent contradiction to her description on a previous page of the aggressive character of the Huguenots. The truth seems to be that the French are too remorselessly logical in their convictions, religious and other, to be tolerant.

We have little space to dwell upon the remaining contents of the work, which includes two interesting chapters on French poetry of the period, another upon Catherine and the arts, and a final one, of no little merit and charm, treating of the character and career of Bernard Palissy, the Protestant potter who confused æsthetics with nature, and, all unconsciously, did so much for the fundamentals of science. We may note that the story of his interview with Henri III. in the Bastille has been long since abandoned as unauthentic. The idea of bringing out the difference in tone between French and English contemporary poets by printing carefully selected specimens from each is a good one. We cannot venture to take sides in the controversy between the author and Mr. Belloc on the genuineness of Ronsard's religious feeling: it is a nice question. Miss Sichel's contention that Catherine's generation was rather scientific than artistic seems tenable enough, and is well supported.

In conclusion, we would warn Miss Sichel that it might be well if she remembered more often the truth laid down by herself about the dangers of generalization. When she says that "a love of luxury is often mistaken for a love of beauty," or that fascinating people are generally hard to live with, few will deny that she hits the mark; but "theologians live by logic" is surely a hard saying, and that "the French Revolution destroyed itself by disputes between individuals" is a misleading one from its very plausibility. That enthusiasm forms "no necessary part of the baggage of science" we should judge to be a more than disputable statement; and the antithesis between science and art, which follows it, strikes us as almost equally unsound. On the other hand, there are numerous felicitous phrases and character sketches in the book to be set against these and certain rather cryptic utterances. A high standard of literary ability pervades the volume in spite of a few lapses. In what sense Catherine, "this olive-coloured woman," could properly be termed "a pendant" to the sea-green Robespierre we fail to discern. The only serious misprint we have noticed is "James VI." for James V. in a note (p. 72), except the misspelling of Creighton's name on the title-page. The portraits which illustrate the book are altogether admirable, and the 'Summary of Historical Events' will be found useful by serious readers.

---

Jerusalem under the High Priests: Five Lectures on the Period between Nehemiah and the New Testament. By Edwyn Bevan. (Arnold.)

THE period on which Mr. Bevan has concentrated his attention is a very important one in the development of Jewish religion. Politically, the major portion of the 450 years or so that passed between Nehemiah and the beginning of the Christian era was a blank so far as the Jews are concerned, for it is only at the time of the Maccabees that the little Judæan State reappears as a factor in history. But the time of silence was the time of real depth. The little hierarchy was, for the most part, content to live quietly and peaceably, first under the Persians and then under the Greeks, but it used all this period of peace and quietness for the sure and gradual development of the forces which were ultimately destined to lead in one direction to Christianity and in another to the Judaism which we see around us to-day.

Mr. Bevan's book may with perfect confidence be recommended as an introduction to the study of the deeply interesting problems of this great period. The style is clear and sympathetic, and occasionally even brilliant. The distinctly elementary character of several portions of the book is explained by the fact that its contents were originally written out in the form of lectures to an audience which had first to be initiated into these studies. But there is no reason why this very circumstance should not enhance the value of the book to a very large number of persons. Mr. Bevan is very strong on the Greek side of his subject. His exposition of Hellenism in its relation to Judaism is masterly. He is not so strong on the Hebrew side. Of actual errors we have noticed only one or two unimportant points that could easily be amended; but it would have been helpful to students if Judaism had been dealt with as fully as Hellenism. In one instance, indeed, the reverse is curiously the case. Mr. Bevan includes a good and full account of the Wisdom of Ben Sira in illustration of the purely Judaic mental attitude of certain Jerusalem teachers about 200 B.C.; but why did he not deal similarly with the Wisdom of Solomon to illustrate Jewish Hellenism at about 100 to 50 B.C.? And once again, why did he not show the contrast between the Ecclesiasticus of Ben Sira and the almost contemporaneous canonical book of Ecclesiastes? As we are on the subject of omissions, we may also note the absence of any reference to the Essenes. It is true that these sectaries lived far away from Jerusalem, but that city is, throughout the book, treated as a centre of the national life around, and not as the sole background of the story, and the Essenes should, therefore, not have been left out entirely. The topics dealt with by Mr. Bevan are so successfully worked out that we should have liked to see the book enlarged so as to embrace other pertinent points as well. When this edition has done its work and served its purpose, the author may, perhaps, see his way to issue a new and much more extensive book on the same subject, retaining nearly all he has already written, and adding to it at least half as much again.

---

Early Dutch and English Voyagers to Spitzbergen in the Seventeenth Century. By Sir W. Martin Conway. (Hakluyt Society.)

MARITIME enterprise, in the form of the whale fishery, seems first to have engaged the attention of the English shipowners in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Hakluyt mentions how, in 1575, a merchant was seeking information as to the methods employed for the capture of whales, as their oil was greatly in request by the soap-boilers. Until that time, however, the whale fishery had been carried on almost entirely by the Biscayans, and it is not until 1577, when Henri III. was king of France and Philip II. on the throne of Spain and Portugal, that we first hear of English ships taking part in the operations of the whaling fleets off the shores of Cape Breton and Newfoundland. In that year Hakluyt enumerates the relative proportions of the vessels engaged in that pursuit as follows, viz., 150 French, 100 Spanish, and 50 Portuguese ships, whilst only 15 were English. Of these, however, we learn that the English were the largest and best-found ships, whilst the Spanish ranked next in size and importance.

It was not until 1585, after the capture and sack of Antwerp by the Duke of Parma and the consequent ruin of the trade of the Spanish Netherlands, that the Hollanders began to engage in the Arctic whale fishery, towards which the last voyage of William Barentsz would seem to have drawn their particular attention. For it was then that Barentsz discovered Spitzbergen, with its numerous deep bays, into which large schools of whales were in the habit of entering during the early summer, remaining there for some considerable time, the knowledge of which fact soon attracted Dutch, Danish, English, and French whalers to this neighbourhood every season. The principal fleet of the English was composed of vessels belonging to the Muscovy Company of London, whose agent, Hendrik Hudson, explored the coasts of Spitzbergen in 1607, as related in a former volume of the Hakluyt Society; and this company obtained a charter from King James I, granting a monopoly of the fishery on "the coasts of King James his Newland," in which "the Kinges Ma'tie of England had straightlie forbidden all nations, as well his own subjects as others of what degree soever (save onely the saide companie and their servants), to use, trade or fish within or upon the saide coasts."

The Dutch fleet, belonging to the Noordsche Company of Amsterdam, with which were associated some Danish vessels from Copenhagen, naturally contested this monopoly claimed by the English; and, after some difficulty, a temporary agreement was arrived at, by which the English erected their boiling works in the western bays, whilst the Dutch possessed the more northern coasts for the purpose of their fisheries. Biscayan ships from St. Jean de Luz, San Sebastian, and Bordeaux, with others from Dunkirk, also frequented the Spitzbergen waters; and as the Basque fishermen understood the art of "flensing" the dead whales and boiling down the blubber far better than any others, both English and Dutch were wont to utilize the services of these experts from the French ships for such operations.

Some rare French and Dutch pamphlets of this period give us interesting accounts of the doings and rivalries of these various fishing fleets; and translations of some of these, edited with introductions and notes by Sir Martin Conway, form the contents of the volume lately issued by the Hakluyt Society. The first of these, the 'Histoire du Pays nommé Spitzberghe,' published in 1613 by Hessel Gerritzoon van Assum, the Amsterdam geographer, gives a graphic and moderately accurate description of the coasts, bays, and islands forming the western portion of Spitzbergen, together with 'La triste racompte des maux que nos Pecheurs (tant Basques que Flamens) ont eu a souffrir des Anglois en l'esté passée. l'An de grace 1613.' Far more interesting, however, to the general reader will be found the 'Journael of Daghe - Register gehouden by Seven Matroosen in haer Overwinteren op Spitzbergen in Maurits-bay,' written by the commander, Jacob Segersz van der Brugge, and published at Amsterdam in 1634.

This journal was kept by the gallant chief of a small party of volunteers belonging to the Noordsche Company, which spent the whole long winter, of nine months' duration, on the north-western coast of Spitzbergen. The ships left them there on August 30th, 1633, and returned to fetch them when the next whaling season began on the last day of May in the following year. It was in this year, during the reign of Charles I., that the "ship-money" writs were first issued to the seaport towns of Great Britain, causing that dissatisfaction and resistance which conduced towards the first threatenings of the great rebellion.

These fishermen not only remained alive, but also were hearty and fit for duty when they rejoined their ships after all the hardships they had undergone; and it is evident that they owed their preservation in health to their resolution and fortitude in keeping hard at work, hunting in all weathers, thereby securing fresh meat and good exercise; whilst in their leisure they played games, or walked to keep their blood in circulation in the shelter of their hut, when tempests absolutely prevented them from venturing outside.

"We resolved, in the first place, to use every endeavour to obtain a stock of salad [scurvy grass and sorrel], reindeer flesh, or other things as provision for a rainy day, this course being especially necessary for the preservation of our health; also that every morning and night, before the cook dished up, we should sing a psalm and offer our prayers up to God in order to call down His blessing upon us."—P. 88.

"Since our community is not a large one, we have resolved that if one of us, being well, and awakened in the morning, remains lying asleep or lazing in his bunk, and does not appear at prayers, he should forfeit his breakfast, and not dare to touch food until the next meal; also that he should have no ration of tobacco or brandy."—P. 103.

In the depth of winter reindeer were unobtainable, but bears were numerous, and afforded good sport, food, and no little excitement. Besides these, plenty of foxes were caught, and, less often, wild ducks and geese were secured. So long as the sailors kept themselves concealed, the bears would approach almost to the muzzles of their matchlocks, but after a time the constant firing caused them to get shy, so that as soon as the men moved or let them hear the click of the weapon and see the burning match they would run off. Here is an account of a day's doings on February 8th:—

"On the 8th, the breeze from the N. with fine bright weather. Three of our companions, therefore, went well armed to Deadman's Island, in order to see whether there was anything of profit or for refreshment to be got; also to see if any of the bears already wounded might not be found dead. On arriving there they saw many bears going in troops like the cattle in the Netherlands; but these on seeing the men stood up on their hind-legs, as did also the cubs beside them, which was curious to see. On our men coming nearer they fled. They had pitched their camp behind a hill, and made large deep pits in the ice and snow. They found there a carcass or tongue of a whale, which they had clawed up out of the ice to the length of a man and nearly devoured. I and the carpenter having remained in the tent [hut], observed five bears at the same time before our tent. An old one with its cub, as it seemed, coming towards our tent-door, we got our guns ready, and I sent a double charge into the body of the old one. The carpenter, also taking aim, hit the cub, whereupon we immediately ran out with our lances. The old one seeing that they were being pursued, both came down upon us. The carpenter, making a thrust, caught one of them in the mouth with his lance, which the bear dragged towards him and bent. We then went on either side of him and lanced him by turns until he fell down dead. Meanwhile the dogs skirmished round the cub, giving it so much to do that it could not come near us to assist its dam; but, on seeing us approach, it escaped. We then returned to our tent, seeing on our way a number of bears amongst and upon the ice-floes, as well as upon the small island in the mouth of the bay, sometimes ten or twelve together. We also observed three bears coming down upon us, so that we hastened to reach the tent since we were very tired and our lances quite in pieces. In the evening we saw a big bear near the aforesaid dead one, running to and fro, and clawing the body as if he wished to make it rise. He stood still three or four times growling fearfully, and came towards our tent, which gave us matter for speculation. I presumed that they had been a pair."

These sailors had no registering thermometers to measure the cold, which was so intense that their beards were wont to become frozen to the earthen jug when drinking, whilst the beer, French wine, and vinegar were so hard frozen that they had to be hacked out of the barrels, which were burst.

Nevertheless, as we have said, the men survived; in this respect being far more fortunate than seven other seamen, who wintered in the following season. These last had all died by the time the ships reached the coast in the season of 1635.

The quaint title-pages and woodcuts which illustrate the journal of Van der Brugge, taken from the British Museum copy of the pamphlet, give a good idea of the hut in which the hardy adventurers lived, with its look-out place and the groups of fishermen, whaling and shooting, lancing and skinning bears. The volume makes a valuable addition to the second series of the works issued by the Hakluyt Society.

NEW NOVELS.

Bloomsbury. By C. F. Keary. (Nutt.)

THE intellectual anarchy of the educated classes of our day, or rather of the cultivated, but only half-educated, has never been more convincingly displayed than in this story of Mr. Keary. It purports to be a record of the experiences of a young girl from the country, who goes to a Bloomsbury house as a paying guest and enters the social world of the art student. She finds herself in a welter of creeds and cults, unimaginable in the country—High Church, No-Church, Socialist, Vivisectionist, Theosophist, Swedenborgian, and so on. The characterization is throughout good, and the author succeeds in conveying one fact, not sufficiently remarked, though very remarkable, the excessively feminine character of a great deal of modern culture. There are touches of a very pleasant satire—as when Mr. Keary speaks of "that exaggeratedly correct pronunciation, which might almost be called Dons' French," or this: "If, indeed, Mr. De Cassada had thought that Isobel and Constance were sincere Christians he would have been shocked. As it was, he overlooked their high-churchism as a part in their scheme of social advancement." There are some misprints, and quotations are not always correct. The book as a whole is both amusing and illuminating.

Duke's Son. By Cosmo Hamilton. (Heinemann.)

It is not very easy to determine if Mr. Hamilton intended to satirize the follies of aristocracy or merely to write agreeable farce. If the former, his work is marred by its extravagances; if the latter, there is nothing to be said save that 'Duke's Son' is amusing nonsense. The duke in question, who has allowed his younger son a miserable pittance of 2,000*l.* a year, on which he cannot scramble along, acquaints the hero that he must reduce that same insignificant allowance. This means that "Frankie" goes to the wall, or the bad. On his death-bed his grace learns that his son has done the latter, and is enthusiastic on hearing that his form of vice is card-sharping. The fact is that the duke's son and a baronet start a firm to cheat at bridge. In this they are detected by a chorus-girl, who is too virtuous not to weep at their wickedness, and too affectionate to tell of it, and so "Frankie" moves on the tide of wealth and vice till his partner dies. He would seem to be in a quandary now, but he discovers that his sweetheart also cheats, proposes, confesses, is accepted, and marries. Thenceforward a new partnership, and "Frankie" and Joan go comfortably cheating on through life, until the inevitable happens. After which they have the due reward of stage virtue. There is room in this farcical satire for many exhibitions of wit and smartness, of which Mr. Hamilton takes advantage. But viewed as an ironical effort, it is too flippant and too much of a travesty.

Bartram of Beltana. By W. E. Norris. (Methuen & Co.)

THIS is just, when all is said, a story by Mr. Norris in one of his usual manners. We have read novels of his that were more interesting, and hope to do so again. In the meantime there seems almost as little to say against 'Bartram of Beltana' as in its favour. It is easy and pleasant enough, but it has not much colour or character. The people are of Australian and English brands, designed, one may suppose, to supply contrasts in manners and ideals. Trouble sets in among them caused by racial and individual conflict of motives. Some of this is occasionally amusing. Two fathers, English and Australian, each possess a marriageable son and daughter, a fact which thickens a somewhat perfunctory plot, and sets at defiance for a time the wishes of a partie carrée of young people. On one side there are money and aggressive self-respect, on the other pride of birth, suavity, and prejudice. These characteristics belong to the respective fathers. The loves of the children (who are to some extent the product of their circumstances and surroundings) at length culminate in a couple of weddings. We cannot confess to great interest either in their trials or their joys.

Beverly of Graustark. By George Barr McCutcheon. (Hodder & Stoughton)

THERE is at least no kind of pretence made about this book. It is illustrated on the lines of a popular weekly journal, with far-away suggestions of "Gibson girls," and intimate hints of American fashion-plates. Its author seems to say: You have shown that you like the Ruritania order of romance. You shall have it! I can write this sort of thing easily, and without thought:—

"Far off in the mountain lands, somewhere to the east of the setting sun, lies the principality of Graustark, serene relic of rare old feudal days. The traveler reaches the little domain after an arduous, sometimes perilous journey from the great European capitals, whether they be north, or south, or west—never east."

The rest one really knows too well to quote. The hereditary Princess of Graustark is romantically wedded to a rather blatant young American. But Beverly of the title is a "Gibson girl" from Washington, a famed breaker of hearts. Her identity is mixed with that of the Princess. The resultant complications, if by no means original, are occasionally amusing, even when the writer has no intention of amusing.

Constance West. By E. R. Punshon. (Lane.)

THIS is probably a first book; at least no other literary venture is recorded on the title-page, and the author's name seems unfamiliar. It is a story of Revenge, with a very big R, which does not mean that it is noisy in tone or conventionally melodramatic. On the contrary, it is rather quiet and intense. Were the manner, or the matter, or both, just a little different, it would be more remarkable and more disturbing than it is. Such as it is, we find in it disquieting elements. One is inclined to wonder what attitude exactly the author wished to provoke in the reader's mind towards the heroine—was it pity, fear, dislike, reprobation, or merely interest? The introduction of a small, sharp, middle-aged woman who has crossed vast stretches of land and sea to renew her acquaintance with a husband, after a separation of twenty years, is no easy situation. Personally we half disbelieve in, half dislike and wonder at, the fierce yet bird-like being with only one eye and two motives (love and hate), who "cooks and cleans" to perfection by a sort of reflex action of her own. The author has not used much artifice in her portrayal, yet succeeds in making her exist because he (or she) evidently believes in her reality. She reminds one of a minute, wild, and yet prim creature of the woods, who is at the same time almost human; she is a somewhat disconcerting personality to set at large in the pages of an innocent-looking volume. An English hamlet is her natural habitat, where we find almost as much difficulty in picturing her as in the wilds of Western Canada. There her conduct and influence on the inhabitants are extremely wild and wayward.

The Knight of the Needle Rock. By M. J. Wilson. (Elliot Stock.)

HISTORICAL romance, so called, may be written on either of two prescriptions: it may deal with recorded historical events and characters, or it may merely be pitched in times which have passed into history. More often it obeys the former rule, if in ever so slight a degree. Thus there were no Castlewoods, but there was a Prince Charles, of whom Thackeray made use in 'Esmond.' Miss Wilson presents us with an entirely new and original kind of fiction. She has made learned research in many directions, and has gathered details for her story "from various family papers, documents, pedigrees, &c." Thus it comes about that many notable or well-known names of Elizabethan times appear in her pages, and she dedicates the romance to "the descendants of the Dingley, Leigh, Worsley, More, and Lyte families, and of others mentioned herein." Several hitherto unpublished genuine letters are included, and altogether the reader feels himself in real historical company. The action passes partly in the Isle of Wight, and partly in Surrey and London. It introduces Loseley Park, near Guildford, and the seat of the Oglander family in the island. With these credentials the story makes its bow to a respectful reader. But, taken as a work of fiction, it is open to the charge of dullness. It is estimable, but it has no inspiring spark to elevate it into anything more than a conscientious study of those spacious days. Yet the descendants of the sundry families concerned in the plot will doubtless be interested in it, and probably they are many.

A Dreamer's Harvest. By Mount Houmas. (Greening & Co.)

A NOVEL that adopts for its imprimatur, so to speak, a quotation from Mrs. Henry Wood must startle the intelligent reader from the outset:—

"If we could only foresee the ending of some of the unholy schemes that many of us are apt to weave, we might be more content to leave them humbly in a higher hand than ours. Do they ever bring good, these plans, born of our utter selfishness? I think not. They may seem to succeed triumphantly, but—watch the triumph to the end."

One wonders out of which of the unnumbered novels to the credit of that prolific lady this gem was extracted. Mount Houmas deserves credit for digging it up into the light of day. If Richard Attwood had been content to leave his "unholy scheme" in "higher hands," this ingenuous story would not have been written. But he had the idea of making a vocal genius of a village maiden, who was engaged to a blacksmith, which in the issue was unfortunate for her. One supposes the moral is that love in a cottage is better than ambition in the great world. However, it does not matter whether there is a moral or not. The story is artless in the extreme, and there seems no adequate reason why it should have been given to the world.

NAPOLEONIC LITERATURE.

Napoleon and England, 1803-13. By P. Coquelle. Translated by Gordon D. Knox; and with an Introduction by J. H. Rose, Litt.D. (Bell.)—M. Coquelle is one of the new school of French historians who have begun to consult the English documents before they write of the relations between France and England. Down to the last fifteen years the convenient, but hardly scientific system of Thiers, that of ignoring all evidence that was not to be found in the French archives, was prevalent. Even still we find books not a few whose authors are content to read one side only of the evidence. We may give as an example M. Arthur Lévy's 'Napoléon et la Paix,' where the references to English sources show the most astounding lacunæ.

The present volume is of a very different kind. It states the English case as strongly as any of our own historians could state it, and shows a complete command of all the resources of the Record Office, and of the less accessible papers which the Foreign Office doles out to the properly accredited inquirer. When, by the way, will that cautious institution consent to throw its papers down to 1815 (or 1848) open to the public, without the tiresome formalities that now prevail? M. Coquelle has got up the English case because he detests Napoleon, and looks upon his every act with such suspicion that he takes nothing for granted in a French State paper, till he has verified it from the documents of the other side. Indeed, we may almost say that he has a prima facie notion that Napoleon is probably in the wrong on every point where he has to deal with an opponent, domestic or foreign. In his own words, when he compares the great military achievements of the man with "his rude faults in statesmanship, his crimes, his meannesses, and his astounding vacillations," he is driven to think that there existed, all through, "a fundamental want of balance in that mighty brain." In short, this is one of the books written to demolish the Napoleonic idea, and to counteract the propaganda in favour of a revived cult of the Emperor, of which books like those of M. Henry Houssaye are the tokens. For the vigour of the blow delivered we know of no modern French volume that can vie with this, except perhaps M. Morvan's 'Le Soldat Impérial.'

M. Coquelle's monograph deals with the diplomatic relations of the Emperor and Great Britain for the whole period between 1802 and 1813. But his later sections are occupied with comparatively small matters, the intrigues of Fagan and Labouchère, and the futile discussion concerning the exchange of prisoners, which was conducted at Morlaix in 1810 between Mackenzie and Moustier. The really important part of the book is contained in its first section, which deals with the rupture of the Peace of Amiens, and its second, which covers the pourparlers with the Fox-Grenville Ministry in 1806.

As to the former set of negotiations, almost every writer has had his own view as to the precise point on which the rupture took place. Napoleon himself wished to make out that the retention of Malta was the real cause of the outbreak of war. A number of French historians have followed him: they can always quote in justification of their thesis the absurd speech of Fox to the effect that the Addington Ministry had plunged England into the great struggle for "plain bare Malta, unconnected with any other interest." Sir John Seeley used to maintain that the anger roused by Sebastiani's famous report on Egypt had the most important share in determining the British Government to show fight. Mr. Holland Rose, in his 'Napoleonic Studies,' takes up the theory that it was the First Consul's atrocious treatment of English merchant vessels, during the continuance of the peace, that first caused Addington to despair of the possibility of averting a second war. It will be remembered that Bonaparte had actually confiscated ships driven by stress of weather into French harbours, using as his excuse an unrepealed law of Robespierre, drawn up while England and Revolutionary France were in the thick of their first struggle. We are inclined to agree with him, and to think that the First Consul's persistent refusal to discuss any treaty of commerce, with his open avowal that political peace did not imply commercial peace between the two countries, was in fact the item that weighed heaviest in the balance. When once convinced that Napoleon had sought a truce merely for warlike preparations, and did not really desire a definitive pacification, the British ministers made up their minds that the war should recommence, not when he, but when they, should please.

M. Coquelle introduces to us a new theory as to the true casus belli, and urges it with much ingenuity and a great command of documents, viz., that the First Consul's doings in Holland, and not the retention of Malta, the commercial grievance, Sebastiani's indiscreet report, or the Italian annexations, were the true cause of the rupture. His great contribution to the discussion is the publication of seven important and hitherto unknown papers addressed to Bonaparte by General Andréossy, the French Ambassador in London. This diplomatist was an old personal friend of the First Consul; they had been artillery subalterns together. In addition to his official dispatches, he often sent to Paris private letters in a familiar style, giving his impressions of the moment. They must have been the last, or almost the last, letters which Bonaparte received from one who wrote to him as a friend to friend, not as a servant to a master. It is not their anecdotic side which makes these epistles important—though there are curious notes as to conversations with the Prince of Wales, Sheridan, and other interesting personalities—but their summaries of the trend of English politics from month to month. Knowing, as we now know, that the First Consul was receiving perfectly truthful and confidential reports of the views and intentions of the British Government, we are able to conclude that all his loudly expressed doubts and suspicions concerning the honesty of their purpose and of their desire for peace were absolutely fictitious. Andréossy informed him again and again that the Addington Ministry wished to avoid a rupture, and were prepared to concede anything that was not inconsistent with the national honour and the vital interests of Great Britain. Bonaparte, as was his wont, resolved to see how far Addington could be pressed, assumed an attitude of injured innocence, and refused to listen to argument. He harped away on the subject of the evacuation of Malta, and refused to give any answer when the British Ambassador replied by raising the subject of the evacuation of Holland and Switzerland, in accordance with the terms of the treaty of Lunéville. In these circumstances Andréossy wrote to him (on April 2nd, 1803) a last appeal:

"Being persuaded that you desire peace and are in need of it, I am acting in accordance with that principle. But you afford the British Cabinet no means of escape from the unfortunate position in which they have become involved. However serious the consequences, it is certain that they will take up any challenge they may receive. The prayers, the needs, and the wishes of this country are all for peace. God forbid that I should for a moment urge that France ought to forego the least of her advantages. But I am morally certain that by appearing not to exert pressure on England you can easily obtain all that is necessary for the security of France.....I consider it my duty, Citizen President, to bring to your notice the evils that will be the inevitable result of war, and the means by which you may easily preserve peace. The loyalty of my intentions and my devotion to your person will prompt you to pardon my outspokenness."

Bonaparte, however, could not abandon his habit of hectoring, and drove the British Cabinet to the point of desperation. If there was no exit from the deadlock without a sacrifice of the national prestige, they would fight, rather than suffer themselves to be humiliated in the eyes of their countrymen and of all Europe. To sum up the matter in M. Coquelle's own words:—

"England had accepted the annexation of Piedmont to France; she would not acquiesce in the ill-defined and unjustifiable occupation of Utrecht and Flushing by French troops, which constituted a perpetual menace to her safety. Finally, she agreed to the simultaneous evacuation of Malta and of Holland, only asking for the Isle of Lampedusa in compensation. Bonaparte refused his consent, and preferred to begin a war which he thought a useful preliminary for the proclamation of himself as emperor."

We have no space to discuss M. Coquelle's views as to the negotiations of 1806, and can only refer the reader interested in Napoleonic diplomacy to the book itself.

As to the translator's work, it is fluent, idiomatic, and readable, but occasionally shows a slip. The most curious error is that "Anvers" is repeatedly (e.g., pp. 230 and 170) left untranslated, in contexts where the casual reader would never realize that Antwerp was in question, but would imagine that he was meeting with some obscure and unknown town.

In his volume entitled Paris sous Napoléon: Consulat Provisoire et Consulat à Temps (Paris, Plon), M. L. de Lanza de Laborie begins a series of studies which will, it is hoped, throw light on the public, social, and private life of the capital during the Napoleonic period. The subject is wide and varied; and possibly the author would have been better advised had he left out from this initial volume matters dealing with high policy, such as the complex negotiations that led up to the Concordat, a topic which he essays to handle in thirteen small pages. In other respects the work is well arranged, and presents in readable form a mass of information scattered through the police reports and memoirs of the period and the works of scholars like MM. Aulard and Vandal. It opens with a sketch of the disorganization of Parisian life at the close of the rule of the Directory; and occasionally, it must be confessed, the note of hostility to that deservedly unpopular Government is unduly emphasized. Bad the state of Paris certainly was in 1799; but it is clear that the partisans of the First Consul, who soon controlled public opinion in literature almost as much as in the press, sought to blacken the life of the preceding years, in order that the work of reorganization carried out by him might shine with the greater brilliance. The memoirs of convinced Republicans like Gohier, Larévellière-Lépeaux, and others, do not give the impression that the life of the capital was irretrievably corrupt, and the financial and political outlook hopeless. M. Aulard's work 'Histoire Politique de la Révolution Française' would here have supplied the needed correction to the effusions of the partisans of the First Consul.

In other respects the account of the work of reorganization of the capital in the years 1799-1802 is well balanced and just. M. de Lanza de Laborie rightly fixes on the proclamation of the Consulate for life as the limit for this first part of his extensive study. The conclusion of the Peace of Amiens, followed by the lengthening of the First Consul's powers for life, virtually re-established monarchy. The establishment of the prefects in the Departments had already placed local affairs at the disposal of the chief, and the conclusion of the Concordat with Rome, together with the abolition of the revolutionary "décade," marked the return of the nation to the old ways in other important respects. This period of transition, which served as a preparation for the full glories of the Empire, is here clearly, succinctly, and accurately described, from the point of view of the capital, which greatly helped to set the tone of thought for all France.

The Souvenirs of the Baroness de Montet, 1785-1866 (Paris, Plon), are a good specimen of the jottings of an elderly French lady of the old school. Lively, varied, and full of anecdote, they throw a good deal of light on the more frivolous side of life of the long period which the baroness undertook to describe for her grand-nephews and nieces. She excuses their gossiping nature by the pathetic remark: "Dans la vieillesse on aime conter; toute la vie est dans le passé, et l'on est jaloux de l'avenir. Ayez pitié et indulgence." There is little need of the appeal. As "small talk" about great people and events, these memoirs are excellent. Her mother, the Countess de la Boutetière de Saint-Mars, has described the hardships of the family during the "émigration" in Germany, a sad time, doubtless, but one which scarcely deserves the acrid remark of the editor that the only reception accorded to the exiles was "les tracasseries et la persécution." The daughter's nature was sunnier—or perhaps her experiences were more fortunate. She learnt to look on Vienna—where she was brought up by the nuns of the Convent of the Visitation—as especially her own abode. At Vienna, certainly, there was no lack of humour and jollity—witness the story here told (p. 9) of the Emperor Joseph peeping over the walls of the Belvedere monastery at the nuns, and being promptly driven off by a gardener's besom, wielded by the Lady Superior. The incident clearly lost nothing in the course of years. Even the stern, sad figure of Madame Royale (afterwards the Duchesse d'Angoulême) unbent somewhat during her sojourn at the Austrian capital, and the sketch here given of her behaviour is more pleasing than those by other contemporaries. A duller life than that which she led can scarcely be pictured: the occasional "ball," where the princesses danced sadly together, and then conversed with their relatives; the receptions, to which the French ultra-royalists persisted in coming in deep mourning. The baroness states that the Austrian nobles hated the émigrés, but she surely errs in saying that they were for the French Revolution. Evidently they pretended to admire it, in order to annoy, or get rid of, the émigrés. Returning to France early in the Consulate, she saw Bonaparte and other notables. The First Consul, of course, received them well, and her sketch of him has one happy touch—the note that his rather melancholy look was the outcome not of sad preoccupation, but of profound thought.

At the Congress of Vienna in 1814 she saw many notables, and describes the "majestic" dancing of the Emperor Alexander, the disappointing commonness of Sir Sidney Smith, and the garish display made by Lady Castlereagh with her tiara of diamonds. She ends up with a vigorous critique on the dress of the English ladies, "décolletées jusqu'à l'estomac." Soon came the news of Bonaparte's escape from Elba, whereupon Talleyrand remarked to the Comte de Montet, "Cet homme est organiquement fou." Further interesting morsels occur at intervals through these pages; for instance, a description of the mannish behaviour of the Princess of Wales (Princess Caroline) at Vienna in 1817, and of an outburst of warlike ardour in the little Duc de Reichstadt. The informant, Foresti, told her that the young Napoleon gave the words of command (in German) to the little Archduke Rudolph in a way that made the beholders think ominously of the future. A large part of the volume is, of course, mere gossip, but of its kind it is excellent. We are surprised that the editor should pass over in silence the statement, in a contemporary letter (p. 468) which professes to describe the battle of Valmy, that a thousand pieces of artillery were in action; but we can forgive the venerable author for her story (p. 473) that the daughter of a Terrorist at Avignon, who had sought to break all the hands off the statues of that city, was born handless as a sign of Divine malediction. After all, these things do not go badly into chapters entitled 'Bric-à-brac.'

In The Napoleon Myth (Chicago, the Open Court Publishing Company; London, Kegan Paul & Co.) Mr. Henry Ridgely Evans gives us a curious medley. The book contains a rambling introduction by Dr. Paul Carus; a reprint of J. B. Pérès's 'Grand Erratum'; an "occult study" on 'The Mythical Napoleon' by Mr. Evans; and a number of more or less apposite illustrations. The whole concludes with a short disquisition on 'Napoleon's Cocked Hat,' reprinted from The New York Tribune—a topic which is said to have aroused "sharp discussion" at the Institute of France in one of its meetings last October. The best part of the book is the reprint of Pérès's well-known little satire on the school of historians who resolved everything into myths, solar or otherwise. This part of the volume, at least, will repay perusal. The "occult study" consists for the most part of a string of well-known quotations from French memoirs and novels, along with rambling statements preluded by the words, "History tells us." We scarcely needed this farrago to remind us that there is a legendary accretion to the Napoleonic story; and the author does little or nothing to emphasize the difference between fact and legend, or point out the means of distinguishing between the two spheres.

KNOX AND THE REFORMATION.

John Knox: a Biography. By the Rev. D. Macmillan. (Melrose.)—The History of the Reformation in Scotland. Revised and edited by Cuthbert Lennox. (Same publisher.)—Mr. Macmillan's 'John Knox' is not a work of research or of criticism. He is not the man to tell us when, and in what circumstances, Knox excommunicated Mary, Queen of Scots, as in 1584 she informed Waad that he did. Mr. Macmillan merely gives the story of the Reformer's career in the mildest manner of a Presbyterian admirer. He endeavours to overthrow the arguments in favour of the later date of Knox's birth, preferring the late evidence of Spottiswoode to that of Young (1579) and of Knox's intimates, whom Young consulted, though, of course, he may not have asked them questions about Knox's birth. He thinks that David Buchanan writes independently of Spottiswoode, with whom he agrees as to the date. We believe that there is proof to the opposite effect. The question is, perhaps, as open as it is unimportant. The most comic thing in the book is "Mary, Queen of Scots, after an old print" (p. 229). The "old print" so vaguely indicated is, we presume, a print of Mary and Darnley, of which the inscription at least is apparently posterior to the accession of James VI. to the English crown. The artist of Mr. Macmillan, for reasons of his own, has sown the field with fleurs-de-lis. Principal Story, in an introduction, avers that "the Roman Church, from the days of Margaret" (queen and saint), "had held Scotland in a bitter spiritual bondage..... that ungodly power which for four hundred years had sucked the blood of Scotland." Such is the Principal's conception of history!

As to Mr. Cuthbert Lennox, he has taken "an inspired record of the dealings of God with men," namely, Knox's 'History'; he has modernized the spelling, cut out some of the inexcusable violences of the inspired author, docked such passages as he thinks fit to omit, and decided that "foot-notes are a manner of impertinence"—in an inspired record. For example, Knox's letter to Argyle "was not well accepted by the said earl." The reader is not given the chance of seeing the epistle; if he saw it, his sympathies would be with the earl for once. The marginal notes are worthy of the rest, as (p. 171), "Willock braves the fury of the Regent." There was no fury to brave. Rather than appear to infringe the truce of July 24th, 1559, the Regent abandoned the article about the right of Edinburgh to choose its own religion, and left St. Giles's Church, where Willock harangued, to the godly. There is another recent abridged and modernized version of Knox's 'History,' and this book seems as superfluous as it is uncritical.

John Knox. By the Rev. James Stalker. (Hodder & Stoughton.)—Dr. Stalker's little work on Knox aims at giving a popular account of our Reformer's "ideas and ideals." He has "creamed" Knox's "good things," he says, and he opens with a biographical sketch. He virtually accepts 1505 as the year of the birth of his hero, though he is aware of the recent and probable suggestion that the Reformer may have been born circa 1513 to 1515. Thus Knox still matriculates at Glasgow in 1522, not at St. Andrews about 1535, and so on throughout. The legend of James V. dying with a list of over a hundred proscribed Protestants in the pocket of his coat is innocently accepted, and Dr. Stalker adds the novel information that James expired in 1543 (p. 15). This is probably a misprint.

Knox's instigations to murder (for his appeal to a Phineas to take order with Mary Tudor is nothing else) Dr. Stalker styles "unparliamentary." The leaders of reform in Scotland did not in 1557 "intercept Knox with an order not to come any further" than Dieppe (p. 50). The Reformer gives a different account of what occurred. Mary of Guise, in 1559, had not "filled the country with French soldiers"; her foreign force was too small to fight the raw reforming levies at Cupar Muir. She summoned the preachers for May 10th, 1559, not because "the hour had come for throwing off the mask," but because they had provoked tumults, in defiance of her proclamations of February and March, 1559. The poor lady's life was despaired of in April. She meant to go to France. She was in no condition to initiate and carry out what Knox says was her intention, to cut the throats of all Scottish Protestants! Dr. Stalker quotes Knox's public account in his 'History' of the wreckings at Perth, done by "the rascal multitude," not by "the earnest professors." Unluckily, Knox privately informed Mrs. Locke, six weeks after the event, that what was done was the work of "the brethren," who are "the earnest professors." The Regent's forces were not, in July, 1559, "driven to Haddington, where they rallied." They retired on Dunbar. "Then the tide of fortune turned, and the Congregation were severely beaten at Leith." They entered into a truce, near Leith, on July 24th; broke the truce, intrigued with England, and were beaten out of Edinburgh in October. When Knox was summoned for the second time before Queen Mary, it was not because of "a sermon he had preached against an outbreak of persecution in France," but because of remarks in his sermon against a dance at Holyrood, which he attributed, hypothetically, to the queen's joy over the beginning of a new persecution. Knox has here so confused times and seasons that there is no making sense of his narrative. Dr. Stalker goes on to say that "in celebration of" an attack by the Guises on the Huguenots, the queen "was supposed to have held a ball at Holyrood." This is a perfectly fair statement, but Knox's account is too confused for a brief attempt at elucidation. Dr. Stalker's limits of space do not, perhaps, permit him to discuss difficult points; but his work cannot be called critical. He is perfectly candid about Knox's amazing intolerance, and with entire truth, but oddity of language, he writes: "With the history of the twenty centuries created by Christianity the average Presbyterian is woefully ignorant." The latter part of his book on Knox's "ideas and ideals" is, we think, more accurate and useful than the biographical portion. As a Professor of Church History at Aberdeen (we presume in the Free Church College), Dr. Stalker should be a little more exact.

DANTE LITERATURE.

In a note at the end of his 'Enciclopedia Dantesca' the late Dr. Scartazzini mentioned that as his work progressed he had become convinced that an appendix would be indispensable. Personally, we should rather have thought that a considerable portion of the work might have been excised without detriment to its utility for Dante students. On his lamented death in 1901, the task of preparing this appendix was undertaken by Prof. Fiammazzo, and the first part of it is now published by Comm. Hoepli, under the title of Vocabolario-Concordanza, forming a third volume of the 'Enciclopedia.' As a matter of fact, it might perfectly well stand as an independent work. Prof. Fiammazzo says somewhere that he has gone to the original for his spoglio; and Scartazzini's part in the task is not very apparent. The 'Vocabolario' contains hundreds of references which are not in the 'Enciclopedia,' including nearly all those to works of Dante other than the 'Commedia.' In fact, until Mr. Toynbee's lexicon of these works appears it will be an indispensable companion to the study of the poet. The references, with the exception of those to the 'De Vulgari Eloquentia' and the apocryphal poems, where Rajna and Fraticelli are used, are to the Oxford edition of 1894, the variants of Witte for the 'Commedia,' Beck for the 'Vita Nuova,' and Fraticelli for the 'Canzoniere' being noted. In an interesting, if not always very clearly worded, preface Prof. Fiammazzo discusses some orthographical and other points, and incidentally touches on the craze for finding numerical symbolisms in the recurrence of certain words which has of late beset some interpreters of Dante. One is also amused to find those immaculate censors of typography who preside over the Clarendon Press convicted of somewhat serious blundering in the matter of the division of syllables in Italian. We do not, however, understand the criticism on Dr. Moore for printing, 'Inf.' xxiv. 3, "mezzodi." When the word means, as here, "the south," surely it is lawful to print it either as one word or as two. Is it possible that Prof. Fiammazzo still adheres to the exploded rendering "half the day"? The volume opens with a short biography of Scartazzini, in which his services to the study of Dante are well sketched, and the causes which hindered them from being quite as great as, from his undoubted knowledge of Dante himself and all that had been written about him, they might have been expected to be, are judiciously hinted at.

We are glad to see that Mr. Edmund Gardner's excellent study, Dante's Ten Heavens (Constable), has reached a second edition. The author has taken the opportunity of revising it to some extent. Some of the expressions which, in reviewing the original book, we criticized as a little too colloquial, have been amended, and a few additions have been made, notably a discussion of the 'Letter to a Florentine Friend,' which one would fain believe to be a genuine writing of the poet's. Among the changes, we note an improved statement of the chronological question relating to the hour at which the passage from the terrestrial to the heavenly paradise was made, though Mr. Gardner seems still to misunderstand canto i. 43, 44, where he has transposed the subject and the object of "fatto avea." Also, we do not see why the reference to Dr. Moore's 'Time-References' has been dropped. On the symbolism of Beatrice Mr. Gardner was always sound in the main, and by substituting "Heavenly Wisdom" for "Ecclesiastical Authority," he has made a distinct advance. But he is still, to some extent, in the grip of the "Theology" conception. Theology, in its ordinary acceptation, is just what she is not; she is theoria, intuitio, visum principium. If she is Theology at all, it is Mystical Theology, not Scholastic. If now and again she condescends to formal exposition, she quickly resumes her attitude of gazing on the highest heaven. After the two lowest spheres she speaks but little, and among the theologians she is virtually silent. Here is a point for Mr. Gardner to work up in his next edition.

The inexhaustible firm of Hoepli again claims our attention with two more books—Un Decennio di Bibliografia Dantesca, and a very pretty miniature edition of the Commedia. The former, compiled by Count Passerini and Signor Mazzi, records not only the editions (including translations) of Dante's various works which appeared during the last decade of the last century, but also every writing, from substantive books to magazine articles and even letters in newspapers, which saw the light during the same period. A certain number of these are only indirectly connected with Dante, but all may be said to have some bearing on the study of his works, and the total list reaches the portentous figure of 4,392. It is compiled with great care, cross-references and indexes being supplied, and, so far as we have tested it, with remarkable accuracy. English names, of course, suffer a good deal, though why they should offer more difficulty than German to an Italian memory, or why, for example, when h and t come together in a word, it should be assumed that the t is as a matter of course to be put first, we know not. M. Emile Gebhart appears under his right name and under "Ghebbardt" for different works. A useful feature is to be found in the references to reviews, foreign no less than Italian, of the various books catalogued.

The little 'Commedia' is a marvel of portability. The whole poem is got into 577 pages  $4\frac{1}{2}$  by  $2\frac{3}{4}$  inches, and is  $\frac{1}{2}$  inch thick. The weight is just three ounces. The type, if somewhat small for eyes past their prime, is beautifully clear, and the paper opaque. It is said to be "for the use of schools," to which one can only say that Italian schoolboys must be very mansuete if so dainty a book can be trusted in their hands. The editor is Prof. Fornaciari. The readings appear to be those now generally accepted, and the notes are brief, with no attempt at originality, so far as we have observed. Even the old erroneous interpretation of 'Inf.' xxiv. 3 is adhered to.

MEDIEVAL LITERATURE.

A Medieval Princess, being a True Record of the Changing Fortunes which brought Divers Titles to Jacqueline, Countess of Holland, together with an Account of her Conflict with Philip, Duke of Burgundy (1401-36). By Ruth Putnam. (Putnam's Sons.)—This book lacks few of the elements which make for excellence—a good subject yet unfamiliar to English or American students, wide reading and signal illustration, and clear type. Into her thirty-six years of life Jacqueline crowded much experience: she was four times married, was in turn a sovereign, a fugitive, and a pensioner; was in contact or in conflict with the chief personages of her time; and played a part in English history during the first years of Henry VI., as the wife of Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester. The work would have been much improved by the omission of some of the eighteenth-century prints of fifteenth-century subjects, which are out of keeping with the valuable reproductions from seals, illuminations, and portraits freely presented. The bibliography is well chosen; we find a good index and a clear genealogical table. What is wanting is, perhaps, sufficient experience in writing. The author does not seem to have a fixed audience in view, and does not use the pruning knife sufficiently. With a little more vigour of style the work would rank very high; as it is, it is accurate, clear-sighted, and sympathetic, but hardly likely to be read for pleasure.

Medieval England, 1066-1350. By Mary Bateson. "Story of the Nations." (Fisher Unwin.)—This is among the best in a series which contains some excellent text-books. It is well planned, clearly and simply written, and amply illustrated. We fully approve of the author's division of her period into three, and the approximate date of 1250 is as good a division as possible, the years 1250-60 marking the division between the continental and the home activity of Simon de Montfort and his party. Sometimes a bit of loose writing makes the author seem incorrect. It is impossible, for example, that she should mean what she says here: "a certain Luces 'do Gast,' lord of a castle near Salisbury, translated into French the Tristan cycle," or that "the rule of St. Francis forbade the admission of villains." But cases of this kind are rare. The accounts of the economy of the manor and the household are admirable, and we know of no other book so well fitted to be placed in the hands of a reader who wishes to take an interest in the lives of our forefathers.

The Vision of Piers the Plowman. By William Langland. Done into modern English by the Rev. Prof. Skeat. (Moring.)—For many years teachers of English history have been hoping for some such book as this. 'Piers Plowman' is full of passages which reflect the every-day life of the people, town and country, at the end of the fourteenth century. Necessarily a certain amount of liberty has been taken with the actual words of Langland to make them intelligible to modern readers, but the form and spirit of the poem have been preserved with wonderful completeness. If we had anything to suggest, it would be to make the notes fuller. Prof. Skeat does not notice that the Commons' Latin motto "Precepta regis sunt nobis vincula legis" is an echo of the Justinian "Quod principi placet legis habet vigorem" through Bracton. The introduction gives a full account of the poem, of which the B form is used. We commend this little volume to all students and teachers of English history and literature.

Medieval Lore from Bartholomew Anglicus is one of the latest of "The King's Classics" (Moring), and not the least interesting. Mr. Robert Steele, the editor, has made a skilful selection of interesting points from Bartholomew's work, and brings out admirably by annotation the mediæval point of view, and the mark it left on such work as Shakespeare's. Students of the period know the large tracts of dull matter which intervene between passages quaint or amusing. Mr. Steele, however, has a good eye for the picturesque as well as the endowments of the expert.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MR. WILLIAM F. TROTTER begins The Government of Greater Britain (Dent & Co.) by explaining that "Greater Britain" in his title does not bear the sense given to it in the preface to Sir Charles Dilke's book of 1868, and set forth by that writer on behalf of himself and of Prof. Freeman in his book of 1890, 'Problems of Greater Britain' (vol. i. pp. 170-2). Mr. Trotter has produced an excellent little handbook to the government of the colonies and the Indian Empire, on which we note the few doubts we have. The communication to Parliament as to India is rather concerning hostilities by India than "in India." The statement, "Parliament will not change the constitution of a possession without its consent," is one in which the word "consent" usually means a fictitious consent, obtained by ordering nominated members to vote according to the will of the Secretary of State. The history of Jamaica and other West India islands gives proof of our contention. The account of the government of Jersey and of the Guernsey group of islands is not incorrect, but there is hardly a statement in it which is not the subject of controversy. The fact is that the Home Office, the Privy Council Office, and the War Office fight over the Channel Islands, which are, historically, independent kingdoms, not properly to be governed by any of these offices, but only by the King in virtue of his oldest title as Duke of Normandy. Throughout Mr. Trotter's book the task of condensation has been well performed.

The Statesman's Year-Book for 1905 (Macmillan) is again looked after by Dr. Scott Keltie, assisted by Mr. Renwick, and is, of course, as well edited as usual. The introductory tables bring out the predominance in the Empire, next after the United Kingdom, of India, which in most respects runs the totals for the whole of the self-governing colonies close, and exceeds them in revenue and expenditure, though not in debt. The excess in expenditure of India is, moreover, to be accounted for by the fact that she maintains a considerable portion of the British army. In the production of wheat India distances all her rivals in the Empire. The table of gold production in the Empire gives the output for 1903. A valuable article in the Times Financial Supplement long ago gave it for 1904. In the figures for 1903, supplied in 'The Statesman's Year-Book,' the Commonwealth stood before the Transvaal, but in the figures for 1904 Australia and British South Africa were about equal at seventeen millions sterling apiece; the Dominion being again under four millions, as in 1903, and under its figures of 1902. Australia and New Zealand together will probably in the present year be about equal to British South Africa in gold production. The figures of the French debt continue to be a puzzle to us, as they do not seem to agree with those given in our Blue-books, and, based, as they are stated to be, on the "Budget Estimates for 1905," are not more likely in the long run to correspond with the exact facts as afterwards revealed than has been the case in the past. We set out at considerable length last year the facts upon which we continue to think that the historical account of the growth of the French debt since 1873, given in 'The Statesman's Year-Book' of last year, and brought up to date in that of this year, is misleading, but we admit the extreme difficulty of arriving at certainty on the subject. The figures which a year ago we distinctly questioned are obviously incorrect. Another point which we noticed on that occasion (Athenæum, April 30th), and in which our difficulties have not been met, concerns the naval expenditure of Germany—the figures supplied for which continue to be far from clear.

MR. JOHN FOSTER FRASER in his Canada as It Is (Cassell & Co.) presents a fairly accurate picture of the Dominion and its policy. The hint as to a renewal of Reciprocity is couched in a form which will hardly bear examination: "tariffs which will as effectively keep great quantities of British goods out of the Canadian market as to-day they are kept out of the markets of the United States."

The present Canadian tariff is set at the rates as against British and American manufactures which the Dominion Parliament thinks best suited to Canadian interests. It is admitted that there is no sentiment about the tariff, and Canada would not be likely to consent to changes which would make any great difference, unless they were purchased at a high price. The author's statement that "the Canadian military system is superior to that of the United States" is based on the fact that the Canadian Militia is under the Dominion Minister of Defence, whereas in the United States the Militia is under the Governors of the various States. But nothing is said of the excellent Regular Army of the United States, which is altogether superior to the small Canadian "permanent force."

THE Review of Historical Publications relating to Canada, in the "University of Toronto Studies," published by the librarian and by Messrs. Morang & Co. of Toronto, is always interesting. The issue for 1904 is edited, as usual, by Prof. Wrong and Mr. H. H. Langton. The volume deals largely with the constitution and political matters connected with the Dominion and its various provinces, and also with Red Indian antiquities and French-Canadian history and literature. These are the three classes of subjects in which the book is always most full and excellent, and surpasses other sources of information. The reviews of books and articles are by many hands, and there are, of course, a few which do not in style come up to the highest level; but the knowledge displayed in these accounts for the choice of writers. A review of books on preferential trade yields the statement:—

"It is not the natural destiny of Canada to be the granary of the Empire: 'as our industries develop, and we are able to reach out beyond our own shores in increasing volume, the home market for food will begin to overtake the home supply, and we shall more and more leave the feeding of the Mother Country to the less progressive peoples.'"

In an article on Major W. Wood's 'The Fight for Canada,' a discussion in The Athenæum is quoted as proving Wolfe's recital of Gray's 'Elegy' while he floated down the St. Lawrence. In the notice of Dr. Doughty's 'Siege of Quebec,' which follows that of the book by Major Wood, the phrase "Plains of Abraham" appears in the notice as well as in the second title of the book reviewed. In another article included among the French-Canadian notices it is explained that at the time of the conquest the proper phrase was the "Heights of Abraham," while the name "Plains of Abraham" is of recent origin. When, however, we reach a notice of a Canadian biography a little further on the reviewer writes, and the editors pass, the phrase "the decisive battle of Abraham's Plains." We note among other interesting facts revealed that the settlers in Canada in 1903 came from the United States in considerably larger numbers than from the United Kingdom.

THERE reaches us from the house of Calmann-Lévy the new book of "Pierre Loti," La Troisième Jeunesse de Madame Prune. Loti's descriptions of a life at Nagasaki hardly worthy of an Academician or of a naval officer of his age and rank are not this time up to his highest level in style, and are otherwise not likely to raise him in the eyes of admirers. His somewhat monotonous sketches of tea-house parties display the common European absorption in the charms of the Japanese courtesans and hatred of the race to which they belong. Our own bluejackets excite, however, Loti's dislike in almost equal degree with the male relatives of his four or five Nagasaki favourites. Writing—December, 1900, to October, 1901—as a naval officer high in the confidence of the French commander-in-chief, Admiral Pottier, Loti repeatedly declares his firm belief that the Japanese mean war with Russia, and mean to win, and that no one can fail to see that war is certain. Such facts make the blindness of the Russian Government incredible. The prejudice of the author leads him, in a preface of the present year, to describe as brutal the attack of the Japanese torpedo-boats on the Russian fleet by which the war began. It occurred on the night on which, according to the writings of all naval officers, and especially of the French, the breaking-off of negotiations at St. Petersburg made it inevitable. Loti's own expectation is frankly avowed in the body of the book. A curious passage describes the preference of the French sailors for the Germans over the drunken Russians, and the habit of the French and Germans together to fall on the British bluejackets "dès qu'ils les aperçoivent."

Jeremy Bentham: his Life and Work. By Charles Milner Atkinson. (Methuen & Co.)—There is probably no writer whose influence is writ so large over the statute books of this and other countries, and whose writings are yet read so little as those of Jeremy Bentham. Nobody calls himself a Utilitarian now. The formula "the greatest happiness of the greatest number" was popular for a while, for it seemed to put morals on a basis easily understood of the people. But in its application the formula was soon found to be illusory. In the sphere of legislation Bentham has suffered as a writer from the success which crowned his writings. He would be more read if he had been less effective. So many of the abuses to which he called attention have been removed, so many of the reforms which he advocated have been accomplished, that the present generation has the less need to consider the arguments by which he achieved his results. Most of us use almost daily the very words which he invented, such as "codification," "minimize," "international," without the least idea from whom we are borrowing. Conscious, no doubt, of this neglect, Mr. C. M. Atkinson, stipendiary magistrate of Leeds, has occupied his leisure moments in compiling a sketch of Bentham's life and work, in the hope of stimulating the study of his writings.

Mr. Atkinson's sketch contains little that is original; indeed, he makes no claim to originality; but it is a very readable résumé of the opinions of others. There is no profound criticism, and the analysis of the author's works might well have been fuller; the account of the arguments of the 'Defence of Usury' on p. 81, for instance, is either too little or too much. But the book will serve as an excellent introduction to the writings of the man "who found jurisprudence a gibberish and left it a science." Perhaps Mr. Atkinson is a little too much under the thumb of his authorities, but he makes one point which, we believe, is new, and certainly seems probable. He suggests that the estrangement between Bentham and the Lansdowne family was not caused by any divergence of political views, or by Lord Lansdowne's neglect of the Panopticon scheme, but arose from the advances made by Bentham to Miss Caroline Fox. At the time of the estrangement he had recently inherited a considerable fortune from his father, and this may have encouraged him to take a step the failure of which would embarrass his relations with the family. It is known that on Lord Lansdowne's death Bentham did make a formal proposal of marriage to Miss Fox, who rejected it in terms that may possibly refer to a former refusal. And we may remark that a letter from Lord Lansdowne, written two years after Bentham's visits to Lansdowne House had ceased, seems to bear out Mr. Atkinson's view. "I have been perpetually thinking," he writes,

"how I could be of use to you. The ladies are out of town. Why will not you and your brother come and dine here some Saturday?"

The sentence we have printed in italics would be significant if Mr. Atkinson's suggestion is correct.

The Outdoor Handybook. By D. C. Beard. (Newnes.)—This volume forms the latest addition to the publisher's "Library of Recreations." The books of this series (and there are half a dozen of them) that are intended for boys are written by D. C. Beard, those for girls by Lina and Adelia B. Beard. The weak point of the present volume, from the English boy's point of view, is that it is American from cover to cover. It tells him how to play a great many different kinds of outdoor games, most of which have been played for many generations in England. But it tells him the American way of playing, and tells it in pure American. From the point of view of the student of folk-lore, many of the expressions used here in connexion with sport, the slang of the games, are distinctly interesting. But folk-lore is not interesting to boyhood. A similar book written of and in England by an Englishman would not be very likely to find a publisher in America, we think; but perhaps our copyright laws may have something to do with that. There is a certain interest here for the grown-up reader, however, in such things as the table of different college cries in America. The English boy may well learn something from this book about skating, swimming, carpentry, and the like; but we doubt if he will care much for the author's disquisitions on marbles, tops, hoops, and such-like ancient institutions as seen and used by the American boy. We do not as yet live in "sky-scrapers" in England, to any great extent, so the author's advice to boys about the utilization of the roofs of such architectural enormities as playgrounds will not be of much use. Also, the sort of boy who in England is provided with six-shilling books about games does not play games in city streets, with or without electric trollies; and thus another section of the book will fall upon barren ground. The chapter dealing with 'How to Bait a Live Frog' may have its uses, but we should be sorry to give this sort of instruction to boys, remembering that consideration for the feelings of animals is almost entirely a matter of education:—

"Some fishermen put the hook through the frog's lips, some through the web of one foot, some through the skin of the leg at the thigh, and others through the skin of the back."

The author follows this up with the extremely illogical comment that, personally, he does not like the task of baiting live frogs, because their antics under torture are so human. This is gross sentimentality. We do not want to suggest to boys that they should avoid a certain kind of cruelty because it is ugly, but that they should avoid every form of cruelty because it is cruel. The author goes on to advise as to the best methods of capturing live frogs for bait. His instructions for the home making of canoes and boats are more agreeable.

THE translation of Dr. Lamprecht's What is History? which comes to us from the Macmillan Company, will be of service. Mr. Andrews has done his work well, and made a good rendering. Of the contents we need say nothing, as the original was reviewed in our columns some time ago. Young students should be encouraged to make acquaintance with the book.

THE Cambridge University Press sends a fourth edition of Dr. Cunningham's Growth of English Industry and Commerce in the Middle Ages. The work, which needs no praise from us, has again been revised, and is enriched by a photograph of some open fields with balks at Clothall, Herts.

The Gospel of St. Matthew. Edited by James Wilson Bright, Ph.D.—The Gospel of St. John. Edited by the same.—Juliana. Edited by William Strunk, Ph.D. (Heath & Co.)—These little volumes of the "Belles-Lettres Series," with their attractive binding and admirable type, bear striking testimony to the fact that Americans take more interest in the study of old English literature than the English people do.

We have before had occasion to speak highly of this series, and these three recent contributions are in no way inferior to their predecessors, though it is curious that, by reason of some slip, the Gospel of St. John should appear under the title of 'The English Drama.'

The Gospel of St. Matthew is issued, for reasons explained in the prefatory note, without introduction, notes, or glossary; but most of the historical and critical questions relating to it are discussed by Prof. Bright in his companion volume of the Gospel of St. John. Here the introduction, dealing with the MSS., authorship, and Latin originals of the best Saxon Gospels, is almost too compressed for perfect lucidity, but the most recent results of critical research are well summarized, and the account of the various MSS. is excellent. The case against the unity of authorship of the versions of St. Matthew and St. John is put clearly enough, though the word-test is inconclusive, and, so far as it indicates anything, would tend just as readily to suggest that the two translations were from the same hand.

The Lakelands Fragment—Prof. A. S. Napier's discovery of some fourteen years ago—is added as an appendix to the introduction, and Prof. Bright is at one with the discoverer in supposing that this fragment and the Cambridge MS. are both derived from a copy other than that from which the rest of the MSS. are taken, a conclusion which we endorse.

The third volume is the 'Juliana,' universally attributed to Cynewulf, principally because of the runes towards the end of the poem (between ll. 700 and 710 in the present text) which reveal his name. It is curious, however, that while, for this reason, Cynewulf's authorship of 'Juliana' is undisputed, 'The Dream of the Rood'—surely one of the finest poems in the old English tongue, which also contains the poet's name, in the form of a runic acrostic—should be regarded, notably by Wülcker among the older critics, as being from another hand. In his praiseworthy efforts to resist the then prevalent tendency of ascribing poems broadcast to Cynewulf, Wülcker now and again was too exclusive.

The poem of 'Juliana'—founded on the prose legend in Latin 'Acta S. Julianæ,' which is also printed here—though it has, perhaps, more narrative power than some of the poet's work, yet does not show him at his finest; the inspiration conspicuous in his best work is lacking, and the whole is marred by obscurity and lack of cohesion. The mystery which surrounds the Northumbrian poet is briefly discussed by Prof. Strunk in his introduction. While admitting that the author's identity with Cynewulf, the Bishop of Lindisfarne, is the merest possibility—only saved from absolute impossibility, we would add, by the obstacles which lapse of time will ever place in the way of disproof—he seems, nevertheless, reluctant to adopt the frankly negative view which Ten Brink and Wülcker are agreed in supporting, and which we are inclined to think is the true one. It would have been interesting if Prof. Strunk could have found space to deal with the doubts that have been cast on the poet's Northumbrian origin; but such a purely academic discussion is, perhaps, outside the scope of the little book before us.

For the rest, the texts have been most carefully edited, the type is clear, and the notes and glossary are adequate. It is to be hoped that these three volumes may play their part in luring our countrymen to the study of their own language.

MESSRS. SMITH & ELDER reissue in their new "Waterloo Library," which is well printed and neatly bound, some books which should be popular, or rather increase their popularity: The White Company (which bears the comfortable legend "twenty-sixth edition"), Jess, and The Cruise of the Cachalot, all with illustrations.

MR. LANE has added Tanered to his neat little "New Pocket Library"; and Hazlitt's Shakespeare's Characters is now available in the "Temple Classics" (Dent), with annotations taken from the big edition of Hazlitt we recently noticed.

WE are glad to see that a "people's edition" at sixpence has been issued by Mr. Fisher Unwin of that eloquent and unstudied indictment, The Hungry Forties.

WE have on our table William Butler Yeats and the Irish Literary Revival, by H. S. Kraus (Heinemann),—The Simplification of Life, from the Writings of Edward Carpenter, selected by Harry Roberts (Treherne),—Cook's Handbook for Egypt and the Sūdān, by E. A. Wallis Budge (Thomas Cook & Son),—The Civil Service and the Patronage, by C. R. Fish (Longmans),—Syllabus of Continental European History from the Fall of Rome to 1870, by O. H. Richardson (Ginn),—A Bond of Sympathy, by Lieut.-Col. Andrew Haggard (J. Long),—A Village Stradivarius, by Kate Douglas Wiggin (Gay & Bird),—Sketches in Prose and Verse, by T. Newbigging (Sherratt & Hughes),—Showing the White Feather, by M. H. Kelly (Drane),—Jehanme, by E. A. Gillie (Isbister),—Yseult, a Dramatic Poem, by M. R. Lange (Digby & Long),—The First Wardens, Poems by W. J. Neidig (Macmillan),—Samuel, by J. Sime (Dent),—and Jean Christophe, by R. Rolland (Paris, Ollendorff). Among New Editions we have Two Argonauts in Spain, by J. Hart (Longmans),—Divine Dual Government, by W. W. Smyth (H. Marshall & Son),—and Dreams, by O. Schreiner (Fisher Unwin).

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Ascending Cross (The), some Results of Missions in Bible Lands, selected by the late Rev. W. A. Essery, 3/6
Beet (W. E.), The Transfiguration of Jesus, 12mo, 2/6
Corrected English New Testament, 4to, 6/ net.
Macpherson (H.), Scotland's Battles for Spiritual Independence, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
New Testament in the Apostolic Fathers, by a Committee of the Oxford Society of Historical Theology, 8vo, 6/ net.
Porter (F. C.), The Messages of the Apocalyptic Writers, roy. 16mo, 3/6
Talbot (E. S.), Sermons at Southwark, 3/6 net; Some Aspects of Christian Truth: Sermons, 6/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Brown (J. W.), Italian Architecture, 16mo, 1/6 net; leather, 2/6 net.
Cuyer (E.), Artistic Anatomy of Animals, translated and edited by G. Haywood, 8vo, 8/6 net.
Norway, by N. Jungman, text by B. Jungman, 8vo, 20/ net.
Pictures in Colour of the Norfolk Broads, 4to, 2/6 net.
Robinson (C. M.), Modern Civic Art, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Velazquez, by A. Bréal, 18mo, 2/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Browne (M.), Zetetes, and other Poems, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Everett (W.), The Italian Poets since Dante, accompanied by Verse Translations, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Sackville (M.), The Hymn to Dionysus, and other Poems, cr. 8vo, boards, 3/6 net.
Stutfield (H. E. M.), The Burden of Babylon, 2/6 net.

History and Biography.

D'Arblay (Madame), Diary and Letters, edited by C. Barrett and A. Dobson, Vol. 5, 8vo, 10/6 net.
Elson (H. W.), Side-Lights on American History, 12mo, 2 vols. each 3/6
Harrison (F.), The Herbert Spencer Lecture, cr. 8vo, 2/ net.
Indexes of the Great White Book and the Black Book of the Cinque Ports, imp. 8vo, 10/6
Klado (N.), The Russian Navy in the Russo-Japanese War, translated by L. J. H. Dickinson, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Leaves from the Past, the Diary of John Allen, 1757-1808, edited by C. Y. Sturge, 8vo, 6/ net.
Lindsey (J. S.), A Student's Note-Book of European History, 1789-1848, 4to, 3/6
Mahaffy (J. P.), The Progress of Hellenism in Alexander's Empire, cr. 8vo, 5/ net.
Momerie (Dr.), his Life and Work, written by his Wife, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Seaman (L. L.), From Tokio through Manchuria with the Japanese, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Vizetelly (E. A.), The Wild Marquis, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Waddington (M. K.), Italian Letters of a Diplomat's Wife, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

Canada as It Is, by J. F. Fraser, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.
Coryat (T.), Coryat's Crudities, 2 vols. 8vo, 25/ net.
Cyprus (A Handbook of), 1905, by Sir J. T. Hutchinson, cr. 8vo, boards, 2/6 net.
Nile in 1901 (The), by Sir W. Willecocks, imp. 8vo, 9/ net.

Sports and Pastimes.

Marshall v. Janowski: Games of the Paris Match, with Notes by F. J. Marshall, 8vo, sewed, 1/ net.
Hounds: their Breeding and Kennel Management, by Sentinel, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Philology.

Aveling (F. W.), A Practical French Grammar, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Janau (E.) and Ludvig (A.), The Public School French Grammar: Part 2, Syntax, cr. 8vo, 4/6

Science.

Allbutt (T. C.), The Historical Relations of Medicine and Surgery to the End of the Sixteenth Century, 2/6 net.
Annual Reports on the Progress of Chemistry for 1904, Vol. 1, edited by G. T. Morgan, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.
Brown's Winds and Currents of the Northern and Southern Hemispheres, 8vo, boards, 2/6 net.
Klinealy (J. H.), Centrifugal Fans, 12mo, leather, 21/ net.
Reid (G. A.), The Principles of Heredity, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Savill (T. D.), A System of Clinical Medicine: Vol. 2, Certain General Disorders, 8vo, 8/6 net.
Taylor (J.), Paralysis and other Diseases of the Nervous System in Childhood and Early Life, 8vo, 12/6 net.
Tregear (E.), The Maori Race, cr. 8vo, 12/6 net.

General Literature.

Albanesi (E. M.), Marian Sax, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Baker (C. B.), Transportation of Troops, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.
 Binstead (A. M.), Mop Fair, extra crown 8vo, 3/6
 Braddon (M. E.), The Rose of Life, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Browne (Mrs. W. P.), Tragedy and Trifle, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Corelli (M.), Free Opinions, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Corkran (H.), Lucie and I, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Cupid's Proverbs, illustrated by A. R. Wheeler, 4to, 12/6 net.
 Deventer (E. M. van), The Danger Line, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Dillon (A.), The Greek Kalends, 16mo, boards, 3/6 net.
 Fox (M.), A Child of the Shore, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Free Church Year-Book, 1905, 8vo, 2/6 net.
 Herbertson (J. L.), The Stigma, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Hobart (E.), Leaves from a Suffolk Garden, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Hume (F.), The Secret Passage, cr. 8vo, 6/
 India List and Indian Office List, 1905, 8vo, 10/6
 Japanese Spirit (The), by Okakura-Yoshisaburo, 3/6 net.
 Jephson (Lady), Letters to a Debutante, cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Kropotkin (P.), Russian Literature, 8vo, 7/6 net.
 Le Queux (W.), Sins of the City, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Lewis (G. K.), Critical Times in Turkey, extra cr. 8vo, 3/6
 Marchmont (A. W.), A Courier of Fortune, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Meade (L. T.), Virginia, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Morgan (J. B.) and Freeman (J. R.), The Spurs of Gold, 5/
 Rice (A. H.), Sandy, cr. 8vo, 5/
 Royal Blue Book, May, 1905, 12mo, 5/ net.
 Smith (E. A.), First in the Field, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Spillman (J.), Valiant and True, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Strong (A.), Critical Studies and Fragments, with Memoir by Lord Balcarras, M.P., roy. 8vo, 15/ net.
 Tarkington (B.), In the Arena, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Trotter (W. F.), The Government of Greater Britain, 1/ net.
 Upward (A.), The Phantom Torpedo-Boats, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Vachell (H. A.), The Hill, cr. 8vo, 6/
 White (F. M.), The Crimson Blind, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Wilbrandt (A.), A New Humanity, translated by Dr. A. S. Rappoport, cr. 8vo, 6/
 Wilson (M. J.), The Knight of the Needle Rock and his Days, 1571-1606, cr. 8vo, 6/

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Alinari (V.), Églises et Couvents de Florence, 5fr.
 Félicien Rops, Graveur, 25fr.

History and Biography.

Barbey (F.), Une Amie de Marie Antoinette: Madame Atkyns et la Prison du Temple, 5fr.
 Caussy (F.), Laclos, 1741-1803, 3fr. 50.
 Lefebvre (L.), Portraits de Croyants au XIX. Siècle, 3fr. 50.
 Milloué (M. L. de), Le Brahmanisme, 3fr. 50.
 Vanson (Général), Crimée, Italie, Mexique: Lettres de Campagnes, 1854-67, 5fr.

Geography and Travel.

Bergère (D.), Loin du Pays, 3fr. 50.
 Taxil (L.), Monaco, 3fr. 50.

General Literature.

Champol, Les Revenantes, 3fr. 50.
 Frank (E.), Le Crime de Clodomir Busiquet, 3fr. 50.
 Landis (R.), Une Page de la Vie Russe: le Crime Rituel, 3fr. 50.
 Pettit (C.), Déclassé! 3fr. 50.
 Rolmer (L.), Madame Fornoul et ses Héritiers, 2fr.
 Scheffer (R.), Les Frissonnantes, 3fr. 50.

F. T. RICHARDS.

FRANKLIN RICHARDS, whose death we briefly recorded last week, led the uneventful life of a scholar and a student. He was born at Kensington in 1847, the eldest son of Thomas Richards, who was well known in his day as a printer in Great Queen Street. His mother was a sister of Canon J. R. Eaton, sometime Professor of Moral Philosophy at Oxford. Each of his two brothers, like himself, won first classes in classics at Oxford, which we believe to be without a parallel. When he went up to the University from King's College School, his character was already more formed than is common with an undergraduate. The devotion to work, the simplicity of life, the loyalty towards friends, which he then showed, marked him to the end. No school of thought, either in philosophy or in religion, was at that time predominant at Oxford, nor were there any great teachers who swayed the minds of their pupils. It was a period when young men of independent tendencies did that which was right in their own eyes, subject to the unconscious influence of mutual intercourse with their fellows. Franklin Richards was always one of those rare natures which, without assuming to lead, exercise a power the further reaching on that very account. In his early days among the scholars of Queen's, and afterwards for more than twenty years as a tutor at Trinity, he supplied in his strength of character and nobility of conduct a standard for the guidance of life to all those who were privileged to come within his sphere of influence. Philosophy, as Oxford understands it, was one of the subjects that he had to teach. None knew the text-books better; but with him ethics was not an abstract lesson to be learnt, but a duty to be practised in daily life until it became a second nature. Ancient history was more interesting to him than metaphysics, as furnishing concrete facts that could satisfy his desire for ever accumulating fresh stores of knowledge. Archaeology, the handmaid of ancient history, was his latest love. During the closing years of his life, when released from routine work at Oxford, nothing gave him greater pleasure than to travel in the Mediterranean basin, and see with his own eyes the scenes of historic events and the results of recent excavations. Another pursuit of his leisure hours was botany, the most innocent of the natural sciences. In order to study the habitat of British plants, and to find each flower blooming in its due season, he had traversed on foot the greater part of this island, often with a sympathetic friend. Just as he did not care to form collections of flora, being content to see and to know, so he was not ambitious to express himself in literature. "Learn before thou speak" might have been his motto. Apart from reviews, he produced only two booklets. One of these was a collection of popular papers on 'The Eve of Christianity,' which at least shows the spirit of catholic toleration that had grown upon him with advancing years and wider experience. The other was a translation of the first chapter of the 'Theagenes and Chariclea' of Heliodorus, which he distributed among his friends as a token of farewell about a month before his death. To those who knew him best this constitutional reticence is not altogether a matter for regret. Had he been a prolific writer, he would not have been the man he was to them. Books, after all, enjoy but a short span of life; they seldom reveal the true heart of their author, and what they do reveal is often confusing. The friends of Franklin Richards are content to cherish the unclouded memory of one who was, above all other men they have known, insatiate for accurate knowledge, wise in conduct and in counsel, and inspired with a stoical sense of duty in all the relations of life.

J. S. C.

CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS.

I THINK many people would like to have the evidence for and against Cromwell's sending Irish prisoners to the West Indies.

That he proposed sending them all admit. That he sent them was not long since denied in The Athenæum.

Yet in reputable histories allusion is made to his sending them. And lately I noticed two pieces of evidence of the popular belief.

1. In a 'Quebec Steamship Co.'s Guide to Bermuda and the West Indies,' under 'Montserrat,' we are told:—

"The island was originally settled by Irish exiles, sent there by Cromwell. To this is credited the reason of the negro inhabitants speaking English with a droll Irish brogue."

But do they?

2. A letter quoted from Cardinal Manning to his sister, Mrs. Austen, August 26th, 1890:—

"We must have gone over with Henry II. I suspect that we were deported to the West Indies by Cromwell.....This accounts for our West Indian property."

The paper quoting reflects on the Mannings "shipped on the English slave-ships to the far West Indies to toil on the plantations."

W. F. P. STOCKLEY.

BELCEPHON AND ASMENOTH.

Oxford, Clarendon Press.

IN Greene's play 'Friar Bacon and Friar Bungay' the two demons whom Bacon claims to have at his command are Belcephon and "proud Asmenoth, ruler of the north." These names have not, so far as I know, hitherto been traced to any source in magical literature. It has, however, been pointed out by Mr. Fleay (quoted by Dr. Ward in his edition of the play) that Belcephon must be connected with the place-name Baal-zephon, occurring in Exodus xiv. 2 and Numbers xxxii. 7. This name, in the Vulgate written Beelsephon, is, both by Rabbinical writers and by modern scholars, understood to be originally the name of a deity who had a temple at the place. That it should have been regarded afterwards as the name of a demon is not surprising; the same thing occurred in the case of Baal-zebub. On the assumption that the name Baal-zephon is Hebrew, the obvious meaning would be "Lord of the North"; and this rendering was in fact given by St. Jerome. The other name, Asmenoth, has not yet been accounted for. I am inclined to think it may have arisen from a misunderstanding. It seems possible that some English Bible commentator wrote "Belcephon, as meneth [i.e., "which means"] the ruler of the north," and that either Greene or the authority he followed mistook "as meneth" for a proper name.

HENRY BRADLEY.

JUAN VALERA.

By the death of Juan Valera on April 19th, modern Spanish literature loses its most brilliant and interesting representative. He was a poet, a critic, a novelist, a party politician, and a diplomatist, and in all that he attempted he achieved distinction. The most indulgent of men, he had earned the right to deprecate harsh judgments, and he exercised it by protesting with a smile against the general verdict on his filed and lucid verse. An omnivorous reader in many languages, he had the knowledge, the taste, the temperament, and the gift of expression which go to make a critic of the first order; yet, though in private he would declare his view with an engaging and disconcerting candour, he could not bring himself to crude public censure of any contemporary, and his sole weapon of attack was a flattery which made its victims ludicrous. It is as a novelist that Valera will be remembered. Pereda's first volume of short stories appeared in 1864, and Perez Galdos issued his earliest novel in 1870; but the reputation of 'Escenas Montañesas' was local, and in 1870 the Spanish public was concerned with more urgent matters than 'La Fontana de Oro.' In 1874 Valera published 'Pepita Jimenez,' and carried all before him wherever Spanish is spoken or read. He was at once acclaimed a master, and his position was ensured by the publication of 'El Comendador Mendoza,' 'Doña Luz,' and 'Morsamor'—a work of the writer's old age, but sunny and sparkling as in his best and brightest day. These will survive not only as studies of life and character, but also as unsurpassable models of Spanish prose. Remarkable as they would be in any circumstances, the marvel becomes greater if we consider that, as Valera's sight had almost completely failed since 1896, he was forced to dictate both 'Genio y Figura' and 'Morsamor.' But the grace, the seduction of his manner increased rather than diminished. Upon his friends all the world over—and Valera's friends were all the world—this great artist and gracious personality leaves a unique impression of delicate ironical genius and exquisite charm. It was in connexion with Valera that Coventry Patmore spoke of

"that complete synthesis of gravity of matter and gaiety of manner which is the glittering crown of art, and which, out of Spanish literature, is to be found only in Shakespeare, and even in him in a far less obvious degree."

Those who knew Valera are agreed in thinking that the praise is far less extravagant than it may seem at first sight to most readers of the 'Religio Poetæ.'

THE SCOTT SALE.

IN completion of our reports of the sale of the library of the late John Scott, of Largs, N.B., finished by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge on the 7th inst., we note the following: Richard Middleton (Richard de Mediavilla), Liber IV. Sententiarum, MS. on vellum, 1474, 30l. 10s. A Collection of Six Military Tracts of the Sixteenth Century, with autograph of General Philip Skippon, 1588-93, 23l. Crispin de Passe, Regiæ Angliæ Majestatis Pictura et Historica Declaratio, portraits and genealogies, 1604, 23l. Philosophical Transactions, 1665-1861, 138l. Plinius, Historia Naturalis, editio princeps, Venet., Jo. de Spira, 1469, 168l.; the same in Italian, by Chr. Landino, Venet., Jenson, 1476, 58l. Prayer and Psalters in English, Greek, and Latin, 1495-1618, Sir Robert Naulton's copies, 36l. Psalter, &c., Latin and Lowland Scotch, MS. on vellum, Sæc. XV., 38l. Purchas's Pilgrims, original edition, with engraved title, 1625-6, 45l. Quintilianus, Venet., Jenson, 1471, 29l. Roxburghe Club Publications (71), some printed upon vellum, 310l. 12s. Saxton's Maps, 1579, 36l. 10s. Scottish History Society, 42 vols., 1887-1903, 22l. 10s. Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, 40 vols., 1788-1900, 39l. Map of Scotland (the first after Ptolemy), 1546, 26l. Scott's Novels, first editions, 74 vols., half-bound, 1814-29, 45l. Shakespeare's Plays, First Folio (all preliminary leaves in facsimile), 1623, 255l. Carion's Chronicles, 1550 (with Ireland's forgeries of autographs of Shakespeare and Southampton), 32l. Suetonius, Venet., Jenson, 1471, 29l. Tacitus, Venet., Vind. de Spira, 1470, 62l. Thomas Aquinas, Secunda Secundæ, editio princeps, abaque nota (c. 1466-8), 50l.; the same, first edition with date, P. Schoeffer, 1467, 81l.; Super Primo Libro Sententiarum, printed upon vellum, Venet., 1486, 78l. Tunstall de Arte Supputandi, R. Pynson, 1522, 21l. Valturius, De Re Militari, editio princeps, printed upon vellum, Verona, 1472, 200l.; the same, on paper (leaf in facsimile), 65l.; the same, second edition, Verona, 1483, 33l.; the same, in Italian, first edition, Verona, 1483, 44l. Vegetius, in English, by John Sadler, 1572, 21l. Vincent de Beauvais, Speculum Historiale (Mentelin, 1473), 22l. Virgil, translated by Douglas, 1553, 48l. The collection of works on shipping, navigation, and naval affairs, comprising 1,069 works, was sold en bloc for 1,510l. The total of the eleven days' sale reached 18,259l.

Literary Gossip.

MR. FISHER UNWIN will publish next month a work by Mr. George E. Boxall, author of 'The Anglo-Saxon: a Study in Evolution,' entitled 'The Evolution of the World and of Man.' It is an attempt to give a popular account of the teaching of science with regard to the development of our planet and its inhabitants, and to suggest the bearing of the doctrine of evolution upon religion.

MR. UNWIN has also in hand a work by the Hon. A. S. G. Canning, entitled 'History viewed in Scott's Novels.' It deals with the historical setting of 'Waverley' and fourteen of Sir Walter's other stories.

'THE BOOK OF THE SPIRITUAL LIFE,' the memorial volume of the late Lady Dilke, already announced by us as appearing with Mr. Murray, will contain, besides the memoir and the essays which give it its title, two short stories. Further, it will be illustrated by portraits of Lady Dilke and facsimiles of her sketches.

THE editorship of 'Murray's Guide to Egypt' has been transferred to Mr. H. R. Hall, who aims at restoring to it the pre-eminence, from the archæological point of view, that it once enjoyed. The new edition will be published in the autumn by Messrs. Stanford, and it will then be found, we believe, that the book has been entirely rewritten.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS have evoked a good deal of interest by their announcement of the approaching publication of three new volumes by R. L. Stevenson: 'Essays of Travel,' 'Tales and Fantasies,' and 'Essays in the Art of Writing.' The contents of these have not been printed before in book form, except in the limited and expensive "Edinburgh Edition."

Temple Bar for May will contain nine hitherto unpublished letters from Edward FitzGerald to Fanny Kemble, completing the series which appeared in that magazine in 1895. Sydney C. Grier, in 'A God-daughter of Warren Hastings,' tells the story of Eliza Hancock, a niece of Jane Austen; and the paper will give extracts from Eliza's unpublished letters to her friends, including one to her godfather, Warren Hastings, announcing her approaching second marriage to her cousin, Henry Austen. Mr. Montefiore Brice writes on 'New Ways with Old Acres,' recommending a system of small holdings to enable home produce to compete with imports of fruit, vegetables, &c. Miss Helen H. Colvill concludes her journey from 'South to North in Spain.'

WILLIAM COWPER died at East Dereham, Norfolk, on April 25th, 1800, and the Cowper Society, in view of the fact that a memorial window was to be unveiled to him in the church, chose the town for their annual meeting this year. The little market town immortalized by Borrow was en fête throughout the day. In the morning the Society met in the Corn Hall. The secretary (Mr. Thomas Wright, of Olney) made special reference in his report to Dr. Stokes's recently published 'Cowper Memorials'; and interesting papers were read by Canon Cowper Johnson on the Abbott portrait of the poet (which was on view in the hall), by Mr. S. Philip Unwin on 'Cowper in the Light of To-day,' and others. The memorial window over Cowper's tomb in the north transept of St. Nicholas's Church was unveiled by the Countess of Leicester in the afternoon. The cost of the window is being defrayed by public subscription.

MESSRS. HODGSON's catalogue of books for sale on May 9th and three following days includes an interesting copy of the first edition of Thackeray's 'Notes of a Journey from Cornhill to Grand Cairo,' which appeared in 1846, and was dedicated "to Capt. Samuel Lewis, of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's Service." The volume has a characteristic pen-and-ink sketch by the author pasted in the front cover, entitled 'The New Chibouque,' with an inscription in pencil above: "This drawing was made by Mr. Thackeray on board the Lady Mary Wood, and given to my father, Capt. Lewis.—S. L." It was on the Lady Mary Wood that Thackeray started on his journey from Southampton in July, 1844. The copy also bears the autograph of "S. Lewis, 1846."

WE are sorry to hear of the death of Mr. James Roberts Brown, a well-known and universally esteemed collector. Mr. Brown was one of the most enthusiastic founders of the Ex-Libris Society, to the success of which, as an officer and in other ways, he contributed much. One of his own book-plates was designed by his friend the late H. S. Marks, R.A. Although not one of the original members of the Sette of Odd Volumes (founded in 1878 by the late Mr. Quaritch and a few friends), Mr. Brown joined the ranks of the Sette in 1879, acting as secretary in 1880, as vice-president in 1883, and as president in 1885; he was the "Alchymist" of the Sette, and his first contribution to the "Opuscula" was a reprint of 'Love's Garland; or, Posies for Rings, Handkerchers and Gloves, 1674,' presented to the members on October 12th, 1883. Several of the "Opuscula" and "Miscellanies" of the Sette were either compiled by or printed and presented at the expense of Mr. Brown, whose cheery presence will be greatly missed at the gatherings of the two societies with which he was so closely identified. His collection of book-plates is one of the finest in private hands.

In addition to works previously announced, Mr. David Nutt will issue in the course of the spring: 'Mister Dormouse, and other Verses for Children,' by Geraldine M. Seymour; 'Etain and Otind: a Romance,' by E. Hamilton Moore; 'A Chapter from Malory,' by E. Cloriston; 'The Burden of Demos,' poems by E. Vialls; 'Ilamos: a Volume of Poems,' by Arthur Lyon Reile; 'Practical Track Athletics,' by Messrs. Graham and Clarke, Instructor in Athletics to Harvard College and Amateur Champion of America; the first numbers of a series to be entitled "Great American Explorers," comprising 'Hernando de Soto,' the early narratives of his exploration of Florida and the Mississippi Valley, 1539-42, edited by E. G. Bourne, 2 vols., and 'The History of the Expedition under the Command of Capts. Lewis and Clark (1804-6),' edited by J. B. McMaster, 3 vols.; 'Words from the Land of Tyranny: The Great Heart, and other Stories and Sketches,' translated from Tolstoy, Gorky, Dantschenko, and others, by W. F. Harvey; 'The Unwritten Law,' a novel, by Arthur Henry; and a translation of M. Bérard's 'Empire Russe et le Tsarisme.'

'THE CONFLICT OF OWEN PRYTHORCH' is the title of a novel of modern Welsh life, which Mr. Walter M. Gallichan ("Geoffrey Mortimer") is publishing shortly through Mr. George A. Morton, of Edinburgh. Mr. Gallichan has already written two works of fiction under his nom de guerre, but his new novel will bear his family name. It is concerned with the experiences of a Welsh Nonconformist minister, who is too advanced for his flock, and there is reference to the present revival in Wales, a country which the author knows well.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. write:—

"In the notice of the Marchesa Vitelleschi's new work, 'The Romance of Savoy: Victor Amadeus II. and his Stuart Bride,' contained in the current issue of The Athenæum, the reviewer seems to conclude that the book is a translation and 'from the pen of a foreigner.' As this is not the case we beg that you will be good enough to correct the impression. The author, who before her marriage was the Hon. Amy Cochrane-Baillie, is a daughter of the first Lord Lamington, and has for some years spent most of her time in Italy."

Macmillan's Magazine for May contains an estimate of the present effect and probable outcome of 'Western Influence on Japanese Character,' by Mr. E. G. J. Moyna; a paper on 'The Coming of Spring,' by Mr. Anthony Collett; and 'The Quest of the Dactyl,' a paper in defence of Latin verse composition. 'The Surge of the Slav,' by "Strigil," sets forth the view that the present Russian movement is not a revolution, but a stage in the education of a people. The third of S. G. Tallentyre's articles on 'The Fellow-Workers of Voltaire' deals with the career of the Abbé Galiani.

THE Duke and Duchess of Westminster have lent Grosvenor House for a sale, combined with an historical loan exhibition, in aid of the Indian and colonial work of the Girls' Friendly Society on May 9th and 10th. Among other historical garments to be shown are the gold brocade train worn by "Princess Charlotte" of Wales at her wedding, the bonnet left behind at a farmhouse near Berlin by Queen Louise of Prussia on her flight from Napoleon, and shoes of Queen Elizabeth and Queen Anne. The secretaries have obtained the loan of some interesting souvenirs of famous women writers, including the MSS. of Mrs. Gaskell's 'Wives and Daughters,' and of Jane Austen's unfinished tale 'The Watsons.'

At the monthly meeting of the board of directors of the Booksellers' Provident Institution, held on Thursday, April 20th, the sum of 98*l.* was voted to fifty-six members and widows of members. Six members were elected, and six fresh applications for membership were received.

The Macclesfield Courier and Herald of last Saturday has an account of the meeting of the Library Committee, from which it appears that no newly written books have been supplied to the library for about four years. Thus it lacks apparently such works as Mr. Morley's 'Life of Gladstone'! We are glad to notice that this revelation is likely to lead to reform.

AMONG the guests expected at the Readers' Dinner, at which Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins will preside on Saturday, May 13th, are Sir John Jenkins, Col. Earl Church, Lieut.-Col. Pollock, Capt. Cayley-Webster, Mr. F. G. Aflalo, Mr. E. H. Blakeney, Mr. Warwick Bond, Mr. Irving Carlyle, Mr. Hugh Chisholm, Prof. Churton Collins, Mr. W. H. Helm, Mr. John Hutchinson, Mr. R. A. Austen Leigh, Mr. Laurie Magnus, the Rev. G. Margoliouth, Mr. T. P. O'Connor, Mr. E. T. Reed, Dr. Holland Rose, Mr. Howard Saunders, Mr. F. Sidgwick, and Mr. F. H. Skrine.

ALTHOUGH it was decided in 1869 to erect a monument in Paris to the memory of Alfred de Musset, and a committee for the carrying of the resolution into effect was appointed, nothing came of it. Now, instead of one monument, there are to be three—one by M. Antonin Mercié at the Place du Théâtre Français; another by M. Granet; and a third, a bas-relief, will be erected in the Avenue du Bois de Boulogne.

WE have to announce the death of a Danish literary critic and author, Prof. P. Hansen, on the 5th inst., aged sixty-five years. His chief works are a history of Danish literature; translations from German classics, especially Goethe's 'Faust,' the standard Danish version of this poem; a life of the poet; and a history of the Theatre Royal, Copenhagen. In the seventies he edited the weekly literary paper Nær og Fjært, in which he wrote numerous articles under the name of Cabiro. At the time of his death he occupied the position of Censor at the Theatre Royal.

THE remarkable advance in the commercial value of the first edition of Browning's 'Pauline' (1833) was further illustrated at the Anderson salerooms, New York, on April 12th, when a copy of this book, in the original boards, with the label, and uncut, came up for sale. It was slightly imperfect, one of the leaves (pp. 21-22) having a small hole, and sixteen letters missing from the text. The copy, nevertheless, realized the very high figure of 1,275 dollars. This same copy fetched 120*l.* at Sotheby's in December, 1900. It passed into the collection of W. H. Arnold, and at his sale in New York in May, 1901, it was acquired for 700 dols. The 325*l.* paid for Dykes Campbell's copy in June, 1904, still remains the highest price; but that copy was unique. Ten years ago the value of an example of the first edition of 'Pauline' was placed at about 40*l.* or 50*l.*

THE death occurred on April 11th at Budapest of Count Géza de Kuun, who was sixty-seven, and had been a leading member of the learned societies of Hungary, some of which he helped to found. He had a considerable reputation as an historian and ethnologist outside his own country. His best-known book is his 'Historia Antiquissima' of the relations of Hungary with the East.

SCIENCE

The History of the Society of Apothecaries of London. By C. R. B. Barrett. Illustrated by the Author. (Elliot Stock.)

MR. BARRETT has produced a book which is interesting and valuable, in spite of some defects in taste and style. He has made an abstract of the minute-books of the Society of Apothecaries from the year of its incorporation as a body separate from the Grocers' Company, in 1617, until 1864, when "for obvious reasons," says the author, "it is necessary to generalize." Mr. Barrett makes no attempt to tell the story of the apothecaries in relation to the times through which the Society has passed, except so far as those times are reflected in the minute-books, nor does he quite bring out the whole-hearted service which they rendered to the cause of medical education in England in the last century. But Mr. Barrett draws better than he writes, and the book is excellently illustrated from his own sketches in black and white of many architectural features in the old buildings packed away on classic ground almost under the shadow of St. Paul's Cathedral. He has also provided an unusually good index.

The Society of Apothecaries owes its origin to King James I., who probably acted upon the suggestion of Theodore Mayerne, his physician, who in later years became a founder of the Distillers' Company. The honour of founding the Society is often attributed to the royal apothecary, Gideon Delaune; but Mr. Barrett shows that he was an alien, who was not elected Master of the Society until 1628, and then only after a contested election. That body was incorporated as a trade guild to buy, sell, and prepare pure drugs. To this business it has devoted itself through a long and honourable career with such zeal that, after the Great Fire of London, the apothecaries set to work to build new laboratories long before they made any attempt to rebuild their hall. Their labours were rewarded in the reign of Queen Anne, when Prince George of Denmark, then the Lord High Admiral, applied to the Society to know if it would undertake the service of the navy, which was then badly supplied with drugs.

A knowledge of botany was necessary when drugs had to be obtained directly from the crude sources, and the teaching of botany became, therefore, an integral part of the work of the Society. This was carried out in two directions. Under the charge of a professor there was a series of botanical excursions, in which the apprentices picked and named the flowers. The first of these herborizings was on June 21st, 1627, when the meeting-place of the "simpling" was "at Graies Inne in Holborne," and the time five o'clock in the morning. The number of these herborizings was afterwards increased to six, of which five were open to the apprentices, the sixth being confined to the members of the Society. The Grand Herborizing ended with a dinner at which a haunch of venison was the chief feature. The more formal teaching of botany was carried out at the Chelsea Physic Garden, which was also used for experimental purposes. This garden still performs a useful function, though it is no longer under the sole control of the Society of Apothecaries, and the exchange of seeds with other botanical gardens, which has been maintained since 1682, is kept up.

The power of the apothecaries to license medical practitioners appears to have been obtained by a process of evolution. The freemen of the Society of Apothecaries, like those of the other City companies, were allowed to take as many apprentices as they could actually employ, and with each apprentice a premium was received. It was necessary that the apprentice should have an elementary knowledge of Latin, to enable him to read the prescriptions sent to his master to be compounded. The Society consequently instituted an examination in Latin before binding an apprentice, and in this manner the boys they trained obtained some tincture of learning. This knowledge led him to be rather better informed than his neighbours, and when he became a freeman of the Society he not only made up the "bills" or prescriptions of the physicians, but he also began to give advice, charging for the medicine he supplied, and not for the suggestions he made. Ostensibly, therefore, he did not encroach upon the work of the physician, who was remunerated solely for his advice. The physicians soon felt the competition of the apothecary, and they entered upon the celebrated dispensary campaign, in which the poets Garth and Pope took an active part. The apothecaries triumphed in the end, for the public wanted a class of general practitioners, which the College of Physicians were unwilling to supply. A tax was put upon glass in 1812, and this, by increasing the price of bottles, pressed with great severity upon the apothecaries, paid as they were by the number of draughts and potions which they could induce their clients to swallow. A movement was therefore started to place the general practitioners of medicine on a better footing and to allow them to be paid for the advice they gave, and not for the medicine they supplied. An attempt was made to establish an independent examining body, but it was defeated by the combined action of the College of Surgeons, the College of Physicians, and the Society of Apothecaries. Much correspondence ensued, and in the end the Society of Apothecaries agreed to introduce a new Bill into Parliament. This became law in 1815, and the Society of Apothecaries granted a licence to practise after an examination had been passed. This licence soon became a favourite one with students, and after suffering a partial eclipse when the regulations of the Royal Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons enabled them to give a conjoint diploma, it has recently, under a more extended system, regained its popularity, for it is a complete qualification in medicine, surgery, and midwifery.

Amongst other things, we learn incidentally from Mr. Barrett's book how it is that so much plate, which would now realize high prices, has entirely vanished from many corporations where it might have been expected to remain in safe keeping. For on October 18th, 1759, a quantity of the old plate, styled by the Master "useless and unfashionable," was ordered to be sold. It consisted on this occasion of two college cups given by Gideon Delaune, a cup and cover given by Mr. Edward Taylor, the large salt given by Ann, wife of Richard Glover, and the "other" salt-cellar, the lesser "Monteth," and the two lesser salvers. The money so obtained was spent in buying four dozen knives with silver handles and four dozen similar forks, twelve salts with "shovels," and four small silver cups for the barge. The Society, too, ought to have had a unique collection of silver spoons, for it was the custom from the beginning that each member, on taking up his freedom, should present a silver-gilt spoon of the value of thirteen shillings and fourpence or twenty-five shillings. These spoons became very numerous, and they were sold at irregular intervals in large parcels, until now there is not a single old spoon at the Hall of the Society of Apothecaries.

Morphology and Anthropology. By W. L. H. Duckworth. (Cambridge, University Press.)—Studies from the Anthropological Laboratory, the Anatomy School, Cambridge. By the same. (Same publishers.)—Hitherto most of the literature of physical anthropology has lain buried amid the memoirs and transactions of countless learned societies. Those interested have had to betake themselves to one or other of the French or German text-books on the subject, for since the publication of Lawrence's and Carl Vogt's lectures, and Huxley's 'Man's Place in Nature,' there has been no work in English to which the student could refer. Meanwhile, anthropologists have not been idle; innumerable papers, ponderous with statistics, have appeared, and such has been the glut of these and like productions, that not a few have doubted the utility of this form of research, and have asked, not without reason, what it all meant. Consequently, it was high time that some review of the situation was offered, and some stock taken of the progress made. The publication of a text-book effects all this. Therein we expect not only a lucid description of the main facts observed, but also a clear exposition of their meaning; and we look for an account of the most recent researches and a discussion of conflicting theories.

Such a task cannot be lightly undertaken. To prove successful, a volume like this must be the work of a man with the training of a comparative anatomist, combined with the knowledge of a specialist on human anatomy. Cambridge, therefore, is to be congratulated on her happy selection, some years ago, of Mr. Duckworth as the University Lecturer on Physical Anthropology, for not only has he found time to contribute many valuable monographs to the literature of his subject in the second book at the head of this notice, but he has also managed to produce, in his 'Morphology and Anthropology,' just such a text-book as students have long been asking for.

Within the limits at his disposal he has been able to marshal his facts and inferences in a methodical and convincing manner. The subjects dealt with are, generally, too technical for discussion in these pages, and embrace sections devoted to the consideration of: A. The Comparative Anatomy and Morphology of Eutherian Mammals; B. Embryology; C. Variation in Anatomical Conformation; and D. Palæontology.

More than a passing reference, however, must be made to Mr. Duckworth's classification of races according to head measurements. He has the courage of his opinions, and utilizes an ingeniously devised and graphic method to demonstrate his classification of mankind into seven great groups, viz., (1) Australian; (2) African (negro); (3) Andamanese; (4) Eurasian; (5) Polynesian; (6) Greenland; and (7) South African. Many will take exception to any such classification, but according to the tests employed it has the merit of being so far consistent. The measures and proportions utilized for this grouping have been the cranial capacity and the cephalic and alveolar indices. It is to the last of these that we would take special exception, for Flower's index cannot be accepted as a trustworthy expression of prognathism, since it takes into account two proportions of only two sides of the gnathic triangle without considering the third or facial side. Moreover, we are ignorant of the factors which determine prognathism, and may therefore be misled as to its significance.

Although on other points we do not always agree with the author's conclusions, we are bound to admit that he states his case clearly, and on the whole judiciously. We have, we hope, said sufficient to prove our hearty appreciation of this book. It is no easy task to have undertaken such a work, and the author is to be congratulated on the success which has attended his efforts. The volume can be confidently recommended to all whose studies lead them in this direction.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL NOTES.

M. PIETTE, in L'Anthropologie, gives specimens of prehistoric "inscriptions" from Lourdes and Arudy—that is, objects ornamented with carvings, which he considers symbolical. Others from Gourdan, La Madeleine, and Rochebertier bear markings which resemble alphabetical characters.

M. Obermaier describes the discoveries at the palæolithic station of Krapina, in Croatia, 203 metres above sea level. The bed of the river Krapinica has subsided a depth of 25 metres. About 1,000 fragments of stone implements, mostly flint, have been discovered.

M. Dechelette discusses the subject of small Iberian bronzes. Fibulæ in the shape of horses and others of ordinary forms, with some small objects discovered in Spain, are referred to.

Dr. Verneau figures skulls of natives of French West Africa, and gives measurements, from which he infers that very diverse elements have entered into the composition of the population of that region.

M. Leprince, colonial administrator, describes the Mancagnes, a negro population of 3,000 persons, occupying the country from Cacheo to Farim, in Senegal.

The Prehistoric Society of France has resolved to hold an annual congress, the first to be at Périgueux, from September 26th to October 1st, 1905. The first three days will be devoted to the reading and discussion of papers, and the last three days will be occupied by excursions to Les Eyzies, La Madeleine, Liveyre, and Le Moustier. Any persons who desire to avail themselves of this opportunity of visiting the places in the Departments of the Dordogne associated with many remarkable prehistoric discoveries should address Dr. Marcel Baudouin, the general secretary, Rue Linné, 21, Paris.

We have received from Vienna the first part of a new review entitled Vierteljahrsschrift für körperliche Erziehung, Organ des Vereines zur Pflege des Jugendspiels in Wien, which promises to be a valuable source of information on subjects connected with the physical development of children, the importance of which is becoming more and more recognized both in this and foreign countries. An instance of this is given by anthropometric measurements recently made in a secondary day school in England, when 51 per cent. were found to be deficient in spinal measurement, 37 per cent. flat or malformed in the feet, 33 per cent. knocked or bowed in the knees, and 28 per cent. deficient in sight.

To Man for April Dr. Seligmann contributes a note on a skull prepared for purposes of sorcery from the Mekeo district, British New Guinea, and a further note on the progress of the Cook-Daniels expedition. Mr. Andrew Lang quotes an account by M. Allégret of the religious ideas of the Fans, as tending to confirm his own ideas about early religion. There is a creator, Nzame, who dwells in the sky, who gave them axes and bows, but the idea is dying out. Mr. N. W. Thomas furnishes a learned note on Baiame and the bell-bird, a problem in Australian religion. Mr. C. H. Read gives an obituary notice of Hjalmar Stolpe, who was director of the Ethnographical Museum at Stockholm. Mr. David Boyle, the superintendent of the Toronto Museum, supplies a digest of the facts relating to Canadian Indians contained in the report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ending June 30th, 1904.

M. A. Thioullens has published in sumptuous form, and well illustrated, a paper on coliths and other worked flints, read by him to the Society of Anthropology of Paris on March 16th.

TOTEMISM AND THE DOMESTICATION OF ANIMALS.

Hatfield Hall, Durham.

In your review of M. Reinach's 'Cultes, Mythes, et Religions,' the conjecture that the domestication of animals may be a result of totemism is mentioned; and one objection made to the conjecture is that "the sheep, ox, pig, and fowl might be spared by their human namesakes, but would be hunted by all the other totem kins and groups in the tribe"; thus—"in Australia each kin only spares its own totem." As this universal negative—no kin spares any totem but its own—is fatal to the conjecture, may I ask for the evidence, and may I point out that in Australia, in some cases, "all the other totem kins and groups in the tribe" do seek permission from the men of the totem to eat the totem animal or plant? A reference to 'The Northern Tribes of Central Australia' will show that permission is thus sought at least amongst the Unmatjera and Kaitish tribes (p. 160), the Arunta (p. 291), the Ilpirra and Urabunna (p. 316).

F. B. JEVONS.

SOCIETIES.

ASTRONOMICAL.—April 14.—Mr. W. H. Maw, President, in the chair.—Mr. A. E. Conrady read a paper on the spherical aberration of object-glasses, which dealt with the difference of phase at the focus, caused by spherical aberration. Two different rigorous solutions were deduced and discussed, by which such differences of phase could be conveniently computed. The relation between these differences of phase and spherical aberration in the geometrical sense was also dealt with.—Mr. H. C. Plummer explained a suggested arrangement for the mounting of a celostat, and also gave an account of his paper on point distributions on a sphere, with special reference to the determination of the apex of the solar motion.—Mr. H. F. Newall read a paper on the four-prism spectrograph attached to the Newall telescope of the Cambridge Observatory, with remarks on the general design of spectrographs for equatorials of large aperture, considered from the point of view of "tremor discs."—Other papers were taken as read.

SOCIETY OF ANTIQUARIES.—April 6.—Prof. W. Gowland, V.P., in the chair.—Mr. W. Minet read some notes on two early seventeenth-century rolls of Norfolk swan-marks.—Mr. C. T. Martin also contributed some notes on an earlier roll of swan-marks, now preserved in the Public Record Office.—Mr. F. G. Hilton Price, Director, exhibited a large number of miscellaneous antiquities found in London.—Mr. Horace Sanders exhibited the bronze rim of a large bucket of the Roman period from ancient workings in the Rio Tinto mines.

April 13.—Lord Avebury, President, in the chair.—Mr. Lawrence Weaver read a paper on 'Lead Rainwater Heads of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries,' and illustrated it by eighty slides, showing the development of the arrangement and decoration of lead pipes, gutters, and pipe-heads. Lead pipes fixed to the external faces of walls are a peculiarly English device, and a quotation was given from the Liberate Roll of Henry III., being instructions by the king to the keeper of the works at the Tower of London to provide pipes from the gutters of the great tower to the ground, so that the newly whitewashed walls might not be damaged. This is an earlier reference than any given by Viollet-le-Duc. Stress was laid on the very dexterous workmanship shown in the leadwork at Haddon Hall, Knole, Hatfield, and other great historical houses, particularly at the beginning of the seventeenth century. With such work was contrasted the perhaps richer, but certainly coarser treatment that obtained towards the end of the seventeenth century, examples of which from Bolton Hall, Yorkshire, Durham Castle, &c., were illustrated on the screen. The fronts of pipe-heads and the pipe ears were often heraldically treated, a particularly notable example being the Stonyhurst College pipe-head, the front of which is cast in one piece like a Sussex iron fireback. Reference was also made to the decline of the plumbers' craft in the eighteenth century, due to the growing power of the architect as compared with the various craftsmen in stone, wood, and metal.—There was a short discussion.

METEOROLOGICAL.—April 19.—Mr. R. Bentley, President, in the chair.—Mr. W. H. Dines gave 'An Account of the Observations at Crinan in 1904, and Description of a New Meteorograph for use with Kites.' These observations, carried out under the direction of a joint committee of the Royal Meteorological Society and of the British Association, were made with meteorographs attached to kites, with the object of ascertaining the conditions prevailing in the upper atmosphere. During last summer the kites were flown from the deck of H.M.S. Seahorse, which was placed at the disposal of the Committee by the Admiralty. Mr. Dines designed a new and inexpensive meteorograph, which he fully described. The weather conditions of last summer were somewhat unusual, there being a decided preponderance of east and south-east winds. Near the summit of Ben Nevis the air was often dry, and was on several occasions warmer than the air at the same level at Crinan. As a rule, however, the temperature on Ben Nevis is generally much lower than the temperature in the free air at the same level. On several occasions temperature inversions were observed at levels between 3,000 and 7,000 ft. A fact previously noticed was again observed, viz., the decrease of strength of easterly winds with elevation.—Dr. H. R. Mill also read a paper on 'The Rate of Fall of Rain at Seathwaite.' This is a discussion of the records from a Negretti & Zambra self-recording rain-gauge during a period of eighteen months. Seathwaite, which is in Borrowdale, Cumberland, is in almost the wettest spot of the British Isles, the average yearly rainfall being about 137 inches. Dr. Mill's results seem to show that the rainfall at Seathwaite in an average year indicates a tendency to be greater during the hours of darkness than in daylight; that rather less than half the time during which rain is falling it continues without intermission for at least six hours; and that rather more than half the total amount of rain falls in such long showers.

INSTITUTION OF CIVIL ENGINEERS.—April 18.—Annual Meeting.—Sir Guilford Molesworth, President, in the chair.—The result of the ballot for the election of officers was declared as follows: President, Sir Alexander Binnie; Vice-Presidents, Dr. A. B. Kennedy, Mr. W. R. Galbraith, Mr. W. Matthews, and Sir Leader Williams; Other Members of Council, Col. W. P. Anderson, Mr. C. Napier Bell, Mr. B. Hall Blyth, Mr. C. A. Brereton, Mr. R. Elliott-Cooper, Col. R. E. B. Crompton, Mr. W. J. Cudworth, Dr. G. F. Deacon, Dr. F. Elgar, Mr. Maurice Fitzmaurice, Mr. R. A. Hadfield, Mr. G. H. Hill, Mr. C. W. Hodson, Mr. J. C. Inglis, Mr. G. R. Jebb, Sir W. T. Lewis, Mr. A. G. Lyster, Sir C. Metcalfe, Sir A. Noble, the Hon. C. A. Parsons, Mr. A. Ross, Mr. A. Siemens, Mr. J. Strain, Sir J. I. Thornycroft, Prof. W. C. Unwin, and Mr. A. F. Yarrow.

PHYSICAL.—April 14.—Dr. R. T. Glazebrook, Past President, in the chair.—Mr. R. J. Sowter read a paper on 'Ellipsoidal Lenses.'—Dr. Watson gave an 'Exhibition of a Series of Lecture Experiments illustrating the Properties of the Gaseous Ions produced by Radium and other Sources.' Many well-known experiments on the subject were shown by Dr. Watson, who pointed out the precautions which must be observed in order to ensure success at lecture demonstrations.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- |        |  |
|--------|--|
| MON.   | Royal Institution, 5.—Annual Meeting.  |
| —      | Society of Engineers, 7½.—'The Parade Extension Works at Bridlington,' Mr. E. R. Matthews.   |
| —      | Aristotelian, 8.—'The Personal Element in Philosophy,' Mr. Clement C. J. Webb.   |
| TUES.  | Royal Institution, 5.—'The Study of Extinct Animals,' Lecture 1, Prof. L. C. Miall.  |
| WED.   | Archæological Institute, 4.—'The Rack,' Viscount Dillon.   |
| —      | British Archæological Association 4½.—Annual Meeting.  |
| —      | Entomological, 8.—'The Structure and Life-History of Psychoda serpentina , Curtis,' Mr. J. A. Dell.   |
| —      | Astronomical, 8½.—'Total Solar Eclipses,' Prof. H. H. Turner.  |
| —      | Dante, 8½.—'Dante and the Grand Style,' Prof. G. Saintsbury.   |
| THURS. | Royal Institution, 5.—'Flame,' Lecture 1, Prof. Sir James Dewar.   |
| —      | Chemical, 8.—'The Synthesis of Substances allied to Adrenaline,' Mr. H. D. Dakin; 'Methylation of p -aminobenzoic Acid by Means of Methyl Sulphate,' Mr. J. Johnston; 'Some Notes on Sodium Alum,' Mr. J. M. Wadmore; and a Paper by Messrs. M. O. Forster and H. E. Fierz. |
| —      | Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—Discussion on Mr. A. M. Taylor's Paper 'Standby Charges, and Motor Load Development.'  |
| —      | Linnean, 8.—'Ecology: its Present Position and Probable Development,' Mr. A. G. Tansley; 'The Flora of Gough Islands,' Mr. R. N. Rudmore Brown.  |
| FRI.   | Philological, 8.—Annual Meeting: 'Notes on English Etymology,' Rev. Prof. Skeat.   |
| —      | Royal Institution, 9.—'Problems underlying Nutrition,' Prof. H. E. Armstrong.  |
| SAT.   | Royal Institution, 3.—'Moulds and Mouldiness,' Lecture 1, Prof. Marshall Ward.   |

Science Gossip.

THE annual Report of the Council of the Zoological Society affords much ground for satisfaction. The general financial condition of the Society has improved, and there is now a roll of membership larger than any in its previous history. Then the number of visitors to the gardens in Regent's Park during 1904 greatly exceeded that of the preceding year. Mr. F. E. Beddard, F.R.S., the Prosector, records that 1,149 animals died in the year. Useful anatomical research was carried out on many of these. A selection of the various organs and parts of organs of the large Indian rhinoceros, presented to the Society in 1864 by the late Mr. Arthur Grote, which died last December, was acquired by the Royal College of Surgeons. Now that a competent pathologist is attached to the Prosector's department it is possible to study more carefully than hitherto the daily condition and health of the animals in the Superintendent's charge, particularly those on the sick list. We note that a card catalogue of the collection has been completed, and is kept in duplicate at the gardens and at the Society's apartments. The new official guide is a great success; a first edition of 26,565 copies was sold during 1904, and a second edition of 15,000 has just run out.

A FEW days since a meeting of physicians and surgeons of the metropolis, convened by the President of the Royal College of Physicians (Sir William Church), was held at the College for the purpose of making one more attempt to combine all the central medical societies of London into a Royal Academy of Medicine. The fine library was well filled by a distinguished company. The first attempt at union was made as far back as 1808 by the oldest society—the Medical Society of London, which was founded in 1773—but that, and the four subsequent attempts at centralization, failed on matters of detail. The recent meeting, however, unanimously agreed to amalgamation, and it looks as if the efforts initiated by Sir Douglas Powell, the President of the Medico-Chirurgical Society, will be successful. The scheme aims at making No. 20, Hanover Square the home of the twenty-two medical societies of London, and placing the associations devoted to the special departments into which medicine is now divided under the control of a central council. This would prevent the present overlapping of work, and the inclusive subscription would enable the Fellows of the Academy to attend all the meetings and to use the fine library, a matter of no small moment to the junior members of the profession. It would also make the line of demarcation between the general and the special less rigid. Strong financial reasons were urged in favour of amalgamation, for the Academy would be able to carry out more work at less expense than is now possible. Finally the meeting appointed a committee of delegates from the interested societies and the Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons, to draw up a scheme for submission to a general meeting in July.

THE Paris museums are about to be enriched with several valuable souvenirs of the famous eighteenth-century chemist Jean Darcet, a member of the Académie des Sciences, and director of the Sèvres factory under Louis XV. He was one of the sixty senators created by the Constitution of An VIII., and the gifts under notice are bequeathed by his granddaughter, Madame le Coëntre. They include a fine portrait of Jean Darcet by Gérard, which will go to the Louvre, which will also receive an "esquisse magistrale" of the famous picture by David of 'La Fête de la Fédération au Champ-de-Mars'; a portrait of Darcet's intimate friend Montesquieu goes to the Musée Carnavalet, and a bust of Darcet, by Jean Chaudet, to the Bibliothèque Mazarine at the Institute.

OWING to the Swedish Government having declared its inability, on account of the great demands made on the fund for preservation of historical sites, to supply the large sum needed to protect the ruins of "Stjerneborg" on the island of Hven, a number of Scandinavian astronomers, men of science, and historians have issued an appeal for funds towards this aim. They hope thereby to save Tycho Brahe's famous residence, visited by James I., from utter destruction.

At the end of 1902 the Nepalese Government sent eight young students to Japan to be trained at the Tokio Engineering College in mechanical and electrical engineering. They are now in their third year's course, and are reported to be doing very well. At Khatmandu it is hoped that they will be able to render useful service in the development of the natural, and especially the mineral resources of Nepal on their return early next year. The incident furnishes some evidence of Indian opinion about Japan.

THE moon will be new on the afternoon of the 4th prox., and full on the evening of the 18th. The planet Mercury will be at greatest western elongation from the sun on the 21st, and visible in the morning after the first week in the month. Venus will be in conjunction with him on the 10th; she is very brilliant, and rises earlier each morning. Mars will be at opposition to the sun on the 8th, and is very bright, situated in the constellation Libra. Jupiter will be in conjunction with the sun on the 4th, and is, therefore, not visible. Saturn is in Aquarius, and visible in the morning; he will be in conjunction with the moon before rising on the 26th.

THE volume of 'Greenwich Observations' for the year 1902 has recently been issued, together with separate copies of the 'Astronomical Results,' 'Magnetical and Meteorological Observations,' and 'Photoheliographic Results.' The subjects of observation have been as in preceding years; the number of stars in the catalogue amounts to 4,057. The results of a large number of micrometric observations of double stars, obtained with the 28-inch refractor mounted on the great equatorial, are also given, and photographic observations of comet b, 1902 (= III, 1902), which was discovered by Prof. Perrine at the Lick Observatory, California, on August 31st in that year. The volume has no appendix.

THE Cambrian Natural Observer for 1904 (which we have just received) is a small publication, but contains a record of some interesting observations contributed by members of the Astronomical Society of Wales, which is now in the tenth year of its existence. Two fine drawings of Jupiter, by Mr. Scriven Bolton, taken on the morning of the 3rd of August and the evening of the 13th of December, show the south tropical spot emerging from the great red spot, and after having drifted about 90° to the west of the red spot; in the latter drawing the first satellite is seen just beginning to transit the disc. Mr. G. Carslake Thompson watched for the Leonid meteors of 1904 at Penarth, and the result seems to make it probable, as Mr. Denning had predicted, that the maximum of the shower did not take place until after daylight on the morning of November 15th. Some interesting records of meteorological phenomena are reported, and a summary of the weather experienced at Haverfordwest shows that the year 1904 was a fine one in South Wales. The temperature of the summer months was below the average, the highest reading recorded being 83°·6 on July 10th, and the rainfall for the year (42·71 inches) was below the average; but the number of hours of bright sunshine (amounting to 1376·2) was greater than that of the two preceding years, though it had been slightly exceeded in 1901. The President of the Society for this year is the Rev. W. E. Winks. Mr. Arthur Meo (Tremynfa, Llanishen, Cardiff) continues to edit its publications, which we hope, with him, will increase in bulk as the years proceed.

THE Fifty-Ninth Annual Report (just issued) of the Director (Prof. E. C. Pickering) of the Harvard College Observatory gives an account of the work during the year ended September 30th, 1904, and shows that there has been no abatement in the vigour of the astronomers there. The Director himself has taken charge of the 12-inch meridian photometer, whilst most of the observations with the east equatorial (with which over 17,000 photometric light comparisons have been obtained) were made by Prof. Wendell. The number of photographs taken with the 11-inch Draper telescope amounted to 543; those with the 8-inch to 1,116. Prof. Bailey has continued in charge of the daughter establishment at Arequipa, where the clearness of the atmosphere is exceedingly well adapted for delicate photometric work; and each year new uses appear for the Bruce photographic telescope, with which Prof. W. H. Pickering (brother of the Director) succeeded in establishing last year the existence, and determining the orbit, of Phoebe, the ninth satellite of Saturn. An anonymous gift in 1902 has enabled the Director to carry out several much-needed improvements in the observatory buildings at Harvard College.

THE current number of The Astrophysical Journal contains a paper by Prof. George E. Hale on the work and function of the Rumford spectroheliograph, which is, for the most part, a discussion of recent criticisms by various writers, notably Mr. J. Evershed, Dr. Lockyer, M. Deslandres, and Prof. W. H. Julius, regarding the proper interpretation of phenomena shown in the fine series of photographs obtained at Yerkes Observatory by Hale and Ellerman. Conveniently, too, in this issue appears Prof. Julius's contribution to the subject, entitled 'Spectroheliographic Results explained by Anomalous Dispersion.' According to his view, the photographic results achieved require no new hypothesis to explain their peculiarities, the same fundamental hypothesis respecting the constitution of the sun which has already proved capable of giving a coherent interpretation of the solar phenomena known before being also applicable here.

WE have received the third number of vol. xxxiv. of the Memorie della Società degli Spettroscopisti Italiani, which contains papers by Signore Bemporad and Mazzarella on the photometric reduction of the stars in the Catania zone of the great photographic catalogue, and by Signor Rajua on the circumstances of the total solar eclipse of next August as it will be seen in Italy and the surrounding regions; also a series of diagrams of the spectroscopic images of the sun's limb as observed at Rome, Catania, and other stations during the first quarter of the year 1902, and an obituary notice, with portrait, of Prof. Tacchini.

PART II. of vol. xi. of the 'Annals of the Cape Observatory' contains a catalogue of 917 circumpolar stars derived from photographs taken by Mr. S. S. Hough, chief assistant.

FINE ARTS

The Old Testament: 396 Compositions illustrating the Old Testament. By J. James Tissot. 2 vols. (Paris, Brunoff & Co.; London, Sampson Low & Co.)

IN the innumerable designs which the Bible has inspired, from the Byzantine mosaics of Monreale to those of our own day, three main methods of approach may be distinguished. There is, first, the method of the grand style, as practised by Giotto, by Masaccio, by Raphael and Michelangelo. In this all accessories are subordinated to the imaginative and dramatic purpose of the design, local colour is eliminated as far as possible, costume is treated in its simplest and most abstract terms, and any excessively marked individuality of the figures is avoided in order that they may keep the elevated and heroic key in which the whole is conceived. A second method, pursued by the lesser artists of Mediæval and Renaissance times, consisted in treating the scenes of the Bible as though they belonged to contemporary life, and giving, as Benozzo Gozzoli did, portraits of the Medici in a picture of the Tower of Babel. Such a method places the work on a lower imaginative plane, and tends to make of it a genre scene with but slight dramatic or heroic character. At the same time, by heightening the sense of actuality, it may give a sense of vividness and intensity even to the dramatic event. At any rate with contemporaries, the vivid likeness of the accessories to those of their own day would not prevent them from realizing the dramatic intention, since the accessories would be so familiar that they would be recognized immediately and passed over without further comment. Indeed, one can imagine cases where such a treatment with the contemporary local colour might bring home to the spectator the dramatic significance and the perennial truth of certain incidents, which are obscured by the distance of time and space through which he has been in the habit of dimly visualizing them. From a didactic point of view such would, in fact, probably be the most effective presentment of Biblical scenes. One has only to imagine a scene in which the Scribes and Pharisees were represented by whatever modern analogues the artist preferred, to see how vivid, not to say violent, the effect on our emotions might be. Such a method has been tried occasionally in modern times, sentimentally by Von Uhde, and cynically by Béraud, but never in a way to convince one alike of sincerity and imaginative power on the part of the artist who attempted it.

Finally, there remains the third method of approach, that of rendering the scenes as they may be supposed to have occurred. This is pre-eminently the modern way. In a weak and half-convinced manner it is followed in almost all pietistic art. In the hands of the late Edwin Long it had a big commercial success, and now in Tissot's great undertaking it is carried to its furthest point. We sincerely hope, at least, that the publication of this work will mark a turning-point, and that no one will endeavour to go further along such lines. We are given to understand by Tissot's publishers that the work was a labour of deep and pious devotion on the artist's part, that he rejected the merely mundane glory of doing a life of Joan of Arc and of Bonaparte in obedience to "inner voices" which called him to devote his talents to the Bible. Certain passages about Tissot in the journal of the De Goncourts throw a curiously different light on the personality of the artist, and we are bound to say that the illustrations here reproduced bear out the impression given by them rather than by the high-flown phrases before us. For frankly we can find no glimmerings of a religious spirit in these crude designs. In the first place we do not believe that any one who felt deeply the religious, or indeed any other imaginative, truth of the Bible, would throw every possible obstacle in the way of expressing it. And yet to labour over the local colouring, the merely casual and accessory setting of the events, as Tissot has done, can only have that effect. For what strikes the spectator at once is not the reality of the men, of the actions, and of the passions involved, but the oddity of their costume, the unexpectedness of their surroundings. Where all the heroes of the Old Testament are represented with vast shocks of tousled hair, which completely hide their features, we are not apt to think much what sort of men they were, or what emotions inspired their actions. When, in addition to this, such features as we can see are common and meaningless, when we find that all the gestures of the figures are the conventional ones of the stage, and not even those of the actual East of to-day, all real emotion vanishes, and we are confined to idle curiosity about details of costume and furniture. Whether even these are accurate is, after all, a trivial question. We confess to a doubt, in spite of Tissot's repeated journeys to the "sacred East." They are certainly more odd than convincing.

Even in the "sacred East" Tissot would not fall in with supernatural beings, and for the "local colour" of his angels he went frankly to the corps de ballet. Indeed, the Parisian theatre and the Parisian model in their least imposing aspects come through all the veneer of local colour.

But, whatever may be urged by the realist—and, of course, he may speak with plausibility about the archaeological correctness of the mise en scène of these designs—there can be no doubt about the total lack of imaginative nobility and propriety in this work of Tissot, while as art it is beneath serious criticism. The drawing is everywhere weak, judged even from the standard of correct imitation, while there is a total absence of any higher conception of drawing as expressive of an idea. We hope that these volumes will prove, once for all, the fatuity of the favourite idea of modern illustration—that an attempt to reconstruct photographic records of past events is the best way to bring them vividly before the imagination. Of all the ways of illustrating the Bible this is clearly the worst. If its great dramas have any meaning for us, that can only be brought out by an imaginative rendering of their real moral and spiritual power. The moment the antiquarian interest is pushed forward, as it is here, the poetical and religious aspects disappear. The reproductions, some of which occupy whole pages, while others are inserted in the text of the Old Testament, are many of them rendered by the three-colour process. They are scarcely pleasing examples of the method.

---

The Art of the Louvre. By Mary Knight Potter. (Bell & Sons.)—Of the four hundred pages, exclusive of illustrations, which make up this volume, thirty-eight are devoted to the history of the Louvre and the origin of the picture gallery, and are readable. The remaining eighteen chapters contain some excellent critical remarks, but these are invariably between inverted commas, and, moreover, the quotations are taken at random from so many sources—good, bad, and indifferent—that they completely lack homogeneity.

There is scarcely a single instance where, in dealing with individual pictures, the author relies on her own judgment. And this is commendable modesty. But since the book is obviously intended to be a popular handbook for the use of those who are ignorant of the history of art, the quotations are supplemented by biographical sketches of the artists' lives. Some of these are extraordinary.

When the writer states that Signorelli "finished the fresco of the 'Last Judgment' which Michelangelo had begun," she must refer either to the Orvieto or to the Vatican fresco. Signorelli commenced the former in 1500, when Michelangelo was in Rome, whilst the latter was painted in 1534, or eleven years after Signorelli's death. That Michelangelo outlived the older master by forty-one years does not prevent Miss Potter from calling Signorelli "Michelangelo's immediate successor." Mantegna is stated to have been "greatly influenced by Fra Filippo Lippi, whose work in Padua he had a chance to study." We should like to know which work is referred to, as Lippi's wanderings at no time took him to that centre of learning, nor does it appear that any of his works found at any time their way to Padua.

That Botticelli "was a bit of a poseur" may be Miss Potter's opinion, but the words are somewhat ill-chosen. "Last Supper" would be an excellent English rendering for "cenacolo" in the case of a writer with so defective a knowledge of Italian that she persistently speaks of "cenacola." Elegance of expression is not altogether the author's forte; we find such passages as "a portico forms a sort of rest for the eye"; "with a sort of leaden calmness about it"; "a more right-angled sort of portrait surely he never drew"; "in a sort of gallery the table is spread"; "he executed with more of the 'know how' than most of his English brethren"; "the leer on this face.....is enough to give one bad dreams for a week." Miss Potter is equally unfortunate in her use of art jargon.

But these are, after all, minor faults. There is more serious matter to be considered. We should like to know on what authority the author states that Zurbaran worked with Velasquez on important commissions. We should also like to know her definition of a "Paleologue," for she says that Michael VII., Emperor of the Eastern Empire, was "Paleologue of the Patriarch of Constantinople."

The author does not seem to know that there was any art in Germany before Dürer, and that there are some who are fully aware of Bonington's greatness. She does know that Neefs had to seek the assistance of Breughel, Francken, Teniers, and Van Thulden to paint the figures in his compositions, but explains, nevertheless, that "his View of the Interior of a Cathedral shows his delight in portraying processions and funeral services."

"No other painter ever began to leave behind him such an enormous amount of work" as Rubens, who was "born in Cologne of Flemish parents, and returned [!] to Antwerp when a young boy," whose "palette was silvery gray," who "represents the complete fruition of Belgic art," who "may be compared to Michelangelo," and who "leaves one in an ecstatic maze at the versatility of his art."

It is unnecessary to produce further evidence of Miss Potter's capacity as a writer and art critic. Her general knowledge of history may be illustrated by her remark that the interest in preserving and adding to the art treasures of France shown by the successive governing bodies during the French Revolution "was the only sane, creditable, and intelligent act of that entire bloody reign."

---

THE LOAN EXHIBITION OF PROCESS ENGRAVING AT THE VICTORIA AND ALBERT MUSEUM.

IN this valuable exhibition we have an opportunity of taking stock of the achievements of applied science in reproducing works of art. The exhibits are grouped according to nationalities, so that interesting comparisons may be made. The competition is, and has been for years, very keen, and patents and trade secrets are no doubt jealously guarded. Nevertheless, there is no such striking difference between the performances of different countries as might have been expected. In most we find that the reproduction of black and white only, as in photogravure and collotype, has arrived at a high state of perfection. There are of course differences, but the very best English, French, and German work in this direction leaves scarcely anything to be desired. The Berlin Photographic Company's photogravure from the Ghent Altarpiece by the Van Eycks is perhaps the most perfect work here, though one or two English works—Walker & Cockerell's photogravures from sculpture, and Robert Sanson's photogravure from a mezzotint—run it very close.

The same may be said of collotype, though we wish that the Clarendon Press had contributed some of their facsimiles of Oxford drawings done for Mr. Sidney Colvin's publications. It would have been interesting to compare these with the splendid collotypes from drawings 443 and 444 shown by the Imperial German Printing Press.

While the processes which only involve black and white seem to have arrived at a point where no great improvement is to be expected, the colour processes are still far from perfect. Coloured collotype and coloured photogravure produce at present the best effects, but we rather suspect that in most, if not all of these, the colour is not mechanically reproduced. Such prints are in effect photographic stipple engravings in which the colour is applied by hand to the plate before each impression. The result is, therefore, only a copy of the original, so far as colour is concerned, and in no true sense a facsimile. We should have been glad, at any rate, of more information on this subject in the catalogue. On the other hand, the three-colour process—the stages of which are excellently illustrated in the exhibits of the London County Council School of Photographic Engraving—has the advantage of being mechanical. Unfortunately the results so far produced are scarcely agreeable. The shiny surface necessary for the half-tone block printing is itself so disagreeable that even an exact facsimile has a curiously different effect from the original, particularly if this be an oil painting, with all its complexity and infinity of texture. In reproducing water-colour drawings much greater success has been attained. Among the best of these are André & Sleight's reproductions of water-colours by Mr. A. H. Hallam Murray and Sir Harry Johnston. Even more successful than these are, we think, some Dutch works by Entschede, in which a faint print in pale grey is added to the three colours to harmonize and control them. The reproduction of a water-colour by Josef Israëls is really extraordinary.

Among attempted reproductions of oil paintings in colour, some of André & Sleight's after Lely struck us as very good; but here the Italians seem to be ahead of all others. Arturo Alinari's three-colour collotypes, though still unpleasant in surface quality, do come very near to giving one an idea of the qualities of the original, even when that original is so subtle and complex as Titian's 'Bella.' Eugen Albert's reproduction of a picture by Lenbach (453) is also striking, but here we suspect again that it is really an artistic, not a purely mechanical process. A learned and highly technical introduction by Major-General J. Waterhouse is of great assistance. We almost wish that he had allowed himself to go into greater detail, with a view to making the complicated processes intelligible to the lay mind. A series of historical exhibits of early efforts at photographic engraving adds greatly to the interest of a remarkable and useful collection.

---

THE VASARI SOCIETY.

THE success of the Arundel Club has led to the formation of yet another society for disseminating reproductions of works of art. The special object of the new society is the publication of drawings by the old masters. The name of Vasari no doubt calls up to most minds only his unique history, but all students of drawings will know him also as the first great collector of these, and will be familiar with the many works which have survived from his collection, in their characteristic and elaborate Renaissance mounts. So it was a happy and natural idea for the Society to take him as its patron saint.

England is particularly rich in drawings of the Renaissance, for even in the eighteenth century the great English collectors showed a wider appreciation in the matter of drawings than they did as regards painting, so that in the British Museum, Windsor Castle, and at Oxford, not to mention many important private collections, we have almost unlimited treasures. A great many of these drawings have been photographed from time to time, but, as a rule, in so expensive a form that they are scarcely accessible to students, while a number of interesting drawings, some even of the highest merit, have never been reproduced at all. There is no form of art which lends itself so readily to reproduction as drawings, none in which well-executed collotypes transfer so completely the æsthetic qualities of the original, and there is no other part of the study of early art which affords such a stimulus to the æsthetic judgment as that of drawings. We therefore welcome heartily this effort to make known to amateurs and students our national possessions. The Society starts under the best auspices, for Mr. Sidney Colvin, who has done so much for the advancement of the study of drawings, has consented to act as its chairman. It is anticipated that it will receive sufficient support to enable it to issue at least twenty reproductions in the first year. The reproductions are to be in collotype, and will be made by the Clarendon Press, whose work in this kind we have often had occasion to praise. The hon. secretary, Mr. G. F. Hill (10, Kensington Mansions, Earl's Court), will be glad to answer any inquiries.

THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AT ATHENS.

IN spite of many difficulties and much hesitation in policy, the Greeks may be congratulated on the success of their great experiment. They collected a most representative assembly, from which, indeed, very few distinguished Hellenists were absent, and the sections seemed to work with little friction, in spite of the known animosities among archaeologists. The arrangements for the meetings were excellent, except that there was no common meeting-room—a capital defect—and the hotels made it an opportunity for pocketing huge profits, for it may be said that Athens is at the moment as costly a place as Corinth was said to be in Roman days. The King and royal family were much in evidence, and the Crown Princess received many English delegates with the greatest affability. The proceedings opened with the sound and fury of the great national holiday (Independence Day), owing to which there was endless noise from 5 A.M. onwards, civil and military bands vying with each other to disturb the wretched archaeologist who had arrived late after a fatiguing journey. Then came the State 'Te Deum' in the Cathedral, whither a great crowd went to talk and laugh, and gape at the royal family sitting on a dais, and not to listen to the service—which was, indeed, hardly interesting. The chanting of the priest was often out of tune, and though the choir sang steadily in four parts without accompaniment, the music was the simplest and most vulgar modern stuff, without any merit whatever. The reception on the Acropolis followed, where the Crown Prince, Dr. Dörpfeld, and others read neat speeches, and the assembly wandered about the matchless ruins. But it was a distinct outrage that the museum was shut because of the holiday. Surely the few officials that watch could have been coerced or bribed to stay at their posts on such an occasion. There were a dozen men present who would gladly have explained to their many friends some of the marvels in this little house, which equals in interest the great museum of the city, so far as Greek work of the best period is concerned. This was probably the most serious mistake of the meeting. Curious blunders in the programme were perhaps unavoidable, but to set down Prof. Mahaffy as coming from Edinburgh and Mr. McAlister from "the Irish University of Dublin" (whatever that may mean) was a little misleading.

The opening address in the most important section was that of Dr. Dörpfeld, explaining his theory that inhumation and cremation of the dead in prehistoric and historic Greece were not contrasted forms of burial, but that partial burning almost always preceded inhumation. After some curious confirmatory remarks on the habits of other nations and of the Cretans from Prof. Montelius and Dr. Arthur Evans, M. Homolle began to explain the restoration he had undertaken at Delphi of the Treasury of the Athenians. The various depths of the three walls told him how to separate the mass of stones he found on the spot, and then the crowd of inscriptions with which the whole house was covered gave him the clue to fitting together the sorted materials. Unfortunately the lantern, which was to show a picture of the restored building, refused to work. In another section Prof. Furtwängler, under the presidency of his opponent Prof. Waldstein, which was amusing, discoursed on his excavation of the temple of Aphrodite Epilimene (at the harbour) at Ægina. The peculiarity of this temple of good epoch is that it is laid over the walls of prehistoric houses as its foundation. The attribution of the famous temple on the mountain, whose pediment sculptures are now in Munich, is one of the recent gains of archaeology. It seems, from an inscription found on the site, to be dedicated not to Zeus or Athena, but to a local goddess Athaia, hitherto absolutely unknown. The setting up of this temple in the days of Ægina's greatness, within sight of the Acropolis of Athens, looks very like a challenge on the part of the islanders.

Though the official language of the Congress was declared to be French, and the speeches were ordered not to exceed fifteen minutes in length, no one seemed to take the smallest notice of these things—English, French, German, Greek, kept alternating in the discussions. How the learned men of Europe two centuries ago would have ridiculed such a Babel! And yet most of the savants present might have used the same language, more or less fluently. In addition to those mentioned, there were in evidence Profs. Wilamowitz, Conze, Lambros, Percy Gardner, Sayce, Crusius, Collignon, Von Bissing, Th. Reinach, Fl. Petrie, Van Millingen, Maspero, and Thos. Hodgkin, not to speak of the heads of all the schools. For such men to meet and talk together is far more important than to read papers, which can be printed and circulated. All the members were invited on the second evening to the various Legations of the European Powers. The British Legation was peculiarly delightful, on account not only of the courtesy of the minister and Lady Elliot, but also of the beauty of the house and its appointments. Dr. Waldstein's speech on the styles of Pæonius and Alkamenes, in contrast to that of Phidias, was full of scenic life, but as it was highly controversial, it was a matter of regret to many that some able advocate of other theories, such as Prof. Furtwängler, was not there to open a discussion. But everybody was busy somewhere else, either presiding or reading papers, so Dr. Waldstein had it all his own way. On Sunday afternoon crowds went to Eleusis in lovely weather, but there were too many people and too little time for the proper enjoyment of the instructive little museum now beside the ruins. The pottery there exhibited is a peculiarly interesting and various collection, much of it in good preservation.

The 'Antigone,' performed in the great new Stadion, was the public feature of Monday afternoon. It is not for us to criticize the performance of a cast of amateurs, who devoted themselves with zeal to the public service, and produced a very splendid show. The audience was far too vast for any human voice to reach, and the colours of the chorus seemed to us somewhat modern. But the distinctive feature of the mise en scène was that Dr. Dörpfeld's theory of acting on the flat in front of the stage house, and on a level with the chorus, was adopted.

One of the best features about the whole meeting was the selection of convenient hours for the work of the day. From 10 to 12, and from 5 to 7, were the hours for the sections. This gave time for the hospitalities of luncheon and dinner, as well as for evening receptions. Any one who has survived the ordeal of an English festival, such as that of Birmingham, where people are forced to lunch at half-past two and dine at six, will appreciate the observation. On the other hand, the places of meeting at Athens were of necessity separated, and not easy to find, so that many people missed what they desired to hear. But there was enough, and to spare, for every reasonable person, and the weather was all that could be desired. It was a matter of regret to many that Madame Schliemann's noble and hospitable mansion was only open to old friends, owing to recent mourning, and the same cause affected several other leading families at Athens.

The discussions on the proper publishing of new inscriptions, so that they may fit into the collections already issued, and, above all, be included in a complete index up to date, were highly interesting, but inconclusive. There seemed no solution save to print as cheaply and quickly as possible, and to publish a distinct index, re-edited every four or five years. By this means Greek scholars would at least discover additions to our store of Greek words. When such a supplement as the wonderful text Dr. Wiegand has found at Miletus supervenes, there is no alternative but to buy the new publication. There are, moreover, seventy-nine columns (on papyrus) of a commentary on Plato now at Berlin, said to be of little value philosophically, yet the lexicographer may possibly find in it new words or forms to add to his thesaurus.

There was also a lively discussion on the restoration of the Parthenon, and the question what should be done with the original fragments of sculpture now in the Acropolis Museum. Some would have them set up again on their almost invisible site; others would set up copies, and keep the originals in the museum for study. The question seemed otiose so long as the great drums of the pillars upset by the Venetian bomb and the explosion are lying on the ground. Surely these should be set up again in the first instance. It will be time enough to talk of the rest when that crying want is satisfied. Prof. Furtwängler's bold reconstruction of the Æginetan pediment groups (now at Munich), according to the suggestion of new fragments and of Cockerell's notes, to which he obtained access in England, was very interesting, but did not seem to carry so much conviction to others as it did to himself.

The next meeting of the International Archaeological Congress was fixed for this time four years at Cairo, it being understood that the Historical Congress, held at Rome (1903), would be repeated at Berlin in the August of 1908. But will the savants of Europe, who as a rule are not rich, be able to indulge so frequently in these costly excursions?

Fine-Art Gossip.

YESTERDAY was the private view at the Royal Academy.

YESTERDAY was also the private view, at the Baillie Gallery, of an exhibition of pictures and studies by Mr. William Shackleton, lithographs by Mr. Harry Becker, and drawings and etchings by Mr. C. E. Ritchie; and at Messrs. H. Graves & Co.'s galleries of sketches of British sport by Mr. Lionel Edwards, and portraits in oil of ladies and children by Mr. Edward Hughes.

THE first editorial in the May number of The Burlington Magazine supports the memorial recently addressed by the Institute of British Architects to the various municipal bodies, and points out the disastrous consequences that have resulted from the practice of trusting important public buildings to a permanent official who is often not an architect. The London County Council is urged to select an architect for its new County Hall by open competition, and the official plans for that building lately exhibited are severely criticized. Other editorial articles deal with the annual report of the Boston Museum, with the late Constantine Meunier, and with recent encouraging examples of private enterprise in art matters contrasted with official apathy and ignorance. In an article entitled 'The Pre-Raphaelite and Impressionist Heresies,' dealing with the exhibition at the Whitechapel Art Gallery, Mr. Bernhard Sickert maintains that there was more similarity between the artists of the two movements than is generally admitted. Dr. W. Martin contributes the first part of a study on 'The Life of a Dutch Artist in the Seventeenth Century,' in which he gives some new and valuable information as to the manner of life and method of training of painters of the Dutch School. Under the title 'The Father of Perugian Painting,' Mr. Edward Hutton writes in an attractive manner about Benedetto Bonfigli. A short article on the 'Failure of our Water-Colour Tradition,' signed P. A., condemns the English school of pure water-colour, and incidentally compares Mr. Sargent to Girtin, greatly to the advantage of the latter. Mr. M. L. Solon's article on Rouen porcelain is a learned contribution to the history of the subject. Mr. Starkie Gardner concludes his account of the Duke of Portland's silver, and Mr. Campbell Dodgson discusses some Dürer portraits, the subjects of which have recently been identified; Mr. Claude Phillips publishes a miniature in the Wallace Collection, formerly catalogued as by Cosway, which he attributes to Füger; and Mr. Weale writes on the 'Annunciation,' by Roger de la Pasture, now in the Kann, and formerly in the Ashburnham, collection. Among the other notes in the miscellaneous section are one on an interesting tapestry made for Martin of Aragon, and a short account, by Mr. R. L. Hobson, of English china recently acquired by the British Museum.

The Antiquary for May will contain, among others, the following articles: 'The Law relating to the Protection of Ancient Monuments and Buildings,' by Dr. William Martin; 'Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn: a Historical Episode (1527-36),' by Mr. W. Carew Hazlitt, illustrated; 'Founding a Grammar School: the Ordinances of Robert Purslove,' by Mr. T. Fletcher Fullard; 'Unnatural Natural History in 1726,' by Mr. C. F. Argyll-Saxby; 'Shrines of British Saints,' illustrated; 'The Other End of Watling Street,' by Mr. Francis Abell; and 'The Antiquary's Note-Book: The Loss of an Ear in Mediæval England,' by Dr. J. F. Willard.

WITHIN the next week or so will be published by Mr. Quaritch 'An Introduction to the History of Chinese Art,' by Prof. H. A. Giles. This work is the first attempt in any European language to deal with the history of Chinese pictorial art, and consists mostly of specially translated extracts from authoritative Chinese writers. It will include twelve full-page illustrations.

MESSRS. DICKINSON have in preparation an important work upon 'French Art from Watteau to Prud'hon.' It will be in three large quarto volumes, the first of which will be published in the autumn. The general editor of the work is Mr. J. J. Foster, F.S.A., and he will be assisted by M. Robert de la Sizeranne, M. Rébelliau, Mr. Claude Phillips, Mr. Frederick Wedmore, and other French and English authors. Dealing comprehensively with the art of the period, each volume will also be prefaced by an historical summary showing the connexion traceable between the art and the manners of the times dealt with. There will be three editions of the work, which will be illustrated by nearly two hundred fine photogravure plates, many of them from little-known pictures.

WE have received the annual report of the Whitechapel Art Gallery, which shows what a remarkable work is being done by the present director, Mr. Aitken. For while the popularity of the exhibitions he organizes is constantly increasing in the East-End, he yet contrives to make them artistically instructive, and to give them a more than local importance. Not the least interesting item of the report in this respect is a quotation from an appreciative article in a French newspaper. Besides the exhibitions, of which four were held in the last year, a series of lectures and concerts were organized in connexion with them. The admittance to all these is free, and it is to be hoped that the appeal made for funds to carry on the work will be successful.

AN important collection of marble and other busts will, by order of M. Dujardin-Beaumetz, Under-Secretary of State for the Fine Arts in Paris, be transferred from the Dépôt des Marbres to the Musée de l'Armée. These include Latour's marble bust of General Changarnier, exhibited at the Salon of 1896; Bagnio's bust of Admiral Gueydon; Martin's bust of Admiral Pothuau, Minister of National Defence and Ambassador in London; and others of Francis Garnier, the conqueror of Tonkin, by Mlle. Itas; of Lacépède, the first grand-chancelier of the Legion of Honour, by Leroux, and many which have been long lying perdu.

THE monument to Gambetta which was inaugurated by M. Loubet at Bordeaux on Sunday last is the work of Dalou, and is regarded as one of his most important accomplishments. The figure of the great Tribune is whole-length. On the one side is the figure of a woman kneeling, holding a child in her arms, and on the opposite side is a symbolical figure of Minerva. The socle of the statue is occupied by a flag and the attributes characteristic of the "pays bordelais," and also by a picturesque reminiscence of the war of 1870. The whole monument is in white marble, and is eighteen metres in height.

WE hear that M. Jules Breton is one of the candidates at the Académie Française for the seat of his former colleague at the Beaux-Arts, the late M. Guillaume. M. Breton, who is not only an excellent painter, but also a capable writer, is already a member of the Institute, and has on a previous occasion been a candidate for the higher honour.

MUSIC*BEETHOVEN AND SCARLATTI.

L. van Beethoven: Sonaten für Pianoforte. Kritisch-instructive Ausgabe von Eugen d'Albert. Vols. I., II., and III. (Alfred Lengnick.)—Of the many pianoforte sonatas composed by the contemporaries of Beethoven, those of Weber are the only ones still to be found on concert programmes—except, of course, on such as are of an historical character. The sonatas of Beethoven, on the other hand, are not only living realities, but also have never been surpassed. It is therefore not surprising that many editions have been issued of them. This new one by Eugen d'Albert is interesting, for he deservedly ranks among the foremost pianists of the day. One or two matters re text deserve mention. In the first movement of the 'Appassionata,' just before the coda, the editor does not accept Bülow's suggested change with regard to the notes of a group of semiquavers; his reason for so doing is good; moreover the usual reading agrees with the autograph. Then, on the other hand, there is a passage in the first movement of the 'Adieux' Sonata, Op. 81A, which does not agree with the autograph. The editor may have followed the usual reading, thinking that of the autograph a slip of the composer's pen; anyhow there ought to have been a foot-note. Again, the foot-note "ais natürlich" (vol. iii. p. 125) is open to question; there are some authorities in favour of the A natural. The foot-notes generally are most helpful, and those in which the student is recommended to imagine certain melodies as played by one or other instrument of the orchestra are interesting; Beethoven while composing his pianoforte works had, no doubt, the orchestra often in his mind.

The foot-notes are printed in German, English, and French. The English would well bear revision. Here are two short examples:—"Siehe Anmerkung a" is rendered by "Look remark a"; and "Die Melodie mit schönsten Ton zu 'singen,' die Begleitung durchweg sehr leise," by "The melody must be sung in the most beautiful tone-colour; the accompaniment be very soft throughout."

The copious fingering by a master of the pianoforte is a special feature of this edition.

Alessandro Scarlatti: his Life and Works. By Edward J. Dent. (Arnold.)—The name of Alessandro Scarlatti is well known, also a fair number of his arias, and the titles of some of his operas; but very little has been written about his works generally. It is, as our author himself remarks in his preface, "strange that a composer so celebrated in his lifetime should have had so little attention paid to him." Mr. Dent hopes that his book "may at least serve as a useful foundation for future workers in the same field." He may rest assured that it will be regarded as something more than a foundation. The number of works penned by Scarlatti is legion, but a detailed account of all which have been preserved would be tedious, and in great measure unprofitable; many are purely conventional, and some dull. Mr. Dent has given a general idea of his art-work in various branches, pointing out certain characteristic features in structure, melody, and harmony; and special works are named in which Scarlatti's gifts were best displayed; there are also valuable illustrations. Scarlatti occupies an important place in the evolution of opera, but his works themselves as a whole are almost dead. Of his one comic opera, 'Il Trionfo dell' Onore,' Mr. Dent, however, says that "under favourable circumstances it might be quite possible to revive it."

Of Scarlatti the man there is not much to record; neither of his early nor his last years is anything known. His voluminous correspondence with Ferdinand de' Medici has been preserved, but "its elaborately complimentary style effectually disguises the individuality of the writer." The following sentence from one long letter offers a good specimen of that style. Of his opera 'Lucio Manlio,' composed in 1705, Scarlatti says that he is ready to "rewrite the whole from the beginning in such a way as may best satisfy whatever commands the high and mighty clemency of your Royal Highness shall deign to impose upon me."

Scarlatti, evidently, was no Wagner. Little, unfortunately, is known of Scarlatti, but Mr. Dent has been able to secure a few details in addition to those already recorded; also to correct various statements which have been made. To gain trustworthy information, he visited Italy, Germany, and France, and a proof of his industrious research is given in the valuable 'Catalogue of the Extant Works of Alessandro Scarlatti,' printed at the end of the volume.

Mr. Dent refers to Scarlatti's compositions for the cembalo, but we cannot endorse the statement that they "are of little importance." As leading on to Handel and Bach those works are, at any rate, of great historical importance. Mr. Dent, however, is principally considering the music per se; but even so he seems to us to underrate its interest and value. But to discuss the matter properly would necessitate comparison with the works of his predecessors and contemporaries in the same branch of the art. But, as our author refers only briefly to Scarlatti's harpsichord music, the subject does not now demand detailed attention.

Musical Gossip.

At the Covent Garden opera season, which opens on Monday, the following artists new to London will take part in 'Rheingold': MM. C. Whitehill, Soomer, Wildbrunn, and Zador, and Misses Bosetti and Behnè. On Tuesday, in 'Die Walküre,' Frau Wittich, of Dresden and Bayreuth, will impersonate Brünnhilde; Herr Klaus will be the Siegmund and the Siegfried in the remaining two sections of the 'Ring.' Madame Agnes Nicholls will sing the bird music in 'Siegfried,' and appear as one of the Norns; also as Woglinde in 'Götterdämmerung.' Rehearsals are being held this week, and Dr. Richter is delighted with his "superb" orchestra.

MISS VIVIEN CHARTRESA, an English girl, but of foreign extraction, nine years of age, will make her début as violinist at the Queen's Hall on May 15th. She has been studying for the last two years under Prof. Sevcik at Prague. Her mother is the Italian poetess Anne Vivanti, and her great-uncle on the mother's side Paul Lindau, the well-known German playwright and critic.

THE first of the six Joachim Quartet (private subscription) Concerts will take place on Monday evening, May 8th, at the Bechstein Hall. The programme, devoted to Beethoven, includes three quartets—Op. 18, No. 2; Op. 59, No. 1; and Op. 131.

AMONG the novelties which are to be produced at Mr. Louis Hillier's musical festival at Queen's Hall in June are a Symphony in F by Théo Ysaye, brother of the well-known violinist, and a symphonic work by a "prominent English composer."

MR. MARK HAMBOURG offers a prize of ten guineas for the best pianoforte solo in form of a prelude, nocturne, barcarolle, romance, or scherzino, by a British composer under twenty-six years of age. The competition will close on May 8th, and the prize piece will be performed by Mr. Mark Hambourg at his recital at Queen's Hall on May 20th. The adjudicators will consist of a pianist, a composer, and a critic.

THE "Beethoven" Festival at the Nouveau-Théâtre, Paris, with Felix Weingartner as conductor, will be held on May 5th, 7th, 10th, and 12th. The nine Symphonies are to be performed, also the Violin Concerto, and the fourth in G for pianoforte, with MM. Lucien Capet and Édouard Risler as soloists. A special concert will be given at the Conservatoire on May 4th for the benefit of the Beethoven Monument Fund, the programme of which will include the 'Choral' Symphony.

A "BEETHOVEN" Festival of special interest will be held at Bonn from May 28th to June 1st. The programmes will not be entirely devoted to Beethoven, but unfamiliar works of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries will be performed by the Société des Instruments à Vent from the Paris Conservatoire, also the Société des Instruments Anciens from that city. The Joachim Quartet, and the pianists MM. Busoni and Ernst von Dohnányi, will take part in the performances.

HUMPERDINCK is composing an opera for the Kaiser-Jubiläums-Theater, Vienna. It is entitled 'Das Wunder zu Köln,' and the libretto has been written by Rainer Simon, director of the theatre in question.

SIGNOR ANGELO MASCHERONI, composer of many popular songs, died in his native city, Bergamo, on April 10th. He was only in his fiftieth year. At an early age he became an orchestral conductor, while for a short time he was director at Covent Garden, and after that at New York. An opera of his, 'Mal d'Amore,' was produced at Milan in 1893. He was an excellent pianist, and for twelve years accompanied Madame Adelina Patti in her tours through Europe and America.

THE death is also announced, at the ripe age of seventy-eight, of John Baptiste Calkin, pianist, organist, composer, and, since 1899, Professor of Music at the Guildhall School of Music.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |  |
|--------|--|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 8.30, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.  |
| MON.   | Miss May Elliot's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.                                       |
| —      | Royal Opera, 8.30, Covent Garden.  |
| TUES.  | Herr 1. Friedman's Pianoforte Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.                                      |
| —      | Royal Opera, 5, Covent Garden.   |
| —      | London Choral Society, 8, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Mrs. Mackenzie Fairfax's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.  |
| WED.   | Miss Marie Altona's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Signor Antonietta's Violin Recital, 3, Aeolian Hall.   |
| —      | Testimonial Concert (F. Moir), 8, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Royal Opera, 8.30, Covent Garden.  |
| THURS. | Kubelik's Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.   |
| —      | Madame Renée Urban's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.   |
| —      | Miss Betty Booker's Vocal Recital, 3.15, Aeolian Hall.   |
| —      | Royal Opera, 5, Covent Garden.   |
| —      | Miss Lucie Johnstone's Concert, 8, Steinway Hall.  |
| —      | Mr. Roland Jackson's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.  |
| FRI.   | Miss Alva Batemann's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.  |
| —      | Royal Opera, 8, Covent Garden.   |
| —      | Miss Myra Liardet's Concert, 8.30, Bechstein Hall.   |
| —      | Royal Academy of Music (Dramatic Phantasy, with Musical Accompaniments), 8.30, Hanover Square. |
| SAT.   | Huberman's Orchestral Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.  |
| —      | Miss Vera Jacques's Pianoforte Recital, 3.30, Bechstein Hall.                                  |
| —      | Royal Opera, 4.30, Covent Garden.  |
| —      | Royal Academy of Music (Dramatic Phantasy), 8.30, Hanover Square.                              |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

IMPERIAL.—Romeo and Juliet.

HIS MAJESTY'S.—Richard II., Merry Wives of Windsor, Twelfth Night, Hamlet, Much Ado about Nothing, Julius Cæsar.

THE distinguishing feature of the present Easter is the number of Shakspearean representations it brings. One only of these can be regarded as a novelty. 'Romeo and Juliet' is seen from time to time, but has not been mounted in London on anything like an important scale since the production of Mr. Forbes Robertson. Romeo is in modern days more frequently a precursor of and preparation for Hamlet than its successor. The production at the Imperial has the defect from which no presentation of 'Romeo and Juliet' by the present generation has been wholly free. It lacks those all-important elements of youth and imagination—more indispensable, perhaps, in this piece than in any other. It is a pardonable vanity in an actor to believe that he can hide the disappearance of youth. Included on was nearly forty when he appeared as the first Paul in 'Paul and Virginia.' Juliet we know to have been at the time of the action only fourteen. That is, of course, in this country an impossible age. A performance, however, of 'Romeo and Juliet' in which Romeo, Juliet, Tybalt, and Mercutio all approach middle age loses necessarily a portion—perhaps the greater portion—of its charm. In action Mr. Waller is acceptable, and his method of dealing with the fiery Tybalt and his rendering of the stronger scenes are to be commended. His declamation is effective also, and he shows abundance of passion. If he fails to reveal to us the Romeo of our dreams—the passionate, poetic, inconstant youth with so acute a prevision of all that is bound to occur—his shortcomings are those of almost, if not quite, all his predecessors. A century and a half ago Garrick and Spranger Barry, both about the same age as Mr. Waller, competed in Romeo at Drury Lane and Covent Garden respectively, the former, according to contemporary testimony, eliciting the more applause, the latter the greater quantity of tears. In the case of the present generation, the audience, though not, as a rule, sparing of applause, is niggardly of tears. Garrick's Juliet, George Anne Bellamy, it may be said, was then aged nineteen.

Great zeal on the part of the management of His Majesty's is accompanied by a sanguine faith in the public in giving six different plays of Shakspeare on six consecutive nights. None of these was new, all having been seen within recent years, and all are now withdrawn, removing thus the temptation to indulge in further comment. Mr. Tree presented afresh his well-known impersonations of Richard II., Sir John Falstaff, Malvolio, Hamlet, Benedict, and Mark Antony—a remarkable feat to accomplish. Where possible the original exponents were again seen. Necessarily, however, many changes were brought about, Miss Viola Tree appearing as the Queen in 'Richard II.,' Anne Page, and Viola, as well as Hero. Mr. Henry Neville was John of Gaunt, Master Ford, and Julius Cæsar, and, of course, Claudius and Leonato. Miss Winifred Emery appeared afresh as Beatrice, and Mrs. Tree as Ophelia. Miss Nancy Price was Mistress Ford and the Countess Olivia. Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. Courtice Pounds, Mr. Basil Gill, Mr. Norman Forbes, and Mr. Louis Calvert reappeared in parts with which they are closely associated. That a single management should be able to accomplish a feat such as has been witnessed shows that the demand for a repertory theatre is in the way of being fulfilled.

CRITERION.—What Pamela Wanted: a Comedy in Three Acts. By Fred. de Grésac and Pierre Véber. Adapted by Charles Brookfield.

IN writing for the English stage 'Chou,' of which an English rendering by Mr. Charles Brookfield was given at the Criterion on Saturday last, under the title 'What Pamela Wanted,' Madame Fred. Grésac (the particule is a recent addition) has chosen for collaborator not Francis de Croisset, otherwise Franz Wiener Croisset, her partner in 'La Passerelle,' but M. Pierre Véber, part author of 'La Mariotte,' 'Loute,' and other pieces. To judge from what is known of M. Véber, his share in the present work is considerable, both story and characters having a kind of mixed banality and extravagance such as he has taught us to expect. Mr. Brookfield, meanwhile, has provided some modern and saucy dialogue, while some one—presumably M. Véber—has assigned to much of the play a distinctly American character. The production may accordingly be regarded as a hybrid. It is, moreover, wholly farcical in treatment, if not in conception. There were moments when the interest languished, and the life depicted seemed inconceivable. Thanks to an interpretation brisk and happy in the main, though preposterous in certain instances, a favourable reception was accorded, and the piece may hold temporarily its own. Such aim as it shows is to contrast the insouciant and cavalier fashions of youth in its wooing with the ripe formalism of a generation ago, and to prove that the most silken bonds of a modern "Marriage à la mode" may prove as onerous and intolerable as the weightier bonds of previous times. The action begins and ends well. Enjoyment is, however, checked by the extravagance of its comic characters; and the proceedings of a couple of demi-mondaines, who seek to establish claims upon the hero and his father, are, to speak frankly, unacceptable and unpleasant. Miss Ethel Irving is amusing as a schoolgirl whose proper place is in musical comedy; and Miss Lottie Venne, Mr. Frank Cooper, and Mr. Faber are entertaining. The whole, however, requires a setting of Offenbach.

LYRIC.—Her Own Way: a Play in Four Acts.
By Clyde Fitch.

TRANSPORTED from America, 'Her Own Way,' by Mr. Clyde Fitch, has served for the first appearance of Miss Maxine Elliott as a London manager. In so doing it is welcome. It is, however, lacking in originality and inspiration. The types of character it presents are wholly American, and nothing corresponding to them is familiar in this country. There are pleasing touches and pretty scenes, and the whole constitutes an entertainment which may be seen with equanimity. One or two English artists may be traced among the expositors, most of whom seem, however, to be American.

Dramatic Gossip.

CURIOUSLY convincing proof how expedient it is that arrangements should be made at the theatres to prevent the production on the same evening of two important novelties is furnished by the present state of theatrical affairs. Realizing, with characteristic slowness of perception, that, apart from Mr. Tree's calm demand for a monopoly of attention, too many novelties had to be produced for all to receive adequate notice, one management after another has resolved to change the date of its new production, with the result that an undiminished number of conflicts seem probable, and confusion is "worse confounded." Some joint arrangement such as we have previously suggested will before long become inevitable. According to present prospects the coming weeks will be busier than that which has passed.

THE production at the Great Queen Street Theatre of Sheridan's 'Critic,' under the management of Mr. Philip Carr, by the Mermaid Repertory Theatre, inspired some interest, the text spoken being that of Sheridan and not of a number of irresponsible "gaggers." 'Anty Bligh,' by Mr. G. Hamilton Moore, given on the same occasion, cannot be said to have added greatly to the attraction of the entertainment.

'THE SCARLET PIMPERNEL,' the run of which at the New Theatre closed on Saturday last, has during the present week been given by Mr. Terry and Miss Julia Neilson at the Shakespeare Theatre, Clapham Junction.

MRS. TREE will take on Monday at the Adelphi the part of Gertrude, resigned by Miss Milton, who joins the company of Mr. Martin Harvey.

MR. FORBES ROBERTSON has been announced to appear at the new La Scala Theatre on May 15th as Hamlet, and though the arrangement to appear at the earliest possible date has now been made, the original notification was premature. Mr. Robertson's return to London only took place on Wednesday.

'MRS. LESTRANGE,' a comedy by Mr. F. Kinsey Peile, is to be produced by Miss Dorothy Grimston for benefit purposes on the afternoons of May 15th and 16th.

NEWS has been received of the death of Joseph ("Joe") Jefferson, the famous creator of the rôle of Rip Van Winkle. Had this occurrence taken place a generation ago, it would have been said, in Johnsonian phrase, to have "eclipsed the gaiety of nations." But for many years Jefferson's appearances on the stage have been infrequent, and virtually confined to one part. What is now said about him is gossip rather than chronicle. He left behind him, however, a volume of reminiscences, which are both pleasant and serviceable. Born in Philadelphia, of a theatrical family, on February 20th, 1829, he is said to have appeared on the stage in 1832 as the boy in 'Pizarro.' Some experience of difficulty and trouble attended his early career, but his later life was spent in the pleasing and comfortable retreat he had secured for himself at Palm Beach, Florida. In America he was one of the best comedians of his day, owing a portion of his method to predecessors whose names have had but few and faint reverberations in this country. In England he is Rip Van Winkle and nothing else. Occasional appearances were made in other parts, but these are remembered only by those learned or curious in stage history. On September 4th, 1865, he was first seen at the Adelphi in a dramatization, altered by Dion Boucicault from an existing version, of Washington Irving's immortal tale, and called 'Rip Van Winkle; or, the Sleep of Twenty Years.' His performance of the bibulous hero ravished the town, and survives as one of the unsurpassable creations of its day. No other actor has rivalled him in the part, though Frederick Leslie, in a musical rendering of the story, approached him in tenderness and charm, while retaining much of his method. An appearance at Manchester in 'The Parish Clerk' of Boucicault attracted little attention, and an engagement at the Haymarket as Golightly in 'Lend me Five Shillings,' and as Sir Hugh de Brass, added little to his reputation in England. A recreation of his was landscape painting, in which he obtained some proficiency. Jefferson was popular on both sides of the Atlantic. One of his daughters married in England B. L. Farjeon. Jefferson's death took place on his Florida plantation.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—A. 'H.—J. C. C.—M. R. G.—received.
O. A.—F. W. T. (Algiers).—Many thanks.
D. O.—Will be printed.
No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S LIST.

Catalogue post free on application.

THE ART GALLERIES OF EUROPE.

With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net each.

The ART of the LOUVRE. By Mary KNIGHT POTTER.

The ART of the PITTI PALACE. By JULIA DE W. ADDISON.

The ART of the VATICAN. By MARY KNIGHT POTTER.

FOURTH EDITION, post 8vo, 5s. net.

HOW to LOOK at PICTURES. By ROBERT CLERMONT WITT, M.A. With 35 Illustrations.

"This book, which we have read with great pleasure, shows that the author has both wide sympathy and knowledge, and it cannot but be largely helpful to those who wish to increase their interest in pictures. A better gift for people who are dimly 'fond of pictures,' but who regret that they 'know nothing about them,' could not be found." Spectator.

NEW EDITION, REVISED, crown 8vo, 5s. net.

CITIES and SIGHTS of SPAIN. A

Handbook for Travellers. By Mrs. A. LE BLOND (Mrs. Main). With numerous Illustrations and Maps. With a Note by Mr. G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S., on the Coming Total Eclipse of the Sun.

BELL'S CATHEDRAL SERIES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

In specially designed cloth cover, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. net each.

"The series bids fair to become an indispensable companion to the cathedral tourist in England."—Times.

NOW READY.

ENGLISH CATHEDRALS. An Itinerary and Description—BRISTOL—CANTERBURY—CARLISLE—CHESTER—CHICHESTER—DURHAM—ELY—EXETER—GLOUCESTER—HEREFORD—LICHFIELD—LINCOLN—MANCHESTER—NORWICH—OXFORD—PETERBOROUGH—RIPON—ROCHESTER—ST. ALBANS—ST. ASAPH—ST. DAVID'S—ST. PATRICK'S, DUBLIN—ST. PAUL'S—SALISBURY—SOUTHWELL—WELLS—WINCHESTER—WORCESTER—YORK.

Uniform with above Series. 1s. 6d. net each.

ST. MARTIN'S CHURCH, CANTERBURY—BEVERLEY MINSTER—WIMBORNE MINSTER and CHRISTCHURCH PRIORY—TEWKESBURY ABBEY and DEERHURST PRIORY—BATH ABBEY, MALMESBURY ABBEY, and BRADFORD-ON-AVON CHURCH—WESTMINSTER ABBEY—STRATFORD-ON-AVON.

BELL'S HANDBOOKS TO CONTINENTAL CHURCHES.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net each.

CHARTRES: the Cathedral and other Churches—ROUEN: the Cathedral and other Churches—AMIENS: the Cathedral and other Churches—PARIS (NOTRE-DAME)—MONT ST. MICHEL—BAYEUX.

SECOND EDITION, with New Preface, 8vo, 6s. net.

JAPANESE ILLUSTRATION. By EDWARD F. STRANGE, M.J.S. With 88 Illustrations and 8 Coloured Plates.

Small 4to, 10s. 6d. net.

LIGHT and WATER. An Essay on Reflexion and Colour in River, Lake, and Sea. By Sir MONTAGU POLLOCK, Bart. With 39 Photographic Illustrations and numerous Diagrams.

THE YORK LIBRARY.

A NEW SERIES OF REPRINTS ON THIN PAPER.

Small 8vo, 2s. net in cloth, and 3s. net in leather.

NEW VOLUMES.

CERVANTES' DON QUIXOTE. Motteux's Translation, Revised. With Lockhart's Life and Notes. 2 vols.

DRAPER'S HISTORY of the INTELLECTUAL DEVELOPMENT of EUROPE. 2 vols.

The THOUGHTS of MARCUS AURELIUS ANTONINUS. Translated by GEORGE LONG, M.A. With an Essay on Marcus Aurelius by MATTHEW ARNOLD.

PASCAL'S THOUGHTS. Translated from the Text of M. AUGUSTE MOLINIER by C. KEGAN PAUL.

Others to follow.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

A SELECTION FROM
MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

BY THE MARCHESA VITELLESCHI.

THE ROMANCE OF SAVOY.

Victor Amadeus II. and his Stuart Bride.

In 2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with 24 Illustrations and Facsimiles, and 2 Photogravure Plates, 24s. net.

"A very interesting book; those who will may read a fine study."—Times.
"The Marchesa Vitelleschi is one of the few ladies who deal with history on scientific principles and illumine it with picturesque effect. These characteristics are conspicuously evident in 'The Romance of Savoy.' The author has treated her subject admirably, and her volumes are not only valuable as history, but are admirable as graphic and attractive literature."—Daily Telegraph.

THE TRIAL OF JESUS.

From the Italian of GIOVANNI ROSADI.

Edited, with Explanatory Notes and with an Introduction, by Dr. EMIL REICH.

In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with Frontispiece, 6s. net.

"This is a work of absorbing interest, of unflinching reverence, and of remarkable skill in the collation of authorities.....It is well translated."—Daily Chronicle.
"I have found it most interesting and instructive. It is full of information, and casts a vivid, and in some respects fresh, light on the events which led to the Crucifixion, on the illegality of the Trial, and especially on the character of Pilate. It is a scholarly book, and written in a most reverent spirit. I heartily recommend it."—Dr. DONALD MACLEOD.
"A most able treatise. It is an original study of the Life of Jesus from a new point of view, and gives a new setting to many of the facts in His Ministry and ideas in His teaching. It supplies a unique picture of the methods, tricks, falsehoods, subtleties, violence, and cruelty of the persecutors of Jesus Christ, and makes more manifest than ever the fine patience and serene heroism and wonderful greatness of the crucified Nazarene. It is brimful of knowledge. Details often ignored are fully explained; and yet the capital facts always appear in their true proportions and right perspective. The style is enriched by a rare choice of terms, striking antithesis, clear and cogent phrase, and real eloquence. It is a great book."—Dr. JOHN CLIFFORD.

BY MRS. ALEC TWEEDIE.

SUNNY SICILY:

Its Rustics and its Ruins.

In 1 handsome vol., with 130 Illustrations on art paper, 18s. net.

[Second Edition.]

"Mrs. Tweedie's vigorous and healthy-minded record, with its joy of life and its thoroughness in working out a deep, rich mine of human interest."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"The illustrations are really admirable; they form quite the best collection of Sicilian pictures known to us, and the photographs are especially delightful."—Manchester Guardian.

THE REAL NEW YORK.

By RUPERT HUGHES.

In cloth gilt and gilt top, with over 100 Illustrations from Drawings by HY. MAYER, many being in Colours, 7s. 6d. net.

"This is one of the funniest books ever written about any city, and those who take it up will find it not only brimming over with mirth, but will also gain from its pages a better idea of life in New York as it really is than could be gathered from all the knickerbocker histories and municipal reports ever printed. Altogether it is a most entertaining book. The drawings by Mr. Hy. Mayer are an adornment in every respect. Most of his sketches are powerful, and in some respects recall the style of the late Phil May."—Daily Telegraph.

THE SILKEN EAST.

A Record of Life and Travel in Burma.

By V. C. SCOTT O'CONNOR.

In 2 large handsome vols., richly gilt and gilt top, 42s. net.

With 400 Illustrations, Map, and 20 Coloured Plates.

"The author has an agreeable literary style, a pretty fancy, and a refined, artistic eye for colour and effect. His writing is suave and pleasant, genial, and in many ways reminiscent of Kingslake in 'Eothen.' He has humour and sympathy, and he is an observer. The reproductions in colour are works of art, and contribute a great deal to the completeness of the whole work. Publishers, printers, binders, and artists are to be congratulated on a fine result."—Athenæum.

READY IMMEDIATELY.

THE REGENT OF THE ROUES.

By Lieut.-Col. ANDREW C. P. HAGGARD, D.S.O.,

Author of 'Louis XIV. in Court and Camp,' &c.

In 1 vol. demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with 16 Illustrations, 16s. net.

"One of the most charming of recent books of travel."—DAILY NEWS.

LETTERS FROM CATALONIA

AND OTHER PARTS OF SPAIN.

By ROWLAND THIRLMERE, Author of 'Idylls of Spain,' &c.

In 2 vols. demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, profusely illustrated with Coloured and other Plates from Original Drawings by SEYMOUR LUCAS, R.A., FRANK BRANGWYN, A.R.A., GEORGE HAITÉ, R.I. R.B.A., TREVOR HADDON, R.B.A., THOS. R. MACQUOID, R.I., TOM BROWNE, R.I. R.B.A., A. M. FOWERAKER, R.B.A., and from Photographs, 24s. net.

"Coloured by the medium of a singularly sympathetic and artistic nature, considerable charm of style, and a marked individuality which stamps the book as out of the common run of travel books, it is a veritable embarrassment of riches. A word of commendation must also be given to the profuse and varied illustrations."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Intensely interesting, tells one all the things that one would really like to see and know."—Graphic.

"A delightful book about scenes and things Spanish."—Globe.

BY DR. EMIL REICH.

IMPERIALISM:

Its Prices, its Vocation.

3s. 6d. net.

"Dr. Reich has produced a masterpiece in little of philosophic sensationalism, an ethical treatise in paradoxes, a daringly plausible tour de force. The whole book is clever and adroit, full of pregnant phrases, and vastly stimulating to those who can think at large."—Standard.

"A notable book with a singular fulness of knowledge. Dr. Reich is a bold and original thinker; he has given us a remarkably original study. His book is instructive and entertaining from first to last."—Daily Chronicle.

A BEAUTIFULLY ILLUSTRATED BOOK.

FATA MORGANA.

A Novel of Student Art Life in Paris.

By ANDRÉ CASTAIGNE.

In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, with over 50 Full-Page Illustrations from exquisite Drawings by the Author, 6s.

"A lively, picturesque tale, full of good scenes, high spirits, vivid pieces of description, and Gallic dash and enthusiasm."—Athenæum.

"A very charming romance of student life in Paris; written, too, from the inside by a man who knows the inner life of the studios and has lived what he writes.....Admirably illustrated."—Graphic.

UGANDA AND ITS PEOPLES.

Notes on the Protectorate of Uganda, especially the Anthropology and Ethnology of its Indigenous Races.

By J. F. CUNNINGHAM, F.R.G.S.

With an Introduction by Sir HARRY JOHNSTON, K.C.B.

In 1 large handsome vol. crown 4to, cloth gilt and gilt top, printed on English art paper, with Map and 212 Illustrations, chiefly from Photographs taken by the Author, and including a Coloured Plate, Maps, &c., 24s. net.

"An amazingly interesting book."—Daily Express.

"The volume is undoubtedly of great scientific value, a perfect profusion of excellent illustrations."—Scotsman.

"One can have nothing but praise for the book; the volume is as near perfection as can well be imagined. There can be no doubt that it will take a permanent place as a work of reference on a highly important subject."—Glasgow Herald.

CLASSIC NOVELS.

The Complete Novels of FIELDING and SMOLLETT, with Full-Page Illustrations by GEORGE CRUIKSHANK.

In handsome cloth gilt, 1s. 6d. net; in full leather gilt and gilt top, 2s. 6d. net.

By TOBIAS SMOLLETT.

The ADVENTURES of RODERICK RANDOM. In 1 vol.

The ADVENTURES of PEREGRINE PICKLE. In 2 vols.

The EXPEDITION of HUMPHRY CLINKER. In 1 vol.

By HENRY FIELDING.

The HISTORY of TOM JONES. In 2 vols.

The ADVENTURES of JOSEPH ANDREWS. In 1 vol.

The HISTORY of AMELIA. In 2 vols.

[Tuesday next.]

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says of this Series:—

"The publishers deserve the thanks of a new generation of readers for placing within reach some of the best examples of Georgian fiction in so attractive a form as this series has. The print is excellent, the illustrations are faithfully reproduced, and the format is not to be surpassed even by more expensive editions. This series ought to have a warm welcome wherever the English tongue is spoken."

BOOKS WRITTEN OR EDITED

BY

BERTRAM DOBELL.

Price 3s. net; or on hand-made paper, 7s. 6d. net.

ROSEMARY AND PANSIES

(Poems).

"Mr. Dobell is one of those booklovers who has never buried his original gifts under his stores of reading, and his poetic thought and feeling, which are of no mean order, are invariably clothed in an apt and tasteful form."

Pall Mall Gazette.

Price 5s. net; or on hand-made paper, 12s. net.

SIDELIGHTS ON CHARLES LAMB.

"We think Mr. Dobell's book will rank in standard 'Elia' as the most important contribution since the appearance of Mr. Babson's volume forty years ago."

Pall Mall Gazette.

Price 12s. net.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF THOMAS TRAHERNE.

Now first Published from the Original Manuscripts.

"Let all lovers of good poetry rejoice with Mr. Dobell, for he has rescued a poet out of the dust and advanced him to a deserved seat beside two such men as Herbert and Vaughan."—Mr. QUILLER-ROUCH in the Daily News.

2 vols. post 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF JAMES THOMSON ("B.V.")

With a Memoir of the Author and 2 Portraits.

16mo, cloth, 3s. 6d.; or in parchment binding, 5s.

THE CITY OF DREADFUL NIGHT.

And other Poems (Selected).

By JAMES THOMSON.

Square 16mo, buckram, 2s. 6d. net.

A PROSPECT OF SOCIETY.

By OLIVER GOLDSMITH.

Reprinted from the unique Original, with Introduction and Notes.

London:

BERTRAM DOBELL, 77, Charing Cross Road.

NATIONAL PROVIDENT INSTITUTION

Etab.]

FOR MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.

[1835.

|                          |     |     |             |
|--------------------------|-----|-----|-------------|
| Accumulated Fund over    | ... | ... | £8,000,000  |
| Paid in Claims more than | ... | ... | £12,400,000 |

PROFITS.

These are divided every five years solely amongst the Assured. At the 1902 Division a Cash Profit of £761,602 was apportioned amongst the members, being considerably more than one-third of the amount paid in premiums during the previous five years.

ENDOWMENT-ASSURANCE

Policies are issued, combining Life Assurance at minimum cost with provision for old age, and are singularly advantageous.

L. F. HOVIL,

Actuary and Secretary.

48, Gracechurch Street, London, E.C.

Applications for Agencies invited.

ACCIDENTS OF ALL KINDS,

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY,

ACCIDENT AND DISEASE

(SMALL POX, SCARLET FEVER, TYPHOID, DIPHTHERIA, APPENDICITIS, &amp;c.)

BURGLARY AND FIDELITY INSURANCE.

RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE CO.

Established 1849

CLAIMS PAID £4,800,000

54, CORNHILL, LONDON.

A. VIAN, Secretary.

NOW READY, price 10s. 6d. net.

THE NINTH SERIES
GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.AUTHORIZED TO BE USED BY BRITISH SUBJECTS.

THE NATIONAL FLAG,

BEING

THE UNION JACK.

COPIES OF

NOTES AND QUERIES

FOR JUNE 30, 1900,

Can still be had, containing an account of the Flag, with Coloured Illustration according to scale.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

THE AGE of MARIE ANTOINETTE. A Sketch of the Period of European Revival, which claims among its representatives Goethe, Prudhon, Gainsborough, and Mozart. By CHARLES NEWTON SCOTT. New and Revised Edition. [Three-and-Sixpence.

London: The Leadenhall Press, Ltd., 53, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA. The best remedy for ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, GOUT, AND INDIGESTION. And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions, Ladies, Children, and Infants. DINNEFORD'S MAGNESIA

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

C E L E S T I A L M O T I O N S :

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition, With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES :

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

TWELFTH EDITION JUST OUT, price Sixpence, cloth.

REMARKABLE COMETS :

A Brief Survey of the most interesting Facts in the History of Cometary Astronomy.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

THIRD EDITION, Revised to 1904, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

ASTRONOMY FOR THE YOUNG.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

N O T E S     A N D     Q U E R I E S .

THIS WEEK'S NUMBER CONTAINS—

NOTES:—"Private History of the Court of England"—"England," "English": their Pronunciation—Patrick Gordon—Peter Gordon—Mary, Queen of Scots: Letter of 1562—United States of America: their Dates—Surrey Marriage Licences—Cholsey, Berks—Thomas Amory—English Literature in the Far East—"Though lost to sight," &c.—"Huguenot."

QUERIES:—King Edward VII.—Fanshawe Family—Marchesa Spinola—William Hutchinson—W. V. Richardson and the Russian Church—Apothecaries' Act of 1815—John Crowe—Scottish Proclamation—"He sat beside the lowly door"—"The heart has many a dwelling-place"—Addition to Christian Name—Irish Soil Exported—Goethe and Book-keeping—Nicholas, Bishop of Coventry—Miller of Hide Hall—Theatre in Rawstorne Street, Clerkenwell—Navy Office Seal—Ancient London Houses—James II. Medal—Sir T. Crompton—Kenmure Peerage—Maiden Lane, Malden—Southwold Church—Rev. E. W. Griusfield.

REPLIES:—The Pawnbroker's Sign—Small Parishes—Pancake Day—"Pompelmous"—Langley Meynell: Sir Robert Francis—Masons' Marks—Tickling Trout—Date of the Creation—American Place-names—"February fill dyke"—All Fools' Day—Anchorites' Dens—House of Anjou—"The Lass of Richmond Hill"—The Egyptian Hall—"My Cousin's Tale of a Cock and Bull"—Portraits which led to Marriages—Weathercock—Saxton Family—Ainsty—Warlow, German Place-name—Con- Contraction—"Ravison"—Authors of Quotations Wanted—Borrow's "Turkish Jester"—Verschoyle: Folden—Cosas de España—Cromer Street—Names of Letters—Louis XIV.'s Heart—"Ledig": "Leisure"—Bigg, the Dinton Hermit—Cureton's Multanis—Sir Harry Bath: Shotover—Local Government Records—Mrs. Humby, Actress—Shorter: Walpole—Bibliographical Notes on Dickens and Thackeray—Bridger's Hill—Pillion: Flails.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—"Coryat's Crudities"—Bleackley's "Distinguished Victims of the Scaffold"—"New Universal Library"—"Worcestershire Place-names"—"Charities of Braintree"—Trench on Words.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.
And of all Newsagents.

GEORGE A. MORTON'S
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

RACIAL SUPREMACY. Being Studies in Imperialism. By JOHN GEORGE GODARD, Author of 'Patriotism and Ethics,' 'Poverty: Its Genesis and Exodus,' &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book teems with interesting data and apt quotation; it is fearless in expression without suffering from dogmatism, and clear-cut in view without courting the charge of superficiality. It is even more than all this: it is timely. Books to make men, and in particular politicians, think are rare indeed; hence Mr. Godard's contribution is doubly welcome." Echo.

"The author is a powerful writer and a vigorous thinker, and has all the courage of his convictions. We are bound to admit the ability and skill with which his arguments are arranged."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Godard has the ability of saying the most forcible things without violence; he is enthusiastic without excitement, denunciatory without vehemence. It is just such expositions that the higher Liberalism needs."—New Age.

EMPIRICAL ESSAYS. By the Author of 'Unthinkables.' Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"Each essay is a masterly work, opening up fields of discussion far beyond the suggestion of the title. Unlike works of a similar character, there is a freedom of thought such as can only be expected from a master mind.... The most striking, probably, is that on 'The Higher Agnosticism.'"—Oxford Review.

"The author is detached from the orthodox position, and holds that reincarnation is one of the keys to the problems of life. He has a vigorous and interesting way of expressing his views."—Literary World.

"'The Higher Agnosticism' is a useful plea for breadth of view and receptivity. This last contains a lively defence of spiritual phenomena, especially as the subject has 'recently been made respectable by Mr. Frederic Myers.'" Light.

SCOTTISH PEWTER-WARE and PEWTERERS. By L. INGLEBY WOOD. Crown 4to, with 36 Page Plates. Tastefully bound in art cloth, 15s. net.

"A mine of information which no collector of pewter can afford to be without."—Studio.

"Well written, well edited, crammed with facts, and profusely illustrated."—Collectors' Illustrated.

FLOWERS and FRUIT for the HOME. Being Practical Papers on Horticulture for Amateurs and Gardeners. By I. L. RICHMOND, F.R.H.S., Garden Editor of the Queen. With 24 Full-Page Plates. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

"A most attractive volume for persons who take delight in garden work."—Scotsman.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

The REDDING STRAIK. By Robert AITKEN, Author of 'Windfalls.' [This day.

MARJORIE'S MISTAKE. By Bertha M. M. MINIKEN, Author of 'Through Life's Rough Way,' 'An English Wife,' 'Where the Ways Part,' &c. [Next week.

FOR LOVE and LOYALTY. A Tale of the '45. By PAUL SEATON. [In May.

OMBRA the MYSTERY. By FREDERICK GRAVES.

"A story of no ordinary interest and power and promise." Bookman.

A GENTLEMAN'S WIFE. By AUBREY LEE, Author of 'John Darkee,' &c.

"One of the most interesting stories published for a long time.... We can vouch for the interest of the plot and the charm of the writing."—Literary World.

"A strong story and an original. Aubrey Lee wanders from the common path of novels most advantageously." Bristol Times.

Edinburgh: GEO. A. MORTON, 42, George Street.
London: SIMPKIN & CO., LIMITED.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S STANDARD WORKS.

THE EVERSLEY SERIES.

Globe 8vo, cloth, 4s. net per Volume.

Matthew Arnold's Works.

POEMS. 3 vols.
ESSAYS in CRITICISM. First Series.
ESSAYS in CRITICISM. Second Series.
AMERICAN DISCOURSES.
LETTERS, 1848-1888. Collected and Arranged by G. W. E. RUSSELL. In 2 vols.

The Eversley Bible. Arranged in Paragraphs, with an Introduction by J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. In 8 vols.

Vol. I. GENESIS—NUMBERS. Vol. V. ISAIAH—LAMENTATIONS.
Vol. II. DEUTERONOMY—2 SAMUEL. Vol. VI. EZEKIEL—MALACHI.
Vol. III. 1 KINGS—ESTHER. Vol. VII. MATTHEW—JOHN.
Vol. IV. JOB—SONG OF SOLOMON. Vol. VIII. ACTS—REVELATION.
** The Text is that of the Authorized Version.

Essays by George Brimley. Third Edition.

Chaucer's Canterbury Tales. Edited by A. W. POLLARD. 2 vols.

Dean Church's Miscellaneous Writings. Collected Edition. 9 vols.

MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS.
DANTE, and other Essays.
ST. ANSELM. BACON. SPENSER.
The OXFORD MOVEMENT. Twelve Years, 1833-1845.
The BEGINNING of the MIDDLE AGES. (Included in this Series by permission of Messrs. Longmans & Co.)
OCCASIONAL PAPERS. Selected from the Guardian, the Times, and the Saturday Review, 1846-1890. 2 vols.

Life and Letters of Dean Church. Edited by his Daughter, MARY C. CHURCH.

Lectures and Essays by the late W. K. Clifford, F.R.S. Edited by the late Sir LESLIE STEPHEN and Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK. Third Edition. In 2 vols.

Emerson's Collected Works. 6 vols. With Introduction by JOHN MORLEY.

MISCELLANIES. | ESSAYS. | POEMS.
ENGLISH TRAITS and REPRESENTATIVE MEN.
The CONDUCT of LIFE, and SOCIETY and SOLITUDE.
LETTERS and SOCIAL AIMS.

Letters of Edward Fitzgerald. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT. 2 vols.

Letters of Edward Fitzgerald to Fanny Kemble, 1871-1883. Edited by W. A. WRIGHT.

More Letters of Edward Fitzgerald. Edited by W. ALDIS WRIGHT.

Pausanias, and other Greek Sketches. By J. G. FRAZER, D.C.L.

Goethe's Maxims and Reflections. Translated, with Introduction, by T. BAILEY SAUNDERS.

** The Scientific and Artistic Maxims were selected by Prof. Huxley and Lord Leighton respectively.

Thomas Gray's Collected Works in Prose and Verse. Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. 4 vols.

POEMS, JOURNALS, and ESSAYS.
LETTERS. 2 vols.
NOTES on ARISTOPHANES and PLATO.

J. R. Green's Works.

HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. 8 vols.
The MAKING of ENGLAND. 2 vols.
The CONQUEST of ENGLAND. 2 vols.
STRAY STUDIES from ENGLAND and ITALY.
STRAY STUDIES. Second Series.
OXFORD STUDIES. | HISTORICAL STUDIES.

Guesses at Truth. By Two BROTHERS.

Earthwork out of Tuscany. Being Impressions and Translations of MAURICE HEWLETT, Author of 'The Forest Lovers.' Third Edition, Revised.

R. H. Hutton's Collected Essays.

LITERARY ESSAYS.
ESSAYS on SOME of the MODERN GUIDES of ENGLISH THOUGHT in MATTERS of FAITH.
THEOLOGICAL ESSAYS.
CRITICISMS on CONTEMPORARY THOUGHT and THINKERS. 2 vols.
ASPECTS of RELIGIOUS and SCIENTIFIC THOUGHT. Edited by his Niece, ELIZABETH M. ROSCOE.

Poems of Thomas Hood. Edited, with Prefatory Memoir, by the late Canon AINGER. In 2 vols.

Vol. I. SERIOUS POEMS. Vol. II. POEMS of WIT and HUMOUR. With Vignettes and Portraits.

The Life and Letters of Thomas Henry Huxley, F.R.S. By LEONARD HUXLEY. With Portraits and Illustrations. 3 vols.

Thomas Henry Huxley's Collected Works.

METHOD and RESULTS. DARWINIANA.
SCIENCE and EDUCATION.
SCIENCE and HEBREW TRADITION.
SCIENCE and CHRISTIAN TRADITION.
HUME. With Helps to the Study of Berkeley.
MAN'S PLACE in NATURE, and other Anthropological Essays.
DISCOURSES: BIOLOGICAL and GEOLOGICAL.
EVOLUTION and ETHICS, and other Essays.

The Choice of Books, and other Literary Pieces. By FREDERIC HARRISON.

French Poets and Novelists. By HENRY JAMES.

Partial Portraits. By HENRY JAMES.

Modern Greece. By Sir RICHARD C. JEBB.

Letters of John Keats to his Family and Friends. Edited by SIDNEY COLVIN.

Charles Kingsley's Novels and Poems.

WESTWARD HO! 2 vols. YEAST. 1 vol.
ALTON LOCKE. 2 vols. HYPATIA. 2 vols.
TWO YEARS AGO. 2 vols. POEMS. 2 vols.
HEREWARD the WAKE. 2 vols.

Charles Lamb's Collected Works. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by the late Rev. Canon AINGER, M.A. 6 vols.

The ESSAYS of ELIA.
POEMS, PLAYS, and MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS.
MRS. LEICESTER'S SCHOOL, and other Writings.
TALES from SHAKESPEARE. By CHARLES and MARY LAMB.
The LETTERS of CHARLES LAMB. Newly Arranged, with Additions, 1904. 2 vols.

Life of Charles Lamb. By the late Canon AINGER, M.A.

Historical Essays. By the late J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D. D.C.L. L.L.D.

The Poetical Works of John Milton. Edited, with Memoir, Introduction, and Notes by DAVID MASSON, M.A. LL.D. 3 vols.

John Morley's Collected Works. 12 vols.

VOLTAIRE. 1 vol. ROUSSEAU. 2 vols.
DIDEROT and the ENCYCLOPÆDISTS. 2 vols.
ON COMPROMISE. 1 vol. BURKE. 1 vol. OLIVER CROMWELL.
MISCELLANIES. 3 vols. STUDIES in LITERATURE. 1 vol.

Science and a Future Life, and other Essays. By F. W. H. MYERS, M.A.

Classical Essays. By F. W. H. MYERS.

Modern Essays. By F. W. H. MYERS.

Records of Tennyson, Ruskin, and Browning. By ANNE THACKERAY RITCHIE.

Works by Sir John R. Seeley, Litt.D. K.C.M.G.

The EXPANSION of ENGLAND. Two Courses of Lectures.
LECTURES and ESSAYS.
ECCE HOMO. NATURAL RELIGION.
INTRODUCTION to POLITICAL SCIENCE. Two Series of Lectures.

The Works of Shakespeare. With short Introduction and Footnotes by Prof. C. H. HERFORD. In 10 vols.

** The Plays may also be had in Separate Volumes, cloth, 1s. each; roan, gilt tops, 2s. each.

Works by James Smetham.

LETTERS. With an Introductory Memoir. Edited by SARAH SMETHAM and WILLIAM DAVIES. With a Portrait.
LITERARY WORKS. Edited by WILLIAM DAVIES.

Life of Swift. By Sir HENRY CRAIK, K.C.B. 2 vols.

Selections from the Writings of Thoreau.

Essays in the History of Religious Thought in the West. By the late BROOKE FOSS WESTCOTT, D.D.

The Works of Wordsworth. Edited by Prof. KNIGHT. In 12 vols. Each Volume contains a Portrait and Vignette Etched by H. MANESSE.

POETICAL WORKS. 8 vols. PROSE WORKS. 2 vols.
JOURNALS of DOROTHY WORDSWORTH. 2 vols.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4045.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

The ANNIVERSARY MEETING of the SOCIETY for the Election of President and Council, &c., will be held in the THEATRE, BURLINGTON GARDENS, on MONDAY, May 22, at 3 p.m., the President in the Chair.

In place of the Annual Dinner of the Society, a BANQUET in honour of the retiring President, Sir CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, K.C.B., will be held on the EVENING of the ANNIVERSARY MEETING, MAY 22, at the HOTEL METROPOLE, Whitehall Rooms, Whitehall Place, at 7 p.m. for 7.30. Dinner charge 12.1s. Friends of Fellows are admissible to the Dinner as far as space will permit. Applications for Tickets should be made to the CHIEF CLERK, I, Savile Row, Burlington Gardens, W.

LEONARD DARWIN } Hon.
J. F. HUGHES } Secretaries.

I, Savile Row, Burlington Gardens, W.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.

ANNIVERSARY DINNER, THURSDAY, May 18, 1905.

Rev. Dr. BUTLER, Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, in the Chair.

The object of the Fund is to assist Authors in Distress. Among those who have been compelled to seek assistance from the Fund are many distinguished Authors, whose fame is the proudest inheritance of their countrymen, and the simple mention of whose names would bear startling testimony to the value of the Society. But suppression of names, and of circumstances which might indicate names, is obviously essential, and it is not easy, therefore, to bring home to the Public the value of the work done by the Fund.

Annual Subscriptions or Donations will be thankfully acknowledged. Applications for Dinner Tickets should reach the Secretary not later than MAY 8.

The List of Stewards will be published in the Times on Monday, May 15. A. LLEWELYN ROBERTS, Secretary.
7, Adelphi Terrace, W.C.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY hopes to give some READINGS from the ENGLISH POETS in MAY and JUNE. She gives Lectures, Readings, and Lessons as usual; Examines; and helps Students by Letter and in her Reading Society.—143, King Henry's Road, London, N.W.

REMBRANDT, MERYON, WHISTLER, LEGRAS, SEYMOUR HADEN, &c.—Exhibition of fine Prints now open at Mr. R. GUERKUNST'S, 16, King Street, St. James's, S.W., 10 to 6. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL.—SHEPHERD'S SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School.—SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

PICTURES WAREHOUSED in a fine, light, dry Warehouse.—Apply to THOMAS McLEAN, 7, Haymarket, London. Terms moderate.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT and PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1839.

Funds exceed 25,000L.

Office: Memorial Hall Buildings, 16, Farringdon Street, London, E.C.

Patron:

The Right Hon. the EARL of ROSEBURY, K.G. K.T.

President:

The LORD GLENESK.

Treasurer:

The LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK, LIMITED.

A Donation of Ten Guineas constitutes a Vice-President and gives three votes for life at all elections. Each Donation of Three Guineas gives a vote at all elections for life. Every Annual Subscriber is entitled to one vote at all elections in respect of each Five Shillings so paid.

MEMBERSHIP.—Every Man and Woman throughout the United Kingdom, whether Publisher, Wholesaler, Retailer, Employer, or Employed, is entitled to become a Member of this Institution, and enjoy its benefits upon payment of Five Shillings annually, or Three Guineas for life, provided that he or she is engaged in the sale of Newspapers, and such members who thus contribute secure priority of consideration in the event of their needing aid from the Institution.

PENSIONS.—The Annuitants now number Thirty-six, the men receiving 25L and the Women 20L per annum each, and they include:—The "Royal Victoria Pension Fund," which was established in 1887 and enlarged in 1897, 1901, and 1902, perpetually commemorates the great advantages the News Trade enjoyed under the rule of Her late Majesty Queen Victoria, provides Pensions of 20L a year each for Six Widows of Newsvendors.

The "Francis Fund" provides Pensions for One Man, 25L, and One Woman, 20L, and was specially subscribed in memory of the late John Francis, who died on April 6, 1882, and was for more than fifty years Publisher of the Athenæum. He took an active and leading part throughout the whole period of the agitation for the repeal of the various then existing "Taxes on Knowledge," and was for very many years a staunch supporter of this Institution.

The "Horace Marshall Pension Fund" is the gift of the late Mr. Horace Brooks Marshall. The employees of that firm have primary right of election to its benefits, but this privilege not having been exercised until 1904, the General Pensions of the Institution have had the full benefit arising from the interest on this investment from 1887 to 1903.

The "Herbert Lloyd Pension Fund" provides 25L per annum for one man; and was established in 1903 in perpetual and grateful memory of Mr. Herbert Lloyd, who was a generous benefactor of this Institution, and who died May 12, 1899.

The "Hospital Pensions" consist of an annual contribution, whereby Sir Henry Charles Burdett and his co-directors generously enable the Committee to grant 20L for One Year to a Man, under conditions laid down in Rule 8c. W. WILKIE JONES, Secretary.

EDUCATION.

Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTOR in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GAIBITAS, THIRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.

Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

THE BOOKSELLERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Founded 1837.

Patron—HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

Invested Capital 30,000L.

A UNIQUE INVESTMENT

Offered to London Booksellers and their Assistants.

A young man or woman of twenty-five can invest the sum of Twenty Guineas (or its equivalent by instalments), and obtain the right to participate in the following advantages:—

FIRST. Freedom from want in time of Adversity as long as need exists.

SECOND. Permanent Relief in Old Age.

THIRD. Medical advice by eminent Physicians and Surgeons.

FOURTH. A Cottage in the Country (Abbotts Langley, Hertfordshire) for aged Members, with garden produce, coal, and medical attendance free, in addition to an annuity.

FIFTH. A furnished house in the same Retreat at Abbotts Langley for the free use of Members and their families for holidays or during convalescence.

SIXTH. A contribution towards Funeral expenses when it is needed.

SEVENTH. All these are available not for Members only, but also for their wives or widows and young children.

EIGHTH. The payment of the subscriptions confers an absolute right to these benefits in all cases of need.

For further information apply to the Secretary, Mr. GEORGE LARNER, 28, Paternoster Row E.C.

THE VICTORIA

UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.

GARTSIDE SCHOLARSHIPS OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRIES.

THREE SCHOLARSHIPS may be awarded in JUNE.

Candidates must be of British nationality, and over the age of 18 and under the age of 23 at the date of election.

The Scholarships will be tenable for Two Years, and of the value of 80L the First Year (which must be spent at the University), and from 190L to 250L the Second Year (which must be spent in the study of subjects bearing on Commerce in the United States, Germany, or other Country or Countries approved by the Electors).

Candidates must send in their applications, together with Testimonials of good character and record of previous training, on or before JUNE 1, to the REGISTRAR, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

UNIVERSITY of BIRMINGHAM.

SCHOLARSHIPS IN THE SCHOOL OF MODERN LANGUAGES.

TWO HARDING SCHOLARSHIPS in GERMAN, of the annual value of 50L each, tenable for Three Years, are offered to Students entering the School of Modern Languages next Session. At the close of the Third Year TRAVELLING SCHOLARSHIPS of 100L each, tenable at a German University for One Year, may be awarded to these Scholars, provided that they have taken the M.A. Degree in the School of Modern Languages.

Candidates may be admitted to the School of Modern Languages after passing the Intermediate Examination (which may be taken at entrance to the University in lieu of the Matriculation Examination), the following subjects being taken:—(i.) French; (ii.) German; (iii.) Latin; (iv.) English Language, Literature, and History; (v.) either Mathematics or Logic.

After completing a Three Years' Course of study, and passing Three Examinations, Students of the School will be admitted to the Degree of "Master of Arts in the School of Modern Languages."

The Course for the Degree of Master of Arts in the School of Modern Languages embraces the following subjects of study:—

(i.) French or German, taken as a principal subject.
(ii.) German or French or English, taken as a subsidiary subject.
(iii.) An additional subject during the First Two Years of the Course, viz., either English or Latin.

ENTRANCE EXAMINATIONS to the School of Modern Languages will commence on MONDAY, June 19, 1905, and SEPTEMBER 18, 1905. Applications for admission to the September Examination must be received by the REGISTRAR on or before AUGUST 30.

There is a Hall of Residence for Women. Minimum fee, Thirty-three Guineas per Session.

Men Students can be received at the Hostel connected with Queen's College. Terms: 15L per Term for Two Rooms and Board.

For further information apply to the Dean of the Faculty of Arts, Prof. H. G. FIEDLER, at the University.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN

(University of London),

YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, LONDON, W.

ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.

A REID SCHOLARSHIP in ARTS, annual value 31L 10s. First Year, 28L 7s. Second and Third Years, and an ARNOTT SCHOLARSHIP in SCIENCE, annual value 48L, both tenable for Three Years, will be awarded on the results of the EXAMINATION to be held at the COLLEGE on JUNE 28 and 29.

For further information apply to the PRINCIPAL.

BANGOR NORMAL COLLEGE

for the Training of Schoolmasters for Elementary Schools in Wales.

(Conducted on the principles of the British and Foreign School Society.)

APPOINTMENT OF PRINCIPAL.

The COMMITTEE of MANAGEMENT will shortly proceed to appoint a PRINCIPAL to the above Institution. Candidates must be University Graduates, and must be qualified to take part in the professional training of the Students. They are also requested to state what other subjects included in a Training College Curriculum they would be prepared to teach.

Salary 350L per annum, rising by increments of 25L every two years until it reaches 500L.

Applications, with fifty copies of not more than five recent Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 7, 1905, to the Secretary, to whom also all inquiries for further information should be addressed. Canvassing among the Members of the Committee will be regarded as a disqualification.

Rev. DANIEL ROWLANDS, M.A., Secretary.
Normal College, Bangor.

DEUTSCHLAND: ROSTOCK, MECKLENBURG.

—Junge, gebildete ENGLÄNDERINNEN finden herzliche Aufnahme in sehr gut empfohlenen Häusern. Gründlicher deutscher Unterricht. Angenehmes Familienleben. Gelegenheit zur Fortbildung in Musik und Malen. Pensionspreis 60L p.a.—Näheres b. FRIEDR. KUNZE, 22, Park Crescent, Oxford, oder FRIEDR. STINSHOF, Rostock, Prinz-Fr. Carlstr. 3.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

FRANCE.—The ATHENÆUM can be obtained at the following Railway Stations in France:—

AMIENS, ANTIBES, BEAULIEU-SUR-MER, BIARRITZ, BORDEAUX, BOULOGNE, CALAIS, CANNES, DIJON, DUNKIRK, GENEVA, GOLFEJUAN, HAYRE, HYÈRES, JUAN-LES-PINS, LILLE, LYONS, MARSEILLES, MENTONE, MONACO, MONTE CARLO, NANTES, NICE, PARIS (Est, Nord, Lyon), PAU, ROUEN, SAINT RAPHAEL, TOULON, TOURS.

PARIS: W. H. SMITH & SON, 24S, Rue de Rivoli; and at the GALIGNANI LIBRARY, 224, Rue de Rivoli.

AUSTRALASIAN ANTHOLOGY

The undersigned is completing preparation of a new Anthology of Australasian Verse, presently to be published in Sydney and London. He will be sincerely grateful to Correspondents who will direct attention to Verses worthy of inclusion that may have escaped his notice. Books or Parcels may be sent to Messrs. EDWARDS, DUNLOP & CO., Bream's Buildings, E.C., for enclosure. A. G. STEPHENS.
P.O., George Street North, Sydney.

LYTHAM, LANCASHIRE.

KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL.

The GOVERNORS of the LYTHAM SCHOOL CHARITIES being about to obtain Plans for the building, between Lytham and St. Anne's-on-the-Sea, of a PUBLIC SECONDARY SCHOOL, with accommodation for Two Hundred Boys as Day Scholars, and planned with a view to extension when required, invite applications for the immediate appointment of a HEAD MASTER for the SCHOOL.

The Scheme enables the Governors to pay the Head Master a minimum sum of 400L per annum, which sum they will be prepared to increase by means of further capitation payments as circumstances justify. The Master will also have a Residence provided for him.

From the time of appointment to the opening of the School (when the Head Master will take up his duties and the stipend commence) the Governors will require him to give advice and assistance from time to time as to the general arrangement of School Buildings and Grounds, for which a retaining fee of 100L and reasonable expenses will be paid.

A Candidate must be under the age of 45, a Graduate of a University in the United Kingdom or the British Possessions, and his name must appear in Column B of the Register of Teachers kept under the Order in Council of March 6, 1902.

Written Applications, stating qualifications, and accompanied by not more than three Testimonials, to be addressed to Wilson, Walton & Wilson, Solicitors, 6, Chapel Street, Preston, so as to be received not later than MAY 20, 1905.

CITY of LONDON SCHOOL.

The Act of Parliament for establishing this School having appointed certain Professors of King's College and University College, London, to select and return to the Corporation of London the Three Candidates best qualified for the Office of FIRST or HEAD MASTER, Gentlemen who intend offering themselves as Candidates are requested to transmit not less than Twelve printed copies of their Testimonials, with the Originals, not later than SATURDAY, May 20, addressed to the SECRETARY, at the School, Victoria Embankment, E.C., where further particulars may be obtained between the hours of 9.30 and 4.

The commencing Salary will be 1,000L a year.

The Professors will meet at the School for the Examination of the Testimonials on SATURDAY, May 27 next.

April 14, 1905.

THE UNIVERSITY of LIVERPOOL.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

The COUNCIL of the UNIVERSITY will, during the PRESENT TERM, appoint a LADY as LECTURER in EDUCATION in the UNIVERSITY in succession to Miss Graveson. The Department of Education of the University includes Students training both for Secondary and Primary Teaching. The Stipend will be not less than 300L per annum.—Further particulars will be available on application to the REGISTRAR on or after MAY 12. Testimonials will be required not later than JUNE 1.

WHITGIFT SCHOOL, CROYDON.

Applications are invited for a MATHEMATICAL MASTERSHIP vacant in SEPTEMBER. A University First-class Man is looked for, able to take Scholarship Work in Mathematics, and some Practical Science. Commencing Salary 250L. There is a Pension Scheme. No Original Testimonials or matter requiring to be returned should be sent in.

Apply immediately to the HEAD MASTER.

UNIVERSITY of BIRMINGHAM.

ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP IN HISTORY

The COUNCIL invite applications for the above appointment. Stipend 150L per annum. The duties will commence on OCTOBER 2. Applications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned not later than SATURDAY, May 20.

Inquiries may be addressed either to Prof. MASTERSMAN, Queen's College, Birmingham, or to the undersigned, GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

CITY and COUNTY BOROUGH of CHESTER.

FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

A LIBRARIAN WANTED. Salary 100L per annum, rising by annual increments of 10L to 150L per annum if services satisfactory. Applications, in Candidates' own handwriting, stating age (not under 25 nor more than 40) and qualifications, with three Testimonials, to be addressed to me at the Town Hall, on or before MAY 15.

Experience in a Public Library indispensable. The Librarian will be required to devote the whole of his time to the duties of the Office.

Personal applications must not be made to Members of the Free Library Committee or the Town Council.

By Order,

J. H. DICKSON, Town Clerk.
Town Hall, Chester, April 26, 1905.

LEADER WRITER.—WANTED, thoroughly practical JOURNALIST to contribute TWO or THREE COLUMNS of EDITORIAL MATTER WEEKLY to a Daily Journal in the East.—Address, enclosing Specimens, and stating age and experience, to Box 2956, Sell's Advertising Offices, London, E.C.

A GENTLEMAN of cultured manners, keen perception, and energy would be appreciated by the PUBLISHERS of a high-class WEEKLY in the capacity of ADVERTISER-CANVASSER. He should be thoroughly conversant with subjects pertaining to Literature, Science, and Art.—Apply Box 1003, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

IN consequence of the death of the Senior in the Leading Firm of Auctioneers and Valuers in Liverpool and District there is an OPENING for a PARTNER. Only Gentlemen of assured position need communicate.—Apply, in the first instance, to Messrs. GROVES, JOHN & Co., 4, Water Street, Liverpool.

ASSISTANT EDITORSHIP WANTED, in LONDON or the PROVINCES, by a UNIVERSITY MAN. Has had great experience as Editor and Leader Writer. Special knowledge of Far East.—Address Box 963, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

ADVERTISER desires post as LITERARY ADVISER to PUBLISHING FIRM. University Classical Honours Man.—Address A. H. S., Box 962, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

SECRETARYSHIP WANTED to Literary Man, Society, M.P. Club, &c., or LITERARY APPOINTMENT by a GENTLEMAN educated Eton and Sandhurst, sixteen years in Army, Adjutant of his Regiment, age 41.—Address Capt. A. T., Box 1004, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

M.A. highest Honours in English and French (acquired Abroad), German, Classics, Anglo-Saxon, Author of several Educational Works, experienced Writer and Lecturer, some experience of Commerce, highest references, desires EMPLOYMENT in PUBLISHING HOUSE, or as EDUCATIONAL TRAVELLER. Address Box 1002, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

PUBLISHER'S (London and Suburban) REPRESENTATIVE, young, seeks RE-ENGAGEMENT. Well known to the Trade. Highest references.—Box 1005, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LADY PROOF READER, of some experience, wants SITUATION. In London preferred.—Apply, personally or by letter, J. E. F., Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials.—A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK and INDEXING—Apply Miss FREDERIDGE (Nat. Sci. Tripos), 52a, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation.—The CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVELOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 9d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed.—M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

TYPE-WRITING.—MSS., SCIENTIFIC, and of all Descriptions, COPIED. Special attention to work requiring care. Dictation Rooms (Shorthand or Type-writing). Usual Terms.—Misses E. B. and I. FARRAN, Donington House, 30, Norfolk Street, Strand, London.

TYPE-WRITING.—AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, &c., carefully executed, 8d. per 1,000 words, paper included.—Miss A. MASSIE, Strathairly, Southfleet Avenue, Longfield, Kent.

MSS. TYPE-WRITTEN with care and accuracy at 9d. per 1,000 words (postage and paper inclusive). Good Testimonials.—Address Miss JACOBS, York Villa, Maybank Road, South Woodford, Essex.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy, 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers.—M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Barrow.

LITERARY AGENCY.—INDEXING. Translations (French, German, Latin). Authors' MSS. carefully Revised and Proofed. Terms moderate. Type-Writing 8d. per 1,000 words. References.—Miss A. HORSFIELD, 45, Church Street, Barnsley, Yorks.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BRADSHAW, 34, Paternoster Row.

MR. GEORGE LARNER, Accountant and Licensed Valuer to the Bookselling, Publishing, Newspaper, Printing, and Stationery Trades. Partnerships Arranged. Balance Sheets and Trading Accounts Prepared and Audited. All Business carried out under Mr. Larner's personal supervision.—28, 29, and 30, Paternoster Row, E.C., Secretary to the Booksellers' Provident Institution.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED. And supplied with every requisite. Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.' The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C. America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application. Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

Catalogues.

FREDERICK MULLER &amp; CO.,

Amsterdam, Doelenstraat 10,

Have just published a

NEW CATALOGUE OF BOOKS

ON

GEOGRAPHY, TRAVELS,

DISCOVERIES, COLONIZATION,

NAVIGATION, ETHNOGRAPHY

(America, Asia, Africa, Australasia).

The Priced Catalogue (3,500 Items) is sent free on application.

WHISTLER, SEYMOUR HADEN, LEGROS,

MERYON, and other ETCHINGS.

TURNER'S LIBER STUDIORUM PLATES.

LUCAS'S MEZZOTINTS after CONSTABLE.

ON SALE AT

E. PARSONS &amp; SONS',

45, BROMPTON ROAD, LONDON, S.W. (opposite Tattersall's).

Interesting CATALOGUE of above sent post free on receipt of 3d. in stamps.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,

No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'THE RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,' by Dr. G. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NORGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS, and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. SI—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s JUST ISSUED.

Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. &amp; J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

W. GLAISHER'S

NEW GENERAL CATALOGUE OF REMAINDERS

(Spring, 1905)

IS NOW READY, and can be had on application.

It contains many important BOOKS, offered at a GREAT REDUCTION

IN PRICE by

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Wholesale and Export Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE

LIBRARIES.—The MAY CATALOGUE of valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, is now ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

BERTRAM DOBELL, SECOND-HAND BOOKSELLER, and PUBLISHER, 77, Charing Cross Road, London, W.C.

A large Stock of Old and Rare Books in English Literature, including Poetry and the Drama—Shakespeareana—First Editions of Famous Authors—Manuscripts—Illustrated Books, &c. CATALOGUES free on application.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. II contains Fourteenth Century Breviary—Illuminated, Classical, Historical MSS., &c.

GALLOWAY &amp; PORTER, Booksellers,

CAMBRIDGE.

Books not in stock reported in Fourteen Days. Plate wants in Classics, Economics, Law, History, Mathematics, Natural Science, Medicine, Theology, and General Literature.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler and Samuel Palmer—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—Wm. WARD, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

B. H. BLACKWELL,

50 and 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CATALOGUE of CRITICAL EDITIONS of LATIN CLASSICAL AUTHORS and Standard Works dealing with Greek and Roman History, Literature, and Art.

IN THE PRESS.

CATALOGUE of MISCELLANEOUS SECOND-HAND BOOKS, chiefly ENGLISH, including SELECTIONS from the LIBRARIES of the late Rev. ALBERT WATSON, M.A., formerly Principal of B.N.C., the late Prof. FREEMAN, the late R. S. WILSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of B.N.C., and from other Libraries recently purchased by the Advertiser.

READY SHORTLY.

CATALOGUE of the THIRD (and LAST) PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late Prof. F. YORK POWELL, including Greek and Latin Classical Writers and Mediaeval Authors, Ecclesiastical History, Antiquarian Works, Law, Philosophy, and Miscellaneous Items.

OSCAR WILDE'S POEMS in PROSE, now first published, 5s.

DORIAN GREY, Sole Authorized Edition, 10s. 6d. WHISTLER'S BARONET and the BUTTERFLY, Original Paris Edition, 5s.

J. JACON, 149, Edgware Road, W.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCORBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. BISCORBE GARDNER, Hoathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

THE LICHFIELD BEAUTY (Miss ANNE

SEWARD), painted by RONNEY, 1782, FOR SALE. To be seen by appointment.—JAMES GRIFFITHS, 127, Powell Street, Heath Town, Wolverhampton.

MARLBOROUGH.—TO BE SOLD, WITH

POSSESSION.—AXHOLME, on the London and Bath Road, within a mile of Marlborough College, with fine Views of the magnificently timbered Slopes of Savernake Forest, a DETACHED FREEHOLD RESIDENCE, with Six Bedrooms, Dressing Room, Three good Reception Rooms, and Domestic Offices. Stable, Lodge, Gardener's Cottage, and other Out-buildings. Well-timbered Grounds, nearly Four Acres, bounded and intersected by the River Kennet.—Solicitors, Messrs. KAYS & JONES, 37, Norfolk Street, W.C. Particulars of Mr. MARK JEANS, Marlborough.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—WINTER APART-

MENTS.—Comfortably Furnished Sitting-Room and One Bedroom. Pleasant and central. No others taken.—R. H., 66, Grove Hill Road, Tunbridge Wells.

ATHENÆUM PRESS.—JOHN EDWARD

FRANCIS, Printer of the Athenæum, Notes and Queries, &c., is prepared to SUBMIT ESTIMATES for all kinds of BOOK, NEWS, and PERIODICAL PRINTING.—13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

Sales by Auction.

The choice Collection of Curios formed by the late Dr. DRESSER.

MR. J. C. STEVENS has received instructions to OFFER for SALE on TUESDAY, May 9, at half-past 12 o'clock, the most interesting and miscellaneous COLLECTION of CURIOS formed by the late Dr. DRESSER, consisting of Metal Work—Lacquer—Bamboo—Enamels—Carved Stone from Japan and China—Persian and Indian Glass, Earthenware, and Tiles—Pottery from the South of France, Jamaica, Siberia, and other parts—Romanian Woodwork—and a great variety of Curios from Africa, British Guiana, Madagascar, Egypt, and other Countries.

On view day prior 10 to 4 and morning of Sale. Catalogues may be had on application to Mr. J. C. STEVENS, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C.

Photographic Cameras and Lenses, Scientific Instruments, &c. FRIDAY, May 12, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., PHOTOGRAPHIC CAMERAS and LENSES and all kinds of Accessories by all Best Makers—Scientific Instruments—Field and Astronomical Telescopes—Prismatic Binoculars and others—Field Glasses—Foot Lathes by Milner, with Cutters, Chucks, &c.—Tools—and a large quantity of Miscellaneous Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Important Collection of Lepidoptera.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, May 16 and 17,

at 1 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., the SECOND PORTION of the unrivalled COLLECTION of BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA formed by the late PHILIP R. MASON, Esq., M.R.C.S. F.C.S. F.Z.S. F.E.C., &c., of Trent House, Burton-on-Trent, comprising long and superb Series of most of the Rare and Extinct Species, fine varieties and local forms in the best state of preservation; also many valuable and historic Specimens and Types from the Haworth and other Collections, together with the first-rate Standish and other Cabinets in which they are arranged.

On view the Monday prior and mornings of Sale. Catalogues, ready a week prior to Sale, post free on application.

Coins and Medals, including the Collection of the Right Hon. the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 8, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of COINS and MEDALS, the Property of the Right Hon. the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O., comprising Coins in Gold and Silver of Edward III., Henry VI., Henry VII., Henry VIII., Edward VI., Elizabeth I., James I., Charles I., Oliver Cromwell, Charles II., William and Mary, William III., George I.—Medals in Gold of Charles II., Anne, George I., George II., Queen Caroline, &c.—and a Series of Foreign Coins in Gold, Silver, and Bronze; a small COLLECTION of GREEK, ROMAN, and other COINS, the Property of a FOLLOW of the SOCIETY of ANTIQUARIES; the COLLECTION of H. W. SMITH, Esq., including a rare Noble of Edward III., and Coins in the Three Metals of various Reigns; also the small but choice COLLECTION of W. W. BLISS, Esq., comprising English Coins in Gold and Silver, in unusually fine condition, mostly acquired from well-known Cabinets.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Engravings of the late FREDERICK CLIFFORD, Esq., K.C.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 8, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS of the late FREDERICK CLIFFORD, Esq., K.C., including Engravings by A. Dürer, Rembrandt, Lucas van Leyden, Martin Schongauer, and other Old Masters—Fancy Subjects printed in Colours after Cipriani, A. Buck, H. Singleton, A. Kaulmann, H. Bunbury, and others—Mezzotints after Rembrandt and others, including a fine proof before letters of La Surprise by Samuel Cousins after Dubouffé—Mezzotint and other Portraits after Sir Joshua Reynolds, R. Coaway, Sir O. Kneller, Sir P. Lely, and others; also Naval and Military Prints by R. Havell, Sutherland, Grant, Bailey, &c., some in Colours, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The Library of the late GEORGE SHAW, Esq., Small Heath, Birmingham.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 9, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of the late GEORGE SHAW, Esq., of Small Heath, Birmingham, comprising Standard Works on Science and General Literature—Publications of Learned Societies—Italian Fine-Art Books—Goupi's Illustrated Monographs—Illustrated Publications and Books of Scenery—Old and Rare Books, English and Foreign—Set of Shakespeare Quartos in Facsimile—First Editions of Modern Authors—Books issued from Private Presses—Works illustrated by Cruikshank and Rowlandson—Topographical and Architectural Works.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

The valuable Collection of Autograph Letters, the Property of Sir HENRY BUNBURY, Bart., and valuable Letters and Documents, the Property of CAPEL CURE, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, May 11, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS, comprising Specimens of Robert Burns, Lord Nelson, Lady Hamilton, Edmund Burke, Thackeray, Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Marie Antoinette, Henry IV. of France, Cardinal Borromeo, Frederick the Great, Napoleon I. and III., Gonzalvo de Cordova, Lorenzo de Medici, Dr. Johnson, Benjamin Disraeli—a most interesting Series of Autograph Letters of Mrs. Siddons—a Series of Letters of Mrs. Piozzi—a valuable Document, signed by Lord Burghley, 1586, relating to the Trial of Mary, Queen of Scots—the Original Autograph Manuscript of Sir Walter Scott's celebrated Song, "The Bonnets of Bonnie Dundee"—Letters in the Autograph of Bishop Berkeley, Lord Bolingbroke, Lord Byron, Lord Collingwood, Lord Cornwallis, Rev. George Crabbe, General Dumouriez, Charles James Fox, Benjamin Franklin, David Garrick, George IV., Oliver Goldsmith, Lord Holland, Mrs. Jordan, General Charles Lee, Sir Hudson Lowe, John Churchill, Duke of Marlborough, Sir John Moore, Alexander Pope, Matthew P. Ior, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Sir Richard Steele, Dean Swift, Voltaire, Horace Walpole Earl of Orford, Duke of Wellington, Benjamin West, William IV., Wordsworth, Rev. Ed. Young, &c.—a Series of Letters relating to the Affairs in the Mediterranean, 1806-14, written by celebrated Generals, bound in 2 vols. half-morocco—a Series of Letters relating to the War in Germany and France, 1813-14, and the War in Belgium, 1815, from Generals and others, 1 vol. half-morocco, &c.

Also a valuable and important SERIES of LETTERS of AMERICAN INTEREST.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Collection of Book-Plates, the Property of J. MARTIN, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on SATURDAY, May 13, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of fine and scarce BOOK-PLATES, the Property of the late J. MARTIN, Esq., and other Collectors.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A Collection of Engravings, the Property of the Right Honourable the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 15, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS, the Property of the Right Honourable the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O., made by Thomas Pennant, the antiquary, and his son, David Pennant, consisting principally of Mezzotint Portraits in fine condition by and after Earle, Faber, V. Green, Macardell, J. R. Smith, T. Watson, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Valuable Autograph Letters, the Property of a well-known Collector.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 17, at 1 o'clock precisely, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and DOCUMENTS, the Property of a well-known COLLECTOR, comprising Autograph Letters of Poets (Lots 1 to 81), including Hartley Coleridge, Sarah Coleridge, their Daughter Sarah, William Cowper, O. W. Holmes, Thomas Hood, Leigh Hunt, Charles Lamb, L. E. Landon, W. S. Landon, P. A. D. B. Metastasio, Thos. Moore, Alex. Pope, James Montgomery, William M. Rossetti, S. Rogers, Walter Scott, P. B. Shelley, R. Southey, A. C. Swinburne, Lord Alfred Tennyson, Dr. Isaac Watts, H. Kirke White, Wm. Wordsworth, and others—Admiral Lord Nelson, a fine Collection of 35 Letters, mostly Autograph Letters (Lots 82 to 116), the first dated from Nevis, November 14, 1785, and the last dated from the Victory, October 18, 1805, to Collingwood, three days before his death—the first of the last four or five Letters written by the great Admiral—Nelsoniana, consisting of a most interesting Collection of the great Admiral's Companions-in-Arms, Relations, Friends, and Adversaries (Lots 117 to 210), and many others—Civil Engineers associated with the Origin and Development of the Railways of the World, and others (Lots 211 to 226), including James Watt, John Smeaton, Thos. Telford, George Stephenson, Robert Stephenson, John Rennie, George Rennie, Thos. Brassey, Sir M. L. and I. K. Brunel, Locke, Watson, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A valuable Collection of Books by or relating to Shakespeare.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, May 25, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, a valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS by or relating to SHAKESPEARE, His Works, Times, and Influence on Subsequent Writers, including Early Editions of his Plays and of those of other Elizabethan Authors—rare Sixteenth, Seventeenth, and Eighteenth Century Books, which contain direct allusions to the Poet—many volumes of importance which are known to have been used by the Dramatist in the compilation of his Plays, and others which show parallel passages.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

SALES by AUCTION, &c., continued on p. 548.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

NOW READY, with 141 Illustrations and 5 Maps, demy 8vo, 18s. net.

A COMPANION TO GREEK STUDIES.

Edited by LEONARD WHIBLEY, M.A.,

Fellow of Pembroke College, University Lecturer in Ancient History.

The Contents include Chapters on Geography, Fauna and Flora; History; Literature, Philosophy and Science; Art, Mythology and Religion; Public Antiquities; Private Antiquities; Criticism and Interpretation. Contributed by H. F. Tozer, Canon Tristram, R. D. Hicks, Sir R. Jebb, Dr. Henry Jackson, Dr. Gow, Dr. F. C. Penrose, Prof. E. A. Gardner, Dr. Waldstein, F. R. Earp, A. H. Smith, Prof. Ridgeway, R. D. Archer-Hind, L. Whibley, W. Wyse, R. J. G. Mayor, H. J. Edwards, Prof. Oman, A. B. Cook, Miss Harrison, Dr. Wilkins, Dr. M. R. James, F. Warre Cornish, Lady Evans, Prof. Allbutt, R. A. Neil, P. Giles, E. S. Roberts, J. Rendel Harris, Dr. Verrall, Dr. Sandys.

A Prospectus will be sent on application.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Mr. Leonard Whibley has accomplished the impossible. He has brought out what is practically an Encyclopædia Græca in one volume..... Every section is dealt with by a specialist. Taken on the whole, the book is a splendid witness of the high standard of Greek studies at Cambridge."

JOURNAL of EDUCATION.—"A handbook that will be sure to find a place not only in libraries designed for the young, but also on the desk of the teacher and on the shelves of the scholar..... Into a single volume of 700 pages has been brought a great store of varied information, and that of a kind not contained in ordinary histories and grammars, about Greece, the Greeks, and their language."

HARVARD LECTURES on the REVIVAL of LEARNING. By

J. E. SANDYS, Litt.D., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Public Orator in the University of Cambridge, Hon. Litt.D. Dublin. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.]

The PRESERVATION of ANTIQUITIES: a Handbook for

Curators, Translated by permission of the authorities of the Royal Museums, from the German of Dr. FRIEDRICH RATHGEN, Director of the Laboratory of the Royal Museums, Berlin, by GEORGE A. AUDEN, M.A. M.D. Cantab., and HAROLD A. AUDEN, M.Sc. Vict., D.Sc. Tübingen. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net. [Nearly ready.]

The RELIGION of ISRAEL: a Historical Sketch. By R. L.

OTTLEY, M.A., Canon of Christ Church, and Hon. Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford. 4s. [Nearly ready.]

ARISTOPHANES.—The ACHARNIANS. Edited by C. E.

GRAVES, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College, Cambridge. 3s. ("Pitt Press Series.")

GALDOS.—TRAFALGAR. Edited, with Notes and Introduction, by F. A. KIRKPATRICK, M.A. 4s. ("Pitt Press Series"). [Nearly ready.]

(Subject for Cambridge Local Examinations, 1905.)

KUMMER'S QUARTIC SURFACE. By R. W. H. T. Hudson,

M.A. D.Sc., late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and Lecturer in Mathematics at the University of Liverpool. Demy 8vo, 8s. net. [Nearly ready.]

A TREATISE on PLAGUE: Dealing with the Historical,

Epidemiological, Clinical, Therapeutic, and Preventive Aspects of the Disease. By W. J. SIMPSON, M.D. Aberd., F.R.C.P. Lond., D.P.H. Camb., Professor of Hygiene, King's College, London; Lecturer on Tropical Hygiene, London School of Tropical Medicine; formerly Health Officer, Calcutta; Medical Adviser to the Government of Cape Colony during the Outbreak of Plague in 1901; Commissioner for the Colonial Office to Inquire into the Causes of the Continuance of the Plague in Hong-Kong. With Maps and Illustrations. Royal 8vo, 16s. net.

A HISTORY of EPIDEMICS in BRITAIN. By Charles

CREIGHTON, M.D. M.A. Demy 8vo.

Vol. I. from A.D. 664 to the EXTINCTION of the PLAGUE in 1666. 18s.

Vol. II. from the EXTINCTION of the PLAGUE to the PRESENT TIME. 20s.

The GEOGRAPHY of DISEASE. By Frank G. Clemow,

M.D. Edin., D.P.H. Camb., Physician to H.M. Embassy, Constantinople. With 12 Maps and Charts. 15s. ("Cambridge Geographical Series.")

FACSIMILES OF FIFTEENTH-CENTURY BOOKS.

A Series of 12 Photogravure Facsimiles of Rare Fifteenth-Century Books printed in England and now in the University Library, Cambridge. A Prospectus and Specimen Page will be sent on application. The First Two Volumes now ready are:—

GEOFFREY CHAUCER'S ANELIDA

and ARCTE. From the Unique Copy of the Westminster Edition of William Caxton (1477-8). 10s. net.

AUGUSTINI DACTI SCRIBE

SUPER TULLIANIS ELOGANCIJS and VERBIS EXOTICIS in SUA FACUNDISSIMA RETHORICA INCIPIT PERORNATE LIBELLUS. From the Unique Copy printed at St. Albans (about 1479-80) by "The Schoolmaster Printer." 15s. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE TYPE.

NEW VOLUME.

THOMAS DEKKER.—The SEVEN DEADLY SINNES of LONDON.

The Book is printed in small 4to, upon Hand-made Paper, from a New Type designed exclusively for the University Press and cast solely for it.

The number of copies printed is limited to 250, of which 225 are for sale, and the type has been distributed. They will be sold in paper boards at 17. 1s. net, and fully bound in velvet calf at 17. 11s. 6d. net.

A Prospectus will be sent on application.

London: Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane. C. F. CLAY, Manager.

Sales by Auction.

Rare and Valuable Books, including the Library of the late Rev. Dr. T. J. FREETH, removed from the Manor House, Fotherby, Lincs (by order of the Executor).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 9, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock, RARE and VALUABLE BOOKS, comprising Issues from the Kelmscott Press (including the Chaucer), the Doves Press, and Essex House Press—the Wallace Collection, by Emile Molinier, 2 vols.—Reproductions of the Works of Great Masters, by Sir Martin Conway—Sir Joshua Reynolds, by Sir W. Armstrong, Edition de Luxe—Williamson's George Morland, Large Paper, &c., 2 vols., and other Modern Fine-Art Books—Ackermann's Microcosm of London, 3 vols., old blue morocco—Stow's Survey of London, Best Edition, 2 vols., and other Topographical and Antiquarian Books—a few Specimens of Early Bindings—curious Black-Letter Books and MSS.—Furness's Variorum Shakespeare, 13 vols.—fine Library Editions and Editions de Luxe of Fielding, Byron, Lever, Dickens, Whyte-Melville, and others, in handsome calf and morocco bindings—Thackeray's Journey from Cornhill to Grand Cairo, with an Original Pen-and-Ink Sketch by the Author inserted, and other First Editions—Books on Sporting and Works in Natural History—Series of the Microscopical, Palaeontographical, Geological, and Telegraph Engineers' Societies' Publications—an extensive Collection of Standard Works in History, Mathematics, Classics, and Divinity—Mezzotint Engravings, &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

The Library of the late C. C. MASSEY, Esq., removed from 12, Victoria Street, S.W. (by order of the Executor).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 10, the ABOVE LIBRARY, comprising a Collection of Books on Astrology, Spiritualism, and the Occult Sciences, both English and Foreign—Series of the Psychical Research Society's Proceedings and Journal, The Spiritualist, Light, Mind, &c.—the Philosophical Works of Hegel, Kant, Rosmini, Shadworth Hodgson, Martineau, Caird, Du Prel, and others—the Writings of Pepys, Walpole, Gibbon, Grote, Motley, Froude, &c.

To be viewed and Catalogues had.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books, including the Library of a Clergyman (removed from Brighton).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 10, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, valuable MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including the above Library and other Properties, comprising Sanders's Reichenbachia, Large-Paper Edition, 4 vols.—Bowdler Sharpe's Monograph of the Birds of Paradise, Coloured Plates, 2 vols.—Pugh's Britannia Depicta, a Coloured Copy—Books relating to the County of Sussex, including a Set of the Sussex Archaeological Society from the commencement, 35 vols.—Du Sartel, La Porcelaine de Chine—Chaffers's Ceramic Gallery, 2 vols.—Ruskin's Modern Painters, First Edition, 5 vols.—Von Sybel's French Revolution, 4 vols., and other Standard Historical Works—Modern Theological Writings, &c.

Catalogues are preparing.

Valuable Books, including the Library of the late R. WALKER, Esq., of Bushey, Herts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on MONDAY, May 15, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock, precisely, valuable BOOKS, including Sowerby's Botany, 33 vols.—Rushworth's Pinetum Britannicum, 3 vols.—Blomefield's Norfolk, 11 vols.—Barham's Ingoldsby Legends, Presentation Copy—Goldsmith's Deserted Village, First Edition—Adams's Works in Architecture—Pryne's Costume of Great Britain, Coloured Plates—Warburton's Hunting Songs—Fine Specimens of Early Paris Printing—India Proof Plates to Windsor Castle, Miser's Daughter and St. James's—the Original MSS. of some of Ainsworth's Novels—Works on Art and Artists—valuable Autograph Letters and State Documents—Early Printed Books—Standard Editions of Modern Authors, &c.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the Following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square:—

On MONDAY, May 8, at 1 o'clock, PICTURES by OLD MASTERS.

On TUESDAY, May 9, at 1 o'clock, PORCELAIN, DECORATIVE OBJECTS, and FURNITURE from various Sources.

On WEDNESDAY, May 10, at 1 o'clock, OLD ENGLISH SILVER PLATE of FRANCIS POPHAM, Esq., deceased; Miss C. C. WILLIAMS, deceased, and others.

On THURSDAY, May 11, at 2 o'clock, about SIX HUNDRED DOZENS of CHOICE CHAMPAGNES, CHATEAU BOTTLED CLARETS, 1870, PORT, SHERRIES, and OLD BRANDIES.

On FRIDAY, May 12, at 1 o'clock, fine OLD FRENCH FURNITURE, the Property of CHAS. NECK, Esq., deceased; OLD FRENCH FURNITURE and SNUFFBOXES, the Property of A. W. H. HAY-DRUMMOND, Esq.

On SATURDAY, May 13, at 1 o'clock, the COLLECTION of PICTURES of the late CHARLES NECK, Esq.; MODERN PICTURES and WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS, the Property of T. HOLFORD, Esq.

On WEDNESDAY, May 17, and Following Days, at 1 o'clock (by order of the Executors), the highly important COLLECTION of OLD CHINESE PORCELAIN, Rhodian and Damascus Ware, Objects of Art, Decorative Furniture, Fine Pictures of the Early English School, Silver Plate, Mezzotint Engravings, and Books formed by LOUIS HUTH, Esq., deceased, late of Possingworth, Hawkhurst, and 28, Hertford Street, Mayfair, W.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL JOURNAL. Price 2s. Contents.—MAY.

The GEOGRAPHICAL RESULTS of the TIBET MISSION. By Sir Frank Younghusband, K.C.I.E. With 4 Plates and Map.

EXPLORATION in BOLIVIA. By Dr H. Hoek. With 6 Illustrations and Map.

A TRIP into the CHILI PROVINCE, NORTH CHINA. By the Rev. John Hedley. With 6 Illustrations and Map.

A JOURNEY WEST and NORTH of LAKE RUDOLF. From Notes supplied by J. W. Brooke. With 5 Illustrations and Map.

A NEW ISLAND. With Sketch-map.

GLACIAL RESERVOIRS and their OUTBURSTS. By Charles Rabot.

THE INDIAN EARTHQUAKE.

REVIEWS.

MATHEMATICAL and PHYSICAL GEOGRAPHY:—Motion of Glaciers; Geography in the University of Edinburgh.

OBITUARY:—Adolph Bastian. By Dr. A. H. Keane.

MEETINGS of the ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY, SESSION 1904-5.

GEOGRAPHICAL LITERATURE of the MONTH.

NEW MAPS.

Edward Stanford, 12, 13, 14, Long Acre, W.C.

2s. 6d.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW

2s. 6d.

For MAY,
NOW READY, contains:—

1. The INTERPRETATION of NATURE. By Prof. C. Lloyd Morgan.
2. The MENACE of the EAST. By Thomas H. Reid.
3. HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN. By George Brandes.
4. HAS the CLOCK STOPPED in BIBLE CRITICISM? By the Rev. Canon Cheyne, Litt.D.
5. The ROMANIANS in HUNGARY. By Prof. A. Vambéry.
6. ENGLISH SHIPPING UNDER PROTECTION. By John Rae.
7. FOUR NATIONS: a Sketch. By Baron F. von Wrangell.
8. The NEW TREND of RUSSIAN THOUGHT. By the Count S. C. de Soissons.
9. The EMPIRE BUILDER. By Sydney Olivier.
10. The COMMERCIAL MORALITY of the JAPANESE. By Joseph H. Longford.
11. CHURCH REFORM in RUSSIA: Witte versus Pobedonostseff. By Laicus.
12. The SCIENTISTS and COMMON SENSE. By Prof. E. Armitage.
13. FOREIGN AFFAIRS. By Dr. E. J. Dillon.

London: Horace Marshall & Son.

NOW READY.

THE BOOK MONTHLY for MAY. A Specimen Copy of this Magazine sent free on application to the Publishers, Simpkin, Marshall & Co., Stationers' Hall Court, London.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION; The

Building Trades Exhibition; Lambeth Municipal Buildings Competition; Student's Column (Concrete-Steel); and Illustrations of Cardiff Town Hall (Council Chamber); S. Erkenwald's Church, Southend-on-Sea; Bank, Chelmsford; The Out-Voluntary, &c.—See the BUILDER of May 6 (4d.; by post, 4½d.). Through any Newsagent or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

NOW READY, with Illustrations, 2s. 6d. net; by post, 2s. 9d.

X RAYS: their Employment in Cancer and other Diseases.
By RICHARD J. COWEN, L.R.C.S.I. L.R.C.P.J., &c.

London: H. J. Glaisher, 57, Wigmore Street, W.

TEACHERS' SCRIPTURAL LIBRARY.

Price Sixpence each net.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

1. BIBLE CHRONOLOGY and DICTIONARY; or, the Principal Events recorded in the Holy Scriptures, arranged under their probable respective dates, with a Dictionary giving an account of the places named, an Appendix on English Translations of the Bible, and Six Maps.

2. BRIEF LESSONS on the PARABLES and MIRACLES of OUR LORD. The First Part contains short expositions of the Parables, arranged according to Date; in the Second, the Miracles are treated under the heads of the Regions in which they were wrought. With Two Illustrations.

Published by Stoneman, 29, Paternoster Square, E.C.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON &amp; FERRIER

HAVE NOW READY:—

MR. CARNEGIE'S NEW BOOK.

JAMES WATT.

By ANDREW CARNEGIE, LL.D.

Completing the "Famous Scots Series."

Art Canvas 1s. 6d. net; gilt top, 2s. net.

List of the Series (42 Volumes) on application.

DR. ALEX. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.

THE WALK, CONVERSATION, AND CHARACTER OF JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD.

A Series of Discourses on the Character of Our Lord.

By the Rev. ALEXANDER WHYTE, D.D.,

Author of 'Bible Characters,' 'Bunyan Characters,' &c.

Price 6s.

The GREAT RELIGIONS of INDIA.

By the late J. MURRAY-MITCHELL, M.A. LL.D.
With Map and Portrait. 5s. net.

Standard.—"The book gives a singularly clear and unprejudiced account of the true inwardness of Hinduism, Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, and Mohammedanism as they exist in the present day in India."

SECOND EDITION, WITH NEW PREFACE, OF

The FAITH of ROBERT LOUIS

STEVENSON. By JOHN KELMAN, Jun., M.A.

6s. net, half-vellum cloth, gilt top.

Athenæum.—"An attempt to figure the man forth in all his qualities. The attempt is astonishingly successful."

The ORIGIN and NATURE of MAN.

By S. B. G. MCKINNEY, M.A. L.R.C.P. Edin. Now ready, Part V. The BIBLE. Price 4d. net, postage 1½d.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

FROM CHAPMAN &amp; HALL'S LIST.

A MOST REMARKABLE ENTHUSIASM HAS GREETED THE PUBLICATION OF

MR. H. G. WELLS'S

Imaginative and Picturesque Sociological Study,

A MODERN UTOPIA,

And the Critics are unanimous in considering it his FINEST AND MOST POPULAR WORK.

READ THEIR OPINIONS.

The ATHENÆUM says:—

"THERE HAS BEEN NO WORK OF THIS IMPORTANCE PUBLISHED FOR THE LAST THIRTY YEARS."
"IT IS AN AMAZINGLY ABLE CONSTITUTION, AND ONE WONDERS THAT IT SHOULD BE THE OUTCOME OF A SINGLE MIND."

"THIS ASTONISHING BOOK IS A PIECE OF WORK WHICH EMBODIES IMAGINATIVE SCIENCE AT ITS HIGHEST."

"A Modern Utopia' ought to set people talking and discussing. Mr. Wells's ideas are always stimulating and crisply expressed. Domestic politics would become interesting again if Mr. Wells could convert a few statesmen to his way of thinking."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book has high value, and a significance that should not be overlooked, for it indicates both clearly and with some gaiety the course which civic and spiritual endeavours should follow if the world is not to revert to the type established in the Middle Ages."—Morning Post.

"Mr. Wells's book is interesting precisely because it challenges criticism and opposition. It is a book of great originality, the result of real thinking—a criticism of life by an acute and reflective observer who throws his work into a most attractive form."—Westminster Gazette.

"Broadly conceived and brilliantly written.....Full of profound thought, of brilliant imaginative effort, with a background of sociological and economical possibilities which will stimulate interest in many world-problems of to-day."—Daily Chronicle.

"The work is crowded with thought and suggestion, with all those characteristics of candour and sincerity which have made Mr. Wells, the author, perhaps best worth reading of modern English writers engaged in the function of prophecy."—Mr. C. F. G. MASTERMAN in the Daily News.

"Mr. Wells's is much the most scientific and sensible construction of a Future based on the Present that I have ever read."—Mr. H. HAMILTON FIFE in Evening News.

THE CRISIS IN RUSSIA.

RUSSIA in REVOLUTION. By

G. H. PERRIS. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

[May 5.]

This striking and impressive book, founded upon close personal observation of all sides of subterranean life in the country of the Tsar, appears at a peculiarly appropriate time. It sets forth in graphic language and with absolute fidelity to fact the causes that have led to the present reign of terror, gives vivid word pictures of the leaders of the revolution, and lets the reader into many suppressed stories of tyranny and oppression. A number of pictures, from photographs taken on the spot, add to the convincing quality of the narrative.

A NEW WORK ON HEREDITY.

The PRINCIPLES of HEREDITY.

By G. ARCHDALL REID, Author of 'Alcoholism: its Cause and Cure.' Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

This is a highly important scientific work, throwing fresh light on the problem of heredity.

THREE STRIKING SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A STORY OF THE CANADIAN ROCKIES.

The BROODING WILD. A Mountain Tragedy. By RIDGWELL CULLUM, Author of 'The Devil's Keg,' 'The Hound from the North,' &c.

An Expert American Critic who has read this story says of it:—"The scene of the story is the Canadian North-west, and deals with trappers, fur traders, half-breeds, 'Neches,' Huskies, &c. The book is a distinct advance in style over the author's previous works, and the description of animal life, nature, &c., are almost as well as our great nature-writer Prof. Charles G. D. Roberts would do it."

A CHINESE STORY.

CH'UN KWANG. A Tale of Chinese

Love and Tragedy. By OLIVER G. READY, Author of 'Life and Sport in China.' With 12 Illustrations by a Chinese Artist of repute.

"This pleasantly written tale will give European readers a better insight into Chinese life and society than many more pretentious works. We are thoroughly interested in the romance."—Saturday Review.

"A very simple, straightforward, and pretty tale."—Times.

"An exceptionally remarkable study of immemorial civilization of the Chinese people."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This is really a delightful book, and Mr. Ready deserves the thanks of English readers for the charming love tale of Far Cathay.....Fascinating and delightful throughout."

Daily Telegraph.

A FINE HISTORICAL ROMANCE.

The SILVER KEY. By Nellie K.

BLISSETT, Author of 'Bindweed,' &c.

"The reader with a taste for a rattling, spirited historical romance, may be confidently commended to Miss Blissett's latest novel, for he will find there all the qualities that make for his enjoyment.....Miss Blissett's ingenuity is equal to every demand of a rather exigent situation. The hero is blithe and gallant, the heroine is winsome, beautiful, and bewitching."—Daily Telegraph.

London: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

A. & C. BLACK'S LIST.*ROME. Painted by Alberto

PISA. Text by M. A. R. TUKER and HOPE MALLESON. Containing 70 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 20s. net.

ÉDITION DE LUXE, with Letterpress printed on Hand-made Paper, containing the earliest impressions of the Illustrations, and limited to 250 signed and numbered Copies, price Two Guineas net.

FLORENCE and SOME

TUSCAN CITIES. Painted by Col. R. C. GOFF. Described by CLARISSA GOFF. Containing 75 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, price 20s. net.

NORWAY. Painted by Nico

JUNGMAN. Described by BEATRIX JUNGMAN. Containing 75 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 20s. net.

TIBET and NEPAL Painted and Described by A. HENRY SAVAGE LANDOR. Containing 75 Full-Page Illustrations (50 in Colour). Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 20s. net.

NUREMBERG. Painted by ARTHUR GEORGE BELL. Described by Mrs. ARTHUR G. BELL. Containing 20 Full-Page Illustrations in Colour. Square demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d. net.

TROUT FISHING. By W.

EARL HODGSON. Second Edition. With a Frontispiece by W. H. ROLFE, and a Facsimile in Colours of a Model Book of Flies, for Stream and Lake, arranged according to the Months in which the Lures are appropriate. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 7s. 6d. net.

The DICKENS COUNTRY. By

F. G. KITTON. Containing 50 Full-Page Illustrations, mostly from Photographs by T. W. TYRRELL. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

The THACKERAY COUNTRY.

By LEWIS MELVILLE. Containing 50 Full-Page Illustrations from Photographs specially taken for the Book by C. W. BARNES WARD, and a Map. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

KNOX'S HISTORY of the REFORMATION of RELIGION within the REALM of SCOTLAND. Transcribed into Modern Spelling by C. J. GUTHRIE. With 43 Illustrations. Cheap Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 3s. 6d. net.

The FINAL TRANSITION.

By JOHN K. INGRAM, LL.D., Author of 'Human Nature and Morals,' 'Practical Morals,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d. net.

The THREE GREATEST

FORCES in the WORLD and the MAKING of WESTERN CIVILIZATION: The Incarnation. By WILLIAM WYNNE PEYTON, Author of 'The Memorabilia of Jesus.' Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net.

A. & C. BLACK, Soho Square, London, W.

FROM
WILLIAMS & NORGATE'S
LIST.

JUST ISSUED, royal 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. net.

THE AMERICANS.

By HUGO MÜNSTERBERG,
Professor of Psychology at Harvard University.

Translated by BDWIN B. HOLT, Ph.D.,
Instructor at Harvard University.

"This philosophy of Americanism is a careful and thoughtful study, historical, political, economic, intellectual, and social; and Prof. Münsterberg writes with perfect freedom and frankness."—Scotsman.

READY THIS WEEK, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s.

SCHOOL TEACHING AND SCHOOL REFORM.

A Course of Four Lectures on SCHOOL CURRICULA and METHODS, delivered to Secondary Teachers and Teachers in Training at Birmingham during February, 1905.

By Sir OLIVER LODGE,
Principal of the University of Birmingham.

NOW READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

EDUCATION.

Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.

By HERBERT SPENCER.

This is an entirely New Edition, the whole having been reset in a much improved style.

A POPULAR REISSUE.

NOW READY, large crown 8vo, 500 pp., 7s. 6d.

FIRST PRINCIPLES.

By HERBERT SPENCER.

"It is a shapely volume, in new type, soberly bound, fronted with a good photogravure of the Onslow Ford bust, and published at three half-crowns. A complete reissue of the 'Synthetic Philosophy,' uniform with this volume now to hand, will form, with the recent autobiography, the best and most enduring monument to our modern philosopher."—Pall Mall Gazette.

FIFTH AND ENLARGED EDITION.

THE PHILOSOPHY COMPLETED, 8vo, cloth, 21s.
DIGEST OF HERBERT SPENCER'S WORKS.

AN EPITOME OF THE SYNTHETIC PHILOSOPHY.

By F. HOWARD COLLINS.

With a Preface by the late HERBERT SPENCER.

NOW READY, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE EARLY CHRISTIAN CONCEPTION OF CHRIST.

Its Value and Significance in the History of Religion.

By OTTO PFLEIDERER, D.D.,
Professor of Practical Theology in the University, Berlin.

"It would be difficult to name any recent English work which could compare with this brilliant essay as a concise but lucid presentation of the attitude of the more advanced school of German Theologians to the Founder of the Christian Religion."—Scotsman.

JUST READY, demy 8vo, cloth, 18s. net; post free, 18s. 6d.

THE STATUTES OF THE APOSTLES.

The hitherto Unedited Ethiopic and Arabic Texts.

Edited, with an Introduction and Translations of the Ethiopic, Arabic, and Coptic Texts,

By Rev. G. HORNER, M.A.

With an Appendix (a recently discovered variant of the Coptic Text).

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
14, Henrietta Street, London, W.C.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND LIBRARIES.

STUDIES IN COLONIAL NATIONALISM.

By RICHARD JEBB. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

DAILY MAIL.—"A brilliant book, and one deserving the attention of every British statesman."

DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Jebb's book may be very strongly recommended to those to whom the future of the British Empire, or rather the Colonial portion of it, is a matter of serious concern."

SIR CHARLES ELIOT'S BOOK.

THE EAST AFRICA PROTECTORATE.

By Sir CHARLES ELIOT, K.C.M.G.,
Late H.M. Commissioner for the Protectorate.

With Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 15s. net.

SPECTATOR.—"One of the best of recent travel books on a subject which is growing daily in interest and importance. The value of Sir Charles Eliot's story loses nothing in the telling. The author of 'Turkey in Europe' may be trusted to write with distinction and charm. The style is simple and colloquial, but it is never slipshod; and there are many pages of vivid description and adroit argument. There is also an unflinching humour."

A NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF 'THROUGH THE LANDS OF THE SERB.'

THE BURDEN OF THE BALKANS.

By M. EDITH DURHAM.

With a Map and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 14s. net.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"Miss Durham's record of her travels is deeply interesting from beginning to end, and those who take it up will find in it a fund of infinite enjoyment."

The BURDEN of BABYLON; or, the Social Incubus, and other Vers de Société. By HUGH B. M. STUTFIELD. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SCOTSMAN.—"A man might search long before coming upon a cleverer book of precious fooling."

VERSE and WORSE. By Harry GRAHAM ('Col. D. Streamer'), Author of 'Ruthless Rhymes,' 'Fiscal Ballads,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

A STRIKING "ROMAN A CLEF."

The SEETHING POT. By George A. BIRMINGHAM. 6s.

SPECTATOR.—"A very brilliant and detached study of Ireland of yesterday and to-day."

ATHENÆUM.—"This clever story is much above the average of Irish novels, and shows an intimate acquaintance with the conditions, social, political, and religious, of the country with which it deals."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"An absorbingly interesting book. A book to read and think over."

BOOKS FOR THE COUNTRY.

PAGES from a COUNTRY DIARY.

By PERCIVAL SOMERS. With Photogravure Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MEMORIES of the MONTHS (First, Second, and Third Series). By the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P. With Photogravure Illustrations. Elegantly bound, large crown 8vo, 3 vols. (sold separately), 7s. 6d. each.

A BOOK ABOUT ROSES. By the late DEAN HOLE. Twentieth Edition. Illustrated by H. G. MOON and G. S. ELGOOD, R.I. Presentation Edition, with Coloured Plates, 6s. Popular Edition, 3s. 6d.

A BOOK ABOUT the GARDEN and the GARDENER. By the late DEAN HOLE. Popular Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The PRINCIPLES of LANDED ESTATE MANAGEMENT. By HENRY HERBERT SMITH, Fellow of the Institute of Surveyors; Agent to the Marquess of Lansdowne, K.G. Demy 8vo, 16s.

ENGLISH ESTATE FORESTRY. By A. C. FORBES, late Forester on the Marquis of Bath's Longleat Estate, &c. With Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

HOUSE, GARDEN, and FIELD. A Collection of Short Nature Studies. By L. C. MIALI, F.R.S., Professor of Biology in the University of Leeds. Illustrated. Second Impression. Crown 8vo, 6s.

London:

EDWARD ARNOLD, 41 and 43, Maddox Street, W

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. FROM the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

Previously Published—Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

ILLUSTRATED POCKET CLASSICS.
NEW VOLUME.

JOHN INGLESANT.

By J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ANDREW DICKSON WHITE,

Formerly United States Ambassador at Berlin and St. Petersburg. With Portraits. In 2 vols. 8vo, 30s. net.

1905 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World, for the Year 1905. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY:

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"The result is altogether delightful, for 'Derbyshire' is as attractive to the reader in his armchair as to the tourist wandering amid the scenes Mr. Firth describes so well."

COMPATRIOTS' CLUB LECTURES.

First Series. Edited by the Committee of the Compatriots' Club. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL HANDBOOKS.—New Vol.

A GRAMMAR OF GREEK ART

By PERCY GARDNER, Litt.D., Lincoln and Merton Professor of Classical Archaeology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Tuesday.]

THE PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS

A Fragment of a Treatise on the Industrial Mechanism of Society, and other Papers. By the late W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D. M.A. F.R.S. With a Preface by HENRY HIGGS. 8vo, 10s. net. [Tuesday.]

MACMILLAN'S NEW NOVELS.
Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

FOND ADVENTURES.

Tales of the Youth of the World.

By MAURICE HEWLETT.

THE RED CRAVAT.

By A. T. SHEPPARD.

POCKET EDITIONS OF THE NOVELS OF SCOTT, DICKENS, & THACKERAY.

PRINTED ON INDIA PAPER.

Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, gilt tops, 2s. net; limp leather, gilt tops, 3s. net each.

FIRST THREE VOLUMES READY MAY 12.

WAVERLEY. With 12 Illustrations.
VANITY FAIR. With 190 Illustrations.
PICKWICK PAPERS. With 50 Illustrations.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Messrs. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce that the First Edition of Mr. Perceval Landon's great work on Tibet is now out of print. The SECOND EDITION is NEARLY READY, in 2 vols., with all the original Illustrations, price 2l. 2s. net.

Orders now sent for the Second Edition will be executed as soon as it is ready.

L H A S A.

An Account of the Country and People of Central Tibet and the Progress of the Mission sent there by the English Government in the year 1903-4.

Written with the help of all the principal persons of the Mission,

By PERCEVAL LANDON,

Special Correspondent of the Times.

With an Introduction

By Col. Sir FRANCIS E. YOUNGHUSBAND, K.C.I.E.

An Illustrated Prospectus, with Extracts from Reviews, sent free on application.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY IN THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

By Capt. N. KLADO,

Of the Imperial Russian Navy.

"An interesting book, and proof of its author's astuteness and ability."—Standard.

VOLUME II. of FRIEDBERGER and FROHNER'S VETERINARY PATHOLOGY, Translated by Capt. HAYES and Edited by JOHN DUNSTAN, M.R.C.V.S., will be READY NEXT WEEK, price 10s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.

In 1 vol. 6s.

MARIAN SAX. By Madame Albanesi.

Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One Elder,' &c.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME of the KING. Being the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War. By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times.

"Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."—Fall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVEL BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

DOROTHY TUKE; a Tale of the Sea.

By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of 'Through Green Glasses,' &c. [Next week.]

NEW NOVEL BY ALICE M. DIEHL.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

BREAD UPON the WATERS. By

ALICE M. DIEHL, Author of 'The Garden of Eden,' &c. [May 22.]

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, Illustrated covers.

GOD'S PRISONER. By JOHN OXENHAM.

[Next week.]

A KING'S WOMAN. By KATHERINE TYNAN.

[Next week.]

HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M. CROKER.

The MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

A LITERARY HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. Vol. II. By J. J. JUSSERAND, French Ambassador to the United States. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. net. [In preparation.]

ROBERT ADAM, Artist and Architect: his Works and his System. By PERCY FITZGERALD, Author of 'The Westminster Cathedral: a Criticism,' &c. Illustrated from Photographs. 10s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

This is the outcome of many years' study, and Mr. Fitzgerald writes with enthusiastic admiration for Adam's character and genius.

SIBERIA: a Record of Travel, Exploration, and Climbing. By SAMUEL TURNER, F.R.G.S. With 100 Illustrations and 2 Maps. Demy 8vo, cloth, 21s. net. [In preparation.]

WHAT I HAVE SEEN WHILE FISHING, and HOW I HAVE CAUGHT MY FISH. By PHILIP GREEN. With 73 Illustrations. Second Edition. 7s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

IN SEARCH of EL DORADO: a Wanderer's Experiences. By ALEXANDER MACDONALD, F.R.G.S. With 32 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [In preparation.]

JOHN CHINAMAN at HOME. By the Rev. E. J. HARDY, Author of 'How to be Happy though Married,' lately Chaplain to H.M. Forces in Hong Kong. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [In preparation.]

INTERNATIONAL LAW and the NORTH SEA CRISIS. By F. E. SMITH, B.C.L., Fellow of Merton College, Oxford, and Vinerian Scholar in the University of Oxford, and N. W. SIBLEY, LL.M., Trin.H.Cant., Barristers-at-Law. Royal 8vo, cloth, 21s. net. [In preparation.]

RUSSIA UNDER the GREAT SHADOW. By LUIGI VILLARI, Author of 'Giovanni Segantini,' 'Italian Life in Town and Country,' &c. With 60 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. net. [In preparation.]

The AGE of the EARTH, and other GEOLOGICAL STUDIES. By W. J. SOLLAS, LL.D. D.Sc. F.R.S., Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. [In preparation.]

IN PERIL of CHANGE. Essays Written in Time of Tranquility. By C. F. G. MASTERMAN, Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, Author of 'From the Abyss,' &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

The PROGRESS of HELLENISM in ALEXANDER'S EMPIRE. By JOHN PENTLAND MAHAFFY, D.D. Mus.Doe.Dublin, Hon. D.C.L.Oxon., sometime Professor of Ancient History in the University of Dublin. 5s. net. [Ready.]

ENGLISH WAYFARING LIFE in the MIDDLE AGES (Fourteenth Century). By J. J. JUSSERAND. Cheap Edition. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

The HISTORY of FLORENCE (for the First Two Centuries). By Prof. PASQUALE VILLARI. Cheap Edition. Illustrated. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d. net. [Ready.]

THE

INDEPENDENT REVIEW.

MAY. Price 2s. 6d. net.

NOTES on CURRENT EVENTS.

RATING of RURAL GROUND VALUES: a Manifesto.

The SO-CALLED SCIENCE of SOCIOLOGY. H. G. Wells.

HODGE and his EDUCATORS. Sir Edmund Verney, Bart. The STATE and SECONDARY EDUCATION. J. T. Macnamara, M.P.

MERE TECHNIQUE: a Reply. Simon Bussy.

A LEAGUE of HEALTH. Sir Lauder Brunton.

The MANCHURIAN CAMPAIGN. Hilaire Belloc.

The OPTIMISM of BROWNING and MEREDITH. A. C. Pigou.

MR. BALFOUR'S HOME SUBSECIVÆ. Herbert Paul.

T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square.

SATURDAY, MAY 6, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|  |         |
|--|---------|
| HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS IN DERBYSHIRE ... ..   | 551     |
| IMPERIAL JAPAN... ..   | 552     |
| A REGISTER OF NATIONAL BIBLIOGRAPHY ... ..   | 553     |
| QUEEN MARGOT AND THE END OF THE VALOIS ... ..  | 553     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Disciple's Wife; In Search of the Unknown; The Macdonnells; Playing the Game; The Taming of the Brute; Guthrie of the 'Times'; The House of Merillees; Aunt Phipps; The Girl of La Gloria; Le Passé Vivant)... ..  | 554-556 |
| EGYPTOLOGICAL BOOKS... ..  | 556     |
| ESSAYS AND SKETCHES ... ..   | 557     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (The White Peril in the Far East; Mr. Asquith; The Working Constitution; The Russian Navy in the Russo-Japanese War; The Phantom Torpedo-Boats; Une Année de Politique Extérieure; The Man in the Pulpit; Letters from Catalonia; The Grey Brethren; Author and Printer; Brichanteau Célèbre; New Editions) ... .. | 559-561 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..   | 561     |
| LAMB'S LETTERS; THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT AT SOMERSET HOUSE; THE SOURCES OF SHELLEY'S ROMANCES; AN UNKNOWN EDITION OF THEOPHRASTUS; SALES ... ..   | 561-562 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..   | 562     |
| SCIENCE—SEDGWICK'S TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY; GARDEN COLOUR; STEAM PIPES; ASTRONOMICAL BOOKS; TOTEMISM AND THE DOMESTICATION OF ANIMALS; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP... ..  | 564-566 |
| FINE ARTS—THE ROYAL ACADEMY; OXFORD EXHIBITION OF HISTORICAL PORTRAITS; LORD GRIMTHORPE; SALES; GOSSIP... ..   | 567-569 |
| MUSIC—RING DES NIBELUNGEN; IL BARBIERE; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..  | 570-571 |
| DRAMA—SIR HENRY IRVING'S SEASON; JOHN CHILCOTE; YOU NEVER CAN TELL; LEAH KLESCHNA; THE DICTATOR; GOSSIP ... ..   | 571-572 |

LITERATURE

Highways and Byways in Derbyshire. By J. B. Firth. With Illustrations by Nelly Erichsen. (Macmillan & Co.)

ALL Derbyshire men of taste, and many other Englishmen interested in the scenery and associations of their own country, will be ready, as soon as they have read this book, to thank Messrs. Macmillan for including Derbyshire in their admirable series of "Highways and Byways," and for entrusting the letterpress to Mr. Firth. So much has been already written on the subject that is good, and so much more that is bad or commonplace, that it is no easy task to treat it with any freshness; but Mr. Firth has, beyond doubt, produced some five hundred pages of attractive and interesting reading.

The opening sentence of the first chapter cites Fuller's eulogy of the county, written more than two centuries ago:—

"God, who is truly thaumaturgus, the only worker of wonders, hath more manifested his might in this than in any other county of England."

Fuller was no doubt thinking, when he wrote this, of the Seven Wonders of the Peak, which, in his days of limited travel, roused an amazement and awe in men's minds which it is difficult now to realize; but he was also thinking—as Mr. Firth suggests—of "Derbyshire's bold hills and deep limestone valleys, of her heathy moors and rich luxuriant plains, of all the varied delights which combine to make the county so popular with seekers after health and pleasure. For, however brief their stay, no one can help being sensible of Derbyshire's charm or can resist the spell of its fascination. The better the knowledge and the more searching the exploration, the more a man admires and the more eagerly he returns.

And though he travel far afield, he still finds Byron's saying true, 'I assure you there are things in Derbyshire as noble as in Greece or Switzerland.' It has no glory of coast like Devon and Yorkshire, no jewelled lakes like Westmoreland and Cumberland, but in all else that is picturesque and beautiful Derbyshire is unsurpassed among the fair counties of England."

Mr. Firth, in his scheme of county travel, eschews the Chesterfield region, and, indeed, the whole hundred of Scarsdale, but deals liberally with parts of the southern plain of Derbyshire, as well as with the hills and dales of the north-west. We are sorry that he could not bring East Derbyshire into his plan, for there is far more that is well worth visiting and describing than Hardwick Hall and Bolsover Castle, though these in themselves are most noteworthy. In that district there are, for instance, the fine hall of Barlborough; that gem of Norman architecture on a small scale, the long-desecrated chapel of Steetley; Markland Grips, a beautiful bit of little-known scenery, with one of the most remarkable prehistoric camps in England; and Cresswell Crags, now famous for its bone caves. Had these parts been included, and the long accounts of Tutbury Castle and other places that are in Staffordshire omitted, the book would have answered better to its title.

The county town of Derby receives but scanty treatment—possibly as much as it deserves from aught save the commercial side; but Buxton, Bakewell, and Ashbourne are adequately discussed. Ashbourne, indeed, has two chapters to itself, one of which is chiefly concerned with memories of Dr. Johnson, whilst the other treats largely of Moore. These two chapters are simply delightful reading. Dr. Johnson, on account of his attachment to his old schoolfellow and lifelong friend, Dr. Taylor, made Ashbourne the playground of his early days, for here he spent most of his holidays. Opposite the grammar school and near the church stands the substantial building long occupied by Dr. Taylor. Johnson's room was in the small side wing fronting the street, now used as a bathroom. The old entrance-gates to what is still known as "The Mansion" are visible in a field near the railway, but are now detached from the house. Guests, on grand occasions, approached the house by this short drive instead of by the entrance from the street. Once, when Dr. Taylor was expecting the Duke of Devonshire to dinner, orders were given by him to drive his Grace twice round the limited grounds, in order that he might be more impressed with the size of the garden. The anecdotes and descriptions of Dr. Taylor and his house and surroundings, and of Johnson's visits, chiefly culled from Boswell, may lead Derbyshire folk to appreciate memories of Ashbourne which deserve as much attention as the ephemeral visits of Moore.

Ashbourne Church and its monuments naturally attract Mr. Firth, and he writes well and in kindly terms of all that pertains to them. But for him the personal associations of the nearer past have greater attractions than the graces of thirteenth-century architecture. "The church," he says,

"still contains the original brass dedication plate of 1241, but to me it was of more interest to be shown the little seat immediately in front of the lectern where Dr. Johnson sate, and to be told of that far-off Sunday, two centuries and a half ago, when King Charles came to Ashbourne Church and graciously talked with Mr. Peacock, the vicar. The date was 1645; the war was raging; and the guards would be set to watch all the avenues of approach to Ashbourne."

The account of Bakewell, though not of equal value to that of Ashbourne, is also attractive, and contains much that would be sought for in vain in the ordinary run of guide-books. So thorough is Mr. Firth's knowledge of all that pertains even to the smaller literary or quaint characters of the shire that it is difficult to believe that he is not a lifelong resident of the county. Even the well-worn themes of Haddon Hall and Chatsworth House are made interesting to those who may have already visited them with frequency. We are glad to notice that Mr. Firth is honest enough, notwithstanding his evident love of romance, to discredit the comparatively modern tale of Dorothy Vernon's elopement. Of Eliza Meteyard's version of the story, which started the vogue of this popular legend in the first volume of The Reliquary, he is bold enough to say that it is of "more than glucose stickiness and sweetness."

Mr. Firth's rambles over the moors and highlands do not yield so many opportunities for the display of his gifts, but they are readable, suggestive, and, on the whole, accurate. Those who know Derbyshire and its history well will be able to detect occasional inaccuracies; but there are no material blunders. For instance, funeral garlands may be found in at least two other Derbyshire churches besides Ashford—namely, at Matlock and South Wingfield. King's Newton did not receive its name because Charles II. slept one night there—its royal title is two or three centuries older; and the account of the red deer of Peak Forest perishing in a snowstorm is a mere fable. The full documents as to their exact ending are at the Public Record Office.

Towards the end of the book some pages are devoted to the unhappy escapade of Brandreth and his followers in 1817, which Mr. Firth seems to think worthy of the name of "the Pentrich revolution." Had he read a little deeper on this subject we feel sure that he would have felt more indignant with the Government of the day than with the three who suffered on the scaffold. It was perfectly absurd to dignify this trifling disturbance as an act of high treason. If Mr. Firth will consult Dr. Cox's volumes on the Quarter Session documents of the county he will find further particulars of the outbreak, the trial, and the horrible execution; the headsman's "block" then used is still preserved in the new gaol at Derby.

Mr. Firth makes a valiant defence of the Midland Railway route from Manchester to Derby, through some of the most beautiful of Derbyshire's rocky dales, citing Ruskin's strongly worded philippic against this desecration. We are inclined to agree with him to a great extent, at all events so far as Miller's Dale and Monsal Dale are concerned, where the iron way runs on a high level and loses itself for much of the way in tunnels. The actual picturesque effects are comparatively little interfered with; nay the rushing of a steam-enveloped locomotive with its train of cars, from the dark tunnel entrance in the side of Fin Cop, and its rapid disappearance, add somewhat to the scenic effect, producing at times even an air of mystery and romance to the imaginative mind. So much is this the case that a rising young Derbyshire artist of much promise, Mr. Frank Beresford, has chosen this very incident for one of his most successful landscape paintings. But it is difficult for those who knew Derbyshire of old to feel at peace with those who have driven a railway by Grindleford and Hathersage and through the once singularly retired and peaceful vale of Edale. That district, too, has been ruined of late in other ways, for the visitor in search of the picturesque. At the conclusion of the Boer war the wisecracks of the War Office detected some resemblance between the South African veldt and the hills between Edale and Castleton, and now, during the summer months, they are the continuous exercise ground of thousands of troops.

The illustrations of the "Highways and Byways" series form such an important part of the scheme that they cannot be passed by with only a single phrase of comment. The Derbyshire volume is, to some extent, disappointing in this respect. There is a charming headpiece to chap. ii. of 'The Pool, Melbourne Hall'; but interesting as is the old garden (which, by the by, has been often illustrated), the book would certainly have been improved had three out of the four full-page views of yew hedges been omitted. In reality, this massive kind of Dutch gardening has a ponderous solemnity of its own when well tempered with age, but it is not one artist in a hundred that can make it attractive in a black-and-white presentment. The illustrator of this book has a distinct talent for the happy rendering of old buildings on a small scale. Among the most successful are the Balcony House, Swarkeston; Wakelyn Hilton, the only good half-timbered house in Derbyshire; the gateway of Tutbury Castle; Sudbury Hall; and the many-gabled grammar school of Ashbourne. Often as the subject has been treated, it is seldom that a better small picture has been made of the terrace, Haddon Hall, than that which forms the headpiece to chap. xviii. Queen Mary's Bower, the moated garden in Chatsworth Park, and the probable site of the original small homestead before Bess of Hardwick began to build, is also most pleasing. But several of the full-page pictures of landscape, cliff, and water are not successful. Notably is this the case with a representation of the Shining Cliff, Middleton Dale; the Winnats, Castleton; and Tutbury Castle moat. The several views of Dovedale, with the possible exception of Ham Rock, are also disappointing.

Imperial Japan. By G. W. Knox. (Newnes.)

DR. KNOX was for fifteen years a Presbyterian missionary in Japan. During that period he was a diligent student of Japanese philosophy and history, and contributed articles on those subjects to the Transactions of the Asiatic Society of Japan, which are among the most valuable to be found in that publication. He now, in a well-printed, well-illustrated, and agreeably written volume of some three hundred pages, gives a portrait of the Japanese people as they appear to him, and a more critically honest and informed delineation of that most interesting folk has not come under our notice.

Dr. Knox is neither indifferent, as many residents in Japan are—perhaps naturally, for they have neither the time nor the training for the study of things Japanese—nor biassed, as others are, chiefly servants or quasi-servants of the Japanese Government,

"who have gone over completely to the Japanese ways of life, and use, with the zeal of proselytes, their views of the superiority of Japanese art, morality, women, and religion to disparage the civilization they have renounced."

As Dr. Knox very well remarks, no essential differences exist in the national psychologies of East and West. What differences are found can almost wholly be explained by circumstance and history. The qualities now displayed by the Japanese command the admiration of the West. But they are precisely those in which Asia is defective—organization, cohesion, patriotism, concentration of purpose, energy, and industrial ability. The characteristics of the Oriental world, on the other hand, are tolerance of despotism, disregard of liberty, fanaticism, empty thought on empty subjects, inability to recognize the facts of the world, physical and moral, lack of pictorial and—in the present day, at least—of literary power.

The truth is Japan never has been, and is now less likely than ever to become, an Oriental country. With the nearer and middle East—the true East—Japan has never been in communion; its Buddhism—always an exotic, by most modern Japanese writers described as a parasite—it received from China, as it did its language, its serious literature, its script, its art, philosophy, ethics, law, and political system—even its military art. But Old Japan never assimilated any of these importations, and of itself neither extended nor added to their value. If we judge Old Japan by its artistic and literary production, it is precisely in those works which are least Chinese that the greater value is to be found—the ancient poetry, the mediæval monogatari, some of the later romances, and the works of the ukiyo school of art. The histories are dreary compilations, of no merit and little authority; the philosophies are platitudinarian logomachies founded on partially understood Chinese arguments; and such science as Old Japan possessed is a mere echo of that of China.

The chapters on the history, civilization, religion, and philosophy of Old Japan are admirably written, affording a vivid and, what is more, an informed and trustworthy account. It was the Samurai who really constituted Old Japan; the nobles were effete, and the common people were merely machines for the production of the currency of the country, rice. It was among the lower Samurai that chiugi (loyalty) was to be found, and their masters gladly promoted a quality so useful to themselves, but did not, in mediæval and later Japan at least, practise it. But chiugi was not specially a characteristic of Japan; whenever a virtue is selected for commendation it may fairly be supposed to be somewhat rare. It was the form it took that gave it a dramatic prominence, and, above all, its association with the peculiar "honour" of the Samurai caste, the elements of which were vendetta and suicide, at first in preference to death at the hands of the executioner and its consequences, afterwards as a sort of fashion in itself (which had to be restrained by law) combined with that adoration of the sword which so singularly collapsed within a year or two of the Restoration. Of the Samurai of New Japan Dr. Knox speaks in high terms: "One can only feel that nowhere are there men more worthy of esteem and more likely to win an affectionate regard." We believe this to be true, but the Samurai must be known to be appreciated, and it is not easy to know him or to win his confidence. The common people are more attractive on the whole, though of course they have their less pleasant side. The mass of the peasantry appear to be miserably poor. Their farms average  $1\frac{1}{4}$  acre, and four-tenths of the products are paid as rent. One of these farmer's accounts shows a gross income for one year of 3*l.* 15*s.* He rarely eats rice, and lives on rye and millet. It is these men, not the Samurai, who are bearing the brunt of the war in Manchuria. Their main pleasure is the pilgrimage which some few manage to make out of a common fund to which the subscription is 6*d.* a year. A jinrikisha man may earn 3*s.* a month, on which he will probably support a family. Dr. Knox tells a characteristic story of one of these men, which had better be given in his own words:—

"On the west coast.....a man pulled me in one day fifty-five miles.....up hill and down. I remonstrated.....but he told me his home was the end of our route, and he was anxious to get home. It took him eleven hours.....taking me to the hotel.....he threw water over himself and put on a clean robe. Then he followed me to my room, bowed to the ground, and said, 'You must be tired after so long a ride, and I want to know if there is not something I can do to help you.'"

The education of the people, especially of the peasantry, is extremely superficial. It must remain so as long as the scripts remain, of which the decipherment virtually demands a ready knowledge of thousands of characters, more or less complicated, and employed in a variety of forms and ways. What would the education of our own people amount to if, as a preliminary to the comprehension of elementary literature, such a system of sound and idea-representation had to be acquired? It can only be attempted in youth; no European has ever mastered it.

The book must be read by every one who desires to know what Old Japan was, and how it has come to be the New Japan that is. We specially commend to the reader's attention the graphic picture of society which is given in the extracts contained in chap. x. It is a typical and most interesting story of the eighteenth century, and we can well believe that "could Arai have been transplanted to the Europe of his day, he would have been at home with the statesmen and scholars" of the period. A full translation of the autobiography here quoted will be found in the Transactions above mentioned, of which a reprint, with a sufficient commentary, would be a most acceptable addition to the world's knowledge of Old Japan.

Something might have been said in praise of the Japanese Government, with whose conduct during the last three decades, in nearly all foreign relations, the hypocrisy, duplicity, and violence exhibited by Europe in the Min, in Shantung, and in Liao-tung during recent years, have afforded a striking contrast.

---

A Register of National Bibliography. By William Prideaux Courtney. 2 vols. (Constable & Co.)

UNDER the modest title of 'A Register,' Mr. W. P. Courtney has produced a work that takes a more comprehensive view of the subject to which he has devoted himself than any yet achieved in England. Bibliography, like Socialism, was a creation of the latter half of the eighteenth century, and it may be said to have sprung into existence with De Bure's 'Bibliographie Instructive.' This work, which, with all its faults, laid the foundation on which all succeeding structures have been built, was published between the years 1763 and 1768 in seven volumes, and, curiously enough, does not seem to have found admittance into Mr. Courtney's 'Register.' Since then the study has advanced by leaps and bounds, and the enormous growth in modern times of works upon the subject has created a demand which Mr. Courtney's book very adequately supplies. In his preface Mr. Courtney informs us that more than twenty years ago he proposed to himself the publication of a volume on national bibliography, and for the last four years it has been the occupation of his life. The work has been carried out with the thoroughness that might have been expected from the joint compiler of the 'Bibliotheca Cornubiensis.' Mr. Courtney has been better than his word, and, far from confining himself to "national" subjects, has included in his plan the most useful works compiled by foreign bibliographers, for which his principal authority has been Stein's 'Manuel de Bibliographie Générale.' General works on bibliography, therefore, he has placed under the headings of their respective countries, and his lists have been drawn up with great fulness and precision. Such works as Asselineau's 'Bibliographie Romantique' and Champfleury's 'Les Vignettes Romantiques,' which are entered under 'France,' might perhaps have been more conveniently placed under the heading 'Romanticism.' In the general plan of his work Mr. Courtney has adopted the principle of that eminent bibliophile the Count de Fortsas, who "inscrivait ses livres pêle-mêle, et sans suivre aucun système de bibliographie." An alphabetical order, without any regard to classification, is doubtless an advantage in a work which will be consulted by the student like a dictionary. Mr. Courtney acknowledges in his preface that "perfection in such labours is beyond the reach of man"; and that there should be omissions in a work of this nature is inevitable. The wonder is that a necessarily cursory examination should reveal so few.

It is a curious fact that in literary bibliography the most barren period is the eighteenth century. The very comprehensive 'Collections and Notes' of Mr. W. Carew Hazlitt terminate with the year 1700, and the useful British Museum 'Catalogue of Early English Books' draws the line sixty years earlier. The leading writers of the nineteenth century have formed the subject of exhaustive monographs by Mr. T. J. Wise and other enthusiasts, amongst whom a small knot of amateurs on the other side of the Atlantic may be reckoned. But of the great luminaries of the age of Anne and the early Georges no bibliography drawn up on scientific lines exists. Mr. Courtney seems to share this disdain of the Augustans. He has entered W. J. Thoms's exertions on 'The Dunciad,' and Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole's tentative notes upon the writings of Swift; but he has ignored the valuable bibliographies appended to Mr. G. A. Aitken's 'Life of Steele,' 1889, vol. ii. pp. 387-428, and to the same writer's 'Life and Works of Arbuthnot,' 1892, pp. 176-88. Of Fielding—novelist, dramatist, essayist, and versifier—no worthy bibliography exists, though readers of the New York Bibliographer were once led to hope that the capable pen of Mr. Austin Dobson might have undertaken the task. Another omission, of perhaps greater importance, in connexion with the period is that of Charles Wentworth Dilke's 'Papers of a Critic,' which was published in 1875 under the editorial care of his grandson, and is replete with accurate and illuminating bibliographical information. Mr. Dilke's papers were originally communicated to The Athenæum and Notes and Queries, and while the latter periodical seems to have been diligently explored by Mr. Courtney, many important papers in the former have escaped his notice. Among them may be mentioned the late Mr. Edward Solly's article on 'Pope's Dunciad,' which appeared in this journal on October 24th, 1885, and Mr. W. Roberts's notes on Lodge's 'Rosalind' in the issue for March 29th, 1902.

Amongst modern writers, John Addington Symonds's 'Renaissance in Italy' receives mention more than once; but the list of that writer's published works which is appended to his 'Biography' by Mr. Horatio F. Brown (vol. ii. pp. 387-90) is omitted. Nor is reference made to the late Lord De Tabley's writings, which have been dealt with by Mr. Edmund Gosse in his 'Critical Kit-Kats,' 1896, pp. 165-95; by Mr. Tinsley Pratt in The Manchester Quarterly for April, 1900; and by Mr. Hugh Walker in his recent little monograph. Under the head of 'Locker-Lampson,' the late Mr. Davenport Adams's notes on the bibliography of the 'London Lyrics' in The Bookman for July, 1895, might properly have found insertion. The very useful bibliographies of contemporary English writers which were published in Literature, before the amalgamation of that journal with The Academy, and those in The English Illustrated Magazine since April, 1903, should not have been overlooked. In modern French literature references are made to the bibliographies of Baudelaire and Hugo, Gautier, De Musset, and Mérimée, though in the case of the first-mentioned writer the scarce little brochure by MM. A. de la Fizelière and Georges Decaux, which was published in 1868, might have been included. Nor should Mr. Courtney have omitted the excellent bibliography of Glatigny, which was issued in 1875 with an introduction by Jules Claretie, or that of Petrus Borel and Alexandre Dumas by A. Parran, which appeared in 1881, or, again, the catalogue of the Noilly Library, which is a bibliographical repertory of the works of the "Romantiques." The very valuable information afforded on these subjects by Le Livre and its successors has apparently escaped notice. While Cruikshank as an illustrator has received due justice, it is probably as a concession to British prudery that the publications of Erastène Ramiro on the work of Félicien Rops have been ignored, notwithstanding the amount of valuable bibliographical information that they contain. But when sufficient allowance has been made for the omissions which are almost inevitable in a work of this nature, the fact remains that to Mr. Courtney students of art, science, and literature are under obligations for a work which is without a rival in the branch of scholarship embraced by it. The index, which has been compiled by Mr. Edward Smith, the author of 'William Cobbett, a Biography,' has been severely tested, and very few errata have been discovered in it.

---

La Reine Margot et la Fin des Valois (1553-1615) d'après les Mémoires et les Documents.
By Charles Merki. (Paris, Plon-Nourrit.)

M. MERKI seems to have set before himself the task of pleasing all parties. Whilst solicitous to show that, unlike so many of his historical brethren, he is no dupe of "la légende de la reine Margot," and can be as severely scientific as a Taine or a Gardiner, he by no means disdains to dip into the sources of the said legend, and to besprinkle his notes, and sometimes also his text, with anecdotes piquant, but of confessedly doubtful authenticity. A good instance of his method is the passage where he winds up his account of how the Queen of Navarre, by bribing her gaoler and entering into communication with the League, turned her rock-prison at Usson into an "ark of safety." He cites the 'Divorce Satyrique'—an authority of whose real value he shows himself fully cognizant elsewhere—to the effect that as soon as Canillac's back was turned Marguerite deprived his wife of the jewels given her as a bribe, dismissed her, and made herself master of the place, so that the marquis "looked like a fool" (se trouva bête) and became a laughing-stock to the Huguenot chief. And then he adds: "Il n'y a qu'un regret à avoir, c'est que cette histoire amusante n'est probablement pas vraie," and quotes a letter of Guise which makes it tolerably certain that the whole thing was arranged between him and Henri III.'s treacherous governor. It is certain that Canillac soon joined the League, and that his wife, the Marquise, became first lady-in-waiting to her whom she was supposed to have so cruelly duped. In another place the author adorns his text with a supposed meeting between Marguerite, returning to Paris after her long absence, and her old lover, Harlay de Chamvallon. The latter is represented as handing her out of her carriage by the express order of the husband who had recently divorced her, and thus took "a petty vengeance in doubtful taste" upon his late wife. The trait is, perhaps, not inconsistent with the character of Henri Quatre; but a note stands at the foot of the page which tells us that the only authority for the supposed incident is that of Scipion Dupleix, who, as we learn in another chapter, recompensed the favours of his benefactress by calumniating her memory.

It is certain that Marguerite was no saint, and M. Merki, who has little objection to retailing scandal about her and her family which is not fit for reproduction, does them, on the whole, substantial justice. He opens with an elaborate description of the Court, in which grew up not only Marguerite de Valois herself, but also one of her chief rivals, Gabrielle d'Estrées, and that contemporary whose misfortunes exceeded even her own, Mary Stuart. He points out how, although the story of the last of the Valois, like that of the rest of her family, has been almost entirely written by her enemies, only one actual crime is attributed to her in addition to her amorous escapades, and that—the supposed procuring of the murder of her mortal enemy, Du Gast, the âme damnée of Henri III. — in the estimation of contemporaries a mere peccadillo, "simple retour de fortune." Yet it was an age when any one who could pay for the privilege had his hired cut-throats, whose deeds much more often than not went unpunished; and the Queen of Navarre had assuredly no lack of relentless enemies, from her brother King Henri to the latest favourite of her volatile husband. Even her reputation for unchastity is largely the creation of Huguenot and Bourbon pamphleteers and pasquinade-writers, in whose mud-collections historians have heedlessly raked. Furthermore, the deceit, in which she almost equalled her mother and brothers, arose to a great extent out of the necessities of her position, dependent as she was at almost all times upon others, and, indeed, at their mercy. Marguerite resembled Catherine de Médicis in her talents for diplomacy, and also, it seems, up to a certain point in her career, in her mother's best quality, her strong family feeling. Curiously enough, however, her character would seem to have had its closest affinity in that of one of her bitterest foes, her brother, the last and worst of the Valois kings. Both Henri and Marguerite had not only a strong artistic bent, but also genuine instincts for governing; but in each case the circumstances of their age were against them, so that while the young victor of Jarnac sank into a superstitious debauchee, loathed by every one but his minions, his sister, whose marriage was projected to unite two warring religions, lived, forsaken by her husband and hunted by her brother, to become the helpless victim of events. Forced into her marriage with Henri de Navarre by Catherine de Médicis and Charles IX., Marguerite would appear to have felt a genuine friendship for her husband (though this is not M. Merki's view), but she certainly had as little love for him as he for her. She is thought to have saved his life after St. Bartholomew, and on several subsequent occasions is known to have nursed him tenderly in sickness. But she crossed his plans by revealing (apparently out of family loyalty) the plot for his escape from Court two years later, and when he succeeded in effecting it remained behind till it was judged that Valois interests would be served better by her presence with, than her separation from, the King of Navarre. The short period of her sojourn in Bearnese territory is said to have been the happiest of her life: "car les deux époux," writes the most recent editor of Marguerite's memoirs, somewhat naïvely, "n'avaient guère à se gêner mutuellement dans leurs amours." But after a time she found her position as a Catholic in a Huguenot Court not a little painful, complicated as it was by her financial dependence upon the French monarchy, and the irreconcilability of its interests with those of Navarre. That she was responsible for the so-called "Guerre des Amoureux," we agree with our author in thinking barely credible; in her memoirs the queen expressly denies the charge. She had no interest in embroiling her husband and brother, but rather the contrary. In the course of it she was once actually under fire—at Nérac.

Queen Margot has preserved a pleasant picture of the Court of Navarre at this period; of the reunions (after Mass and the prêche had been separately got over) in laurel and cypress alleys, or the park which bordered on the river, the remainder of the day passing "en toutes sortes d'honnêtes plaisirs, le bal se tenant d'ordinaire l'après-dinée et le soir." The intrigues of Navarre's mistress, La Fosseuse, on the one hand and those of Henri III. on the other, drove her back again to the French Court, where she was fated to suffer still worse things from her brother and his mignons. When once again, and for the last time, she returned to her husband, it was in very different circumstances; she was used as the shuttlecock of the two Henris, and ultimately took refuge in despair in the arms of the Ligue, first holding her dowry town of Agen desperately against all comers, and then flinging herself on the mercies of the half-bandit captains of two rocky fortresses of Auvergne. Finally, when Henri Quatre had secured the French throne, Marguerite agreed gracefully, and, it seems probable, not uninfluenced by really patriotic motives, to the divorce, and lived in Paris and at Issy as the friend of the new queen, even bequeathing her maternal property to the heir of the new Bourbon dynasty. So, unlike her Scottish contemporary, she ended her days in quiet waters, dying in the odour of sanctity, harassed only by the results of her lifelong prodigality. The best summary of her career is contained in what M. Merki well terms the noble periods of Richelieu:—

"Elle se vit la plus grande princesse de son temps, fille, sœur et femme de grands rois, et nonobstant cet avantage, elle fut depuis le jouet de la fortune, le mépris des peuples qui lui devaient être soumis, et vit une autre tenir la place qui lui avait été destinée."

For the rest, the reader will find in this volume a careful estimate of Catherine de Médicis, the mother and inspirer of the last

Valois kings, which is less favourable to her than that of Mr. Butler in the 'Cambridge Modern History,' but probably nearer the truth; and amongst other matters, many curious pages about the curled mignons of Henri III. and the odious mixture of extravagant exquisiteness and debased religion which constituted the life of his Court. The Massacre of St. Bartholomew, moreover, is shown clearly to have been but an important incident of a whole series of religious barbarities, in which the Huguenots were at least as often as not the aggressors. Several of Henri Quatre's cynical pleasantries are encountered; but the founder of the Bourbon monarchy cuts a sorry figure in the story of Queen Margot. M. Merki shows the usual Gallic inability to handle English names; in connexion with Anjou's absurd wooing of Elizabeth and his wild attempt upon Flanders, he writes of "Kobbam," "Lord Hemsdon" (Hunsdon), "Willoughby," and "Scheffield."

NEW NOVELS.

The Disciple's Wife. By Vincent Brown. (Duckworth & Co.)

THE average reader of fiction, seeking only distraction, will perhaps be bored by this book; but the critic, and more especially the critic who has given serious consideration to this author's other two books, will be interested by it. In his first book, 'A Magdalen's Husband,' the author showed the influence of Mr. Hardy and a good deal of sincerity. In his second effort, 'The Dark Ship,' one saw the influence of Mr. Meredith and considerable artificiality. In this third effort the critic naturally looks for some revelation of the author himself. In the case of a writer of any promise the third book is important. 'The Disciple's Wife' is disappointing. It shows cleverness, and it shows a certain gift for writing and for story; but it has little real depth, and it altogether lacks intellectual robustness. The author's besetting sin is that he makes mountains of molehills; he solicits our sympathy as for real human tragedy, and offers us rather dull comedy; his mental outlook lacks the breadth and the sanity which come to a strong mind as the result of contact with life's stern realities. His seriousness over trifles is more than mere evidence of a halting sense of humour, it is evidence of inexperience where the larger issues of life are concerned. Also, this third book shows no fertility of invention, no originality of thought. We have here a repetition of the "Magdalen" of the first book, and a very irritating creation she is, an undoubted female prig, whose prosy moralizings go far towards excusing any shortcomings that we see in her husband. Further, she actually does love another man; and, as the fact is never hidden, one could not expect her husband to enjoy that. We have also a husband and wife of another social order, the squire and his lady, with an up-to-date "Dobbin" in attendance as watch-dog. He uses a motor-cycle, but that does not save him from being the watch-dog of early Victorian fiction. The squire's lady is simply a woman without virtue. She is decked in modern style, and in the end we are asked to regard her as a reformed character; but, as a fact, her reformation is as unconvincing as the moralizings of the carpenter's saintly wife before referred to are wearying and untrue to cottage life. The heroine's husband was a clean-lived prig, and she was a female rake; and—"Never the twain shall meet." The villain is depicted as a magnificent animal, but allows himself to be knocked about by a "watch-dog," who is confessedly only capable of the sort of pedestrianism required for Oxford Street. All this is unsound and lacking in the matter-of-fact earnestness of real life. Yet the author has a pretty style in writing, and if he would cast aside pompousness and tell a story with perfect naturalness, he might produce a fine novel. He has ability, or all these words would not have been given to his third essay in fiction. The trouble is that he also has a good deal of the oversophistication which characterizes the age we live in.

In Search of the Unknown. By Robert W. Chambers. (Constable & Co.)

THE author of 'Cardigan' and 'The Maid at Arms' breaks new ground here. The clash of steel, the beat of galloping hoofs on the highway, the rattle of musketry, and the full-flavoured, picturesque atmosphere of the romance of action, are not among the attractions of this interesting tale. Some will regret a modern workaday narrative from Mr. Chambers. Yet here we find much that is romantic, and somewhat that is indubitably eerie and mysterious. The author is a good craftsman. Some of the chapters of this tale have appeared elsewhere in unconnected form, but there are no awkward joints in the book; the machinery never creaks. The interest is sustained, and the story stands four-square and complete upon its own bottom. We are asked to believe in some tolerably incredible events, but the author's workmanship makes the task easy, a simple pleasure—while we are engaged upon the book; and that, after all, is the principal test in story. We welcome Mr. Chambers in whatever garb he chooses to adopt, but we prefer to meet him with cloak and sword.

The Macdonnells. By J. A. C. Sykes. (Heinemann.)

THIS story aims at presenting a picture of the lives of an early Victorian family and a reconstruction of the manners, morals, and habits of the time. It is still so close to us that the task should be both easy and difficult. Here the method is hardly happy, and to us it seems not to result in a marked success, though there are scenes and persons not altogether unlikable. The natural habitat of the Macdonnells is supposed to be John Bull's other island, though they have made of this island their principal home. Their ancestry is Scotch, but they are of the stock of Irish landowners. They go back to the days of a monarch here described as "the ungainly, slobbering son of Mary Stuart." The story of this not very attractive or interesting family begins, for the reader, in the year 1858—a date not of the most inspiring kind. No very exciting political outlook nor any spirit of wild adventure prevailed. With few exceptions art and literature, furniture and clothing, showed neither effervescence nor beauty. Still, allowing that romance was less the keynote of the hour than solid comfort and aggressive respectability, we think that some specimens of what we call "nice people" must have existed. They cannot all have been so stupid, gross, and material as they are here represented. The author seems herself aware of the absence of glamour, but she holds the epoch responsible. We cannot. No Zeitgeist, however uninspiring, can efface all the minor graces. One pauses before writing down an age as one of "humbug," in capital letters, as the author does here. And even were it so, this could not fairly account for all the vulgarity and unpleasantness of almost every one in the story. Love of Berlin wool and huge horrors in mahogany cannot altogether choke the good seed and the wholesome atmosphere of life. It is a one-sided picture, mostly made up of grossness, hypocrisy, and austerity unleavened with other emotions. We should say that the material had not been sufficiently seen and felt through a transforming medium.

Playing the Game: a Story of Japan. By Douglas Sladen. (White & Co.)

THIS story of English and Japanese centres in the British Legation at Tokyo. Lord Clapham, the British minister, conceals behind apparent unfitness and much tea-drinking a calm philosophy which eventually stands his country in good stead. His niece, Chiquita Palafox, Spanish by birth, and kittenish by nature, dabbles in diplomacy with no little skill, and a good deal of risk to herself and her admirers. Tiffany (First Secretary) and his wife, easygoing, blindly British, luncheon-loving, supply the necessary foil to Orlando Jevons, the half-Italian

"Secretary-Interpreter of the Legation, and really by far the most important person in it, being the only member of it who could speak a word of Japanese, and a person of boundless energy, while the rest were dawdlers."

These figures and others provide an agreeable kaleidoscope, manipulated with some skill by a romancer as lavish of incident as he is fond of character-sketches. The Japanese background of the work is the most interesting feature. Incidental teaching is often the best, and Mr. Sladen really tells a good deal that is worth knowing of Japanese life and ideas. The text is disfigured by many careless mistakes, and the story looks as if it had been written in a hurry.

The Taming of the Brute. By Frances Harrod. (Methuen & Co.)

THE eighteenth century forms a picturesque setting for Mrs. Harrod's fascinating tamer and her no less interesting brute. Neglected from boyhood, virtually a prisoner in his remote Welsh home, surrounded by low men and slatternly women, Evan Rhys has sunk to the lowest depths. Rumours of his deplorable condition find their way to the gay city of Bath and to the ears of a cousin—the beautiful, fashionable, and wealthy Mistress Cecilie Manners—who, with quixotic fervour, starts forth to reclaim the rake. Here we have all the elements of an original and effective romance. Mrs. Harrod knows how to make good use of them, and the result is a story enjoyable to read, which might be dramatized with effect.

Guthrie of the 'Times.' By Joseph A. Altsheler. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE Times of the story is a far remove from that of Printing House Square. The central figure in this story of American journalistic and political life is a correspondent in one of the States capitals of a New York daily newspaper. He has a conscience, and in the beginning we find him being appealed to by a bishop not to send to his paper certain exclusive news he has obtained of the defalcations of a dishonest government servant of good family, whose relatives naturally wish to preserve their family name from the slur that would be cast upon it by public recognition of the defaulter's offences. Guthrie pleads his duty to his employer, and, what is more to the point, does it, after making a good deal of unnecessary fuss. The bishop shows an unclerical amount of sulkiness, but beams sweetly again next day, on learning that the honest Guthrie, in addition to a "thousand-word dispatch" to his editor in New York regarding the well-born rogue, has also sent a private telegram asking that his news should be withheld if possible. We must suppose that New York newspapers are by no means all "yellow," for the sensational "thousand words" is never printed. From this point onwards we follow the honest Guthrie with tolerable interest in a steady ascent to social distinction, a triumphant and unexceptionable love affair, and nomination for political honours. We do not envy Guthrie, but we rejoice in his happiness. The following paragraph is a fine instance of the remoteness of the scene and atmosphere of this story from, let us say, Westminster. The Senate House is being described:—

"Old Senator Wells from the mountains had taken his boots off to ease his aged feet, and his gray home-knit yarn socks, undoubtedly the work of his wife, were exposed for all to see."

One cannot criticize this type of story, however. It is to be enjoyed or laid aside, according to taste and temperament. It is very American.

The House of Merrilees. By Archibald Marshall. (Alston Rivers.)

THIS is an excellent story of a mystery so well and so artistically concealed that the final disclosure gives rise to a feeling of pleasure, not only at the nature of the surprise, but also at its inevitableness; and what greater praise can be given to the weaver of plots? The tale concerns the son of a very wealthy baronet—the author follows convention so far—whose mother died at his birth, and whose father causes him in consequence to be brought up elsewhere, ignorant of all the circumstances of his true origin and pedigree. The idea, of course, is not novel, but it is worked out with so much skill and freshness of detail that we confidently recommend the book even to those who are suffering from a surfeit of the modern detective story; and we hasten to add that crime plays no part in it. The style is simple and correct, Mr. Marshall having grasped the often forgotten truth that the King's English is in no way incompatible even with sensational fiction.

Aunt Phipps. By Tom Gallon. (Hutchinson & Co.)

MR. GALLON is incorrigibly fluent and recklessly prolific. But, upon the whole, 'Aunt Phipps' is not likely to disappoint any of the numerous kindly persons who are accustomed to find pleasure, and even emotional thrills, in his lucubrations. Indeed, here and there one comes upon sentences which suggest that Mr. Gallon has devoted more care than usual to his handling of 'Aunt Phipps.' But the pathos and the sentiment generally are desperately stereotyped. It must be borne in mind, however, that, consciously or otherwise, a great many worthy people prefer their sentiment in fiction to be of a well-defined order. It obviates all need of independent thought, and the lachrymal glands may safely be relied upon by the unsophisticated to respond at the proper moment to an author who uses only the time-honoured signs and signals of his craft. Still, when we remember that Mr. Gallon all too definitely takes Dickens for his model, we cannot but regret his apparent disinclination to pursue the thoroughness of his master's methods. More time and more labour are what this author's blameless conceptions require.

The Girl of La Gloria. By Clara Driscoll. (Putnam's Sons.)

DESPITE its various coloured illustrations, the reviewer regrets to be unable to find any good words to say for this melodramatic tale of Texas. The heroine is described as a very beautiful half-Mexican, half-American girl. Her nature, as here unfolded, is certainly not beautiful, and the reader is not able to work up any appreciable amount of sympathy for the love-sick young American whom we leave mourning her loss. The best thing about the book is its presentment of a kind of life which has passed away now, but which a few years ago made the homesteads of great cattle ranches in the Far West extremely picturesque places. The author's diction is commonplace, and her grammar none too sound.

Le Passé Vivant. By Henri de Régnier. (Paris, Mercure de France.)

M. DE RÉGNIER's new "Roman Moderne," poetic and naughty at the same time, is having so considerable a success in Paris that it does not seem necessary to join in the discussion as to whether it can be said to be a novel. It does not hang together, and it does not end: this much is clear. On the other hand, no one denies the charm of many of its pages. The personages are real people of the Paris world; there is a lifelike account of a real ball at the well-known house of a former Italian resident by the entrance to the Parc Monceau. The art-collectors will probably not complain of the liberties which are taken with them. To many readers of all countries the chief interest of the book will lie in the descriptions of Venice and in the account of Casanova. Notes and Queries will doubtless find ground for corrections in the long list given of Casanova's loves. Most of the male characters vie with one another in a knowledge of the 'Memoirs' as intimate as that of an old Don with 'Pickwick.'

EGYPTOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Ehnasya, 1904. By W. M. Flinders Petrie. (Egypt Exploration Fund.)—This, the twenty-sixth Memoir of the Egypt Exploration Fund, seems to have been written under the influence of ill-temper. We are told on the first page that the excavations here recorded were resorted to only as a pis aller by Prof. Petrie on "the refusal of the Egyptian Archaeological Committee to allow English work at Saqqarah." This seems to be Prof. Petrie's way of stating the fact that the Service des Antiquités refused him leave to dig on a site where M. Maspero's lieutenants have been at work for several seasons. Later we find many reflections upon the work of Dr. Naville, who made excavations for the Fund so long ago as 1891 at Ahnas, now called by Prof. Petrie Ehnasya, and who seems to have carelessly omitted to foresee that Prof. Petrie might fourteen years later require the site for his own purposes. It is true that Prof. Petrie quotes with some asperity a statement by Dr. Naville that "we cleared what I believe to be all that is still extant of the great temple of Arsaphes," and then proceeds to show the baselessness of this belief by claiming to have himself cleared "not only a space as large again as Dr. Naville's hall behind that [sic], but also discovering a great court much larger than the hall in front of it." The remains of this great court, however, as presented on Plate V. of the present volume, seem to consist entirely of the fragments of two walls at right angles, and it requires a hearty faith to be convinced of its existence from the evidence here supplied.

To this court Prof. Petrie seems to have devoted the greater part of his activity. He explains that he removed a mass of earth, in some places forty feet deep, left on it from the earlier excavations, and found here the triad of red granite representing a king, probably Rameses II., between the gods Ptah and Hershef, which was mentioned in The Athenæum of July 9th, 1904. This is not figured here, and, as it has been retained at the Khasr-el-Nil Museum, was not exhibited in London last year, and we therefore have to take Prof. Petrie's word for its excellence. But it was under the surface of the ground in what he calls the Hypostyle Hall, previously laid bare by Dr. Naville, that he found the little gold statuette of the god Hershef which he seems to think is in itself a full justification for his exertions. As here depicted, it is a pretty and well-executed piece, bearing across its base an inscription which is nonsense as it stands, but which Prof. Petrie gallantly attempts to show—not without success—can be twisted into sense by casting out some, but not all, of the signs in the last of the three vertical columns that it contains, and arranging them in what he calls a "base line." His argument from this is that it was copied from another statue, which is possible. Yet it is open to the interpretation that the engraver did not know the sense of the signs that he was copying, which would cast doubts upon the antiquity, not perhaps of the figure itself, but of its inscription.

Of Prof. Petrie's other gleanings there is not much to be said. On two of his plates we find the three principal inscriptions from "the entrance to the temple" in Dr. Naville's volume 'Ahnas and Paheri' published over again, the only noticeable difference being that the monuments are now slightly more broken than when Dr. Naville copied them. On another plate we find a long lintel from which the inscription has in effect been effaced, leaving only, beside two t signs, the fragments of the hawk-name of Usertsen III., which, thanks to its being in duplicate, can be restored. No one has ever doubted the existence of monuments of Usertsen here, so that the use of recording this is not very evident. Then there are two fragments of a vertical inscription from which Prof. Petrie claims to have discovered the name of a hitherto unknown twelfth-dynasty queen, whom he calls Shedtefsa, though there is nothing to show that the lady in question was a queen or royal personage of any kind, unless we choose to read into the text the words suten hemt, which are not there. The few other inscriptions here given are, for the most part, too fragmentary to yield any information, and none of them appears to be of importance, the most noticeable feature about them being the very large scale on which they are reproduced. The rest of the volume is occupied with the usual pottery, a very few scarabs and other small objects, some Roman amphoræ, and other common relics of the same period. A small map by Dr. Schafer and Dr. Wilcken, already published, is reproduced, and chapters by Mr. Currelly and Prof. Petrie conjointly tell how they searched at Buto, Gurob, and Sedment, and found little or nothing.

The usual chapter upon the inscriptions by Mr. Griffith or some other recognized student of the Egyptian language is lacking from this volume, but Prof. Petrie gives a fresh rendering of an inscription already translated by Dr. Naville, with the remark that "all differences between this reading and that of Dr. Naville have been verified." We give the two readings side by side, that the reader may judge of the importance of Prof. Petrie's corrections of his predecessor:—

Naville, 1894.
"The living Horus, the mighty bull who loves Ma, the lord of the Sed periods, like his father Phthah Tonen, the king of Upper and Lower Egypt, Usermara sotep en Ra, the son of Ra, the lord of diadems, Rameses, who loves Amen, erected these monuments to his father Hershef, the lord of the two lands."

Petrie, 1905.
"The living one, the Horus, the strong bull, loving Maat, Lord of the festivals like Hershef and Ptah, the Prince, King of Upper and Lower Egypt, Lord of both plains, User-maat, ra-sotep-en-ra, son of Ra, lord of epiphanies. Mery - Amen-Ramesu, (festivals) made by him in his monuments of his father Hershef, King of both plains."

In the concluding sentence, it may be remarked that while Dr. Naville is right, Prof. Petrie's translator is clearly wrong, having evidently misread one of the signs. It may also be mentioned that Anaaref is not, as Prof. Petrie states, "a form of Osiris," but the synonym (meaning "the place where nothing grows") of Heracleopolis, called by the Egyptians Henen-suten, or its temple. So the phrase neb tain, which is here translated "lord of both plains," and made to refer to "the two level shores of the Nile," was shown long ago by M. Maspero to mean "régent des terroirs de l'Est et de l'Ouest," and when used, as in the case then before him, as an epithet of Hershef, and following the words "king of the countries of the North and South," means "master of the four houses of the world," or, as we should say, of the four quarters of the globe. The slovenly English used in this volume we have already noticed, and it may also be noted that Prof. Petrie speaks of the north-east corner of a portico as "the opposite corner" to the northwest; says that columns, apparently eight in number, which have been "distributed all over the world," have been identified "by the courtesy of the curators in charge of each," and describes his gold statuette as "the largest such statuette that has survived the wreck of Egypt." A partial explanation of the poverty of the contents of this volume is, perhaps, to be found in an inset offering to the subscribers a further set of "Plates and Text supplementary to Ehnasya," at an additional charge of about half the price of the present volume. This seems to contain a series of Roman terracotta figures and lamps of the ordinary kind, and of no Egyptological value. Yet the subscriber has either to submit to this additional mulct, or find his set of the Fund's Memoirs incomplete. We believe that the subscriptions to the Fund have materially fallen off during the last few years, and that the Council have had to draw heavily upon their reserves to continue the very useful work on which they are employed. In order to put an end to such a state of things, we should advise them to look more carefully to their publications than they seem to have done in this instance.

Die Aegyptische Religion. Von Adolf Erman. (Berlin, Reimer.)—This excellent little handbook is issued apparently for the use of visitors to the Berlin Museum, and there fills the same place as is taken here by the useful 'Guides' produced by the Curator of the Egyptian Department of the British Museum and his assistants. Dr. Erman deprecates too minute criticism in his preface by protesting that it is not a "learned" work; but nothing that comes from his pen can be anything but scholarly, and we can find no fault whatever with the sound exposition that follows of the religion of the Egyptians in its broad outlines. The trouble here is, as he points out, rather in the mass than in the dearth of material, and when we consider that our evidence for Egyptian beliefs extends over a period of about five thousand years, during which time the religion was, like other religions, continually subject to the changes produced by the importation of new ideas, the difficulty of getting a clear picture of the subject can be appreciated. Dr. Erman hints that the clue will probably be found rather in the study of animism, fetishism, and what we kindly call the lower religions of primitive folk, than in the more articulate and better organized theories of modern theology; and for this there is much to be said. In his chapter on magic Dr. Erman perhaps rather begs the question when he declares magic to be a "rude exorcism" of religion; but this is a disputed point, on which it may be unsafe to dogmatize. One of the best features of the book is its numerous illustrations, taken in great part from the Egyptian antiquities in which the Berlin Museum is so rich, but which have been, unfortunately, little studied by English Egyptologists hitherto.

Primitive Art in Egypt. By Jean Capart. (Grevel & Co.)—This handsome book, which we last year reviewed in its original form (see The Athenæum, No. 4012), has now appeared in English, and we see nothing to alter in the opinion we then expressed concerning it. One or two of the plates from English sources have dropped out, and a few others from monuments in the Berlin Museum—which seems lately to be less chary of its treasures than it used to be—have been added. M. Capart's own part in the book appears to have been mostly confined to the selection of the matters to be reproduced, and this task has been discharged with both skill and judgment. The translation by Miss Griffith is adequate to its purpose; but we have noted some oddities, such as "Pharoah" for Pharaoh, "the royal statues are only know to us," and "had common origin with the ancient Chaldeans," which may be due to faulty correction of the proofs. Yet it has been brought well up to date, and is therefore an improvement on the French edition.

Our Sudan, its Pyramids and Progress. By John Ward. (Murray.)—Without pretensions to literary graces, Mr. Ward—"Skip the letter-press, the pictures will teach you all you need to know," is his own advice to his readers—yet succeeds in turning out books which it is impossible to put down unfinished when once begun. With four, six, or eight illustrations to each page, he has here presented a sort of sketch, alike of the antiquities and of the present appearance of the Sudan, which leaves the most lively impression on the mind of the reader. It is true that his "pictures" are nearly all snapshots collected from the officials and tourists that he has met on his journeys, that his archaeological knowledge is so slender that he credits the Coptic alphabet with at least four more letters than it really possesses, and that he calls a major in the 2nd Battalion "Colonel of the Grenadier Guards." Yet he may be sure that before long his book will be in the hands of every tourist who ventures as far as Khartoum, and with this we suppose he will be content. He certainly supplies a much-needed account of the pyramids at Meroë and of the temples at Naga and Solib, built by Egyptianizing kings of Ethiopia, which we have looked for in vain elsewhere. Whether the Ethiopian inscriptions, which he speaks of with awe as defying interpretation by "Profs. Sayce and Petrie, Llewellyn Griffith, and Dr. Herbert Walker," are as mysterious as he implies may be doubted, as they seem to be written in good Egyptian enough. Nor did Prof. Petrie, as he says, discover in "the desert behind Abydos all the lost tombs of the early kings of Egypt of the first and second dynasties." The discovery of first-dynasty remains at Abydos was due to M. Amélineau, who found there before he left the site the names of the three kings of that time who have been with certainty identified, and it is still a moot point whether the construction unearthed by him or his successor, Prof. Petrie, consists of tombs at all. It is more astonishing to find Mr. Ward stating that "the British Museum did some good pioneer work of this kind [i.e., scientific investigation of Sudan antiquities] just after the country fell into our hands, but cannot be expected to send their officials here again," in apparent ignorance of the fact that Dr. Budge has been excavating at Jebel Barkal and elsewhere for many years, and that the results, as we lately announced (see The Athenæum, March 25th), will shortly be published. These mistakes, however, will not damage the ordinary tourist's enjoyment of the book, and there can be no doubt of its interest or its future popularity.

ESSAYS AND SKETCHES.

Books and Personalities. By H. W. Nevinson. (Lanc.)—Mr. Nevinson is certainly not an indolent reviewer. The reviews and criticisms of which this book is composed deal with a varied company of literary personalities. The net is spread very wide. Great and small—Mr. Belloc and Browning, Goethe and Aubrey Beardsley, Æschylus and Mr. Yeats, Dolling and De Wet, Carlyle, Heine, and Mr. Le Gallienne, and many others—are gathered in. And in dealing with them all Mr. Nevinson either has his point of view, or manages to reflect, brightly enough, the general tendency of educated opinion. The modern art of reviewing involves the art of compression. Mr. Nevinson usually contrives to say a good deal in little space; but the chief fault we have to find with his articles is that they are too short.

"If I live to be eighty," wrote Matthew Arnold in a letter here quoted, "I shall probably be the only person left in England who reads anything but newspapers and scientific publications." And many people now, who seem to be talking of books they have read, are merely quoting reviews they have seen in the newspapers. That is the danger of overmuch writing about books. But, on the other hand, a volume like the present, composed of short studies in familiar literature and appreciations of well-known figures in the republic of letters, has its value as a guide to the young traveller in the realms of go'd. But chiefly we are grateful to such a book because it compels us to verify our memories and to correct our impressions; it sends us rummaging among our bookshelves, pulling out here a copy of Carlyle, there a volume of poetry, and, best of all, it occasionally persuades us to add yet another tome to our already overladen bookcases.

We have complained that Mr. Nevinson's articles are sometimes too short. We think that in collecting his studies into a volume he would have done better to free himself from the fetters of reviewing by which he is bound. Certain inconsistencies and defects result. For instance, we note it as curious that, after writing an excellent essay on the Browning letters, Mr. Nevinson should, in a review of Mr. Chesterton's study of Browning, refer to the poet's marriage as an unilluminating fact. And the reader who goes to the same essay in search of "the broad and simple statement of delight felt in certain books and certain writers" promised in the preface may be interested by Mr. Nevinson's prophecy as to what poems of Browning will survive, but will not be edified by mere corrections of Mr. Chesterton's mistakes as to dates of publication. The essay upon Heine shows Mr. Nevinson at his best in dealing with a poet's life and works, though it contains a passage which is not to our taste:—

"Certainly when God plagiarises Heine, He does not do it by halves. There is only one fault in the poem. I think the poet whose words are the lives of men had forgotten that brevity is the soul of wit. Ten years' torment was too long for that final stanza, too long even for a poet of eternity. I am sure that Heine himself would have cut it shorter."—P. 32.

Elsewhere we are sorry to find that the writer's acquaintance with the British aristocracy, whom he is fond of criticizing, is so slight that he "has never heard an English baronet or even an earlsing to God because he was a reasonable being."

It is when he treats of Omar Khayyám that Mr. Nevinson is least happy in retaining the form of a review. For there has recently been what is vulgarly termed "a boom" in Omar, and the reviewer has had many texts and editions on which to comment. But if he has anything to say in a volume of this sort, he might well say it in the form of one essay, not in the form of three reviews, of which one is concerned with showing that Mr. Le Gallienne has not improved upon FitzGerald, and another, in a desperate attempt at sprightliness, describes the publication of Prof. York Powell's version by saying that "the Oxford Professor of Modern History came up with his little lot of twenty-four quatrains."

But it is an easy matter to express dissent, to find fault, and say.

Just this
Or that in you disgusts me; here you miss,
Or there exceed the mark.

The main thing in a book about books is that it should be readable and stimulating. And readable and stimulating these short studies undoubtedly are.

London Etchings, by A. St. John Adcock (Elkin Mathews), is a little pamphlet-like book, as slight in substance as in format. It is very much of the 'Things Seen' kind, initiated by Mr. C. L. Hind, though the sketches are longer and less vignetted. Doubtless it is well that when writers have but little to say they should say it briefly, without the padding which would once have been thought necessary. Therefore we welcome the frank slightness of such sketches. It is part of a recognition that the how is more than the how much, which is new in English literary art. To compare 'London Etchings' with 'Sketches by Boz' may seem unfair to Mr. Adcock, who is certainly not a Dickens; yet the comparison is instructive. The 'Sketches by Boz,' frankly, are not brilliant, though often very clever work; and would not have survived, had they not been followed by 'Pickwick.' They were the work of a man learning the mechanics and elements of his trade through journalism. Comparing them with the not dissimilar, if slighter work of Mr. Adcock, one becomes aware of an advantage on the modern side. One perceives an undoubted padding and unnecessary long-windedness in Dickens. Impressionism and French example have done their work during the interval. The modern sketch is swifter, directer, more eliminative, closer to essentials. Yet this leaves Dickens the qualities which are—Dickens. It concerns solely art.

It concerns, too, mainly Mr. Adcock's sketches of humanity. For with these are mingled other descriptive sketches of localities apart from humanity, which, to our mind, have less attraction. They are well done, but have something of deliberate effort and set purpose about them; nor have they the peculiar felicity and magic of phrase which alone (to our thinking) redeem the set description of scenery. The sketches of London humanity are better. They are just skilled journalistic observation, photographic work, such as nowadays is frequent in certain papers; but they are skilled, and the frequency of such work must not blind us to its trained cleverness of eye. 'The Early Tram,' for instance,—a mere report of what we should conceive an actual incident in a morning tram-journey—is done with quick selection of the essential features, and an excellent sense of humour. Mr. Adcock's pathos is apt (but not always) to be a little more conventional; there is a certain suggestion of sentimentality—from which our greatest novelists have not uniformly been free. What is lacking in such observant sketches as these is just one thing—imagination. That keeps them to the level of merely deft and clever work. But as slight and clever fragments of observation, 'London Etchings' are well done.

Parables of Life. By Hamilton Wright Mabie. (New York, the Macmillan Company; London, Macmillan & Co.)—Published in 1902, 'Parables of Life' (its author tells us) is now reissued with four additional chapters. Mr. Mabie is well known as an American author, but his book is like more than one English book, and might conceivably have been among the minor exotics of the Bodley Head. Not that we would charge the productions of this or any other firm with a general resemblance to Mr. Mabie's book, which belongs to the hothouse variety that delights us not. It is fragile, pretentious, and of the "prose-poetry" caste (so called because prosaic enough to make bad poetry, and poetic enough to make bad prose). Its various chapters are a series of allegories, aiming at high ethical purpose—which is praiseworthy, but not uncommon; and at poetic imagination—which does not succeed. Much of the style has that semi-Biblical character which is apparently deemed essential to allegory, residing largely in an insistence on "ands," where ordinary English would avoid the repetition of that particle. It is a mechanical device for imparting primitive simplicity to style; no early legend is complete without it, and poetic prose largely relies on it for distinction from merely prosaic prose. The style in general has that mingling of poetic research and self-conscious simplicity which is more irritating than unaffected elaboration.

As for the allegory, it is of the kind which, both in painting and literature, seems beloved by the Anglo-Saxon mind. In other words, it is obvious and conventional. Each allegory is a detailed elaboration of some familiar and hackneyed figurative expression or expressions. Thus 'Out of the Agony' elaborates St. Paul's metaphor of ruining the race. 'Dream and Reality' is tissue from a series of such metaphors—quitting the valley, ascending to the heights, descending into the market-place, and so forth. In 'That which Abides' we have the journey, the stumbling and soiling, the passage into the mist of death, the fair country beyond. Nor is the conventionality of leading ideas redeemed by any genuine imagination in the handling of detail. There is a sincere desire to create imaginative atmosphere; but one feels the derivativeness at every step. It is the work of an unoriginal mind steeped in poetry, and seeking itself to be poetical within the compass of prose. 'That which Abides' has a certain ethical earnestness that does much to win pardon for its allegorical obviousness; but the need for pardon is always present to our consciousness. The book will doubtless give pleasure to many—the many whose sense of moral beauty is more developed than their sense of literary beauty. For them, but for them only, it will serve. For the writer has the quality of moral sincerity, which, alas! does not carry with it imaginative sincerity. That no few conceive it does is responsible for much ineffectual literature.

Taper-Lights, by Ellen Burns Sherman (Springfield, Mass., the Gordon Flagg Company), is a volume of fugitive papers—we suppose they must be called essays, in defect of any more accurate description—by an American writer. We are familiar enough in England with the collection of fugitive exercises in literature by minor writers of fair, if inconspicuous ability; it is the hedge-flower of letters, and there is some interest in comparing with it the American growth. The English writer usually has something of a style, or at least ideas, ambitions of a style; often a quite pretty little style, tilled as carefully as the suburban villa-resident tills his strip of garden, and with as fondly manifest a pride. To show that style the essays are written; since his ideas do not observably clamour for expression. The irresponsible essay lies seductively ready for the man with one half-penny-worth of thought to an intolerable deal of style; and what use is a gun unless you kill something, or a style unless you write something? So he writes—nothing. But he writes it prettily.

With the American of like minor ability the case appears reversed. He often has something to say, if not extremely valuable; but the saying of it is a little rough. It is not precisely unliterary in style, but it lacks finish; the manner of the saying has plainly been a secondary matter. So these things are with Miss Ellen Burns Sherman. Here are a number of essays on things literary and things in general—especially things in general. And where the English writer would economize his ideas—one and a half to an essay—as things much too valuable for unthrifty usage, she pours hers out with no stint and little repetition. There are few essays without substance. One would not call them thoughtful; they are certainly not imaginative, and there is nothing of feminine sentiment or emotionality. They are just clear, observant good sense, such as well-read women often possess, but (at least on this side of the water) it is more often reserved for the drawing-room than put forth in books.

It is not remarkable, it is merely average sense, but combined with fair cultivation it makes a readable volume. The readableness is wholly in the substance, not in the manner. The manner is not journalese; it is that of a woman who has read, and is free from slovenly grammar; but it is not expert, it has no selection, no grace or finish; it has a certain hardness, and is marred for English readers by Americanisms neither expressive nor (like some Americanisms) preserved by heritage from the older English. Yet, on the whole, we incline to prefer this respectable matter without style to respectable style without matter; for, as we have said, this is a readable, though not striking book.

In spite of what we have just said, the quality of the best of the contemporary American essayists is rare; and outside Mr. Howells and Mr. Alden we know no one who possesses greater gifts of taste and style than Mr. Bliss Perry. We have received from Messrs. Gay & Bird his latest volume, The Amateur Spirit, which contains six papers on somewhat germane subjects. The general idea which has engaged Mr. Perry has been "the significance of the amateur spirit in carrying forward the daily work of our modern world." This is a theme which has been much discussed of late years, and particularly among ourselves, to whom Mr. Perry makes frequent reference. In a book by a travelled Frenchman recently published we are charged with making a business of our pleasures, contrary to the habit of the Continent. But on the other hand Mr. Perry finds that, by contrast with the American, we are amateurs in sport and pastime. It is the American (he thinks) who makes a profession of play. Well, we have the consolation of hoping that the via media is perhaps the golden mean. Medio tutissimus ibis. We stand halfway between the wear and tear of Transatlantic life, and the laissez faire of Southern Europe. Mr. Perry occupies the place of a large-minded and dispassionate judge in these matters. He weighs and dispenses justice. Thus, on behalf of expert professionalism, he says:—

"Power is indeed recognized as the ultimate test of merit; but there is a widespread tendency to overlook the fact that power is largely conditioned upon skill, and that skill depends not merely upon natural faculty, but upon knowledge and discipline."

Thus the gifted amateur, who has done so much for the world, must recognize his limitations. The expert German, who is mechanically perfect, waves aside the amateur with "Wissenschaftliche Bedeutung hat's doch nicht"; yet, admitting what that patient mechanicalism may have done for modern civilization, one must not (and Mr. Perry does not) under-estimate the force of personality. Says he, admirably:—

"Surely we are playing an interesting comedy here between heaven and the mire, and we ought to play it in an interested way. We can afford to be human. Scientific method is a handmaiden whose services have proved indispensable. No one can fill her place. We should raise her wages. But, after all, Personality is the mistress of the house. Method must be taught to know her station, and 'she is the second, not the first.' No doubt there is a temptation, in such a comparison of qualities and gifts, to dally with mere abstractions. None of us have known a wholly methodized, mechanized man."

The combination of the generous spirit of the amateur with the method of the professional is, of course, the ideal, and Mr. Perry points us to that difficult ideal. But meantime he indicates for us other dangers, as that of indifferentism, in which amateur and specialist may meet. One of his pleasantest essays is on the modern survivals of Pöcöcuranti. Other essays, belonging more or less to a unity, deal with the life of a college professor and his relations to the public; and the little volume of refined thought winds up with a paper on 'Fishing with a Worm.' This is ostensibly, and almost ostentatiously, a holiday paper, but surreptitiously and furtively we think it is what a "friendly doctor of divinity" pronounced it, an allegory. Anyhow, its character and the charm of the author's style may be estimated from the following extract, which handsomely recalls Stevenson:—

"To make the most of dull hours, to make the best of dull people, to like a poor jest better than none, to wear the threadbare coat like a gentleman, to be outvoted with a smile, to hitch your wagon to the old horse if no star is handy—this is the wholesome philosophy taught by fishing with a worm..... For life is not easy, after all is said. It is a long brook to fish, and it needs a stout heart and a wise patience. All the flies there are in the book, and all the bait that can be carried in the box, are likely to be needed ere the day is over. But like the Psalmist's 'river of God,' this brook is 'full of water,' and there is plenty of good fishing to be had in it if one is neither afraid nor ashamed of fishing sometimes with a worm."

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

DR. S. L. GULICK, the author of a book called 'Evolution of the Japanese,' now publishes through Messrs. Fleming H. Revell, of New York and London, an excellent volume, The White Peril in the Far East, which is a whole-hearted defence of Japan from a Christian standpoint. We cannot accept as likely the final proposal of the author for a sale of the Ural province by the assumed conquerors to the United Kingdom and the United States "jointly," nor to either of them. We should be delighted if the United States liked to buy the bear's skin, supposing the bear to be slain, but we cannot imagine King Edward receiving advice, either from Mr. Balfour or from Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman, by which we should become purchasers. We admit to Dr. Gulick the difficulty of all other solutions—we only differ in thinking his impossible. He does not name the probable alternatives: strict alliance of Japan with England, and virtual alliance of Japan with Russia, without breach with England. Japan, of course, as an island, can never afford to break with the maritime powers of the future—the United States and the United Kingdom. Dr. Gulick attacks with great force the treatment of yellow men by professing Christians. If, as we suppose, he is an American citizen, it is also praiseworthy to describe as he does the hurt to Christianity caused by "Southern lynchings." In his preface Dr. Gulick goes too far when he says of the present war that "for the first time in history has an Asiatic people successfully faced a white foe." What, for example, of the Turks?

SUCH books as Mr. Asquith, by Mr. J. P. Alderson (Methuen & Co.), are hard to write, and the one before us is a success—far better than other recent attempts in the same line of panegyric on living politicians. There is a delightful portrait of the hero at the age of four, in which he looks, but for costume, exactly as he does now, standing "at the box" in the House of Commons. One of the many difficulties which face the writers of political biographies is how to deal with the mistakes of great men. Mr. Asquith has made two in the course of his fine career—of which much, and perhaps the best, is yet before him. Mr. Alderson boldly defends, without a doubt, the "closing the prison doors with a bang," by which Mr. Asquith set the Irish majority against him, and the incidents which are used by the Socialists against Mr. Asquith. In the first case the fault lay in the "bang"—the tone, rather than the matter of the speech. In the second we avoid the ghastly jest of saying that the fault lay also in the "bang," by which we should have meant, not the shots, which, if Mr. John Burns had been the minister, would probably have been fired, but the tone of the subsequent speech. Mr. Asquith is a fighting man, and on these two occasions he fought when others would have shown a dexterity in which he is less proficient. Mr. Alderson is to be congratulated on his volume. In passages as to Oxford, which are from another pen, deserved praise of Mr. G. R. Parkin is carried too far when a declaration of 1874 is quoted as possibly "the original promulgation of the great doctrine of Colonial Imperialism." The revival of the Elizabethan doctrine and Cromwellian practice is to be found in the 1870-1 agitation conducted by Sir George Grey ("Capt. Grey") and Mr. Edward Jenkins, the latter of whom preached "Imperial Federation" in the language of the Colonial Imperialists of ten years ago. The Australian democracy has now "damped down" the doctrine.

MR. L. H. COURTNEY's name adorns the title of a book in a series ("Temple Primers," Dent) of which we reviewed last week another volume, 'The Government of Greater Britain.' That now before us is The Working Constitution. In the preface it is explained that the work is an abridgment from Mr. Courtney's book of 1901 by Mr. George Unwin, and that from Mr. Graham Wallas, a highly competent authority, have come valuable suggestions. The third part, which deals with the Empire outside of the United Kingdom, contains a much better account of the government of the Channel Islands than that supplied in Mr. Trotter's 'The Government of Greater Britain,' and criticized by us. If Mr. Courtney is in the next Parliament, we think that he will find reason to modify his statement "that private members have for a time fallen below their predecessors." Lord Hugh Cecil is perhaps the most eloquent and talented member of this class that ever sat in Parliament, and there are many other young members who have raised the average to heights that were previously unknown. It is also, though the statement is afterwards modified, incorrect to say that "the War Secretary has been assisted by a sub-committee of the Cabinet, to which has been given the name of the Council of National Defence."

We imagine that "thwarted" would express the facts far better than "assisted."

MESSRS. HURST & BLACKETT publish a translation by Mr. L. J. H. Dickinson of the French version of Capt. Klado's The Russian Navy in the Russo-Japanese War, a book which is strategically sound, and of which the object is to force the dispatch to the East of the Black Sea Fleet, at the risk of war with us. Capt. Klado sets the world against him by his violent expression of pretended belief in the attack on "the second squadron" from

"the treacherous coasts.....where our bold foes.....to whom any means seem fair, could easily conceal themselves.....Our apprehensions were well founded.....This attempt having ended in such a lamentable fashion for the English fishermen, henceforth the Japanese will have great difficulty in finding accomplices."

The world, unfortunately, believes that Capt. Klado lied in his evidence before the Paris court, and this fact deprives his volume of the value which, as a correct statement of strategic facts, it should possess.

ANOTHER, but more completely fanciful volume, which deals with the same subject, is Mr. Allen Upward's new book. The Phantom Torpedo-Boats (Chatto & Windus) is as good as three of Mr. Upward's romances, of which we have praised the ability. In the case of one of them, of which we note the omission of the title from the list of volumes by the author, we had to make complaint as to the introduction of the Queen Regent of Spain in unpleasant fashion. It was with some head-shaking that we found the Queen of England and her sister the Dowager Empress of Russia talking secrets on the first page of Mr. Upward's new volume; but we breathed more freely as we read on. The art of Mr. Allen Upward is the art of Jules Verne: to make the most violent improbabilities concerning persons or facts within our knowledge seem true while we read. We are in a dream—not with the Cheshire cat, but with the Emperor William and the Russian favourite Besobrasof, who is murdered by the hero. By the way, what has become of him? He no longer fills the daily paper.

A BOOK which deals with interesting subjects is Une Année de Politique Extérieure, by M. René Moulin (Paris, Plon-Nourrit). A preface by a little-known ex-minister is not encouraging, inasmuch as it accuses our country of trying at the present moment to seize Mecca, with a view to establishing a hold upon Mohammedanism, just as the capture of Lhasa was, he thinks, intended to give us control of the Buddhist Church. M. Moulin is, however, seldom silly, and often clear-sighted. His account of the reasons why Italy remains nominally in the Triple Alliance without having the faintest intention of heeding any call from its leading partner which it may receive is, we believe, accurate. All are struck by the increasing fierceness of the quarrel between Italy and Austria over Trieste and the Adriatic, and by the special military expenditure of Italy and Austria the one against the other—money which the theory of their alliance with Germany would seem to attribute to other purposes. M. Moulin goes into the tariff reasons which, not only in the opinions of her statesmen, but also in his own, force Italy to treasure "a diplomatic instrument without possible application in practice." It is indeed characteristic of the Italian genius that an alliance originally concluded for the purpose of preservation against a possible revival in France of the Papal policy of 1849 should have been turned to good use in the shape of fifteen millions sterling a year of trade, picked up by way of payment from the Teutonic powers for Italian military and naval assistance long since past praying for, and perhaps never intended to be given. When M. Moulin comes to deal with Japan and Russia and China and the present war, he is a little inclined to contradict himself. Where he describes the certainty of future conflict in the Pacific, between the Russians, who will have eaten Northern China, and Anglo-American forces, he seems to be printing passages written before recent events, although even here he goes on to assume an adoption of Mr. Chamberlain's proposals for preferential as against American trade. A little later he makes a vigorous attack upon the character of the Japanese—declares that with difficulty Japan will be able to place in the field half a million of men, and that Russia will be able to swamp the Japanese by numbers. Yet, finally, we come to passages with which we are inclined to agree as to the certainty that the war must continue for a long time, in which the latest facts seem to be present to M. Moulin's mind. Here, however, he goes wrong in another fashion, for he assumes that victory will rest in the long run with the stronger army, whereas it seems plain that if the Japanese maintain the command of the sea their army will continue to be the stronger, and that, stronger or not, the Japanese will be beaten if their fleet should be worn down. M. Moulin shares the Seddon theory as to the export of "golden guineas," and thinks that the figures of exports and imports show Japan to be in parlous economic condition in spite of the extraordinary rapidity with which her manufactures and her trade have grown. There are in M.

Moulin's pages few mistakes, but one of them is strange indeed from such a pen. The French Ambassador in London of 1896, the grandson of the lawyer of Louis XVIII., is confused with another French diplomatist, who has the "particule," and whose name is spelt like a well-known street in Paris. The risk of confusion to a foreigner or to a mere journalist, increased as it is by the fact that both these diplomatists were formerly employed in the French Foreign Office, is so great that those who have to deal with recent history are generally on their guard against falling into the trap.

The Man in the Pulpit, by James Douglas (Methuen), which consists of short sketches reprinted from The Morning Leader, is a fair specimen of the newest journalism. Staccato, variegated, impressionist in style, these notes on preachers of every kind exhibit that worship of cleverness, that cult of phraseology, which is so marked a characteristic of modern journalese. Every possible effect is curiously sought out, every method of exciting the nerves is employed—it is restlessness treated as a fine art. The serious inquirer cannot have much love for this sort of thing, which nine times out of ten paints the external details, notes the bizarre to the neglect of the usual, and leaves out the real spirit or intellectual tendencies of the preachers. Of its kind, however, this book is very well done. It is vivid, interesting, and amusing. Of course it is epigrammatic. It has that appearance of originality without depth which is the most attractive quality nowadays. Here and there, however, we have a flash of real insight:—

"It is not Torrey and Alexander who are trying to revive London, it is London that is trying to revive Torrey and Alexander. Jerusalem no longer stones the prophets, she booms them. For the first time in history the world is calling upon Christianity to meet its promissory note. It is the sinner who stands at the door and knocks. It is the lost sheep that is searching for the Good Shepherd. It is the multitude that hath not where to lay its head. It is very sad when the people throw stones at Stephen, but it is very much sadder when Stephen throws stones at the people."

The fact, as we believe, which justifies the above passage may be the cause of far-reaching changes in the twentieth century.

THE more or less imaginary conversations and long digressions which form a considerable part of Mr. Rowland Thirlmere's Letters from Catalonia and other Parts of Spain (Hutchinson & Co.) are occasionally rather tedious; but, in addition to attractive descriptions of Ribas, Alcoy, Jativa, and many other places seldom visited by English travellers, the book contains a large amount of information on Spanish politics and most other aspects of Spanish life. The author's views as to the probable future of Spain are optimistic, but, as they have been formed after much intercourse with Spaniards of all classes, they are entitled to respect. However, on examination they prove to be less optimistic than they seem at first sight, for Mr. Thirlmere assumes the appearance of a Spanish Napoleon and an entire transformation of the national character. Even a Napoleon would be powerless without an efficient staff, and, by the writer's own admission, Spain is singularly poor in men of initiative or foresight. Moreover, nothing in the history of the country warrants the expectation that she will produce a race of enterprising traders. Distinguished as conquistadores, Spaniards have rarely succeeded as colonists or as captains of industry. In the greatest period of Spanish prosperity the most important commercial undertakings were carried out by foreigners like the Fuggers or the Weslers, and the same condition of things continues, with trifling modifications. Mr. Thirlmere no doubt generalizes from the case of Catalonia; but this is misleading, for the Catalans are a race apart. The unity of Spain is still far from complete in practice, and, even in Catalonia, the relations between capital and labour are not very satisfactory. Spain has a multitude of economic problems to solve, and, in the circumstances, Mr. Thirlmere's forecast is unjustifiably sanguine.

On literature he writes with grace, but not always with knowledge. Raimbaut de Vaqueiras, who died in 1219, is wrongly described as a troubadour of the eleventh century. Facts do not favour the familiar statement, first made by Don Enrique de Villena, that Ramon Vidal de Bezaudu won the chief prize at the Consistory of the Gay Saber held in 1324. Vidal de Bezaudu flourished at the beginning of the twelfth century, and the Golden Violet was awarded in 1324 to Arnaldo Vidal de Castelnou Darri. Juan Ruiz is revealed writing his 'Libro de Buen Amor' by the light of a colza-oil lamp in some quiet street at Alcalá de Henares. Unluckily for this engaging invention, the Archpriest of Hita records the fact that he wrote his poem in the jail to which he had been committed by Gil Albornoz, Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo. The versicle assigned (p. 144) to Luis de Leon is paraphrased from the second chapter of the Song of Solomon. The ascription of 'Lazarillo de Tormes' to Hurtado de Mendoza has been abandoned in consequence of M. Morel-Fatio's destructive criticism; its reappearance now, seventeen years later, shows how slowly the conclusions of scholarship become known to the average student of Spanish in England. On the other hand, though the absence of Oller's name is curious, it is only just to say that Mr. Thirlmere is accurate enough in dealing with contemporary poets and novelists; he is better still when he treats of journalism, and he has many enthusiastic but not uncritical appreciations of the modern school of painting. "Ausias," "Bethencourt," and "Zorrilla" should read Auzias, Béthencourt, and Zorrilla; Jerez de la Frontera is wrongly printed throughout. But misprints are fewer than usual, and the other blemishes which we have noted will not spoil the reader's enjoyment. The tone and temper of the book are excellent; the illustrations are numerous and good.

The Grey Brethren. By Michael Fairless. (Duckworth & Co.)—This little volume will be welcome to all lovers of 'The Road Mender.' It has not, indeed, the finished perfection of that book, but some of the stories and poems display the same fine artistic sense, the same sacramental reverence for natural glory, the same deep tenderness and sympathy. What could be better than this?—

"People are apt to think the kingdom of Heaven is like church on Sunday, a place to enter once a week in one's best; whereas it holds every flower, and has room for the ox and the ass, and the least of all creatures, as well as for our prayer and worship and praise."

Of the fairy stories, 'The Discontented Daffodils' is full of that witchery which elders appreciate as much as children; though we give the palm to 'Tinkle-Tinkle.' No one with any touch of romance will fail to see the beauty of this, and few with any religion but will value its teaching. One little poem we quote in its entirety:—

A SONG OF LOW DEGREE.

Lord, I am small, and yet so great,
The whole world stands to my estate,
And in Thine Image I create.
The sea is mine; and the broad sky
Is mine in its immensity:
The river and the river's gold;
The earth's hid treasures manifold;
The love of creatures small and great,
Save where I reap a previous hate;
The noon-tide sun with hot caress,
The night with quiet loveliness,
The wind that bends the pliant trees,
The whisper of the summer breeze;
The kiss of snow and rain; the star
That shines a greeting from afar;

All, all are mine; and yet so small
Am I that lo, I needs must call,
Great King, upon the Babe in Thine,
And crave that Thou would'st give to me
The grace of Thy humility.

Author and Printer, by F. Howard Collins (Frowde), is best described by its sub-title as a "Guide for Authors, Editors, Printers, Correctors of the Press, Composers, and Typists." To the ordinary man it may seem a little trivial, as it is merely a list in alphabetical order of words which cause confusion by the variety of spelling or form in which they are found, by their similarity to other words, or by the fact that they are in a foreign language, and therefore liable to corruption. Still we think it highly important that a standard of English spelling should be established, and may strongly commend Mr. Collins's work, which is endorsed by authorities like Mr. Henry Bradley, Mr. C. T. Jacobi, and a host of "readers," that useful class which does its best to make journalism into grammar, if not English, and silently floors the little demon of inaccuracy who sits by the most careful of writers. Abbreviations, which increase daily, appear in numbers in the list. We may add κ.τ.λ. for &c. O.W. is given as Old Wellingtonian, but we should have thought that it meant as frequently Old Westminster boy. There are several similar O.R.s who might be included, from Rugby, Repton, and Radley. Many of the explanations—owing to brevity, no doubt—seem too reduced. Thus it helps one to remember that A.B. means a sailor, if one realizes that the phrase means able-bodied seaman, otherwise the meaning of the B. seems difficult to guess. W.P.B. (waste-paper basket) might have been added. Foreign phrases are a frequent cause of error, and many will be found here. We should have added in such cases the current mistakes—e.g., we should note: not "the hoi polloi," and not "bonâ fides" (which we have seen in a Government Paper). We see no adequate reason for the continued existence of the foolish "artiste" as well as "artist." It might be well to explain the meaning of "ilk," which is misused almost every other day. The volume will be found a means of shortening many researches which the careful writer or editor has to make almost daily if he wishes to be accurate. Every journalist in constant practice will be able to add to it from his own experience, and extra pages at the end of each letter are thoughtfully provided for this purpose. Thus we add to B the distinction between two well-known classical scholars, Becker (W. A.), writer of 'Gallus' and 'Charicles,' and Bekker (I.), famous editor of the 'Oratores Attici' and Thucydides; and to C, 'C.I.L.' and 'C.I.G.,' the collections of Latin and Greek inscriptions. We hope that the book will be generally adopted, and think that the introductory hints might be enlarged.

IN a short story, 'Karikari,' M. Ludovic Halévy created the pathetic character of the old actor "Lambescasse." Not long after M. Halévy's near relation by marriage, our accomplished contributor M. Jules Claretie, worked the same vein in a short story about one Brichanteau. Finding Brichanteau useful as a means of conveying delightful doses of stage history, a first volume of collected pieces on the old age of the imaginary actor has been followed by other essays on the same theme, and we have now from Charpentier a second Brichanteau volume—Brichanteau Célèbre, Roman Parisien—not a "novel" in our modern sense. Brichanteau has become a marked and a sympathetic figure, and M. Claretie's stores of literary and theatrical lore are put to good use in this volume. He states, to our amazement, that the production of 'Ruy Blas' is forbidden in England, though the play is only altered in Turkey by the substitution of "Madame" for "The Queen."

As a matter of fact, 'Ruy Blas' was played in London by Fechter, and has been played frequently here since Fechter down to the last few weeks. One of M. Claretie's stories makes Got get a pass for London from the Commune on Tuesday, May 23rd, 1871. There must be some mistake about this statement. On that day the army was in Paris, and the Hôtel de Ville on fire, and Got would have received his pass from the "Versailles party," who are criticized in the conversation.

WE welcome John Inglesant in Messrs. Macmillan's "Illustrated Pocket Classics." In this form, if any, it should increase its circulation, but we doubt if the ordinary reader has sufficient grasp of the history the book involves, especially on the religious side, to appreciate its excellence.

MESSRS. DENT have sent us Shirley, 2 vols., in their new illustrated edition of the Brontë novels. M. Dulac's colouring in his designs seems to us here hardly a success, but he is undeniably striking.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have just added The History of Amelia, 2 vols., to their series of "Classic Novels." We have, as in previous issues, Cruikshank's illustrations, and the little volumes deserve warm commendation, being handy, prettily bound, and well printed. The price charged is very moderate, so that the edition hardly needs, we fancy, the praise of reviewers to secure popularity.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

- Carson (T. G.), Man's Responsibility, cr. 8vo, 3/ net.
Cook (V. C.), Every-Day Evangelism, cr. 8vo, 2/6
Daily Help for Daily Duty, compiled by D. B. Gardner and C. Reeves, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Whyte (A.), The Walk, Conversation, and Character of Jesus Christ our Lord, extra cr. 8vo, 6/

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Bate (P.), English Table Glass, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Mallam (M.), Brush Drawing as applied to Natural Forms and Common Objects, 4to, 5/ net.
Vinall (J. W. T.), Complete Course of Free-Arm and Industrial Drawing, in portfolio, 12/6 net.
War Album (The), No. 2, 4to, 6/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Graham (H.), Verse and Worse, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Jones (H. A.), Mrs. Dane's Defence, 12mo, 2/6

Music.

- Platt (W.), Child-Music, 8vo, limp, 2/6

History and Biography.

- After-Glow Memories, by Anglo-Australian, cr. 8vo, 6/
Asquith (Mr.), by J. P. Alderson, 8vo, 7/6 net.
Henriques (H. S. Q.), The Return of the Jews to England, 8vo, 3/6 net.

- History of Accounting and Accountants, edited and partly written by R. Brown, roy. 8vo, 10/6 net.

- Leopold II. (King), his Rule in Belgium and the Congo, by J. De C. MacDonnell, illustrated, 8vo, 21/ net.

- White (A. Dickson), Autobiography, with Portraits, 2 vols. roy. 8vo, 30/ net.

- Wollaston (A. N.), The Sword of Islam, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Geography and Travel.

- Kirby (M.), From East to West, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Lamb (R.), Saints and Savages, 8vo, 6/

Sports and Pastimes.

- Roberts (E. A.), A Handbook of Free-Standing Gymnastics, roy. 8vo, 3/6 net.

- Skinner (H. H.), Jiu-Jitsu, extra cr. 8vo, 5/ net.

Science.

- Alexander (T.) and Thomson (A. W.), Twenty-Six Graduated Exercises in Graphic Statics, folio, sewed, 10/

- Bale (G. R.), Modern Iron Foundry Practice, Part 2, 3/6 net.

- Craig (M.), Psychological Medicine, 8vo, 12/6 net.

- Eggar (W. D.), Mechanics, cr. 8vo, 3/6

- Kerr (W. A.), Peat and its Products, 8vo, 6/ net.

Juvenile Books.

- Nelson (Boy's Life of), by J. C. Hadden, cr. 8vo, 2/6

- Skinner (C.), The Little Missis, cr. 8vo, 2/6

General Literature.

- Aitken (R.), The Redding Stralk, cr. 8vo, 6/

- Barrett (F.), The Error of her Ways, cr. 8vo, 6/

- Compatriots' Club Lectures, First Series, 8vo, 8/6 net.

- Courtney (L.), The Working Constitution of the United Kingdom and its Outgrowths, 12mo, 1/ net.

- Crosland (T. W. H.), The Wild Irishman, cr. 8vo, 5/

- Cullum (R.), The Brooding Wild, cr. 8vo, 6/

- Francis (M. E.), Dorset Dear, cr. 8vo, 6/

- Gerard (D.), The Three Essentials, cr. 8vo, 6/

- Giberne (A.), The Pride of the Morning, cr. 8vo, 5/

- Hana, a Daughter of Japan, by G. Murai, in case, 21/ net.

- Hocking (J.), Roger Trewinion, cr. 8vo, 3/6

- Hodges (L. M.), The Great Optimist, and other Essays, 8vo, 4/ net.

Kelly's Directory of the Engineers and Iron and Metal Trades and Colliery Proprietors, roy. 8vo, 30/
Law (J.), George Eastmont, Wanderer, cr. 8vo, 3/6
Muddock (J. E. P.), The Sunless City, cr. 8vo, 6/
Noble (E.), Waves of Fate, cr. 8vo, 6/
Smith (E. A.), Dorothy's Holiday, and other Stories, 3/6
Tennant (P.), The Book of Peace, imp. 16mo, 6/ net.
Wenlock (A.), The Countermine, cr. 8vo, 6/
Whitehouse (J. H.), Problems of a Scottish Provincial Town, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.
Willard (R.), Catherine Douglas, cr. 8vo, 3/6

FOREIGN.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

- Rhamm (K.), Ethnographische Beiträge zur germanisch-slavisches Altertumskunde, Part 1, 24m.

Poetry and the Drama.

- Gautier (M.), La Lumière dans l'Ombre, 3fr.

Philosophy.

- Pollak (K.), Rabbi Nathan's System der Ethik u. Moral, 3m.

Sociology.

- Engels (F.), Les Origines de la Société, 3fr. 50.

History and Biography.

- Contant (H.), Le Palais-Bourbon au XVIII. Siècle, 8fr.

- Esterhazy (Comte V.), Mémoires, 7fr. 50.

- Haussonville (Comte d'), Mon Journal pendant la Guerre, 1870-1, 7fr. 50.

Geography and Travel.

- Klobb (Lieut.-Col.), Dernier Carnet de Route au Soudan Français, 3fr. 50.

Philology.

- Costa (M. da), Index Etymologicus Dictionis Homerice, 10fr.

- Derenbourg (H.), Opusculs d'un Arabisant, 1868-1905, 7fr. 50.

- Haffner (A.), Texte zur arabischen Lexikographie, 20m.

- Landberg (Comte de), Études sur les Dialectes de l'Arabie Méridionale, Vol. 2, Part 1, 8m.

Science.

- Hölbling (V.), Fortschritte in der Fabrikation der anorganischen Säuren, der Alkalien, des Ammoniaks u. verwandter Industriezweige, 30m.

- Retzius (G.), Biologische Untersuchungen, 23m.

General Literature.

- Baraude (H.), Fatale Méprise, 3fr. 50.

- Huchard (R.), Dix Contes Vécus, 3fr. 50.

- Krysinska (M.), La Force du Désir, 3fr. 50.

- Photiades (C.), Le Couvre-feu, 3fr. 50.

LAMB'S LETTERS.

RELATIVE to the various paragraphs now appearing in the papers on the copyright of the Lamb letters, we should like to make the following facts public.

In connexion with our edition of Lamb's works we went to considerable trouble, and ultimately we found that, the two executors named in Lamb's will being dead, and the survivor having died intestate, there was no continuation of the executorship, and that Lamb's residuary legatee was his adopted daughter, Miss Emma Isola, who became the wife of Mr. Moxon, the publisher. She died, and her son, Mr. A. H. Moxon, became her administrator. He took out letters of administration with the will of Lamb, and we purchased from him all the rights of Lamb in all his letters, including unpublished letters. We claim, therefore, through the very person Charles Lamb intended to benefit by his will, and also that our claim is based on the assignment of the personal representative of Lamb. We thus have, in our opinion, the moral and the legal right to the 'Letters.'

J. M. DENT & Co.

* * * It may be well to add the explanation that legally the property in letters remains in the person to whom they are sent, but the writer of them has a right to restrain the publication of their contents (H. A. Hinkson, 'Copyright Law,' p. 50).

THE LITERARY DEPARTMENT AT SOMERSET HOUSE.

I AM glad that "Archivist" has not let this matter drop; and if only he is supported by a few of the many dissatisfied students, the Government will be bound to grant all reasonable facilities for consulting our old records.

Of the following list of reforms, the first is one that is most pressing, as it would relieve the demand for room at other times of the year: 1. The Search Room to be kept open during the Long Vacation. 2. No search fees for inspection of original wills. 3. The upstairs calendars to be kept down—only taken up when required. 4. That calendars no longer be made, but indices with, say, ten years thrown into one alphabet. 5. The clerks not to leave the Department on promotion, that is, directly they have mastered the old hands. 6. An annual report to be printed, showing the number of inspections, visitors, people turned away for want of room, wills indexed, &c.

GENEALOGIST.

THE SOURCES OF SHELLEY'S ROMANCES.

5, Rond-Point Bugeaud, Paris.

I DESIRE to mention three points in connexion with this subject which, so far as I know, have not been sufficiently, if at all, noticed before. There is little doubt but my statements admit of completion, if not correction, and it is with the hope that some reader or readers of The Athenæum may supply both that I venture to publish my results, however unsatisfactory their present condition may prove.

I. Shelley, an indiscriminating amateur in his youth of the "romantic romances" of the time, seems to have come across a short novel of Regnault-Warin, one of the most versatile of our Revolutionary politicians and writers. This story, 'La Caverne de Strozzi' (Paris, Lepetit, 1798, 12mo), was a comparative success in the amazingly prolific line of terror-novels, or "romans noirs." A complaining note affixed by Regnault himself to his 'Loisirs Littéraires' (1804) warns us against an anonymous plagiarism of his work, then circulated under the title of 'Olympia'; and as late as 1826 the original was translated into Spanish (Paris, J. Smith, 12mo). This translation is the only form of the work which I have been able to see, though it is, to say the least, unlikely that a popular story of such a well-known writer should have disappeared; and England, where French books were eagerly collected throughout the Revolutionary era, may very well own the original copy, perhaps the very one which young Percy got from some circulating library in Brentford, Eton, or Windsor.

The agreement between 'La Caverne' and 'Zastrozzi' amounts, briefly, to the following points: 1. The main idea, and the chief spring of the plot, are the same, viz., the jealousy of a woman, or rather, to adopt the emphatic language of this sort of literature, the conflict between a most devilishly cruel type of infuriated female passion, and a most celestially lenient and submissive impersonation of girlish love. 2. The scene in the Consiglio di Dieci, the arrest and the condemnation of the guilty heroine, must have been suggested by Regnault-Warin (pp. 100-39, Spanish ed.; 'Zastrozzi,' ch. xiv.). 3. La Laurentini is, in both books, the name of the aforesaid heroine.

The first point would, of course, be inconclusive by itself, as jealousy before marriage was a favourite theme among novelists (cf. III.), and some English author, of whom I am not aware, may have stepped between Regnault and Shelley.

II. One of the songs in 'St. Irvyne' (ch. ix., "Ah! faint are her limbs") is curiously like a short piece of Ossian:—

The waves are lulling on the lake.....
She saw his boat, when it was evening, on the lake;
Are these his groans in the gale?
Is this his broken boat on the shore?

The effect of this suspended conclusion has been partly preserved in Shelley's lines:—

Thy love's pallid corpse the wild surges are laying,
O'er his form the fierce swell of the tempest is raving.

Now this passage of Ossian occurs in two places: 1, in a letter of Gray (June 29th, 1760; Mason, 1775, iv. p. 69); 2, in the song of the Six Bards added to 'Cromar' (Laing, 1802, ii.).

Does not this prove that Shelley, far from being perfectly uninfluenced by Ossian (as Schnabel has it, Eng. Studien, xlii., 1896), would notice every scrap of the bard—were it in another's correspondence or in the notes to his poems? Of course, all the songs in 'St. Irvyne' are Ossianic in tone.

Mr. Shepherd, in his edition of Shelley (1888), has pointed out two smaller passages as borrowed from Byron's 'Hours of Idleness'—I might add, from the Ossianic poems in 'Hours of Idleness'; and, indeed, one of those passages is marked by Byron as a quotation (probably from Ossian?):—

"Shades of the dead! have I not heard your voices Rise on the night-rolling breath of the gale?"

Perhaps it is worth noting, too, that the very poem which did not appeal to Gray, as being too "purely descriptive," was chosen by Shelley for adaptation.

III. Mrs. Byrne's novel in four volumes, 'Zofloya; or, the Moor,' has been referred to (not at first hand, as it seems, by Mr. Rossetti, 'Memoir,' iv.) as an important source for 'Zastrozzi.' And so it is, no doubt; but it is something more: 'Zofloya' essentially consists of an awkward tacking-on of at least two stories; the rivalry of two women is the subject of the first two volumes—and these afford some pictures and dramatic incidents very like those in 'Zastrozzi'; but with the appearance of Zofloya, in vol. iii., a supernatural element is grafted on the plot, and the further we proceed the more striking is the resemblance with 'St. Irvyne.' (I must refer to the March number of the Revue Germanique for a more detailed examination of this point.) Thus one of the most puzzling questions which have assailed all readers of 'St. Irvyne' would be answered in a simple and perfectly adequate manner: the second novel of Shelley is more crudely fantastic than the first, because it closely follows the second part of 'Zofloya,' whilst 'Zastrozzi' rather resembled the first; the intrigue in 'St. Irvyne,' proceeding as it does along two apparently unconnected lines, looks no less consistent than the twofold plot of 'Zofloya' would do to any reader of vol. iv., supposing (which is likely enough) he had forgotten all about vol. i.

Perhaps I shall be charged with wasting my time and attention on what has been so often pronounced vile trash, abominable rubbish, and wild nonsense. Still, I submit that a history of the progress of Shelley's mind would not be complete if it did not take in the enthusiasms of his early days. And perhaps this crude romanticism, the romanticism of the lower type of novels in the beginning of the nineteenth century, is a key to that ill-defined morbid trouble which so often embittered his physical and mental life, his conceptions and his loves.

A. KOSZUL.

AN UNKNOWN EDITION OF THEOPHRASTUS.

MR. VOYNICH has had the good fortune to discover an entirely unknown edition of Theophrastus: 'Θεοφράστου Ἠθικαὶ Χαρακτήρες, Theophrasti Notationes morum,' printed in England at the Oxford press of Joseph Barnes, 1604. The copy is small quarto in size, and extends to ten leaves; the title is within an ornamental border, with printer's device, and with woodcut head and tail pieces; it is interleaved throughout, with numerous contemporary notes on the margins. The edition is of importance, as hitherto the first with Greek text only, printed in England, has been considered to be that of 1790. The curious fact about this edition of 1604 is that the most exhaustive attempts have failed to find any previous record of its existence. In 1752 Dr. R. Newton, Principal of Hart Hall, Oxford, issued "Proposals for Printing....The Characters of Theophrastus.... with a translation of the Greek into Latin, according to the specimen annexed," &c., and neither in this pamphlet, nor in the preface to Newton's "Characters of Theophrastus, with a strictly literal Translation of the Greek into Latin, and with Notes and Observations on the Text in English," Oxford, 1754, is there to be found any reference to the 1604 issue, nor is there any mention of it in any of the bibliographies.

Joseph Barnes, who started the University Press in 1585, and whose first book was the 'Speculum Moralium Quæstionum' of John Case, continued to print books until 1617, and his name on the imprint of the Theophrastus gives it an interest which it would otherwise probably not possess. The little book is, in fact, an exceedingly hard bibliographical nut to crack. The first problem which suggests itself is, Was this edition ever actually published? The probability is that it was not, and that it was merely privately printed at the expense of some classical student at Oxford. Now in his edition of the work Scaliger states that he had consulted four MSS., of which one was in the Bodleian Library. A natural theory is that Scaliger corresponded with some one at Oxford, and that this correspondent had the Bodleian MS. printed for the express purpose of sending it to him. Further research may bring to light some facts explaining the existence of this edition of 1604; but, in any case, Mr. Voynich may be congratulated on discovering it, for nothing is known concerning it at the Bodleian.

W. ROBERTS.

SALES.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE sold in their sale of the 27th to 29th ult. the following books: Gulliver's Travels, first edition, 2 vols., 1726, 15l. 10s. Ackermann's Foreign Military Gallery, 1845-9, 20l. 5s. Austin Dobson's Old-World Idylls, large paper, presentation copy to G. H. Boughton, R.A., with MS. poems, 1883, 20l. Andrews's A Stray Leaf from the Correspondence of Washington Irving and Charles Dickens, only 77 copies printed, De Vinne Press, New York, 1894, 15l. 10s. Sketch-Book of G. H. Boughton, R.A., 10l. 5s. Bookbindings from the Hoe Library (176), New York, 1895, 12l. Water-Colour Drawings by G. H. Boughton, R.A. (50), 47l. 6s. Byron's Works, 1839, 8 vols., extra-illustrated, 12l. 5s. Stevens's Facsimiles of American MSS., 25 vols., 1889-98, 22l. Harleian Society's Publications, 31 vols., 1869-90, 14l. 10s. Goldsmith's Traveller, first edition, 1765, 14l. 15s. Lazarillo de Tormes, in English by W. P., 1596, 10l. 10s. Sidney's The Countesse of Pembroke's Arcadia, second edition, 1593, 29l.

The same auctioneers sold on May 1st early English books from the library of a well-known North of England collector, among which were the following: Beaumont and Fletcher's Comedies (with 'The Wild Goose Chase'), 1647-52, 24l. Sir T. Browne's Religio Medici, first (spurious) edition, 1642, 15l. Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, first edition, Oxford, 1621, 36l. Thomas Carew's Poems, first edition, 1640, 11l. 10s. Erasmus, Paraphrase upon the New Testament, first edition, 1548-9, 10l. Ben Jonson's Works, first edition, 1616, 29l. Milton's Paradise Lost, first edition (fourth title), 1668, 19l. 5s. History of Britain, first edition, 1670, 7l. 5s. Shakspeare's Works, Second Folio, 1632 (poor copy), 29l. 10s. Relation of the Proceedings against the Gunpowder Plot Conspirators, with signature of "William Shakspeare" on title, 1606, 13l. 10s.

Literary Gossip.

In the 'Upton Letters,' which are appearing anonymously, a schoolmaster sends his experiences of life to a friend in Madeira. Dated from the "Upton" which is neither Uppingham nor Repton, the correspondence tells of men and books, no less than of boys and lessons. The letters were returned to their writer when his friend died, and are now to be published immediately by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.

MR. FISHER UNWIN has in the press a volume by Capt. F. W. von Herbert, entitled 'The Jews of the Near East: a Sociological Study.' It is intended as a reply to certain attacks on the Near Eastern Jews; it gives statistics of the number of Jews in Rumania, Servia, Bulgaria, and Turkey in Europe, and describes the racial characteristics and social position of the three sections of Jews living in those countries—the Arabic, the Spanish and Portuguese, and the so-called German Jews.

MR. STUART J. REID, in response to his brother's expressed wish, has undertaken to prepare for publication the reminiscences of the late Sir Wemyss Reid. The book promises to be of exceptional interest, both in the personal and in the political sense. Sir Wemyss Reid's life was rich in influential friendships, and they are all vividly portrayed in a narrative which does justice alike to his shrewd judgment and kind heart. Although the dominant note of the book—it will extend to two volumes—is journalistic and literary, side-lights, sometimes of a remarkably clear and fearless kind, are thrown on the political controversies of the last thirty years. Sir Wemyss's personal relations with statesmen like W. E. Forster, Bright, Gladstone, and Lord Rosebery were so intimate, that the book is a valuable commentary from one who was in a position to know all the facts on many critical events in the annals of the Liberal party.

WE are glad to hear that Mr. B. H. Blackwell will publish shortly 'Byways in the Classics,' including 'Alia,' by Mr. Hugh E. P. Platt. The book consists largely of jottings, but will afford a pleasant and much-needed reminder that the classics have a literary as well as a philological side, being, indeed, a neglected storehouse of graceful references.

A NEW anthology of Australasian verse, for which Mr. A. G. Stephens has been gathering material for some time past, will presently be published in Sydney and London. The only collection of the kind extant was made a considerable number of years ago. There is room for the new one, for writers have appeared since the days of Gordon and Kendall who, if they do not altogether please the literary and leisured classes of England, are recited, we learn, by the swagman's camp fire, and quoted in the shearer's hut. Such popularity sounds more like good rhetoric than good poetry; still we shall see what the later generation of Australians can do.

PROF. FEUILLERAT, of Rennes, who edited for the first time Arthur Wilson's play 'The Swissers,' has undertaken to edit 'Everie Woman in her Humor' (1609) for Prof. Bang's 'Materialien.' He knows of three copies of the play—in the British Museum, the Dyce Collection, and the Bodleian. He will feel much obliged to any one who can and will tell him of any other copies in private or public libraries.

MR. PERCY NEWBERRY has been commissioned by Mr. Theodor Davis to write a monograph upon the late find at Biban el-Molouk, where the tombs of Juua and Thuaa, the father and mother of Amenhotep III.'s Queen Thyi, were discovered. The book will be published in England, and M. Maspero has promised to write the Introduction, while Mr. Howard Carter will execute the plates.

MR. JOHN LANE announces the publication on Wednesday next of a new novel, 'The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne,' by Mr. William J. Locke. It is written in a fantastic, ironical vein, the recluse and philosophical protagonist, Sir Marcus Ordeyne, telling the story of his own "extravagant adventure." The book has already been published in New York. Other volumes that Mr. Lane is publishing on the same date include 'Rifle and Romance in the Indian Jungle,' a record of thirteen years of Indian jungle life, by Capt. A. I. R. Glasfurd, with numerous illustrations; 'Love's Journey,' a new volume of poems by Ethel Clifford; and 'Joachim,' in the "Living Masters of Music" series, by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland.

A NEW edition of Mr. Sonnenschein's well-known work 'The Best Books,' with its supplement, 'The Reader's Guide to Contemporary Literature,' is at last definitely announced for early publication. The first book, which classified and described the "best 50,000" books current at that date, was published in 1887, and reprinted in an enlarged and improved form; and 'The Reader's Guide,' issued in 1895, brought the literature down to the end of 1894. The new work will contain in a single volume all that is worth preserving of the two previous books, with additional bibliographies, references, notes, and characterizations up to midsummer, 1905. In the preparation of this edition, which has been in hand for several years past, and has involved an immense amount of labour by way both of revision of the old material and of selection and characterization of the new, Mr. Sonnenschein has been largely assisted by Mr. John A. Farquharson.

THE May number of The Dickensian, to be published next week, will contain an article by Mr. Charles G. Harper, the well-known historian of the roads of England, on the Blue Dragon of 'Martin Chuzzlewit,' which he illustrates with three of his own drawings. Mr. Harper maintains that the Blue Dragon of the book was the Green Dragon of Alderbury, not the George Inn at Amesbury, as most commentators aver. The number also contains an article by Mr. W. Teignmouth Shore on 'Martin Chuzzlewit,' and the first of two articles by Mr. Woodford Sowray on 'Dickensian Humbugs.' There will also be a reproduction of Clarkson Stanfield's drawing of the steamship Britannia, in which Dickens went to America in 1842. The cover design is that of the original parts of 'Martin Chuzzlewit.'

MESSRS. LUZAC & Co. have in the press 'Hebrew Humour, and other Essays,' by Dr. Chotzner; Gibb's 'History of Ottoman Poetry,' vol. iv., edited by Prof. E. G. Browne; 'Diplomatic Audiences at the Court of China,' by the Hon. W. W. Rockhill; 'China's Intercourse with Korea from the Fifteenth Century to 1895,' by the same; 'Ad-Damiri's Hayat al-Hayawan' ('Life History of Animals'), translated from the Arabic by Lieut.-Col. A. S. G.

Jayakar; and 'Studies in Eastern History,' vol. ii.

The Northampton Notes and Queries, which has been discontinued for some years, is to be revived, and will commence publication immediately. It is to be edited by Mr. Christopher A. Markham, F.S.A., and published by Mr. W. Mark, of Northampton. Mr. Elliot Stock is acting as London publisher.

A CORRESPONDENT writes:—

"The so-called English cemeteries at Rome and Florence have been looking their sweetest and best lately, and at the entrance to that at Florence there are two lemon-trees bearing fruit and flower at the same time. The dust of Landor, A. H. Clough, and Mrs. Browning reposes there. Some well-known English flowers bloom around the marble monument which bears the simple inscription, 'E. B. B. ob. 1861.' Beside a rose-bush a tablet has been recently hung on the railing, bearing this inscription:—

'In memory of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, planted by Professor Knight, March, 1905.

Roses shall bloom nor want beholders
Sprung from the dust where our own flesh moulders.'

To the English names in the cemetery near San Paolo, Rome, have been added in recent years those of J. A. Symonds, F. W. Myers, and R. M. Ballantyne. The person in charge can usually lead the English or American visitor directly to the graves most asked for—those of Keats, Severn, Shelley, Trelawny, William and Mary Howitt, or the son of Goethe. The new and magnificent marble monument to Goethe himself, a present from Germany, is a great adornment to the Borghese Gardens. Mr. William Sharp has pointed out in his 'Life of Joseph Severn' that the Roman Protestant cemetery is really cosmopolitan, and officially under the charge of the German Embassy, with as many Germans buried there as English, as well as Americans, with Frenchmen, Dutch, Spaniards, Russians, and Scandinavians."

Two interesting libraries of well-known collectors will come up for sale towards the end of the month. At Messrs. Christie's the late Mr. Louis Huth's library will be dispersed on May 24th and following day. It is rich in extra-illustrated dramatic memoirs, in sets of the original editions of D'Israeli, Hazlitt, Washington Irving, Jesse, Ritson, and Walpole, and in first editions of Sterne, Fielding, and Smollett. There is also a fine and complete copy of S. Purchas's 'Hakluytus Posthumus; or, Purchas his Pilgrimes,' 1625, with the stamp of the Royal Observatory on each title. Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge will sell on May 29th and two following days the valuable library of his Honour Judge Philbrick, which is especially noteworthy for its collections of editions of Walton and Cotton's 'Complete Angler,' the 'Eikon Basilike' (the entries in this section extend from 156 to 235, and include a copy of the first issue, 1648, of which Mr. Almack could discover only seven copies), and the works of La Fontaine. As one of the oldest of living stamp collectors, Judge Philbrick has also in his library a number of scarce and interesting books on philately.

INQUIRIES have been numerous of late for the work of Herman Melville, and The Standard is justified in its remark that the absence of a current edition of 'Moby Dick' is scarcely to the credit of our publishers. New books—good, bad, and indifferent—new editions of the classics, and new imitations of them, pour from the press; yet the generation which applauds 'The Cruise of the Cachalot' is without a reprint of its vastly superior prototype, 'Moby Dick.' There was one published by Messrs. Putnam, with an introduction by Mr. Louis Becke, in 1901, but it seems to be out of print, so that Melville's admirers must send to America.

MR. DANIEL W. HERDMAN, assistant in the Newcastle-upon-Tyne Public Library, has been appointed librarian at Grahams-town. The appointment was made by Mr. John Minto, chief librarian of the Brighton Public Library, acting on behalf of the Grahamstown Public Library Committee.

SURPRISE is being freely expressed at the action of Trinity College, Dublin, in giving numerous degrees to women who have reached the necessary standard by examination at Oxford and Cambridge, but cannot at present become graduates of those Universities. No doubt this proceeding adds money to the coffers of Trinity College, Dublin, but it seems to us that the ad eundem principle implies a courtesy which is singularly forgotten when one university directly nullifies the decision of another.

At a meeting of the Sociological Society next Thursday, at the School of Economics and Political Science, Clare Market, Dr. J. H. Bridges will read a paper on 'Some Guiding Principles in the Philosophy of History,' Mr. L. T. Hobhouse in the chair.

MR. C. ARTHUR PEARSON will preside at the Festival of the Printers' Pension Corporation on June 21st. Mr. Pearson, in his appeal for support, states that the 317 pensioners on the books divide among them 4,900*l.* The almshouses shelter thirty-two inmates, and eleven orphan children are maintained.

THE British and Foreign School Society will hold their hundredth general meeting at Stockwell Training College, Clapham Road, on Friday, May 19th. The Right Hon. A. H. D. Acland, the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, M.P., and others, are announced as speakers, and the commemoration stone of the new wing of the college will be laid by Mrs. Asquith.

M. HENRY MARTIN's eloquent plea at the Librarians' Congress of the Universal Exhibition in Paris in 1900, for a special Bibliothèque des Journaux, seems to be on the way to realization, for the Paris "administration préfectorale" is now considering the question. The committee is strongly in favour of the subject, the principal difficulty being to find a building sufficiently large to accommodate the enormous output, past and present, of the daily and periodical press. Both the National and Arsenal Libraries are already much too congested to be available for the purpose. The only way out of the difficulty will be for the City of Paris to create an entirely new establishment, and for this purpose an appeal for funds will have to be made to the Minister of Finance.

RECENT Parliamentary Papers include Board of Education, Regulations for Secondary Schools (2*d.*); and Scotch Education Department, Training of Teachers, Report, Statistics, &c. (6*d.*).

SCIENCE

A Students' Text-Book of Zoology. By Adam Sedgwick. Vol. II. (Swan Sonnenschein & Co.)

ZOOLOGISTS are to be congratulated on the appearance of the second volume of what promises to be a monumental work. Mr. Sedgwick seems in his preface to be a little anxious as to its reception, and we will tell him frankly that we think his active criticism and his virile common sense will be as disagreeable to the zoological pedant as they are agreeable to ourselves. The policy of make-believe is as useless in zoology as elsewhere. We are not hidebound members of a political gang, and if a zoologist doubts that the "parietal eye" of reptiles was ever a visual organ he does not commit an offence for which he ought to be drummed out of the ranks of experts. Again, so long as there is a doubt as to the geological horizon from which certain remains have come, so long, it is clear, the chain of evidence as to the evolution of a group is incomplete, and no harm, but rather good, comes of saying so. Students are all too fond of alluring hypotheses in place of dry facts hard to hold in mind.

Where so many facts are enumerated as in this closely packed volume, the reviewer must be content with a few salient points. Mr. Sedgwick divides the mammals into twenty-two orders, reversing, that is, the tendency of most English writers, who have brought the number down to twelve. This is, of course, largely a matter of opinion, but we must say that it is an extreme step to separate the fissiped and pinniped carnivora into two orders. Man is not only not given an order to himself, he is even placed in the family Anthropomorphidæ. The author concludes with two appropriate but commonplace quotations from Shakspeare and a Hebrew psalmist. We would suggest to him that, after such treatment of the genus Homo, a more appropriate quotation would have been found in one of Mark Pattison's sermons,— "this ephemeral creature, whose existence is a moment in the history of his planet, and whose planet is a speck in the ocean of the universe."

However sceptical Mr. Sedgwick may be as to the processes of evolution, we are glad to see that he calls attention to the important memoir of Kowalevsky as to "adaptive" and "inadaptive" modifications. Though the paper of this Russian naturalist was published in England, it has been almost totally forgotten here, and we can recall but one English general text-book of the subject in which it is discussed.

As we turn over the pages of this work we cannot but feel that, for a time at any rate, the study of mammalian anatomy must yield to the charm of the weird and suggestive fossil reptile. A great advance was made some fifteen years ago in the classification of snakes, when Mr. Boulenger abandoned the old-time division into poisonous and non-poisonous forms; our author rightly follows that authority, but does not, as we think he should, say a word in explanation of what is still very new to a good many zoologists.

It is said that the study of Greek has fallen off in Cambridge, and Mr. Sedgwick's acceptance of the term Haplomi lends colour to this report. In this uncritical acceptance of names, in the mode of quotation of some of his references, and in the want of congruity in his diagnoses, we see signs of the pressure of time on a much-occupied administrator as well as a busy teacher and an enthusiastic investigator. To this class of fault belongs the treatment of the sperm whale, which is said to have "fat" in the space above its upper jaw; this "fat" is fluid, and therefore oil. The student may well ask how air can pass through oil from the anterior to the posterior nostril; the only answer, we believe, is to be found in an early number of the publications of the Cambridge Philosophical Society.

We hope that there will soon be a call for a second edition of this work, when faults like these, and some misprints not noted in the lengthy list of corrigenda, may be corrected, and a number of figures more worthy of the text introduced.

MISS WATERFIELD, in her preface, describes the objects of her handsome book Garden Colour (Dent) as, first, to benefit with hints and information the uninitiated gardener, and, second,

"to illustrate the value of artistic massing of colour and skilful grouping of one variety of plant, and to suggest an ideal for the garden-lover of to-day—pictures in flowers, changing from day to day and month to month."

This latter object is attained by the numerous and charming illustrations in colour, for which Miss Waterfield is herself responsible. But the book is something more than a sumptuous feast of colour; it is a gardener's calendar, to which several hands contribute. For example, Mrs. C. W. Earle, a veteran, writes of spring; E. V. B., another veteran, of summer; Miss Rose Kingsley of autumn, and the Hon. Vicary Gibbs of winter. There is some disproportion in these contributions, for they are pitched in different keys. The ladies write as in a land of pleasant dreams, lapped about with the delights of flowers; Mr. Gibbs writes solidly, practically, with almost ruthless plainness. But that is probably explained by the fact that his contribution was not originally designed for this volume, but appeared in the Journal of the Royal Horticultural Society. Nevertheless, from all the essays readers may get valuable hints. This may be said also of Miss Waterfield's own work, for she has calendared the flowering year herself in months to fit her beautiful illustrations, and she shows full knowledge and skill and lovingkindness in what she modestly calls her "notes." It is true they lack the grace of style and the charm that comes of a literary equipment. But with the author's pictures plentifully interwoven with her text readers may be trusted to embark on dreams for themselves. Most of these pictures come, apparently, from the author's home near Canterbury, but raids have been made on other gardens. The combinations of colour of unlikely plants are particularly to Miss Waterfield's taste. It is easy enough to conceive of Iris reticulata and crocus blending together, but it requires imagination to group delphinium and the giant parsnip, or Bocconia and Michaelmas daisies. Mrs. Earle, we notice, declares that in Surrey "nothing does well if left really alone," and hence deduces the impossibility of "wild garden-ing" there, even to the cultivation of primroses. But surely facts do not bear out this statement. Miss Jekyll's garden is in a very sandy tract of Surrey, and the Royal Horticultural Society's new gardens are situated in a pine forest. The choice of flowers is a question of taste, yet there are some things which every one feels bound to criticize. Miss Waterfield suggests that the cloth-of-gold crocus should be massed with the purple crocus, which seems somehow to jar. The yellow flourishes best apart, and white and purple in varying shades form a more pleasing harmony. Why does Miss Waterfield refuse to class the Horsefieldi daffodil as a "white trumpet"? Why is that admirable and early golden spur omitted from her selections? We can find no reference to the very beautiful and fragrant tazettas, which seems a pity. Miss Waterfield rightly dwells on the value in a garden of the later tulips, which are often neglected. Her choice of cottage tulips is, on the whole, admirable, and is not expensive; but she does not make enough of the wonderful English Florist tulips, with their long ancestry, a flower no self-respecting garden can afford to lack. Bizarres, bybloemens, and roses—their very names are indicative of charm and dignity, and they add to the savour of garden-ing life by the romance of their "breaking" colours. But it would serve no good purpose to go through these pages in this annotating spirit. As in poetry, so in gardening, individual taste is everything; and that Miss Waterfield has good taste is everywhere made evident in this attractive volume.

Steam Pipes: their Design and Construction. By William H. Booth. (Constable & Co.)—The purport of this book is stated on the title-page to be 'A Treatise of the Principles of Steam Conveyance, and Means and Materials employed in Practice to secure Economy, Efficiency, and Safety'; and this statement expresses very fairly, in concise terms, the objects the author has in view. There is a dearth of information in the various engineering text-books with regard to steam piping; and whilst the pressure of steam in boilers has been gradually increased, rendering the efficiency of pipes for the flow of steam proportionately greater, the sizes of steam pipes and steam valves have not been correspondingly reduced, causing undue expenditure on costly items of steam plant. Moreover, the various details relating to flanges, bolts, sockets, joints, and valves have needed investigation; and these defects in design and deficiencies have led Mr. Booth to prepare this volume in order to remedy them. The various matters concerning steam pipes are dealt with in sixteen chapters, for the most part short, on 'The Duty and Object of Steam Pipes,' 'The Flow of Steam,' 'Materials,' 'Expansion,' 'Strength of Pipes,' 'Anti-priming Pipes and Outlet Valves,' 'Joints,' 'Supports,' 'Erection,' 'General Arrangements,' 'Valves,' 'Drainage,' 'Junction Pieces and Flanges,' 'Separators, Exhaust Heads, and Atmospheric Valves,' 'Superheated Steam,' and 'Weights of Pipes'; and in a final brief chapter the kinetic theory of gases in its relation to the flow of steam is touched upon, with a reference to Meyer's book on 'The Kinetic Theory of Gases' for full information on the subject. The book is written in a simple, direct style, and is illustrated by sixty-two drawings and diagrams inserted in the text; and it cannot fail to prove useful to engineers interested in the special subject with which it deals.

ASTRONOMICAL BOOKS.

The Moon: a Summary of the Recent Advances in our Knowledge of our Satellite. With a Complete Photographic Atlas. By William H. Pickering, of Harvard College Observatory. (Murray.)—Although Prof. W. H. Pickering informs us in his preface that the principal object of the present elaborate work was to give an account of the recent great advances in our knowledge of the moon, it was inevitable that a scheme carried out with so much comprehensiveness should virtually include the story of previous investigations, and that the book should be, in fact, almost a complete treasure of selenographical lore. The illustrations are one hundred in number, and of their excellence it is difficult to speak too strongly. If it be asked to what are due the interesting discoveries which have been made respecting lunar formations by the Harvard College Observatory (and the setting forth of these in detail is the primary object of the author), the answer is not so much the power of the optical means provided by the instrument used as the special advantage of the locality in which it was erected, at the daughter establishment of Arequipa in Peru, which is within sixteen degrees of the equator. The steadiness of the atmosphere in that position, free from the effects of the cyclones and anti-cyclones of higher latitudes, whether north or south, produced an excellence of telescopic definition (or "seeing" if we must so call it) which was marvellous. Instead of attempting to study the whole lunar surface, the author devoted his principal attention at Arequipa to selected regions, and a number of discoveries of high interest has been the result. But (as has already been mentioned in The Athenæum) about five years ago he transported a telescope to Jamaica, which is only two degrees further from the equator than Arequipa, and seemed to offer other advantages of importance, in which his hopes were not disappointed. Amongst new features which have been noticed are lines similar to the so-called "canals" on the planet Mars (we may remark that Prof. W. H. Pickering considers the gemination which some claim to have perceived in these to be an optical illusion), and he contends that there is evidence of various kinds pointing to the existence of organic (i.e., vegetable, not intelligent) life on the moon, kept up by carbonic acid gas, which is to vegetable what oxygen is to animal life; but, of course, this suggestion is not without its difficulties. With regard to the origin of the lunar craters, after discussing the different theories which have been put forward, he maintains that this is volcanic in its nature, similar to the action of that kind upon the earth, of the type not of Vesuvius, but of the volcanoes Kilauea and Mowna Loa in the island of Hawaii. The main portion of the work before us is the photographic atlas of the moon from the observations obtained at Jamaica in 1900, and the frontispiece is a splendid photograph of the full moon taken there. But the letterpress, on all parts of selenographical discovery, is of very great interest, and does not fail to include a brief history of the studies of previous astronomers (commencing with Galileo) on what is commonly called our satellite. But, as Prof. W. H. Pickering reminds us, the moon is rather a companion planet than a satellite to the earth, of which it was probably once a part, so that its origin is different from that of the satellites of the more distant planets of the solar system.

A Popular Guide to the Heavens. By Sir Robert Stawell Ball. (Philip & Son.)—This work can only be described as a luxury to all lovers of astronomy who desire to have at hand a compendious and complete guide to the study of the heavens with a handy and careful collection of the most useful data and specimens of the way in which modern art, assisted by the camera, has enabled us to depict some of the glories of the nocturnal sky as revealed through powerful telescopes. In the preface the author tells us how the present work arose. In the year 1892 he edited an atlas of the celestial bodies, which, as explained at the time, was largely due to his friend Dr. Rambaut, who succeeded him at Dublin, but is now Director of the Radcliffe Observatory at Oxford. This has long been out of print, and as a new issue was desired, it was thought best to recast the whole with extensive additions. The result is the splendid volume now before us. No fewer than eighty-three plates are presented, all of a high degree of excellence. Dr. Rambaut's star-maps are retained, with the changes made necessary by the lapse of twelve years, and so are the maps of the lunar surface, which were drawn by the late Mr. Elger. But the advance of astronomical portraiture has rendered it necessary to supersede most of the remaining plates by new material, and in all cases endeavours have been made to reproduce some of the latest and best of their kind. Thus the map of the planet Mars is reduced from the large map made by Mr. A. E. Douglass, and published in the second volume of the 'Annals' of the Lowell Observatory; the drawings of Jupiter are from those of Dr. Lohse at Potsdam, and the illustration of a transit of one of Jupiter's satellites is from a paper by Prof. Barnard, which was published in the Monthly Notices of the Royal Astronomical Society. The photograph of the great sunspot of September, 1898, is a reproduction of one taken at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, and given here by the permission of the Astronomer Royal. A map is included of the paths across the earth of the total solar eclipses during the first half of the last century, adapted from the maps in the late Dr. Oppolzer's famous 'Canon der Finsternisse.' We have not space to speak of all the beautiful illustrations put before our view by Sir Robert; but it is necessary to add that much valuable and handy tabular matter, well brought up to date, has been added, which closes with a useful select list of stars, star-clusters, and nebulae. Great care has evidently been taken to secure accuracy in the printing; and the full index makes it easy to refer to the different parts.

Popular Star-Maps: a Rapid and Easy Method of finding the Principal Stars. By Comte de Miremont. (Same publishers.)—These maps are ten in number and are very conveniently arranged to assist the young astronomer in gaining a first acquaintance with the visible starry firmament. The author appears from his preface to be under the erroneous impression that all, or nearly all, other star-atlases are encumbered with the old fantastic representations of gods, heroes, animals, and creatures of various kinds, over whose forms the greater part of the stars (we say greater part, because the ancient distributions left many large gaps of so-called unformed stars) were supposed to be scattered. Modern maps generally omit these, but the ancient nomenclature is retained for the constellations and stars which have separate names, on account of the difficulty of displacing them, besides which, as names, they will do as well as any others. The distinctive point of Comte de Miremont's maps is that they give particularly clear diagrams of the positions of the principal stars, including (with few exceptions) only those down to the third magnitude, so as to avoid confusion. Opposite each is a key-map on the same scale, giving the names of the stars, with convenient alignments, or connecting lines, to enable the student readily to trace the places of all the bright stars, indicated on the maps themselves as white points on a blue ground. The projection employed in representing a concave surface on plane sheets is that known as the gnomonic; and, in order to retain as much as possible the natural appearance presented by the stars in the sky, the maps are not crossed by lines of right ascension and declination, but the divisions of right ascension are given at top and bottom, and if it be desired for any temporary purpose to connect these, it can easily be done with a straightedge, so as to show where all the stars in or near it lie. Special arrangements are made for depicting on two out of the ten maps the stars around the north and south poles of the heavens. An alphabetical list is included of the stars shown in the maps, and a catalogue of their approximate places, reduced to the epoch of January 1st, 1904. We may remark that Præsepe (not "Proësepe"), the cluster in the constellation Cancer, means not a beehive, but a manger, as the Greek word used by Ptolemy clearly shows, which the two stars near it, called by the ancients asses (aselli), would surely prefer to a beehive; but our author shares this mistake with several other writers. One misprint also may be mentioned in a work generally very correct. On p. 3 Ursæ Minoris appears as "Ursæ Minorus." Altogether the maps may be strongly recommended not only to those who are acquiring a first acquaintance with the starry heavens, but also for the permanent use of those who need to be reminded of the positions of the star-groups and principal stars, for it is, after all, these which are chiefly required, particularly in making meteoric observations; and the lists of stars and constellations are also convenient.

TOTEMISM AND THE DOMESTICATION OF ANIMALS.

MR. JEVONS asks me for evidence in favour of a "universal negative," that "in Australia each kin only spares its own totem," or, "no kin spares any totem but its own." My sentence ran, "Each kin only spares its own totem, if it even does that." When kins do not spare even their own totems, totemism cannot lead to the domestication of animals. However, I frankly grant that I cannot prove a universal negative. There may be tribes in Australia in which the kins spare the totems of all other kins. In that case, what do these kins live upon? It appears that Mr. Jevons ought to produce examples of cases in which all the kins do spare each other's totems. He does produce examples of tribes (in the curious and freakish Arunta stage of belief and custom) in which kins ask other kins to allow them to eat the totem plants or animals of these other kins. If permission to do so were usually refused, I see how animals and plants, always spared by all kins, might come to be domesticated. But I am not aware that permission is usually refused. If it were, what would the tribesmen live upon in cases where everything almost is a totem, and the human kin of each totem neither eats it nor allows other kins to do so? As far as I am aware, even in the Arunta area the kins live on each other's totems, which, therefore, are, in fact, not spared, even though common courtesy there requires that, if Mr. Jevons be a Grub and I a Kangaroo, I must ask his leave to eat grubs, and he must ask my leave to eat kangaroos.

THE REVIEWER.

SOCIETIES.

ROYAL NUMISMATIC. — April 27. — Sir John Evans, President, in the chair. — Mr. H. D. McEwen, Mr. W. H. Moore, and Mr. E. Snelling were elected Fellows. — The following exhibitions were laid before the meeting: By Mr. W. J. Webster, a silver coin of Archelaus of Macedon (B.C. 413-399) with the reverse type (a horse) curiously double-struck so as to represent a horse with two heads: a half-rider of the second issue of James III. of Scotland, without the lis under the sword on the reverse (a very rare variety); and a Merovingian triens of Luxeuil (Haute-Saône). By Mr. A. H. Baldwin, a crown of Charles II. dated 1682, struck over one of 1681 and having the mistake QVRRTO for QVARTO in the lettering on the edge. By Mr. H. W. Monckton, a penny of William I. of the bonnet type, probably of the Sandwich mint, from which no other specimen of this type seems to be known; also, a London halfpenny of Richard II., having the N's in "London" of the Roman form, and crossed in the normal manner, instead of from right to left. By the President, on behalf of Signor Dattari, of Cairo, a small selection of Roman coins, mostly of the Constantine period, from a hoard of about 30,000 recently discovered in Egypt. These coins, before being cleaned, seemed not to differ in any respect from what are usually known as "third-brass" coins; but, on being cleaned by means of a much diluted bath of nitric acid, they presented all the appearance of silver coins. The blanks seem to have been silvered, or perhaps more probably tinned, before they were placed between the dies. Signor Dattari suggests that this may have been done as a precaution against forgery by coins cast in a mould in imitation of the originals.—Mr. Percy Webb read a short paper on 'Fausta N.E. and other Roman Coins,' illustrated by specimens from his own collection. He supported the view of Cohen, who attributes the coin bearing the legend FAVSTA N.E. to Flavia Maxima Fausta, wife of Constantine the Great, rather than to a supposed wife of Constantius II. named Fausta, as has been suggested by other writers. Mr. Webb also gave reasons for declining to believe in the numismatic existence of a Helena, wife of Crispus, in addition to the well-known Helena, mother of Constantine the Great.—Mr. F. A. Walters read the first part of a paper on 'The Coinage of Henry IV.' in which he dealt fully with what is known as the "heavy coinage." He accounted for the great rarity of all the heavy coins from the fact, to which the mint accounts bear witness, that only comparatively trifling amounts of bullion were coined previous to Henry's fourteenth year. He gave reasons, however, for believing that there are actually a larger number of coins in existence which were struck during the earlier part of Henry IV.'s reign than has been supposed, but that these bear the name of Henry's predecessor on the throne. In support of this view Mr. Walters referred especially to a groat bearing the name of Richard. This groat is of peculiar character, and shows, on the breast of the king, a crescent—a badge which was used by Henry IV. in the early part of his reign, and which appears also on at least two heavy nobles and quarter-nobles bearing Henry's name, and undoubtedly belonging to his reign.

ZOOLOGICAL.—April 18.—Mr. Herbert Druce, V.P., in the chair.—The Secretary read a report on the additions to the menagerie during March, and called special attention to an eland and a Bactrian camel, born in the gardens; to a brush-tailed pouched mouse (Phascogale penicillata), a greater bird-of-paradise (Paradisæa apoda) and two lesser birds-of-paradise (P. minor), and to a black lory (Chalcopsittacus ater). The additions during the month numbered 148.—Mr. J. G. Millais exhibited the horn-core (with sheath attached) of an urus (Bos primigenius). The specimen was believed to be the only British example of the actual horn of the urus in existence. The curious corrugations on the surface of the lower end were similar to those found on the American and European bison, and incidentally supported the view that the white cattle of Chillingham, Chartley, and Cadzow were not descended from this animal.—The Secretary exhibited, on behalf of Mr. Oldfield Thomas, a photograph of the horns of a Roberts's gazelle (Gazella grantii robertsi) which had been obtained by Mr. C. L. Chevalier, medical officer to the Anglo-German Boundary Commission.—Dr. W. J. Holland, Director of the Carnegie Museum and Institute, Pittsburg, gave an account, illustrated by stereopticon slides, of the discovery of the skeleton of Diplodocus carnegii, Hatcher, a reproduction of which he was at present installing in the Gallery of Reptiles at the British Museum (Natural History), South Kensington. After paying tribute to the generosity of Mr. Carnegie, who had supplied the funds necessary for the extensive explorations which were being carried on by the Carnegie Institute under the direction of the speaker, he referred to the geology of Wyoming and of the immediate neighbourhood where the specimen was obtained, and incidentally described the methods employed by American collectors to secure vertebrate fossils in fine condition. He then discussed the osteology of Diplodocus, briefly pointing out some of the more interesting structural features of the skeleton, and animadverting upon certain so-called "restorations" made public in popular magazines by artists whose artistic ability was in excess of their scientific knowledge. Dr. Holland concluded by exhibiting pictures of a few of the more remarkable skeletons which had been recovered by the palæontological staff of the Carnegie Museum from various localities in the region of the Rocky Mountains.—Dr. Smith Woodward read a paper on a unique specimen of Cetiosaurus leedsi, a sauropodous dinosaur from the Oxford Clay of Peterborough. He described the fore and hind limbs and the tail, and confirmed the observation of the late Prof. O. C. Marsh that Cetiosaurus was one of the more generalized Sauropoda.—The Secretary read a short paper entitled 'On a Young Female Nigerian Giraffe.' On the evidence afforded by a young female giraffe, obtained by Capt. Phillips in the district of Gummel, about 300 miles due west of Lake Chad, and now deposited in the Society's gardens, he was inclined to believe in the distinctness of the Nigerian giraffe (Giraffa camelo-pardalis peralta of Thomas), which, however, was closely allied to the Nubian form (G. c. typica).—A communication was read from Mr. A. E. Shipley, dealing with the ento-parasites he had obtained from the Zoological Gardens, London, and elsewhere. Thirteen species were enumerated, one of which was described as new.—Mr. R. H. Burne read a paper descriptive of the muscular and visceral anatomy of a leathery turtle (Dermatochelys coriacea). The animal was a young female about four feet long, and was thus considerably larger than the few examples of this rare chelonian that had previously been dissected. It came from Japan.—Mr. Harold Schwann read a paper by Mr. Oldfield Thomas and himself, giving an account of a third collection of mammals made by Mr. C. H. B. Grant for Mr. C. D. Rudd's exploration of South Africa, and presented by the latter gentleman to the National Museum. The present series was obtained in Zululand, and consisted of 222 specimens, belonging to 49 species, of which several were described as new, besides a number of local subspecies.—A communication from Mr. G. A. Boulenger contained a description of a new species of newt from Yunnan.—The Secretary read, on behalf of Dr. Einar Lönnberg, a paper on hybrid hares between Lepus timidus, Linn., and L. europæus, Pall., in Southern Sweden. The hybrids had become comparatively common in this part of Sweden owing to the introduction of the latter species for hunting purposes.—A communication from Mr. A. L. Butler contained a description of the giant eland of the Bahr-el-Ghazal. Mr. Butler was of opinion that this eland was more nearly allied to the West African form than to that of South Africa, and proposed to distinguish it as Taurotragus derbianus gigas. It differed from the typical T. derbianus in its much lighter body-colour (a pale "café-au-lait" fawn instead of a rich ruddy brown), in the greyish-white of the black-maned dewlap, and in carrying grander horns.

MICROSCOPICAL.—April 19.—Dr. D. H. Scott, President, in the chair.—The Secretary read a description of an old portable microscope made by W. & S. Jones, which was said to have been the pocket microscope of Dr. Jenner.—Mr. W. J. Dibdin exhibited a slide of Bacillus typhosus, and explained the method adopted in staining and mounting.—Mr. H. E. Conrady gave a résumé of his paper 'On the Application of the Undulatory Theory to Optical Problems,' illustrated by diagrams on the screen.—Dr. Spitta said that in using the method of graphical representation Mr. Conrady had rendered the subject intelligible to most people.—Mr. Conrady said the method was not devised by himself, but would be found in the article on the wave theory by Lord Rayleigh in the 'Encyclopædia Britannica.'

SOCIETY OF ENGINEERS.—May 1.—Mr. N. J. West, President, in the chair.—A paper was read on 'The Parade Extension Works at Bridlington,' by Mr. E. R. Matthews.

BRITISH NUMISMATIC.—April 26.—Mr. P. Carlyon-Britton, President, in the chair.—Mr. A. Ancombe, the Rev. Dr. A. B. Baird, Lieut.-Col. T. S. Lloyd-Barrow, Mr. Jacques Schulman, and Mr. Egert F. L. Steintal were elected Ordinary Members.—His Excellency M. Gaston Carlin, the Swiss Minister, was nominated for election as an Honorary Member, and six further applications for ordinary membership were received.—Mr. W. Sharp Ogden read a paper 'Concerning Reverse Types of the Pennies of William I. to Henry II.,' in which, by means of diagrams, he traced back the common origin of the graceful designs of the Anglo-Norman coinage to their prototypes in the chi rho cross, the alpha and omega, and other symbols of the early Christian Church, showing by comparisons of the Byzantine and Carolingian coinages the gradual changes through which the types passed before arriving at their Anglian form.—The President contributed a paper upon 'The Oxford Mint in the Reign of Alfred.' This was in reply to certain recent publications in which the extraordinary theory has been raised that the well-known coins of Alfred bearing the names of London, Canterbury, and, presumably, Oxford were really struck by Vikings at mints in the north and east of England. Against these guesswork attributions Mr. Carlyon-Britton, in instancing the case of Oxford, proved from the coins in question that it was in Alfred's reign that the old name of the town, Ouseford, which still survives in that of the island of Ousney, was changed to Isisford, and, finally, to Oxford. Amongst other reasons for the change he pointed out that when Mercia came within Alfred's domains two rivers bearing the name Ouse, within twenty miles of each other, passed under his rule and both bordered the county of Oxford; hence it was expedient to change the name of one, which he classically renamed the Isis. Prior to this change, therefore, his coins struck at Oxford bore the old name, Ousna Forda, for the Ford of the Ouse; and after it Isiri Firda, for Isiris Firda (Isidis Fyrd), the Ford of the Isis. When next coins of Oxford appear, viz., in the time of Athelstan, the modern form had been finally adopted in its Latin contraction of Ox Urbis. These facts, he urged, not only disproved the fanciful appropriations of the Oxford coinage to some Northumbrian mint, such as Salford, which had been suggested, but were yet further instances of the importance of our British coinage as a factor in the evidence of British history.—Amongst an interesting series of numismatic exhibitions by Messrs. Bernard Roth, R. A. Hoblyn, S. Spink, and W. Wells, and the President, Mr. Lawrence showed the original puncheons made by Croker for the coronation medal of George II. and Queen Caroline.—Presentations to the Society's collection and library were made by Messrs. J. Sanford Saltus, L. Forrer, C. L. Stainer, Spink & Son, Oswald Fitch, and W. Talbot Ready.

MEETINGS NEXT WEEK.

- Mon. Surveyors' Institution, 7.—Junior Meeting.
- Society of Arts, 8.—'Some Aspects of Ancient and Modern Embroidery,' Lecture II., Mr. Alan S. Cole. (Cantor Lecture.)
- Geographical, 8½.—'The Nile Provinces and Western Uganda,' Lieut.-Col. C. De Me-Kadelliffe.
- Tues. Royal Institution, 5.—'The Study of Extinct Animals,' Lecture II., Prof. L. C. Miall.
- Colonial, 8.—'New Zealand and its Dependencies,' Earl of Ranfurly.
- Wed. Geological, 8.—'The Geology of Dunedin (New Zealand) and its Neighbourhood,' Mr. Patrick Marshall; 'The Carboniferous Limestone of the Weston-super-Mare District,' Mr. T. F. Sibly.
- Society of Arts, 8.—'The Native Races of the Unknown Heart of Central Africa,' Viscount Mountmorres.
- Thurs. Royal, 4½.
- Society of Arts, 4½.—'The Manufactures of Greater Britain III. India,' Mr. H. J. Tozer. (Indian Section.)
- Royal Institution, 5.—'Flame,' Lecture II., Sir James Dewar.
- Institution of Electrical Engineers, 8.—'Telephone Traffic,' Mr. H. Laws Webb.
- Antiquaries, 8½.
- Fri. Astronomical, 5.
- Physical, 8.—'A Simple Method of determining the Radiation Constant suitable for a Laboratory Experiment,' Dr. A. D. Denning; 'A Bolometer for the Absolute Measurement of Radiation,' Prof. H. L. Callendar; 'The Resistance of a Conductor the Measure of the Current flowing through it,' Mr. W. A. Price.
- Royal Institution, 9.—'The Pressure due to Radiation,' Prof. E. Fox Nichols.
- Sat. Royal Institution, 3.—'Moulds and Mouldiness,' Lecture II., Prof. Marshall Ward.

Science Gossip.

Two Swedish men of science, Prof. Sjöstedt and E. Sandberg, have left Gothenburg for East Africa, where they intend to undertake a scientific investigation of the nature of the country.

THE death is announced of Prof. Otto Struve, who succeeded his father as Director of the Nicholas Central Observatory at Pulkowa in 1861. He was elected an Associate of the Royal Astronomical Society of London in 1848, and two years later received its gold medal in recognition of his valuable investigation of the constant of precession. He retired at the end of 1889, and had resided since 1894 at Karlsruhe, Baden, where he almost completed the eighty-sixth year of his age, having been born at Dorpat in May, 1819.

PROF. E. C. PICKERING has discovered, with the 24-inch Bruce telescope of the Harvard College Observatory, a tenth satellite of the planet Saturn, which appears to revolve in about twenty-one days, in an orbit a little within that of Hyperion, discovered in 1848.

THAT exceedingly useful book of reference, the 'Astronomischer Jahresbericht' of Herr W. F. Wislizenus, has recently been published for 1904, the sixth year of a series of which the annual volumes appear (in view of the amount of work involved) with remarkable promptitude, and give a brief but careful abstract of the contents of all astronomical publications, articles, and papers produced during the year. The whole number of notices for last year amounts to 2,280.

FINE ARTS

THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(First Notice.)

MR. SARGENT at the Academy, Mr. Havard Thomas and Mr. Sargent at the New Gallery, and the rest—such is the bill of fare of the great annual city dinner of pictures for this season. Not, we suppose, since Mr. Sargent first dawned on the astonished gaze of the fashionable world has any work of art produced so great a sensation as Mr. Thomas's 'Lycidas,' and a sculptor who has long been known to artists as one of the most talented of the profession has—partly by chance, though much more by the inherent merit of his work—suddenly burst into fame. But we must defer detailed analysis of this work to another article, and return to the Sargents at the Academy.

By far the most striking of his contributions is the group of The Marlborough Family (No. 256). Indeed, it is the most ambitious composition which Mr. Sargent has yet produced, and it is extremely interesting to see how he has faced the problem of a portrait d'apparat on this scale. He has faced it with all his accustomed clearness of insight, his marvellous power of sheer representation, and his plain good sense, and in consequence he has come through the ordeal with distinct success. He has done, that is, about as well as any one could do such a thing who possessed neither by training nor by deliberate study the accumulated learning of experience in the handling of such a theme. One may even doubt, in spite of the deliberate acknowledgment of Reynolds's picture at Blenheim, how far he has been aware of the necessity imposed on him by such a subject for a complete readjustment of the method of approach as compared with that which is appropriate enough to a less pretentious arrangement. For the moment that you have no longer Lord or Mr. So-and-so in his private capacity, but the ducal family posing as part of the scheme of the British Constitution, there is a change of venue, the affair must be tried on new grounds. Whatever is merely natural and habitual in pose or gesture will be below the claims of the occasion; composition, chiaroscuro, and colour can no longer be merely harmonious, much less merely explanatory; they must help the illusion of grandeur and support the ritual. For such a work does, in fact, come within the category of historical art—it is no longer mere likeness or genre. Mr. Sargent seems to have felt this to a certain extent: the pose of the figures is stately and contained; he has avoided those sudden impulsive movements with which he creates at times so surprising an effect of actuality. The grouping is also exceedingly skilful, because, without falsifying the facts, he has marked the difference in height of the two principal figures, and given the Duke, in spite of his subordinate position, real dignity. But here he seems to have stopped in his process of reasoning; he has seen that in such a composition artless spontaneity of gesture would, in fact, be affectation; he has hardly seen that a similar artlessness in the manner of representation is also really out of key. He appears to have arranged his group with great care, to have chosen his setting admirably, and then to have just painted it as directly and literally as possible, forgetting that in such a case the real thing can never quite come up to the ideal which it itself sets up, and that therefore the artist who is to attain to real grandeur of style must make all kinds of subtle adjustments, accentuations, and suppressions to express that idea. Thus in the design, though the main idea of the pyramidal mass built up by the figures of the Duchess and her children is excellent, the forms are too meagre, and cut harshly upon the cold light of the wall behind. This mass required in some way supporting and reinforcing by a fresh division of the background. Then, again, in the figure of the Duke, though part of the silhouette is more thoughtfully elaborated as design than is Mr. Sargent's usual practice, the folds of the robe are too accidental, and an awkward repetition of a similar diagonal fold at once attracts attention. Again, a sharp contrast of the white lining with the dark blue of the robe at the lowest part detains the eye unduly, as does also a very awkward and too emphatic brush-mark on the forehead of the younger boy. Then the colour, pretty and original as it is, is perhaps too pretty—too slight for the scale of the composition. Only by such a scientific use of impasto and glaze as Reynolds had at command could the blue of the Duke's robe have had the full saturation and transparency which such a large mass of dark local colour required. As it is, at a distance it becomes a mere dark, cold, opaque mass, which adds nothing to the splendour of the scheme. The picture is, however, held together by the brilliance of the salmon-pink and grey gold of the centre portion, while the painting of the architecture is luminous and clear, and the placing of the figures in their atmosphere and the realization of the picture space are masterly. Indeed, when all is said, one has to admit the surprising power with which so great a work has been carried through with such an appearance of ease. Mr. Sargent is, perhaps, the only living artist who has the force—we had almost said the physical force—to accomplish so much.

Mr. Sargent's other pictures are much more in the ordinary vein, and are none of them of great importance. The Lady Warwick (168) is an unpleasant picture, extravagant and yet not distinguished in pose, and clayey in colour. "A Vele Gonfie" (376) is one of those odd pictures with which Mr. Sargent occasionally puzzles the public. Every now and again he strikes one as having concealed about him a turn for very dry and bitter irony, but his expression of it is so subdued, he so baffles one by the blandness of his commonplaces and the apparent sincerity of his love of the banal, that one does not know how far the irony is conscious. But it is in such pictures as this that Mr. Sargent is most intriguing to the critic, and one would suppose most trying to his sitters.

From Mr. Sargent we fall plump on the rest. We ought, however, to except from such a disparaging classification Mr. Orchardson's portrait of Howard Colls, Esq. (221), which, though it can hardly count as one of the artist's important works, stands out from its present surroundings as the work of a man inspired by genuinely artistic feeling.—Near by hangs a work of very different calibre, the President's Cup of Tantalus (222). The fact that this will be dealt with in the lottery of some art union seems to absolve the critic from further inquiries.—Beside this Sir Lawrence Alma Tadema's Finding of Moses (212) is lively and entertaining. Sir Lawrence has a pretty taste in bric-à-brac, and the invention of the accessories is often charming; even the apposition of local colours at times shows real choice, as, for instance, in the dull rose of the stuff which binds the lotus flowers to the child's cradle. It will, we expect, be something of a sensation to the public to find that Sir Lawrence Alma Tadema has added granite, and that of two colours, to his repertory of painted materials. There are signs, too, in the painting of the stretcher on which the cradle is borne that he may achieve the art of graining as well. With all this elaborate furnishing, not to mention a highly finished study of larkspurs in the foreground, which completely puts the eye out for the rest of the picture, we need not wonder that the figures play a very secondary rôle. Like the actors in some plays, they perform as repossoirs for the furniture and scenery. The actual scenery in Sir Lawrence's tableau is, however, the worst part, and almost vies with Long and Goodall. We can find, from a strictly artistic point of view, no drawing, no colour, and most emphatically no quality in this picture, but for all that it has a certain charm as picture-book illustration; and judged by this standard it is admirable. One imagines that the artist takes real pleasure in his archaeological ingenuity and in the perverse skill with which he realizes his stuffs. It is, from every point of view, the best work that Sir Lawrence Alma Tadema has exhibited for many years.

The post of honour in Gallery No. III. is held by Mr. Luke Fildes's State portrait of Her Majesty Queen Alexandra (146). This adequately answers to what we have gradually been taught to expect of a royal portrait—that is to say, merely artistic considerations are not allowed to intrude. Such trifling matters as harmony of colour and tone must not affect the exact record of a prescribed Court ceremonial. We imagine, however, that this will count as a triumph to Mr. Fildes, on account of its excessive prettiness. The other State portraits scarcely seem to succeed from any point of view, and we may pass to the consideration of those pictures in which some artistic purpose is evident.

In Gallery IV., quite close to Mr. Sargent's 'Marlborough Family,' hangs, a great deal too high up, an Equestrian Portrait of a Boy (254), by Mr. G. W. Lambert, which shows a real sense of design and a certain scholarly deliberation in the choice of colour, the note of dry red telling well upon a general scheme of warm greys and browns.—Then Mr. Clausen has this year surpassed all his former efforts. His Morning in June (54) is original in composition, and held together by the intensity and conviction of its record of a particular effect. That this is not a very pleasing one may be admitted; the fierce cold greens of the distance and the leaden blues of the shadows are what we all know and lament in an English landscape with a June east wind; but the simplicity and directness of the observation, and the zest with which the effect is apprehended, make the work essentially sympathetic. Mr. Clausen's other landscape, The Ploughman's Breakfast: November (532), is based upon a more agreeable colour effect, and the flitter of winter sunlight upon the leaves is recorded with real penetration. If only Mr. Clausen could have forgone his mustard yellows in the foreground the delicacy of the colour effect would have been greatly enhanced. But even as it is there is a genuine sincerity of feeling about the picture, which makes it a solace to eyes and nerves shattered by Herr von Herkomer's portrait of Sir Albert Rollit (497) on the opposite wall.—The late Mr. Furse's large equestrian group, Cubbing with the York and Ainsty: Children of Lyckett Green, Esq. (515), hangs in this gallery. It is an average example of the artist's talent, somewhat loose and empty in design, and summary in execution. In this connexion we may congratulate the Council of the Academy upon the acquisition for the Chantrey Collection of Mr. Furse's 'Return from the Ride.' It is an astute move, and will conciliate some of their critics without sacrificing too much to art. For Mr. Furse, with essentially the same ideals as inspire the popular painters of the Academy, managed to give to his work the appearance of an artistic intention. The purchase ought therefore not to be accepted by the public as an adequate atonement for past omissions, or in lieu of the acquisition of a Whistler, whose claims to representation remain supreme.

In the same speech in which Sir Edward Poynter announced this acquisition, he declared the intention to erect a monument to Watts. We can only hope that this will take the appropriate form of erecting somewhere in London

Watts's own great work in sculpture, 'Physical Energy.' It would be too ironical a fate if the one great work of monumental sculpture which our age has seen should be invisible in England, while its author is commemorated by one of those perfunctory photographs in bronze which are the very antithesis of all that he strove for and accomplished.

The sculpture galleries of the present Royal Academy Exhibition contain sufficient warnings of what such a monument might be like. For surely never has there been so even and so low a level of mediocrity in these rooms. Mr. Basil Gotto's John Rinder, Esq. (1685), though too deliberately Rodin-like, stands out at least by reason of its showing a fine sense of the material. Mr. Derwent Wood's bronze, My Son (1703), Mr. Hope Pinker's Bishop of Hereford (1730), Mr. J. H. Furse's model for a bronze figure (1662), and Countess Gleichen's bust of The Late Arthur Strong (1794) are all respectable; but for the rows of characterless and insipid likenesses it is impossible to imagine any purpose, even of social ostentation, which they can adequately fulfil. Sir W. B. Richmond's Homer (1832) is a triumph, even for him, of eclecticism, being a cross between the 'Delphi Charioteer' and Rodin's 'Balzac.'

OXFORD EXHIBITION OF HISTORICAL PORTRAITS.

THE second loan collection of pictures held under the auspices of the Oxford Historical Society is confined to portraits of English historical personages who died between 1625 and 1714. This was the age of Van Dyck, Lely, and Kneller, and it is for examples of their work that one first looks. Unfortunately, none of the three can be said to be well represented here; indeed, the most famous of these artists is possibly unrepresented by an original, as the Jesus College portrait of Charles I., which is the only one claimed as a genuine Van Dyck, is open to doubt.

The only unchallenged Lely is the well-known picture of Anne St. John, Countess of Rochester (No. 184), lent by Viscount Dillon, though there seems little reason to doubt the authenticity of George Morley (148) or the fine group, John Fell, John Dolben, and Richard Allestree (153). Lely's successor as the fashionable portrait-painter, Sir Godfrey Kneller, has nine portraits in this collection, including one or two of his very best works.

All these three artists had a host of imitators, so that copies of their works abound. Their pupils and assistants are well represented in this exhibition: Robert Walker, J. M. Wright, William Dobson, John Riley, all influenced by Van Dyck; John Greenhill and Mary Beale, assistants of Lely; and Michael Dahl and Robert Byng, assistants of Kneller. It is a great pity that there is nothing here by the worthiest rival to Kneller, the Englishman Jonathan Richardson.

On the whole, however, the chief interest in the exhibition lies not so much in the artists and their art as in the historic personages themselves. If we detect monotony and a flavour of cheapness in these portraits, we must remember that the painters were hampered by the fashions and conventions of the day, and that these same defects would be just as apparent in a national exhibition of pictures of this period as they are here. As works of art very few appeal to us, but as mementoes of famous men and women they are all-important.

The first portrait we pause before is a three-quarter-length Bishop Buckeridge, of Rochester (4), by Thomas Murrey, a painter who, like many of his contemporaries, seldom painted more than the face himself. Passing on we come to one of the curiosities of the exhibition, a very good painting of old Thomas Parr (14), the tenant farmer of Shropshire, whose claim to fame and a burial in Westminster Abbey was his great age, 152 years. We may compare with this the even better portrait of Mother George (173), who lived to be 111, an old Oxford woman of whom it is said, "when she came to be an hundred, she doubled every year."

Oxford should be especially interested in the portrait of John Tradescant the Elder (16) and John Tradescant the Younger (83 and 84). The former was a traveller, botanist, and collector, who established at Lambeth the museum that was afterwards to form the nucleus of the present Ashmolean Museum, the name Tradescant "being unjustly sunk in that of Ashmole," a friend of the family, to whom the museum was bequeathed, with the wish that it should afterwards go to Oxford or Cambridge. Among other things England owes to him the apricot, the lilac, and the acacia, all of which he brought back from his travels. The portraits of John Tradescant the Younger are of considerable merit, and have been attributed to William Dobson, the first English painter—except Sir Nathaniel Bacon—to distinguish himself in portrait painting.

Ralph Kettel (24), President of Trinity, must have been a great trial to his undergraduates. Aubrey tells us

"he had a very venerable presence, and was an excellent governor; his fashion was to go up and down the college, and peep in at the keyholes to see whether the boys did mind their books or no. He was irreconcilable to long hair; when he observed the scholars' hair longer than ordinary he would bring a pair of scissors in his muff, and woe be to them that sat on the outside of the table. He scolded best in Latin."

But he had his good points as well, for "where he observed diligent boys that he guessed had but a slender exhibition, he would many times put money in at his window." The portrait itself is not of great merit; it is said to have been painted from memory by George Bathurst.

There is a very charming painting of Sir John Suckling (27), the poet, who at Court "was the greatest gallant of his time and the greatest gamester." Not far off is another poet, William Drummond of Hawthornden (41), whose beautiful face looks the more attractive as the portrait hangs between two pictures of the celebrated Dr. Samuel Fell.

The five portraits of William Laud (35-39) are all copies, and not very successful ones, of the Van Dyck in Lambeth Palace; there is little to choose between them, but the best perhaps is the copy lent by the President of St. John's (38).

We now come to another interesting character, John Taylor (50), known as "The Water Poet." This title is a misnomer, for he was no poet, though he could rhyme with facility; his wit, which was vigorous and very vulgar, found best expression in prose lampoons. He delighted in eccentric freaks; it is related, for instance, how "he once started on a voyage from London to Queensborough in a paper boat, with two stockfish tied to two canes for oars." He began life as a Thames waterman, and ended it as a public-house keeper in Long Acre. The portrait is by his nephew, of the same name, an amateur painter of considerable ability, who was Mayor of Oxford in 1695. There are several other portraits of local celebrities by the same artist in this exhibition, of which the best is John Wall (93), "a severe student who spent his time in celibacy and books." A good picture is that of Nicholas Fiske (64), by a little-known artist, Cornelius Neve. Fiske was an eminent mathematician and astrologer, of whom Gadbury says: "the ablest for instruction in those mysteries in our time; left a good name though not a good estate behind him."

There are seven portraits of Charles I., all of which repay attention. The two most interesting are the fine full-length Jesus College portrait (76), which, if not a genuine Van Dyck, is an extremely good copy, and the peculiarly pathetic painting, by Edward Bower (77), as the King "satt at his tryall in Westminster Hall, 1648." Close at hand is the well-known Oliver Cromwell (78), from Earl Spencer's collection. This fine picture is by Robert Walker, whom Evelyn refers to in his 'Diary': "I sate for my picture to Mr. Walker, that excellent painter."

Pausing just to notice Henry Lawes (87), the musician, William Juxon (89), the poet Shirley (92), Jeremy Taylor (94), and Abraham Cowley (102), poet and satirist, we come to an interesting picture of John Milton (115) as a boy, lent by Mr. Lewis Harcourt, M.P., a copy by Benjamin Van der Gucht of a lost original.

A very clever painting is that of A Scullion of Christ Church (127), by John Riley. According to old college tradition, this is a scullion who was employed to sing satirical ballads against the party of James II. previous to the Revolution of 1688. John Riley has three other pictures in this collection, but none of them is so good as this. It was when sitting to this artist that Charles II. is reported to have said, "Is this like me? Then, odds-fish, I'm an ugly fellow!"—Thomas Hobbes (133), the author of the 'Leviathan,' whose company was welcomed, Aubrey says, "for his pleasant facetiousness and good nature," here looks the very reverse of pleasant or good-natured.

We then pass to one of the best pictures in the collection, that of Prince Rupert (142), from Magdalen College. The artist is the Englishman John Michael Wright, alluded to by Evelyn in his 'Diary,' under date October 3rd, 1662: "Visited Mr. Wright, a Scotsman, who had lived long in Rome, and was esteemed a good painter." In the same year Pepys refers to him, though not in such flattering terms, for after seeing Lady Castlemaine's portrait in Lely's studio, he says, "Thence to Mr. Wright's, the painter; but, Lord! the difference that is between their works." This portrait of Prince Rupert is a whole-length one, and represents him in the mantle and collar of the Order of the Garter over plate armour. It is a very good example of this painter's work, which is characterized by a strength and dignity which contrasts well with the ordinary fashions and conventions of the time.

James Butler, Duke of Ormonde (158), is the first genuine Kneller in this collection, and close by is his portrait of Queen Mary II. (161), in a very elaborate dress. Good pictures though these two are, neither equals his large full-length portrait of John Wallis (163), a celebrated mathematician. Kneller was sent to Oxford by Samuel Pepys specially to paint this picture, which he afterwards presented to the University. Pepys quotes Kneller as saying to him: "I never did a better picture, nor so good an one in my life, which is the opinion of all as has seen it." Thomas Cartwright (165) is by the Flemish artist Gerard Soest, of whom it is said that his manners were so gruff that ladies refused to sit to him. There is a disappointing portrait of Dryden (187), and we then come to the two kings, James II. (192) and William III. (193), neither of whom appears in a very flattering light.

The rather peculiar picture of William Jane (199) is by William Gandy, an artist who, according to Northcote, was idle and careless of his reputation as a painter, though he might have been the greatest of his time. At any rate, we owe him a debt of gratitude in that it was he who directed and stimulated the rising genius of Joshua Reynolds. Jacob Huysman, to whom the unprepossessing portrait of Catherine of Braganza (203) is attributed, is referred to by Pepys in appreciative terms. Under August 26th, 1664, he writes:—

"I went to see some pictures at one Huysman's, a picture drawer, a Dutchman, which is said to exceed Lilly; and indeed there is, both of the Queenes and Maids of Honour, particularly Mrs. Stewart's in a buff doublet like a soldier, as good pictures as ever I saw."

There are two fine portraits of the philosopher John Locke, the first (204) by Thomas Gibson, the second (215) representing him at the advanced age of seventy-two, by Sir Godfrey Kneller. Of the five portraits of Henry Aldrich, the designer of Peckwater Quadrangle, "a polite, though not profound scholar, and jovial hospitable gentleman" (Macaulay), far the best is that by Kneller (211), the others looking very poor in comparison.

Just noticing Bishop Ken (216) and Bishop Compton (224), we come to the last two pictures in the collection, the queens Anne (227) and Mary of Modena (228). The latter has been already referred to as a fine portrait generally attributed to Lely; the former is by Michael Dahl, the most important of the host of Kneller's imitators.

One word as to the general condition of the pictures. Now that these portraits have been removed from the darkness of college halls, one is able to see in what a very bad condition many of them are. It would be a good opportunity, when this exhibition closes on June 1st, for the respective owners to have defective canvases restored, for, though cleaning may to a certain extent take away refinement and harden contours, it is better to risk that than allow complete decay to set in.

The pictures have been arranged as far as possible in the chronological order of the deaths of the subjects. The Catalogue, with an introduction by Mr. Lionel Cust, is admirable, and adds full and interesting notes on the subjects and the artists.

C. C.

LORD GRIMTHORPE.

THE death last Saturday, in his eighty-ninth year, of Edmund Beckett, Baron Grimthorpe, removes one of the most vigorous personalities of our time. Lord Grimthorpe, who was raised to the peerage in 1886, had succeeded to his father's baronetcy in 1874 as Sir Edmund Beckett, dropping the name of Denison, which his father had assumed in 1816. He is best known for his restoration of the Cathedral of St. Albans, on which he spent a great deal of money, though his drastic and dogmatic operations did not secure the general commendation of those best qualified to judge. It was splendid, but not architecture. To mention one detail only, his great "rose" window of unique and singularly bald design has been the subject of much derisive criticism. The invention of the verb "to Grimthorpe" was the result of this and similar restorations, or rather, we may say, renovations. This verb has been somewhat unkindly defined in an American dictionary as "to spend money lavishly, but without taste or discrimination, on an old building." Lord Grimthorpe was too fond of his own conceptions to cherish proper respect for those of other experts and of antiquity. He wished to leave his own mark, and succeeded in doing so. Characteristic of him are the Latin mottoes rather obtrusively placed about the edifice to record his work in St. Albans. They do no particular credit to his scholarship. But he had other endowments, perhaps more valuable for success in life—a fund of sound sense, considerable knowledge of mechanics and other sciences, and a pertinacity in pursuing his own ends, together with a gift of vigorous and not too accurate English which carried him far as a Parliamentary counsel and a controversialist on many subjects. He may be said to have spent a large portion of his life in disputation, being one of those happy persons who are sure that they are right, and have ample means to express and maintain their view.

His writings are not likely to survive, except in one or two cases. His book on 'Clocks,

Watches, and Bells,' which has passed through many editions, is probably his best work. In this line he was really an expert, as the success of the erection of Big Ben at Westminster under his management showed. He was responsible not only for the clock, but also for the bells on which the bells are struck. He was generous in gifts of clocks for old church towers, but insisted on marring their beauty by the aggressively opaque white face that he favoured. He was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1866, where he was often to be seen in earlier days in antagonism with Airy. In 1865 he published an elementary book for the S.P.C.K., called 'Astronomy without Mathematics,' which reached a sixth edition in 1876, but has long since been out of print. His 'Book on Building, Civil and Ecclesiastical, &c.' (1876), combines some sound sense with a good deal of vituperation. He delighted in trampling on what he considered the exuberance of architects when plans for faculties were submitted to him; but his hasty zeal in this respect led him sometimes into pitfalls which gave joy to his opponents. A notable instance of this was the case of the church of Wintringham, near Malton, the chancel of which has certain exceptional thirteenth-century buttresses. A new vestry being required, plans were submitted to Lord Grimthorpe. He returned them to the vicar with blue pencil scribbles right through these ancient buttresses, and the marginal note, in the Chancellor's hand, was to this effect:—

"What does your architect mean? These buttresses must come out: they are meant, I suppose, to be an imitation of Early English, but they are only a caricature."

He was Chancellor and Vicar-General of York, 1877-1900, a post which suited his tastes admirably, for he revelled in all the details of ecclesiastical procedure.

SALES.

AT Messrs. Christie's on the 29th ult. the following works, the property of Mr. J. Gabbitts, were sold. Drawings: D. Cox, A Landscape, with a windmill, peasants, sheep, and horses, 273*l.*; A Woody Landscape, with a peasant-woman, 168*l.*; Seedtime, 68*l.* Copley Fielding, A Landscape, with a castle, figures, and cattle, 262*l.* H. Herkomer, A Bavarian Peasant-Woman, Midday, 52*l.* H. Moore, A Coast Scene, with mussel-gatherers, 81*l.* L. P. Smythe, The Old Garden, Wimille, 78*l.* P. De Wint, Stacking Hay, 63*l.* E. Detaille, Carrying the Colours, 78*l.* G. Poggenbeck, A Woody Stream, with ducks, 57*l.* G. Simoni, The Market-Place, Tlemcen, Morocco, 57*l.* J. H. Weissenbruch, A River Scene, with a windmill, 189*l.* Pictures: G. Clausen, An Autumn Morning, Ploughing, 199*l.*; A Farmyard, Evening, 105*l.* J. Constable, A Landscape, with a peasant-woman on the road, 110*l.*; Old Cottage at Langham, Suffolk, 294*l.* T. Faed, The Cobbler's Family, 126*l.* Gainsborough, Mrs. Leslie Baker, of Bath, 178*l.* J. Holland, Venice, 105*l.* Lawrence, The Age of Innocence, 262*l.* J. Linnell, Driving the Flock, Sunset, 283*l.* Corot, La Chevière, 1,732*l.*; A River Scene, with an angler, and a peasant in a boat, 399*l.* A. G. Decamps, On the Look-Out, 283*l.* N. Diaz, A Rocky Landscape, with peasants and cattle, 504*l.*; A Forest Glade, 136*l.* H. Fantin-Latour, Roses in a Glass Vase, 199*l.* C. Jacque, Shepherd and Sheep at the Edge of a Wood, Evening, 588*l.* A. Legros, A Landscape, with a peasant and farmhouses, 115*l.* J. Maris, The Outskirts of a Town, with a peasant on a white horse, 273*l.* A. T. J. Monticelli, Nymphs playing Musical Instruments in a Garden, 189*l.* A. Watteau, A Fête Champêtre, 126*l.*

The same firm sold on the 2nd inst. the following etchings: The Kitchen, by Whistler, 25*l.*; The Doorway, by the same, 29*l.*; The Riva, by the same, 26*l.* Breaking up of the Agamemnon, by Sir F. Seymour Haden, 28*l.* Sunset in Ireland, 29*l.* Le Petit Pont, by C. Méryon, 25*l.*; L'Abside de Notre-Dame, by the same, 27*l.* After Van Dyck: The Duchess of Lorraine, by Laguerre, 25*l.* The Interior of Burges Cathedral, by A. H. Haig, 45*l.*; Mont St. Michel, by the same, 34*l.* After Lawrence: Countess Gower and Daughter, by S. Cousins, 26*l.* After Reynolds: Mrs. Braddyl, by the same, 39*l.* After Opie: The Sleeping Nymph, by P. Simon, 32*l.* After Meissonier: 1807, by J. Jacquet, 80*l.*; Le Guide, by A. Jacquet, 25*l.*

On Tuesday the choice collection of modern pictures by French artists formed by M. H. Pasquier was dispersed at the Galerie Georges Petit by M. P. Chevallier, fifty lots realizing 219,125*fr.* The highest price of the sale was obtained for an example of Fantin-Latour, La Danse de l'Almée, which realized 21,300*fr.* Another example of this artist, Bethsabée, brought 7,100*fr.* The others included: Boudin, Vue prise au Passage de Plougastel, painted in 1872, 6,300*fr.*; Tête de Flandre, 6,000*fr.* Harpignies, Sentier au Bord du Ruisseau, 7,000*fr.* Lepine, L'Ecluse du Canal à Saint-Denis, 7,400*fr.* Lhermitte, Au Lavoir, 10,100*fr.* Two examples of Ziem, both views in Venice, Santa Maria à l'Aube, 9,300*fr.*; and Le Quai des Esclavons, 14,700*fr.* Corot, La Route à l'Orée du Bois, 10,500*fr.*

The sales of the first two parts of the collection and remaining works of Hector Giacomelli (whose death was announced in The Athenæum of December 10th last), at the Hôtel Drouot, proved to be of unusual interest, the pictures and drawings alone producing 172,040*fr.* Vigée Le Brun's portrait of Madame de Gourbillon, painted at Turin in 1792, brought 23,000*fr.*; and a very fine water-colour drawing by Honoré Daumier, Les Amateurs, 9,100*fr.* A long series of Giacomelli's own highly finished and beautiful drawings, chiefly of bird life, averaged about 300*fr.* each, although one realized 700*fr.* A crayon drawing by J. F. Millet, Les Laveuses au Clair de Lune, went for 12,100*fr.* The series of sixty drawings by A. Raffet was important, many selling at over 1,000*fr.* each. Giacomelli was the authority on Raffet, and many of the drawings in his sale were reproduced in his 'Bibliographie Complète' of Raffet, which appeared as long ago as 1862, and many were again used in M. F. Lhomme's admirable monograph in the "Artistes Célèbres" series issued in 1892. One of the most important of the Raffet lots was the collection of 240 drawings, in pencil, pen, and water colours, for the 'Expédition et Siège de Rome,' which was secured for the Louvre at 4,100*fr.*

Fine-Art Gossip.

MR. H. J. FINN's water-colour drawings of various cathedrals and cathedral towns, at the Dickinson Galleries, have been open on private view this week.

MR. GUTEKUNST opens to-day an exhibition of fine prints.

MESSRS. T. AGNEW & SONS invite us to the private view of the goldsmith and jewellery work of R. Lalique next Thursday in Old Bond Street.

THE death, in his eighty-eighth year, is announced from Berlin of the distinguished landscape painter Eduard Pape. His pictures were chiefly representations of Swiss, Tyrolean, and Italian scenery. One of the best-known is the 'Falls of Schaffhausen,' in the Berlin National Gallery.

MR. FREDERICK WEDMORE has finished the revision of his 'Fine Prints,' the new edition of which a well-known Edinburgh publisher will shortly issue. Besides several minor alterations, there will be a chapter entitled 'Postscript, 1905,' which will deal with many changes in taste and changes in money values. The illustrations, fifteen in number, have all been specially executed for the new edition.

A WELL KNOWN Berlin sculptor has passed away in Prof. Alexander Tondeur, whose death in his seventy-sixth year is reported from Berlin. Among his best-known works are 'Mutterliebe,' a statue of General York, and the figures of Hamburg and Leipsic at the Berlin Stock Exchange.

THE supposed portrait of Sheridan, attributed to Opie, which Messrs. Christie are announced to sell to-day, is now, it seems, identified as having come to Sir Lewis Morris from the collection of the late Mr. Downman, of Carnarthen, a relative of John Downman, the portrait painter, who died in 1824, and from whom it probably came originally.

THE first list of purchases by the State at the Salons of 1905 has just been officially communicated to the press. It is as follows—Painting: Béraud, 'Le Défilé'; Bessen, 'La Capucine'; Chabas, 'Au Crépuscule'; Comerre, 'Arachné'; Delachaux, 'Intérieur'; Devambez, 'Au Concert Colonne'; Dinet, 'Le Matin'; Dumont, 'Monnaies du Pape,' a study of flowers; Robert Dupont, 'Notre-Dame et Quai aux Fleurs'; Fauconnier, 'Après les Vêpres'; Foreau, 'Le Bac de Soubise'; Gervex, 'Étude pour un Plafond'; Grosjean, 'Les Premières Collines du Jura'; Guillemet, 'L'Église de Barfleur'; Karbowsky, 'Faïences et Citrons'; Lagarde, 'Soir de Guerre'; Minard, 'Temps Calme'; Merlé, 'Lever de Lune sur le Village'; Morrice, 'Au Bord de la Mer'; Quost, 'Dans la Serre'; Rémond, 'Parcs aux Huîtres'; Robert-Fleury, 'Le Lever de l'Ouvrière'; and Alexis Vollon, 'La Mousse.' Sculpture: Roger Bloche, 'Apprenti,' bronze statue; Couteilhas, 'Le Baiser à la Source,' group in plaster; Derré, 'La Grotte de l'Amour,' marble group; Escoula, 'Souvenir,' marble head; and Vital-Cornu, 'Tendresse Humaine,' bronze group.

M. ROLL has been elected President of the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts, in succession to M. Carolus-Duran, whose acceptance of the directorship of the Villa Médicis rendered his resignation necessary. He had occupied the post since the death of Puvis de Chavannes in 1898. M. Roll, who was born in Paris in 1845, was one of the most enthusiastic founders of the Société Nationale, but he will not presumably occupy the post of president for so long a period as his predecessor, as a new rule of the society is that the term of office shall not extend beyond three consecutive years. M. Roll, who is a sculptor as well as a painter, is succeeded as president of the section of painting (a post in which he succeeded M. Carolus-Duran) by M. Besnard, who, as president of the section of objets d'art, is, in his turn, followed by M. Lhermitte. M. Rodin remains president of the sculpture section, and M. Waltner of that of engraving.

THE Société Nationale des Architectes de France has hit upon a subject for this year's competition which will at least be popular with the newspaper press and the country. It is a plan for an "Hôtel pour un journal quotidien." The competitions must be received at the Hôtel des Chambres Syndicales, 3, Rue de Lutèce, before August 31st next.

MESSRS. A. BROWN & SONS will publish during this month an authoritative work entitled 'Forty Years' Researches in British and Saxon Burial Mounds of East Yorkshire, including Romano-British Discoveries, and a Description of the Ancient Entrenchments on a Section of the Yorkshire Wolds.' It is by Mr. J. R. Mortimer, founder of the Mortimer Museum at Driffield, and will include over 1,000 illustrations from pencil drawings of interesting relics found in the district. For over forty years Mr. Mortimer has been investigating the barrows and other early monuments of East Yorkshire, and the results of his labours are likely to be of importance.

MUSIC

THE WEEK.

COVENT GARDEN.—Ring des Nibelungen. II Barbieri.

FOUR nights of the first week of the opera season were devoted to Wagner's 'Ring des Nibelungen,' and the crowded houses on the first two nights and the solemn silence must have offered a striking contrast to those of the audience who could recall the production of the trilogy at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1882 under the direction of Angelo Neumann. Then there were many empty seats; the general public was apathetic, and seemed to regard the whole affair as the production of a man of wonderful ability, whose ideas of opera were as absurd as they were impracticable. The cast then included many excellent artists, but unfortunately the orchestra, that all-important factor in Wagner's scheme, was far from equal to its task. Still, in spite of shortcomings, the public ought, one would think, to have felt something of the greatness of the conception, something of the grandeur of much of the music. One writer, by the way, drew attention to one of the causes "that will for ever operate against the popularity of the work—namely, the excessive labour required for its intelligent and complete appreciation." At that time, i.e., in 1882, Dr. Richter would probably have undertaken the labour, though scarcely with the same splendid results that he is now producing; for our orchestral players, excellent as they were, had only just commenced their training in Wagner's music, which they can now interpret to the complete satisfaction of Dr. Richter himself.

'Rheingold' was given on Monday evening, and though, both from a dramatic and musical point of view, it is the weakest section of the 'Ring,' it is a necessary part of the scheme. Wagner, when composing the work, had in mind the great public to whom the legends on which it is based were unfamiliar. Hence the story of the rape of the ring, the dire cause of disaster to gods and men, as afterwards set forth in the trilogy, had to be slowly unfolded. But, without taking the public into consideration, 'Rheingold' may be justified on artistic grounds. Such a long exposition of the principal themes—for such it may be considered musically—may not appear necessary to those to whom the work has become familiar; it seems as if one could dispense with it, just as, for a similar reason, repeat marks in sonatas and symphonies are now often omitted in classical works. But this steady statement of subject-matter, with dramatis personæ so like mortals in some ways, so different in others, introduces us to a mystic and in a sense cold world, which contrasts vividly with the intense human passion and emotion displayed at the very outset of 'Die Walküre.' Then do we best feel the power and the meaning of the introductory portion. Apart from the context 'Rheingold' is unsatisfactory, and that is no doubt the reason that it is never given at Covent Garden separately, as is done with the other sections.

The performance of 'Rheingold' on Monday evening was good, if not particularly striking. Mr. C. Whitehill, the new Wotan, created a favourable impression, which, we may at once add, was more than confirmed on the following evening; he has a fine voice, uses it well, and sings with commendable restraint. Mesdames Reinl and Knupfer-Egli were excellent as Freia and Fricka. Herr Burrian as Loge was somewhat fussy with his drapery, and altogether there was a lack of subtlety in his conception of the part. The orchestral playing was effective, although the most important themes might have been made more prominent.

The rendering of 'Die Walküre' on Tuesday was a magnificent success.

Frau Wittich proved an admirable Brünnhilde, while Frau Fleischer-Edel, the new Sieglinde, won well-deserved favour, both for her singing and acting. Herr Burrian as Siegmund sang extremely well; his acting was good, though at moments it lacked intensity. The Valkyries, among whom was Miss Agnes Nicholls, made a fine display. The great feature of the evening, however, was the magnificent playing of the orchestra under Richter. The effect in quiet passages was altogether ethereal; in loud ones rich and powerful without a trace of coarseness.

Rossini's 'Il Barbiere' was given on Wednesday evening. Frau Bosetti, the Rosina, has a flexible voice, and sings with no little skill, but her impersonation lacked vivacity and charm. In the lesson scene her singing of the Proch Variations was not free from reproach in the matter of intonation, but in the high 'Queen of Night' song from Mozart's 'Magic Flute' she was heard to far better advantage. M. Maurel gave a finished picture of the busy Figaro, while M. Gilibert, as old Bartolo, was at his best. Signor Bravi, the Almaviva, sings well. Signor Mancinelli conducted.

Musical Gossip.

MR. FREDERICK LAMOND gave a recital last Saturday afternoon at the Bechstein Hall, under the direction of Mr. A. Schulz-Curtius. His programme included Beethoven's Sonatas in c minor, Op. 111, and in F minor, Op. 57. There are times when the pianist is over anxious, over earnest, and then there naturally results a certain over-emphasis in interpretation. On Saturday, however, Mr. Lamond gave really magnificent readings of these works. He displayed intellect, duly tempered by emotion. His performance of the first movement of the Chopin Sonata in B flat minor was full of breadth and power. Some points in the other movements were, perhaps, open to exception, especially in the third section, but the playing, nevertheless, was masterly.

'THE LITTLE MICHUS,' adapted from the French by Mr. Henry Hamilton, music by M. Messenger, was produced at Daly's Theatre last Saturday with every outward sign of success. Splendid mounting of the piece and capital acting in themselves naturally make for success; but in addition there is clever and attractive music. The piece seems to us less concentrated, less sparkling, than 'Véronique,' but the latter we only saw in its original French form; hence direct comparison is impossible. However clever an adaptation is, there must be some loss. On Saturday there were redundancies in the play which no doubt have by this time been reduced.

THE new orchestral work by a British composer announced by Mr. Hillier for his festival at Queen's Hall in June will be from the pen of Mr. J. Holbrooke.

THE death is announced of Madame Anna de la Grange, one of the most noted stage vocalists of the nineteenth century. She made her début at Paris in Count Castellane's private theatre in 'La Duchesse de Guise,' an unpublished opera by Flotow, and achieved triumphs in the palmy days of Italian opera. She was the mother-in-law of the composer Francis Thomé, in whose house she died last Sunday week.

It is distressing to learn that M. Paderewski is suffering from nervous exhaustion, but we sincerely hope that the rest which he is about to take will restore him to health.

WE regret to learn of the death, after only a few days' illness, and at the early age of thirty-three, of Walter Edgar, fourth son of the late William Ebsworth Hill.

ACCORDING to Le Ménestrel of April 30th, an edition of Emilio del Cavallieri's oratorio, 'La Rappresentazione di Anima e di Corpo,' performed in 1600, and published by Alessandro Guidotti in the same year, is being prepared by Maestro Vatielli. Of the original edition only two copies are said to be extant.

PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK.

|        |   |
|--------|---|
| SUN.   | Sunday Society Concert, 3.30, Queen's Hall.                   |
| —      | Sunday League Concert, 7, Queen's Hall.                       |
| MON.   | Master Florizel von Renter's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall. |
| —      | Royal Academy of Music, 3, Hanover Square.                    |
| —      | Mr. Gregory Hast's Song Recital, 3.15, Æolian Hall.           |
| —      | Joachim Quartet, 8, Bechstein Hall.                           |
| —      | M. Jacques Thibaud's Violin Recital, 8, Queen's Hall.         |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                   |
| TUES.  | Miss Dora Martin's Vocal Recital, 3, Bechstein Hall.          |
| —      | Miss Muriel Gough's Vocal Recital, 3, Steinway Hall.          |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                   |
| WED.   | Joachim Quartet, 8, Bechstein Hall.                           |
| —      | Royal Opera, 'Rheingold,' 8.30, Covent Garden.                |
| THURS. | Wagner Concert, 3, Queen's Hall.                              |
| —      | Miss Olive Rae's Concert, 3, Salle Erard.                     |
| —      | Philharmonic, 8, Queen's Hall.                                |
| —      | Royal Opera, Covent Garden.                                   |
| FRI.   | Royal Opera, 'Walküre,' 5, Covent Garden.                     |
| —      | Joachim Quartet, 8, Bechstein Hall.                           |
| —      | Grand Concert, Union Jack Club, 8.30, Albert Hall.            |
| SAT.   | Miss Marie Hall's Violin Recital, 3, Queen's Hall.            |
| —      | Royal Opera, 'Siegfried,' 5, Covent Garden.                   |

DRAMA

THE WEEK.

DRURY LANE.—Sir Henry Irving's Season: Becket.

A SHORT season—preliminary, as is understood, to that, regrettably inevitable, of farewell—began on Saturday night at Drury Lane with the revival of Tennyson's 'Becket.' The occasion had profound interest, and the reception of Sir Henry, after an absence from London longer than seems to have been customary, was a thing not to be forgotten. Concerning the play itself little remains to be added to what was said on its production, now twelve years ago. If it is more effective in stage production than any other piece from the same source, the fact is ascribable to the conditions attending its first presentation. In the case of the best plays of Tennyson, as of W. G. Wills, the complementary or crowning touches, to which was assignable the success of the several works, were due to the manager, who quickened action, repressed exuberance, and excised relentlessly the poetical raptures which are the delight of the dramatist and the ruin of the play. A great dramatic work 'Becket' is not. It stands in need of still further excision, "yet that," as Othello says, is "not much." Its psychology is a little confused, and its motive is, so to speak, blurred. It is none the less something more than a great historical pageant, and it might easily, were the interest of the scenes in Rosamund's bower changed and desentimentalized, take rank among the chronicle plays which are a special feature of our stage. It ill consists with the dignity of the Archbishop to reduce him to a squire of ladies. A chief claim on memory is that in this piece Sir Henry virtually for the first time trusted to his natural intonation, and abandoned the elocutionary methods that had perturbed the serenity of his style. Becket was consequently, in some respects, his greatest histrionic accomplishment. When now he returns in the part more effort is perceptible, and there are times when the elocution is less limpidly perfect. There are still, however, the old distinction, nobility, and pathos, and some of these in an even greater degree. Those whose business or delight it is to study the works of great masters of the brush know how in later years the faltering touch of a Titian has produced tender and mellowing effects previously unobtainable. We have ourselves seen the hand of a great artist which could not without effort write a legible letter, or even hold a pen, paint waves in which Thetis or Leucothea might have plunged. Something of the same kind, though in a less pronounced degree, attends the art of Irving, which now seems as mellow as that of a Regnier or a Jefferson. Certain it at least is that the tall and elderly figure—erect and defiant in presence of the revolting monks and the insurgent barons—was strangely and triumphantly, even if pathetically effective. The theatre is large for a portion of the action. Over this, however, the actor triumphs, and even when the words fail quite to reach the ear the breadth of imperial gesture renders the performance triumphantly intelligible.

ST. JAMES'S.—John Chilcote, M.P.: a Play in Four Acts. Adapted from the Story of Katherine Cecil Thurston by E. Temple Thurston.

NOT easy to adapt is the popular novel of Mrs. Thurston known as 'John Chilcote, M.P.' The rendering by her husband is, at any rate, far from the best we can conceive. Stories of dual entities exercise always a certain measure of fascination over the reader of imagination. It is impossible, however, to render sympathetic in a serious piece the personation by a stranger of the husband of a married woman. This difficult task is treated with some delicacy, but the result is, and must needs be, unsatisfactory. The greatest defect is that the strongest scenes in the play—those between John Loder, the pseudo-Chilcote, and Lady Astrupp—lead nowhere. In themselves they are not too sympathetic, and nothing whatever comes of them. These parts were well played, and the scene in which Lady Astrupp denounced her visitor as an impostor had a certain measure of heat. This served, however, no purpose. Her ladyship vanished from the action, which followed out its predestined course, until we parted from Mrs. Chilcote at the moment when, after the death of her husband, she by implication linked her life with that of the impostor who had so indecorously and dishonestly obtruded himself upon her. Some capital acting by Mr. Alexander and Miss Marion Terry roused the spectators to temporary applause; but the play as a whole was not very stimulating. In the presentation of the politicians and diplomatists among whom the action is supposed to pass, a customary form of shortcoming was exhibited. The get-up of the various characters was correct enough, but the faces lacked the requisite expression of culture. That all politicians are intellectually distinguished we will not maintain; most of them manage, however, to wear the nil admirari look which is a familiar part of modern equipment. A sense of unreality is felt when a leading statesman, instead of keeping a calm reserve, seeks to "dull" his palm with entertainment

Of each new-hatch'd unfledg'd comrade.

This constitutes what seems an ingrained and ineradicable mistake in English performances.

COURT.—Afternoon Representation: You Never Can Tell, a "Pleasant" Play in Four Acts. By George Bernard Shaw.

LONDON managements in general, and the management of the Court in particular, are beginning to take Mr. Bernard Shaw, if not so seriously as he pretends to wish, at least as seriously as he can reasonably expect, and to count upon him as an actable dramatist. Considering the outcry elicited by the first presentation of 'Arms and the Man,' it seems remarkable that the revival of 'John Bull's Other Island' at the Court as an evening entertainment, an event which took place on Monday, should be followed on the next afternoon by that of 'You Never Can Tell.' Not wholly a novelty to the stage is the piece last named, which was seen at the Strand on May 2nd, 1900, and once or twice repeated. A cast not exactly stronger, but perhaps better selected, and more appropriate than that previously assigned it, has been obtained, and the entertainment which it constitutes is one of the most mirthful at present to be seen in London. Whatever his extravagances, Mr. Shaw is masterly as a designer of character, and some of the personages in 'You Never Can Tell' are as diverting as anything on the modern stage. In the representation of one or two characters, notably in that of Gloria, some added vivacity seems desirable. The twins, however, in the hands of Miss Sydney Fairbrother and Mr. Norman Page, are ineffable; Mr. Granville Barker, the Valentine, is unrivalled as an exponent of Mr. Shaw; Mrs. Theodore Wright and Mr. J. D. Beveridge make the most of the matrimonial perplexities of the Cramptons; Mr. Louis A. Calvert preserves finely the affable tenderness of the old waiter; and Mr. J. H. Barnes and Mr. Playfair make up an excellent cast. No long time will elapse before Mr. Shaw's place as a dramatist is generally conceded.

NEW.—Leah Kleschna: a Drama in Five Acts. By C. M. S. McLellan.

THE new drama which under the name 'Leah Kleschna' reaches us from America is at once the most meritorious and the most successful of the week's entertainments. In itself it is a mere melodrama of crime, of no particular originality or significance. The author has, however, studied Scandinavian models, and has informed his work with teaching derived from Tolstoy and other Russian moralists. Its philosophy is not particularly convincing, and the reformed heroine, who gives up, at the bidding of a man she has learnt to admire and been set to rob, a life of crime, and returns to virtue and the cultivation of the fields, is an unconvincing product of the sunniest optimism and a species of familiarity with the doctrines of Jean Jacques Rousseau. As she is superbly presented by Miss Lena Ashwell, however, the character is moving and sympathetic; and as the performances of Mr. Charles Warner, Mr. Leonard Boyne, and Mr. Herbert Waring are also excellent, the whole proved an overwhelming success.

COMEDY.—The Dictator: a Comedy in Three Acts. By Richard Harding Davis.

THERE is nothing in 'The Dictator' to justify the designation of comedy. Accepted as farce, however, it constitutes one of the most diverting plays which recent years have witnessed. It introduces us to some admirable eccentric comedians in Mr. William Collier, Mr. John Barrymore, and other members of the company. The story shows us the humours of the Government of San Mañana, a republic which changes with each revolving moon, and, on the strength of its insignificance, dares to be impertinent. Though appealing more directly to an American than an English public, the whole may be seen with the certainty of amusement.

Dramatic Gossip.

DURING the present week 'Julius Caesar' has been repeated at His Majesty's Theatre, with Miss Nancy Price as Calpurnia. This afternoon 'Hamlet' is to be played, with Miss Viola Tree as Ophelia in place of her mother. 'Twelfth Night' will be given on the first four nights of next week; and 'Business is Business'—'Les Affaires sont les Affaires'—will be produced on the Saturday.

A SERIES of evening performances of 'John Bull's Other Island,' first produced at the Court on the afternoon of November 1st, began at the same house on Monday. Though changed in many respects, the cast once more included Mr. Louis Calvert as Broadbent, Mr. Nigel Playfair as Hodgson, Mr. Granville Barker as Keegan, Miss Agnes Thomas as Aunt Judy, and Mr. Wilfred Shine as Barney Doran.

'THE PHILOSOPHER IN THE APPLE ORCHARD,' an adaptation by Mr. E. Harcourt Williams from Anthony Hope, first given three years ago at the Garrick Theatre, has been revived as a lever de rideau at the Comedy, where it is played by Mr. Norman McKinnel and Miss Lilius Waldegrave.

MR. MARTIN HARVEY appeared at the Prince's Theatre, Bristol, for the first time on the 26th of April in 'Hamlet,' in which he is forthwith to be seen in London.

It must be taken as a sign of the times that the moderate amount of stigma attached to the heroine of 'Everybody's Secret' ('Le Secret de Polichinelle') is too much for public taste or conscience, and that the young woman's character is now cleared at the Haymarket from all stain. This moral ablution is said to be due to suggestions of the critics!

MISS TITA BRAND promises a rendering by Mrs. J. T. Grein of the 'Renaissance' of Herr Franz von Schönthan, in which Madame Marie Brema will appear.

'PETER'S MOTHER,' adapted by Mrs. Henry De la Pasture from her novel, has been secured for the Adelphi by Mr. Otho Stuart.

A FURTHER visit from the Irish National Theatre is to be expected during the season. Among the pieces likely to be played are Lady Gregory's 'Spreading the News'; Mr. J. M. Synge's 'The Will of the Saints'; 'The Hour-

Glass,' 'Kathleen ni Houlihan,' and 'On Baile's Strand,' by Mr. W. B. Yeats; and possibly 'The Building Fund,' a comedy by Mr. William Boyle, only just produced.

THE information is scarcely of dramatic interest, but may be given, that Mlle. Yvette Guilbert will appear at the Haymarket at a series of matinées during the first fortnight in June. Her entertainment is entitled 'Deux Siècles de Chansons (Chansons Pompadour et Chansons Crinoline).'

MR. GILLETTE is in London making arrangements for the production in the autumn of 'Clarisse,' which is the latest American success.

THE English rights of 'Le Duel' of M. Henri Lavedan have been secured by Mr. Arthur Bouchier, who will himself adapt it for the stage of the Garrick Theatre. The plot shows the rivalry between an abbé and a physician for the favours of a duchess who will presumably be represented by Miss Violet Vanbrugh. Mr. Bouchier will play the priest, in which M. le Bargy made a great success.

A PERFORMANCE of Browning's 'In a Balcony' is promised for June 8th at the Bijou Theatre, Bayswater, by the English Drama Society, yet one more institution for the regeneration of the poor afflicted drama and stage.

MESSRS. SOTHEY, WILKINSON & HODGE will sell on May 25th and following days a valuable collection of books by or relating to Shakespeare, his work, times, and influence on subsequent writers. The collection is particularly strong in rare sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth century books which contain direct allusions to the poet, and in volumes which are known to have been used by him in the compilation of his plays and others which show parallel passages. Of Shakespeare himself there are twenty-five entries, including copies of the Second, Third, and Fourth Folios. The Quartos include 'Coriolanus,' 1762; three editions of 'Julius Caesar'; three of 'Macbeth,' 1674, 1710, and circa 1720; 'The Second Part of the whole Contention, containing the Tragedie of Richard Duke of Yorke, and the good King Henrie the Sixth,' without title-page, but printed about 1619 (apparently the first Quarto edition of '2 Henry VI.'). 'Romeo and Juliet,' 1637; 'The Tempest,' 1756; 'Hamlet,' 1683; three editions of 'Othello,' 1630, 1681, and circa 1720; and 'Richard III.,' 1756. The sale comprises a remarkable assemblage of first and other editions of works by authors of the Elizabethan and immediately succeeding periods.

'JIMMY THE CARRIER,' a comedy of rural England, in four acts, by Mr. Israel Zangwill, the heroine of which is played by Miss Annie Russell, has been given at the Criterion, New York, with a success that renders probable its ultimate transference to London.

'L'ARMATURE,' a novel by M. Paul Hervieu, has been dramatized by M. Brioux for the Paris Vaudeville, at which house it was produced on April 19th. The rendering is in five acts, is very gloomy, and not very expert.

'KREUZESCHULE' ('The School of the Cross') will be revived on June 4th at Oberammergau for the first time since 1875, and performances will be continued until September 17th. The entire number of performers, including orchestra and chorus, will amount to five hundred.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—W. F. I.—H. T. S.—M. P.—N. L.—P. W. S.—received.

F.—Many thanks.

D. E.—Noted.

No notice can be taken of anonymous communications.

MESSRS. BELL'S BOOKS.

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HIS MAJESTY EDWARD VII.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

A Complete Dictionary of Contributors and their Work from its Foundation in 1769 to 1904.

BY

ALGERNON GRAVES, F.S.A.

To be completed in about 7 vols. 4to, 42s. net each.

[Vol. I. ready May 8.]

LIFE of NAPOLEON I. By J. Holland Rose, Litt.D., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge.

Largely Compiled from New Materials taken from the British Official Records. In 2 vols. large post 8vo, with numerous Illustrations, Maps, and Plans, Third Edition, 18s. net.

Also a CHEAPER EDITION, without the Illustrations, 2 vols. 10s. net.

NAPOLEONIC STUDIES. By J. Holland Rose, Litt.D.

Post 8vo, with Maps, 7s. 6d. net.

"Whatever may be the side of Napoleon's career in which the reader may be interested, we make bold to say that he will find something new to him within the four hundred pages of this modest little volume. Dr. Rose is to be congratulated on his mastery of a difficult and complicated subject."—Athenæum.

NAPOLEON and ENGLAND, 1803–1813: a Study from Unprinted Documents. By P. Coquerelle. Translated from the French by Gordon D. Knox, Balliol College, Oxford.

With a Preface by Dr. J. Holland Rose, Author of 'The Life of Napoleon I.,' &c. Post 8vo, 5s. net.

"In discussing one of the most controverted questions of modern history, M. Coquerelle has collected a number of interesting documents, which form a most valuable addition to the sources available to a student of the Napoleonic period."—St. James's Gazette.

NAPOLEON'S CAPTIVITY in RELATION to SIR HUDSON LOWE. By R. C. Seaton, M.A., late Fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge.

With a Portrait of Sir H. Lowe. Large post 8vo, 5s. net.

The FOUNDATIONS of MODERN EUROPE. Twelve Lectures delivered at the University of London. By Emil Reich, Doctor Juris, Author of 'A New Student's Atlas of English History,' 'Græco-Roman Institutions,' 'History of Civilization,' &c.

Large post 8vo, 5s. net.

HISTORY of MODERN EUROPE from the TAKING of CONSTANTINOPLE to the PRESENT TIME. By Dr. T. H. Dyer. A New Edition. Revised throughout and brought up to date by Arthur Hassall, M.A., Student of Christ Church, Oxford.

In 6 vols. Crown 8vo. With Maps. 6s. net each.

GREGOROVIVUS' HISTORY of the CITY of ROME in the MIDDLE AGES. Translated by Annie Hamilton.

8 vols. crown 8vo, 3l. 3s. net; or separately, Vols. I., II., and III., 6s. each net. Vols. IV., V., VI., VII., and VIII., each in 2 Parts, 4s. 6d. net each Part.

CARLYLE'S FRENCH REVOLUTION. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by J. Holland Rose, Litt.D., Author of 'The Life of Napoleon I.' 3 vols. Small post 8vo, 5s. each.

Also LIBRARY EDITION, post 8vo, gilt, 3 vols. 21s. net.

Catalogue of Works on History, Economics, and Philosophy, post free on application.

London: GEORGE BELL & SONS, Portugal Street, Lincoln's Inn, W.C.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

CHRISTIAN WORSHIP: its Origin and Evolution. A

Study of the Latin Liturgy up to the Time of Charlemagne. By Monsignore DUCHESNE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE from the Third Edition of 'Les Origines du Culte Chrétien.' Second English Edition, Revised, with considerable Additions by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 10s.

The Third Edition of the French Original was lately published in Paris. This translation represents not only that Edition, but contains also additional matter just received from Monsignore Duchesne. There is also added, by request, a Translation of the 'Peregrinatio' of Etheria (Silvia).

It is not too much to say that this is the most important work which has appeared on this subject.

LENTEN ADDRESSES, 1905. By the Right Rev. A. F.

WINNINGTON INGRAM, D.D., Bishop of London. Demy 8vo, paper cover, 6d.; cloth boards, 1s.

These Addresses were attended by thousands in London, and will be welcomed by a still greater number outside.

RELIGION in RELATION to SOCIAL DUTIES and

PLEASURES. An Address to Girls given at Bridgewater House on March 23, 1905, by the Right Rev. A. F. WINNINGTON INGRAM, D.D., Bishop of London. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 1d.

AN APPEAL to the FIRST SIX CENTURIES. Containing

an Address on Variations in Doctrine and Practice, a Report of a Deputation to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Two Treatises by BISHOP COSIN on the 'Catholic Religion of the Realm of England.' Edited by HENRY WACE, D.D., Dean of Canterbury. Demy 8vo, paper cover, 6d.

THIS CHURCH and REALM: being some Instruction

about the Church of England. With a Preface by the LORD BISHOP of LONDON. Small post 8vo, paper cover, 6d.

MODERN CRITICISM and the BOOK of GENESIS.

By the Rev. H. A. REDPATH, D.Litt. M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

The ORIGINAL SOURCES of the QUR'AN. By the Rev. W. ST. CLAIR TISDALL, M.A. D.D. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 8s.

The FOUNDATIONS of a HAPPY LIFE. By the Very

Rev. C. T. OVENDEN, D.D., Dean of Clogher. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DEVOTIONAL LIFE in the NINETEENTH CENTURY.

A Sequel to 'Books of Devotion.' By the Rev. Canon C. BODINGTON. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

The CHRISTIAN YEAR: Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holy Days throughout the Year. By JOHN KEBLE. Printed in Red and Black. Royal 16mo, paste grain roan, 1s. 6d.

The RULE and EXERCISES of HOLY LIVING. By

JEREMY TAYLOR, D.D. Printed in Red and Black. Royal 16mo, paste grain roan, 1s. 6d.

The RULE and EXERCISES of HOLY DYING. By

JEREMY TAYLOR, D.D. Printed in Red and Black. Royal 16mo, paste grain roan, 1s. 6d.

"The EVIDENCE of THINGS NOT SEEN." I. FROM

NATURE. II. FROM REVELATION. By J. A. FLEMING, D.Sc. F.R.S. Crown 8vo, paper cover, 6d.; cloth boards, 1s.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CONTRASTED with CHRISTIAN

FAITH and with ITSELF. By WILLIAM LEFROY, D.D., Dean of Norwich. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

CHRISTIANITY and AGNOSTICISM. Reviews of some

Recent Attacks on the Christian Faith. By the Very Rev. HENRY WACE, D.D. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

ON AGNOSTICISM. Replies to the late Prof. Huxley,

F.R.S. By the Very Rev. HENRY WACE, D.D. Medium 8vo, paper cover, 6d.

EARLY BRITAIN.—ROMAN ROADS in BRITAIN. By

THOMAS CODRINGTON, M.Inst.C.E. F.G.S. With several Maps. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

The TIMES says:—"Mr. Codrington's book has much to recommend it to the antiquary and the topographer. To come suddenly upon a book literally packed with suggestions for the well-being of the walker is, in this year of grace and automobility, no small joy."

EARLY BRITAIN.—CELTIC BRITAIN. By Principal

RHYS. Third Edition, Revised. With 2 Maps. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

The DAWN of CIVILIZATION.—EGYPT and CHALDÆA.

Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged, by Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to, cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 48s.

The STRUGGLE of the NATIONS. — EGYPT, SYRIA,

and ASSYRIA. By Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and over 400 Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 25s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

The PASSING of the EMPIRES. 850 B.C. to 330 B.C.

By Prof. MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Prof. SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and numerous Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 25s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

WAVES and RIPPLES in WATER, AIR, and ETHER.

Being a Course of Christmas Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain by J. A. FLEMING, M.A. D.Sc. F.R.S. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

MARVELS of the WORLD of LIGHT. A Popular Study of the Phenomena of Light, Colour, and Sight. By the Very Rev. C. T. OVENDEN, D.D., Dean of Clogher. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6s.

MATTER, ÆTHER, and MOTION: the Factors and

Relations of Physical Science. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B. A.M.M.E. Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tuft's College, U.S.A. English Edition, Edited by Prof. ALFRED LODGE. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

WAYSIDE SKETCHES. By F. Edward Hulme, F.L.S.

With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 4s.

The FERN PORTFOLIO. By Francis G. Heath, Author

of 'Where to Find Ferns,' &c. With 15 Plates, elaborately drawn life size, exquisitely Coloured from Nature, and with Descriptive Text. Cloth boards, 8s.

FLOWERS of the FIELD. By the late Rev. C. A. Johns,

B.A. F.L.S. Thirtieth Edition. Entirely Re-written and Revised by Prof. G. S. BOULGER, F.L.S. F.G.S., Professor of Botany in the City of London College. With numerous Woodcuts. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.; half-calf, gilt edges, 14s.

FREAKS and MARVELS of PLANT LIFE; or, Curiosities

of Vegetation. By M. C. COOKE, M.A. LL.D. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Prof. Marshall Ward. With

numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. Third

Edition, Revised. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D. F.R.S. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SOUNDING the OCEAN of AIR. Being Six Lectures

delivered before the Lowell Institute of Boston in December, 1898. By A. LAWRENCE ROTCH, S.B. A.M. With numerous Illustrations. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

The MACHINERY of the UNIVERSE. Mechanical

Conception of Physical Phenomena. By A. E. DOLBEAR, Ph.D., Professor of Physics, Tuft's College, U.S.A. With several Diagrams. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

SKETCH-BOOK of BRITISH BIRDS. By R. Bowdler

SHARPE, LL.D. F.L.S. 272 pages. With Coloured Illustrations by A. F. and C. LYDON. Crown 4to, cloth boards, 14s.

The GUARDIAN says:—"Briefly, he has produced a most interesting and informing book, which has been admirably illustrated."

FAVOURITE ENGLISH POETS AND CLASSICS.

A Selection from Standard Writers, presented in a form which will appeal to every Book-lover.

BROWNING'S (Mrs. E. B.) POEMS, including 'Aurora Leigh.'

BROWNING'S (ROBERT) POEMS, including 'Dramatic Romances and Lyrics,' 'Men and Women,' &c.

COLERIDGE'S POETICAL WORKS.

COWPER'S POETICAL WORKS.

DANTE. Cary's Translation.

HOOD'S POETICAL WORKS.

KINGSLEY'S WESTWARD HO!

LAMB'S TALES from SHAKESPEARE.

LONGFELLOW'S POETICAL WORKS.

SCOTT'S POETICAL WORKS.

SHAKESPEARE'S COMPLETE WORKS.

TENNYSON'S POEMS, including 'In Memoriam,' 'Maud,'

'The Princess,' 'Idylls of the King,' &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth boards, each 2s. 6d.; paste grain roan, each 3s. 4d.

These are nicely printed and very cheap Volumes. They are especially suitable for Prize and Gift Books.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C. BRIGHTON: 129, NORTH STREET.

"LEARNED, CHATTY, USEFUL."—Atheneum.

"THAT DELIGHTFUL REPOSITORY OF FORGOTTEN LORE, 'NOTES AND QUERIES.'" Edinburgh Review, October, 1880.

Every Saturday, of any Bookseller or Newsagent in England, price 4d.; or free by post to the Continent, 4½d.

NOTES AND QUERIES:

A MEDIUM OF INTERCOMMUNICATION FOR LITERARY MEN AND GENERAL READERS.

* * Subscription, 10s. 3d. for Six Months; 20s. 6d. for Twelve Months, including postage.

The NINTH SERIES of NOTES AND QUERIES, complete in 12 vols. (JANUARY, 1898, to DECEMBER, 1903), price 10s. 6d. each Volume, contains, in addition to a great variety of similar Notes and Replies, Articles of Interest on the following Subjects.

THIRD SELECTION.

BIBLIOGRAPHY and LITERARY HISTORY.

Translations of Galen—Books on Gaming—John Gilpin's Route to Edmonton—Mrs. Glasse—'Globe' Centenary—Goethe—Oliver Goldsmith—Thomas Gray—Greene's 'Frier Bacon and Frier Bongay'—Grub Street—A. H. Hallam's Publications—Harvey, Marston, Jonson, and Nashe—Hawker of Morwenstow—Heber's 'Racing Calendar'—George Herbert's Proverbs—Herriek—Heuskarian Rarity in the Bodleian—'Historical English Dictionary'—Hood's 'Comic Annual.'

BIOGRAPHY.

'The Starry Galileo'—Letters of German Notabilities—W. E. Gladstone—Sir Edmund Berry Godfrey—Duchess of Gordon—Duke of Grafton and Lord Thurlow—Thomas Guy's Will—Nell Gwyn—Serjeant Hawkins—Sir John Hawkwood—Sir Richard Hotham—Victor Hugo.

ECCLESIASTICAL MATTERS.

Genesis i. 1—Nameless Gravestones—Greek Church Vestments—Hagioscope or Oriel—Heretics Burnt—Hexham Priory and the Augustales—Holy Communion, Substitutes for Bread—Honest Epitaphs—Huxley on the Bible—'Hymns Ancient and Modern.'

FINE ARTS.

Gainsborough's lost 'Duchess'—Grinling Gibbons's Statue of James II.—Sir John Gilbert's Drawings in the 'London Journal'—Miss Gunning's Portraits—Haydon's Historical Pictures—Pictures by Sir G. Hayter—Hogarth—Holbein Portraits—Hoppner Portraits.

PHILOLOGY and GRAMMAR.

Caimacam or Kaimakam—Camelry—Cecil, its Pronunciation—Celtic Words in Anglo-Saxon Districts—Chaperon applied to Males—Chic recognized by the French Academy—Chi-ike—"Chink" of Woods—Comically—Corn-bote—Creak as a Verb—Crowdy-mutton—Deadfold—Dewsiers—"Different than"—Dive, Peculiar Meaning—Dude—Electrocute—English Accentuation—Ey in Place-names—Fashion in Language—Fearagurthok, Irish Word—Félibre—Filbert—Flapper, Anglo-Indian Slang—Irish "Flittings"—Floyd v. Lloyd—Folk or Folks—Foulrice—Frail—Gallant, its Varying Accent—Gallimaufry—Gambaleery—Gaol and Goal—Garage—Gavel and Shieling—Ghetto—Ghost-words—"Good afternoon"—Doubtful Grammar in A.V. and Prayer Book—Greek Pronunciation—Gutter-snipe—Gwyneth—Halsh—Hattock—Help with an Infinitive—Helpmate and Helpmeet—Henbane—Heron—High-faluting—Hooligan—Hopeful and Sanguine—Huish—Hullabaloo—Hurtling.

PROVERBS AND QUOTATIONS.

"Cambuscan bold"—"Carnage is God's daughter"—"Chalk on the door"—"Lug the coif"—"Comparisons are odious"—"Crow to pluck"—"Crying down credit"—"Cutting his stick"—"Who sups with the devil"—"Down to the ground"—"Dutch courage"—"Embarras des richesses"—"English take their pleasures sadly"—"Enjoy bad health"—"Fall below par"—"Farewell, vain world"—"Feggess after peace"—"Fert, Fert, Fert," on Italian Coins—"First catch your hare"—"Flea in the ear"—"Forgive, blest shade"—French Sermon in Proverbs—Familiar French Quotations—"God works wonders now and then"—"Gone to Jericho"—"Green grief to the Grahams"—"Grass widow"—Gratitude Defined—"Green-eyed monster"—"Heart of grace"—"Hook it"—"Hop the twig"—"Horse-marine."

SONGS, BALLADS, and NURSERY RIMES.

"Ask nothing more of me, sweet"—"Bailiff's Daughter of Islington"—"Beggar's Petition"—"Canadian Boat Song"—"Charlie is my Darling"—"Cherry Ripe"—"Comin' thro' the Rye"—"Dulce Domum"—"Gentle shepherd, tell me where"—"God bless the King!—I mean the Faith's defender"—"I dwelt in a city enchanted"—"I'll hang my harp on a willow tree"—"In the days when we went gipsying."

MISCELLANEOUS.

Acacia in Freemasonry—Adelaide Waistcoat—Adulation Extraordinary—Old Advertisements—Æolian Harp, its Construction—Albino Animals Sacrificed—Ale, Bottled, Burton, and "Lanted"—Anagrams on Various Subjects—Apostle Spoons—Athens, the City of the Violet Crown—Autographs, how to keep them—Bagman, for Commercial Traveller—Bank of England and Heberfield—First Lady Barrister—Birch-sap Wine—Ancient Boats Discovered—Bows and Arrows last used in War—Bread by Troy Weight—C.I.V. Nicknames—Originator of Christmas Cards—Beginning and End of Centuries—Clerks in Chancery—Chess Legend—Chimneys in Ancient Houses—Introduction of Chocolate—Twenty-four-hour Clocks—Convivial Clubs—Local Names for the Cowslip—Earliest Cricket Match—Death from Fright—Dutch Fleet captured by Cavalry—Standing Egg—Brewers' "Entire"—Earliest Envelopes—Epigrams and Epitaphs—Farthings Rejected—Feeding-Bottles First Used—Five o'Clock Tea—Flats in London—Flaying Alive—Franciscans v. Freemasons—Earliest Funeral Cards—Gas and Locomotive—Gates on Commons—Genius and Large Families—Gentleman Porter—Germination of Seeds—Slang for Gin—Gipsy Wedding and Funeral—Golf and Pall-mall—Goths and Huns—Guillotine—Gun Reports—Hair Powder last Used—Hansom Cab, its Inventor—First Silk Hat in London.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

Chief Offices—SALISBURY SQUARE, FLEET STREET, E.C.

Telephone No.: 12282 CENTRAL.

Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

This Society was established in 1862 to supply Leg Instruments, Spinal Supports, Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Artificial Limbs, &c., and every other description of Mechanical Support, to the Poor.

OVER 400 PATIENTS ARE RELIEVED EVERY WEEK.

CONTRIBUTIONS EARNESTLY SOLICITED.

Annual Subscription of £0 10 6 Entitles to Two Recommendations

Life Subscription of £5 5 0 per Annum.

Bankers—Messrs. BARCLAY &amp; Co., Ltd., 54, Lombard Street.

RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

NOTES AND QUERIES.*THIS WEEK'S NUMBER CONTAINS—

NOTES:—The Van Sypestin Manuscripts—'Capt. Thomas Stukeley'—Residence Dinners in Durham—John Aleyn, Law Reporter—May Day: Two Poetical Tracts—Good Friday Custom at Bow—Dollis Hill, Willesden—"Shicer" and "Shicker"—St. Mark and Judas—"Hooligan"—Sheridan's 'Critic'—Poet Laureate read at the Head of Troops—Gustavus Adolphus and Tycho's Star—Mediæval Clothing—Czech Language—Henry Travers.

QUERIES:—Russians and Japanese—Guinea Balances—Wheler or Wheeler Family—Embassy Buildings—"Vastern"—Rowley—Longman, Barrel-Organ Builder—Weighing-Machine Wisdom—Sanderson of Wigton—"Blanched"—Agnew—Staveley—Unmarried Lady's Coat of Arms—Picking up Scraps of Iron—Apothecaries' Hall in Scotland—Blind Man at Oxford—The Brent as a Waterway—Norman Inscriptions in Yorkshire—Hemming—Stevens—John Chattock—Fanthawe: Boswell; Young.

REPLIES:—Diving-Bell—To-day: To-morrow—Twitchel—Armorial—Queen's Surname—Weathercock—Sadler's Wells Play: Beauty of Buttermere—"The Lass of Richmond Hill"—Shacklewell—Rocque's and Horwood's Maps of London—Colosseum v. Coliseum—Lines on a Mug—Christopher Smart and the Madhouse—Masons' Marks—Epigram on a Rose—Local Government Records—Theatre, Parkgate—Rogestvinsky—Cockade—Satan's Autograph—Twins—Mr. Moxhay—Irish Folk-lore.

NOTES ON BOOKS:—Lang's 'Aucassin and Nicolette'—Reviews and Magazines.

Obituary:—Mr. J. A. C. Vincent.

Booksellers' Catalogues.

Notices to Correspondents.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

And of all Newsagents.

TENTH EDITION, price Two Shillings.

C E L E S T I A L M O T I O N S :

A Handy Book of Astronomy.

Tenth Edition. With 3 Plates.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

"Well known as one of our best introductions to astronomy."—Guardian.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

SEVENTH EDITION, fcap. 8vo, cloth, price Sixpence.

REMARKABLE ECLIPSES :

A Sketch of the most interesting Circumstances connected with the Observation of Solar and Lunar Eclipses, both in Ancient and Modern Times.

By W. T. LYNN, B.A. F.R.A.S.

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON &amp; CO., LIMITED, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

NOW READY.

Price 10s. 6d. net.

THE

NINTH SERIES

GENERAL INDEX

OF

NOTES AND QUERIES.

With Introduction by

JOSEPH KNIGHT, F.S.A.

This Index is double the size of previous ones, as it contains, in addition to the usual Index of Subjects, the Names and Pseudonyms of Writers, with a list of their Contributions. The number of constant Contributors exceeds eleven hundred. The Publisher reserves the right of increasing the price of the volume at any time. The number printed is limited, and the type has been distributed.

Free by post, 10s. 11d.

JOHN C. FRANCIS, Notes and Queries Office, Bream's Buildings, E.C.

D I N N E F O R D ' S M A G N E S I A .
The best remedy for
ACIDITY of the STOMACH, HEADACHE, HEARTBURN, GOUT,
And INDIGESTION.
And Safest Aperient for Delicate Constitutions,
Ladies, Children, and Infants.

D I N N E F O R D ' S M A G N E S I A .

CHATTO & WINDUS, PUBLISHERS.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE ERROR OF HER WAYS.

By FRANK BARRETT, Author of 'Fettered for Life.'

STINGAREE.

By E. W. HORNUNG, Author of 'A Bride from the Bush.'

[May 15.]

THE PHANTOM TORPEDO-BOATS.

By ALLEN UPWARD, Author of 'The Secret History of To-day.'

"Mr. Allen Upward is a wizard among writers of sensational fiction.....'The Phantom Torpedo-Boats,' his latest romance, professes to be no less than the story of the secret influences which brought about many of the baleful incidents of the present war between Russia and Japan.....Much of the book deals with the manner in which the Dogger Bank outrage was prearranged in a foreign Court.....The Princess, who conspires on behalf of the war party in Germany, is the heart of a very romantic love story. There are no dull pages in 'The Phantom Torpedo-Boats.' Indeed, few more generally absorbing and thrilling books of its kind can ever have been written."—To-day.

THE YOUNGEST MISS BROWN.

By FLORENCE WARDEN, Author of 'The House on the Marsh.'

"'The Youngest Miss Brown' forms an excuse for a delightful story, the plot of which is unfolded in excellent fashion."—Sheffield Telegraph.

THE MILLIONAIRE BABY.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN, Author of 'The Leavenworth Case.'

"Anticipations of a complex plot and exciting situations, raised by recollections of 'The Leavenworth Case,' will not be disappointed by 'The Millionaire Baby,' a mystery that holds the reader's interest to the end.....The scenes which are laid in the haunted bungalow in the millionaire's ground indicate that the author's hand has not lost its cunning."—Birmingham Post.

A SPOILER OF MEN.

By RICHARD MARSH, Author of 'The Beetle.'

"There is no fainting or failing in the audacity, the power of invention.....This new story is as fresh and full of life as if the author had had a year's holiday."—Scotsman.

THE MISSING ELIZABETH.

By ADELINE SERGEANT, Author of 'The Story of a Penitent Soul.'

[May 11.]

DON TARQUINIO.

By Fr. ROLFE, Author of 'Hadrian the Seventh.'

[May 18.]

BALIOI GARTH.

By ALGERNON GISSING, Author of 'An Angel's Portion.'

[May 22.]

THE POET AND THE PIERROT.

By DOROTHEA DEAKIN, Author of 'The Smile of Melinda.' Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [May 11.]

WHEN A GIRL'S ENGAGED.

By HOPE MERRICK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

[May 18.]

THE WILD MARQUIS:

Life and Adventures of Armand Guerry de Maubreuil.

By ERNEST A. VIZETELLY. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 6s.

"A biography which leaves the efforts of many imaginative writers in a bad second place. Mr. Vizetelly makes the most of his subject as the theme of a book appealing directly to that human interest in shady and dangerous adventure which is perhaps too little regarded by historians of the documentary sort."—Scotsman.

THE MERRY MEN. By Robert Louis Stevenson.

(New Volume of the "ST. MARTIN'S LIBRARY.") Pott 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 2s. net; leather, gilt edges, 3s. net.

London: CHATTO & WINDUS, 111, St. Martin's Lane, W.C.

THE ATHENÆUM

Journal of English and Foreign Literature, Science, the Fine Arts, Music and the Drama.

No. 4046.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1905.

PRICE
THREEPENCE
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER

BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION,
32, SACKVILLE STREET, PICCADILLY. — MAY 17, 1905.
MEETING. 8 P.M. The following Paper will be read: 'The Church and Parish of Chesham, Bucks, otherwise Chesham, Leicester and Woburn,' by the Rev. C. H. EVELYN-WHITE, F.S.A., illustrated by Lantern Views.
GEO. PATRICK, A.R.I.B.A., Hon. Sec.

ROYAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.
(Incorporated by Royal Charter.)
AN ORDINARY MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held on THURSDAY, May 18, in CLIFFORD'S INN HALL, Fleet Street, at 5 P.M., when the Rev. J. NEVILLE FIGGIS will read a Paper on 'Bartolus and the Development of European Political Ideas.'
H. E. MALDEN, Hon. Sec.

THE FOLK-LORE SOCIETY. — The NEXT MEETING of the SOCIETY will be held at 22, ALBEMARLE STREET, PICCADILLY, on WEDNESDAY, May 17, at 8 P.M., when the following Papers will be read, viz.:
(1) 'Aranta Totemism and Marriage Law,' by Mr. ANDREW LANG;
(2) 'The Religious Ideas of the Aranta,' by Mr. N. W. THOMAS.
F. A. MILNE, Secretary.
11, Old Square, Lincoln's Inn, W.C., May 6, 1905.

ROYAL GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.
The ANNIVERSARY MEETING of the SOCIETY for the Election of President and Council, &c., will be held in the THEATRE, BURLINGTON GARDENS, on MONDAY, May 22, at 3 P.M., the President in the Chair.
In place of the Annual Dinner of the Society, a BANQUET in honour of the retiring President, Sir CLEMENTS R. MARKHAM, K.C.B., will be held on the EVENING of the ANNIVERSARY MEETING, MAY 22, at the HOTEL METROPOLE, Whitehall Rooms, Whitehall Place, at 7 P.M. for 7.30. Dinner charge 12s. Friends of Fellows are admissible to the Dinner as far as space will permit. Applications for Tickets should be made to the CHIEF CLERK, 1, Savile Row, Burlington Gardens, W.
LEONARD DARWIN, Hon. Sec.
J. F. HUGHES, Secretaries.
1, Savile Row, Burlington Gardens, W.

BRITISH and FOREIGN SCHOOL SOCIETY.
The ANNUAL MEETING for 1905, being the ONE HUNDREDTH GENERAL MEETING of the SOCIETY, will be held at STOCKWELL TRAINING COLLEGE, STOCKWELL ROAD, CLAPHAM ROAD, S.W., at 2.30 P.M., on FRIDAY, May 19.
Speakers:
The Right Hon. A. H. D. ACLAND;
Right Hon. H. H. ASQUITH, K.C. M.P.;
And Others.
At 4 P.M. the Commemoration Stone of the New Wing of the College will be laid by Mrs. H. H. ASQUITH.
Refreshments will be provided.
Application for Cards of Admission to be made to ALFRED BOURNE, Secretary.
114, Temple Chambers, London, E.C.

MR. E. H. MONTÉPIC will give a PUBLIC LECTURE on 'CERVANTES' at UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON (Amphitheatre) on MONDAY, May 15, at 3 o'clock.

REMBRANDT, MERYON, WHISTLER, LEGROS, SEYMOUR HADEN, &c.—Exhibition of fine Prints now open at Mr. R. GUTENKUNST'S, 16, King Street, St. James's, S.W., 10 to 6. Admission, including Catalogue, 1s.

OLD BRITISH SCHOOL. — SHEPHERD'S
SPRING EXHIBITION includes choice Landscapes and Portraits by the Masters of the Old British School. — SHEPHERD'S GALLERY, No. 27, King Street, St. James's.

THE DOWNS SCHOOL, SEAFORD, SUSSEX.
Head Mistress—Miss LUCY ROBINSON, M.A. (late Second Mistress St. Felix School, Southwold). References: The Principal of Bedford College, London; The Master of Peterhouse, Cambridge.

EDUCATION.
Parents or Guardians desiring accurate information relative to the CHOICE of SCHOOLS for BOYS or GIRLS or TUTORs in England or Abroad are invited to call upon or send fully detailed particulars to MESSRS. GABBITAS, THRING & CO., who for more than thirty years have been closely in touch with the leading Educational Establishments.
Advice, free of charge, is given by Mr. Thring, Nephew of the late Head Master of Uppingham, 36, Sackville Street, London, W.

THE VICTORIA
UNIVERSITY of MANCHESTER.
GARTSIDE SCHOLARSHIPS OF COMMERCE AND INDUSTRIES.
THREE SCHOLARSHIPS may be awarded in JUNE.
Candidates must be of British nationality, and over the age of 18 and under the age of 23 at the date of election.
The Scholarships will be tenable for Two Years, and of the value of 30l. the First Year (which must be spent at the University), and from 150l. to 250l. the Second Year (which must be spent in the study of subjects bearing on Commerce in the United States, Germany, or other Country or Countries approved by the Electors).
Candidates must send in their applications, together with Testimonials of good character and record of previous training, on or before JUNE 1, to the REGISTRAR, from whom further particulars can be obtained.

BEDFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN
(University of London).
YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, LONDON, W.
ENTRANCE SCHOLARSHIPS.
A REID SCHOLARSHIP in ARTS, annual value 312. 10s. First Year, 28l. 7s. Second and Third Years, and an ARNOTT SCHOLARSHIP in SCIENCE, annual value 48l., both tenable for Three Years, will be awarded on the results of the EXAMINATION to be held at the COLLEGE on JUNE 28 and 29.
For further information apply to the PRINCIPAL.

BANGOR NORMAL COLLEGE
for the Training of Schoolmasters for Elementary Schools in Wales.

(Conducted on the principles of the British and Foreign School Society.)
APPOINTMENT OF PRINCIPAL.
The COMMITTEE of MANAGEMENT will shortly proceed to appoint a PRINCIPAL to the above Institution. Candidates must be University Graduates, and must be qualified to take part in the professional training of the Students. They are also requested to state what other subjects included in a Training College Curriculum they would be prepared to teach.
Salary 350l. per annum, rising by increments of 25l. every two years until it reaches 500l.
Applications, with fifty copies of not more than five recent Testimonials, should be sent not later than JUNE 7, 1905, to the Secretary, to whom also all inquiries for further information should be addressed. Canvassing among the Members of the Committee will be regarded as a disqualification.
Rev. DANIEL ROWLANDS, M.A., Secretary.
Normal College, Bangor.

LYTHAM, LANCASHIRE
KING EDWARD VII. SCHOOL.

The GOVERNORS of the LYTHAM SCHOOL CHARITIES being about to obtain Plans for the building, between Lytham and St. Anne's-on-the-Sea, of a PUBLIC SECONDARY SCHOOL, with accommodation for Two Hundred Boys as Day Scholars, and planned with a view to extension when required, invite applications for the immediate appointment of a HEAD MASTER for the SCHOOL.
The Scheme enables the Governors to pay the Head Master a minimum sum of 400l. per annum, which sum they will be prepared to increase by means of further capitation payments as circumstances justify. The Master will also have a Residence provided for him.
From the time of appointment to the opening of the School (when the Head Master will take up his duties and the stipend commence) the Governors will require him to give advice and assistance from time to time as to the general arrangement of School Buildings and Grounds, for which a retaining fee of 100l. and reasonable expenses will be paid.
A Candidate must be under the age of 45, a Graduate of a University in the United Kingdom or the British Possessions, and his name must appear in Column B of the Register of Teachers kept under the Order in Council of March 6, 1902.
Written Applications, stating qualifications, and accompanied by not more than three Testimonials, to be addressed to WILSON, WRIGHT & WILSON, Solicitors, 6, Chapel Street, Preston, so as to be received not later than MAY 20, 1905.

CITY of LONDON SCHOOL.

The Act of Parliament for establishing this School having appointed certain Professors of King's College and University College, London, to select and return to the Corporation of London the Three Candidates best qualified for the Office of FIRST or HEAD MASTER, Gentlemen who intend offering themselves as Candidates are requested to transmit not less than Twelve printed copies of their Testimonials, with the Originals, not later than SATURDAY, May 20, addressed to the SECRETARY, at the School, Victoria Embankment, E.C., where further particulars may be obtained between the hours of 9.30 and 4.
The commencing Salary will be 1,000l. a year.
The Professors will meet at the School for the Examination of the Testimonials on SATURDAY, May 27 next.
April 14, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES
and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the Post of PROFESSOR of EDUCATION in the NORMAL DEPARTMENT (MEN) and in the DEPARTMENT for the TRAINING of MEN TEACHERS for SECONDARY SCHOOLS.
Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials, should be sent, on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.
J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.
May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES
and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The COUNCIL of the COLLEGE invites applications for the post of ASSISTANT LECTURER in LATIN.
Further particulars may be obtained from the undersigned, to whom applications, with Testimonials (which need not be printed), must be sent on or before SATURDAY, June 3, 1905.
J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Registrar.
May 6, 1905.

UNIVERSITY of BIRMINGHAM.

LECTURESHIP IN GREEK.
The COUNCIL invite applications for a LECTURESHIP in GREEK LANGUAGE, LITERATURE, and ARCHÆOLOGY (vacant by the appointment of Mr. J. H. Hopkinson, M.A. Oxon., to the Wardenship of Hulme Hall, Manchester), at a stipend of 200l. per annum, under the general direction of the Professor of Classics. Duties to begin OCTOBER 2, 1905.
Applications, with not less than twelve copies of Testimonials, should be sent before JUNE 5, 1905, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars can be obtained.
GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL of GAINSBOROUGH.

APPOINTMENT OF LIBRARIAN.
The LIBRARY AUTHORITY for the above District invite applications for the appointment of LIBRARIAN and SECRETARY, with the commencing Salary of 80l.
Applicants must be well educated, and have had trained experience in a Public Library, and should send applications, stating age, previous experience, and knowledge of classification, with Copies of Three recent Testimonials, to the undersigned before FRIDAY, May 26.
The Public Library Building is expected to be completed at the end of June, and the Librarian will be required to take up his duties at an early date to assist the Authority with the initial work. Gainsborough has nearly 20,000 inhabitants, and a penny rate produces about 235l.
No personal canvassing.
DECEMUS M. ROBBS, Clerk.
The Urban District Council Offices, Gainsborough,
May 8, 1905.

Yearly Subscription, free by post, Inland, 15s. 3d.; Foreign, 18s. Entered at the New York Post Office as Second Class matter.

DARLINGTON EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

ART MASTER.
WANTED, a HEAD MASTER of the SCHOOL of ART at the TECHNICAL COLLEGE, to devote the whole of his time to the services of the Committee.
Commencing Salary 200l. per annum.
Canvassing Members of the Committee will be a disqualification.
Applications should be sent, on or before the 31st Inst., to the SECRETARY, Education Office, Darlington, marked "Art Master."
Darlington, May 5, 1905.

DEUTSCHLAND: ROSTOCK, MECKLENBURG.
—Junge, gebildete ENGLÄNDERINNEN finden herzliche Aufnahme in sehr gut empfohlenem Hause. Gründlicher deutscher Unterricht. Angenehmes Familienleben. Gelegenheit zur Fortbildung in Musik und Malen. Pensionspreis 60l. p.a. — Näheres b. FR. KLUGE, 22, Park Crescent, Oxford, oder FR. STEINHOFF, Rostock, Prinz Fr. Carlstr. 3.

WEST-END PUBLISHER requires a YOUNG MAN of good education for his OFFICE. One just leaving School preferred. — Apply, giving full particulars as to age, &c., to X., Box 1007, Athenæum Press, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PUBLISHING. — GENTLEMAN, 21, business experience, wishes to JOIN PUBLISHER of standing to LEARN BUSINESS. Premium, repayable in Salary. — Box 1008, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LITERARY ADVICE. — Experienced Reviewer and General Writer undertakes to Revise, Report upon, and Prepare MSS. for the Press. Also Speeches and Lectures. Special attention paid to Poetry, Fiction, and Dramatic Work. One fee only (inclusive of all charges), 3s. per 5,000 words of MS. submitted or under. — Address CRITCHES, 67, Bath Road, Exeter.

JOURNALIST, of wide experience and undoubted qualifications as Editor and Manager (Dailies and Weeklies), seeks RE-ENGAGEMENT offering scope for Energy and Administrative Capacity. Highest credentials. — Lex, Box 2990, Sell's Advertising Offices, London, E.C.

ASSISTANT LIBRARIAN. — YOUNG MAN, with good theoretical knowledge of Library Keeping, wants post where he can become practically acquainted with the same. Good references. — Address W. E. P., 41, Virginia Road, Leeds.

YOUNG GENTLEMAN, aged 19, desires post as AMANUENSIS or ASSISTANT in LITERARY WORK (Resident or otherwise). Public School Classical Education. Antiquarian tastes. Knowledge of Heraldry. — O., 2, Harley Road, South Hampstead, London, N.W.

SECRETARYSHIP or LITERARY WORK
WANTED by a LADY trained in a Public Office. Experienced Writer and Translator. Typist. — Miss PATRICK, 12, Trebovir Road, S.W.

SECRETARYSHIP WANTED to Literary Man, Society, M.P., Club, &c., or LITERARY APPOINTMENT by a GENTLEMAN, educated Eton and Sandhurst, sixteen years in Army, Adjutant of his Regiment, age 41. — Address Carr. A. T., Box 1004, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH undertaken at the British Museum and elsewhere on moderate terms. Excellent Testimonials. — A. B., Box 910, Athenæum Press, 13, Bream's Buildings, Chancery Lane, E.C.

TRAINING for PRIVATE SECRETARIAL WORK and INDEXING — Apply Miss FETHERINGHAM (Nat. Sci. Tripos), 52A, Conduit Street, Bond Street, London, W.

TYPE-WRITING, 10d. per 1,000, with Carbon Copy free. Translations, MSS., Revising, French and German Copying. Technical and Scientific Work, Specifications, &c., a speciality. Vacancy for Pupil. — Miss LONGLEY, 20, Bucklersbury, E.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., NOVELS, STORIES, PLAYS, ESSAYS TYPE-WRITTEN with complete accuracy. 9d. per 1,000 words. References to well-known Writers. — M. STUART, Thirlbank, Roxborough Road, Harrow.

TYPE-WRITING. — The WEST KENSINGTON OFFICES. Authors' MSS., Translations, &c. Legal and General Copying. Circulars, &c., duplicated. Usual terms. References. Established twelve years. — SIKES & SIKES, 229, Hammersmith Road, W. (Private Address: 13, Wolverton Gardens, Hammersmith.)

TYPEWRITING. — Reviews, Novels, Plays, Poetry, Scholastic Work, Letters, &c., TYPED, or from Dictation (Shorthand if desired). Foreign and Scientific MSS. a speciality. Ten years' experience. Duplicating. Cheap prices. — GRAHAM, 54, Strand, W.C. (Charing Cross).

TYPE-WRITING undertaken by highly educated Women (Classical Tripos; Cambridge Higher Local; Modern Languages). Research, Revision, Translation. — The CAMBRIDGE TYPE-WRITING AGENCY, 10, Duke Street, Adelphi, W.C.

AUTHORS' MSS., SERMONS, PLAYS, ENVE-LOPES, CIRCULARS, and all kinds, TYPED at home (Remington), 8d. per 1,000. Good paper. Orders promptly executed. — M. L., 7, Vernon Road, Clapham.

LITERARY AGENCY. — INDEXING, Transla-tions (French, German, Latin). Authors' MSS. carefully revised and placed. Terms moderate. Type-Writing 8d. per 1,000 words. References. — Miss A. HOSSINGTON, 48, Church Street, Barnsley Works.

MISS LOUISA DREWRY hopes to give some READINGS from the ENGLISH POETS in MAY and JUNE. She gives Lectures, Readings, and Lessons as usual; Examines; and helps Students by Letter and in her Reading Society.—143, King Henry's Road, London, N.W.

THE AUTHOR'S AGENCY.—Established 1879. The interests of Authors capably represented. Agreements for Publishing arranged. MSS. placed with Publishers.—Terms and Testimonials on application to Mr. A. M. BUAZES, 34, Paternoster Row.

NEWSPAPER PROPERTIES
BOUGHT, SOLD, VALUED,
And supplied with every requisite.
Write for 'THE COMPLETE JOURNALIST.'
The Imperial News Agency, 2 and 4, Tudor Street, London, E.C.
America: 700-706, Fourteenth Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Australia: Holt's Chambers, 121, Pitt Street, Sydney, N.S.W.

C. MITCHELL & CO., Agents for the Sale and Purchase of Newspaper Properties, undertake Valuations for Probate or Purchase, Investigations, and Audit of Accounts, &c. Card of Terms on application.
Mitchell House, 1 and 2, Snow Hill, Holborn Viaduct, E.O.

Catalogues.

WILLIAM BROWN,
26, PRINCES STREET, EDINBURGH,

Will shortly issue

AN ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE,

Containing choice Items and Bibliographical Rarities from the Libraries of the late JOHN SCOTT, C.B., and other esteemed Collectors.

Among the Contents will be found many Family Histories; scarce Books relative to Mary, Queen of Scots, John Knox, the Jacobite Risings, the Darien Expedition, &c.; together with Sets of the Publications of the Bannatyne Club, Scottish History Society, Scottish Text Society, and Percy Society.

There will also be included First Editions of English Writers, Volumes on Sport, and a unique Collection of Books on Rose Culture.

It will be sent post free for Is., which will be returned to purchasers.

THE INTERNATIONAL BOOK CIRCULAR,
No. 140, containing a Special Article, entitled 'The RECENT DEVELOPMENT OF ART BOOKS,' by Dr. O. C. WILLIAMSON, Editor of the New Edition of Bryan's 'Dictionary of Painters and Engravers,' &c. Specimen Copies gratis.—WILLIAMS & NOAGATE, Book Importers, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

LEIGHTON'S
ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of EARLY
PRINTED and other INTERESTING BOOKS, MANUSCRIPTS,
and BINDINGS.

Part VIII. S1—T, with 144 Illustrations, price 2s. JUST ISSUED.
Parts I.—VII. containing A—SH, with 1050 Illustrations in Facsimile, price 17s. the 7 Parts.

J. & J. LEIGHTON, 40, Brewer Street, Golden Square, W.

W. GLAISHER'S
NEW GENERAL CATALOGUE OF REMAINDERS
(Spring, 1905)

IS NOW READY, and can be had on application.
It contains many important BOOKS, offered at a GREAT REDUCTION IN PRICE by

WILLIAM GLAISHER,

Wholesale and Export Bookseller, 265, High Holborn, London.

MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS.—Send for CATALOGUE (post free) of good SECOND-HAND WORKS, esteemed Editions of various Authors, some scarce, all in new extra leather bindings, full and half bound, at prices affixed.—W. ROOR & SON, Bookbinders, 29-30, Eagle Street, Red Lion Street, Holborn, W.C.

B. H. BLACKWELL,
50 and 51, BROAD STREET, OXFORD.
JUST PUBLISHED.

CATALOGUE OF CRITICAL EDITIONS OF LATIN CLASSICAL AUTHORS and Standard Works dealing with Greek and Roman History, Literature, and Art.

IN THE PRESS.

CATALOGUE OF MISCELLANEOUS SECOND-HAND BOOKS, chiefly ENGLISH, including SELECTIONS from the LIBRARIES of the late Rev. ALBERT WATSON, M.A., formerly Principal of B.N.C., the late Prof. FREEMAN, the late R. S. WILSON, M.A., formerly Fellow of B.N.C., and from other Libraries recently purchased by the Advertiser.

READY SHORTLY.

CATALOGUE of the THIRD (and LAST) PORTION of the LIBRARY of the late Prof. F. YORK POWELL, including Greek and Latin Classical Writers and Mediaeval Authors, Ecclesiastical History, Antiquarian Works, Law, Philosophy, and Miscellaneous Items.

CATALOGUE OF FRENCH BOOKS, at greatly reduced prices. I. PHILOSOPHY. II. RELIGION. III. HISTORY. IV. POETRY, DRAMA, MUSIC. V. BEAUX-ARTS. VI. GEOGRAPHY. VII. MILITARY. VIII. FICTION. IX. GENERAL LITERATURE.

DULAU & CO. 37, Soho Square, London, W.

FIRST EDITIONS of MODERN AUTHORS, including Dickens, Thackeray, Lever, Almsworth; Books illustrated by G. and R. Cruikshank, Phiz, Rowlandson, Leech, &c. The largest and choicest Collection offered for Sale in the World. Catalogues issued and sent post free on application. Books Bought.—WALTER T. SPENCER, 27, New Oxford Street, London, W.C.

GRATIS ON APPLICATION.

CATALOGUE No. 10—NATURAL SCIENCES, ZOOLOGY, BOTANY, CHEMISTRY, GEOLOGY, &c. 2,000 Items.

CATALOGUE No. 11—FINE and STANDARD BOOKS, FIRST EDITIONS, and AUTOGRAPHS.
W. HEFTER & SONS, Booksellers, Cambridge.

H. H. PEACH, 37, Belvoir Street, Leicester, issues CATALOGUES of MSS. and OLD BOOKS post free to Book Collectors. No. 11 contains Early Presses Coleridge, Mainz, Florence, Venice, &c.

CATALOGUE No. 43.—Etchings by Whistler and Samuel Palmer—Engravings after Turner—Turner's Liber Studiorum—Drawings of the Early English School—scarce illustrated Books—Works by Ruskin. Post free, Sixpence.—WM. WARR, 2, Church Terrace, Richmond, Surrey.

CHARLES KEAN'S BOOKS.—FOR SALE, 2 vols. PLANCHÉ'S VOYAGE to NAPLES and TRAVELS in SICILY, royal folio, contains 558 Steel Plate Illustrations (Ruins, Temples, Frescoes, Ornaments from Herculaneum, Pompeii, &c.), 27 Coloured Plates of Classic Deities, invaluable for Theatrical purposes. What offer?—JAMES ADDISON, 8, Herndon Road, East Hill, Wandsworth, S.W.

ANCIENT and MODERN COINS.—Collectors and Antiquarians are invited to apply to SPINK & SON, Limited, for Specimen Copy (gratis) of their NUMISMATIC CIRCULAR. The finest Greek, Roman, and English Coins on View and for Sale at Moderate Prices.—Spink & Son, Limited, Experts, Valuers, and Cataloguers, 16, 17, and 18, Piccadilly, London, W. Established upwards of a Century.

TO COLLECTORS.—A GOLD and ENAMEL MOURNING RING bequeathed by the celebrated John Dunning, First Lord Ashburton (ob. 1783), to his First Cousin, Mary Goodridge, Great-Grandmother to the present Owner, TO BE SOLD. May be seen by arranging interview by letter.—Curio, 51, New Oxford Street, W.C.

PORTRAIT of GEORGE MEREDITH, after the celebrated Painting by G. F. WATTS, R.A., Engraved by W. BISCOMBE GARDNER. Limited to 600 Artist's Proofs at One Guinea each. Size, 12 in. by 8 1/2 in.—Address W. BISCOMBE GARDNER, Roathly, Hind Head, Surrey.

STUDIO FLAT.—Excellent STUDIO FLAT TO LET, close to Brompton Road, containing splendid and well-lighted Studio, Two Bedrooms, Reception Room, Kitchen, Bath-room, and usual Offices. Very handy for West End and City. Low rental, and should be seen at once. Also a fine STUDIO and BEDROOM TO LET.—Apply G. E. HART & Co., Estate Agents, 53, Beauchamp Place, Brompton Road, S.W.

Sales by Auction.

Important Collection of Lepidoptera.

TUESDAY and WEDNESDAY, May 16 and 17,
at 1 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., the SECOND PORTION of the unrivalled COLLECTION of BRITISH LEPIDOPTERA formed by the late PHILIP B. MASON, Esq., M.R.C.S. F.C.S. F.Z.S. F.E.S., &c., of Trent House, Burton-on-Trent, comprising long and superb Series of most of the Rare and Extinct Species, fine varieties and local forms in the best state of preservation; also many valuable and historic Specimens and Types from the Haworth and other Collections, together with the first-rate Standish and other Cabinets in which they are arranged.

On view the Monday prior and mornings of Sale. Catalogues, ready a week prior to Sale, post free on application.

Fishing Tackle; also Old Prints of Fish and Fishing Subjects
Scientific Instruments, Tools, &c.

FRIDAY, May 19, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., FISHING TACKLE of all kinds; also some interesting Old Prints of Fish and Fishing Subjects—Photographic Cameras and Accessories—Thodolite Level and Levelling Staff—Scientific Instruments—Tools—Lathes—Chucks—Ornamental Slide Rests, &c.—and a large quantity of Miscellaneous Property.

On view day prior 2 to 5 and morning of Sale. Catalogues on application.

Entomological Sale.—Lepidoptera.

TUESDAY, May 23, at half-past 12 o'clock.

MR. J. C. STEVENS will OFFER, at his Rooms, 38, King Street, Covent Garden, London, W.C., several important COLLECTIONS of LEPIDOPTERA, including many rare examples, in fine condition; also a large number of Lots, just received in Papers from various Collectors Abroad—Entomological Cabinets—Wall Cases, &c.

Catalogues in course of preparation.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books, including the Library of a Clergyman (removed from Brighton).

MESSRS. HODGSON & CO. will SELL by AUCTION, at their Rooms, 115, Chancery Lane, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 17, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock, valuable MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, including the above Library and other Properties, comprising First Collected Edition of Ben Jonson's Works, with the Engraved Title—Houbraeken and Vertue's Heads, 2 vols. Large Paper—Sander's Reichenbachia, Large-Paper Edition, 4 vols.—Bowdler Sharpe's Monograph of the Birds of Paradise, Coloured Plates, 2 vols.—Pugh's Britannia Depicta, a Coloured Copy—Books relating to the County of Sussex, including a Set of the Sussex Archaeological Society from the commencement, 35 vols.—The Naval Chronicle, 40 vols. half-bound, uncut—Surtees's Analysis of the Hunting Field, Coloured Plates by Alken, Handley Cross, First Edition, &c., 3 vols., and other Sporting Books—Greville's Scottish Flora, 6 vols., Stainton's Tineia, 13 vols., and other Works in Natural History—Du Sarte, La Porcelaine de Chine—Chastler's Ceramic Gallery, 2 vols.—Ruskin's Modern Painters, First Edition, 5 vols.—Villon Society's Arabian Nights, &c., 12 vols.—Sets of Coleridge, Byron, Matthew Arnold, and Goethe—Von Sybel's French Revolution, 4 vols., and other Standard Historical Works—Theological, Liturgical, and Classical Writings, &c.

To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

MESSRS. CHRISTIE, MANSON & WOODS respectfully give Notice that they will hold the following SALES by AUCTION at their Great Rooms, King Street, St. James's Square, the Sales commencing at 1 o'clock precisely:—

On WEDNESDAY, May 17, and Following Days, the LOUIS HUTH COLLECTION of ORIENTAL PORCELAIN, Objects of Art, and Decorative Furniture.

On SATURDAY, May 20, the LOUIS HUTH COLLECTION of PICTURES and DRAWINGS.

On WEDNESDAY, May 24, the LOUIS HUTH COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS.

On WEDNESDAY, MAY 24, and THURSDAY, May 25, the LOUIS HUTH LIBRARY.

On FRIDAY, May 26, the LOUIS HUTH COLLECTION of Fine EARLY ENGLISH SILVER.

On FRIDAY, May 26, Fine EARLY ENGLISH SILVER, the Property of LORD MONTAGU of BEAULIEU and ARTHUR C. MAY, Esq., and an ITALIAN CRYSTAL HIBERON, the Property of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq.

A Collection of Engravings, the Property of the Right Honourable the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 15, at 1 o'clock precisely, a COLLECTION of ENGRAVINGS, the Property of the Right Honourable the EARL of DENBIGH, C.V.O., made by Thomas Pennant, the Antiquary, and his Son, David Pennant, consisting principally of Mezzotint Portraits in fine condition by and after Eilom, Faber, V. Green, MacArdell, J. R. Smith, T. Watson, &c.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Coins and Medals, including the Collection of
F. CAPEL CURE, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on TUESDAY, May 16, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, COINS and MEDALS, including the COLLECTION of GREEK and ROMAN COINS, &c., the Property of a GENTLEMAN in Scotland; a COLLECTION of GREEK and ROMAN, ENGLISH, and VENETIAN COINS, &c., the Property of FRANCIS CAPEL CURE, Esq.; a COLLECTION of ENGLISH COINS, COMMEMORATIVE and WAR MEDALS, &c., the Property of JAMES HODGSON, Esq., J.P.C.A., deceased; a COLLECTION of GREEK COINS, formed by a Collector in Athens; and other Properties, comprising a few rare Scottish Gold Coins—rare Anglo-Saxon Pennies of Athelwulf and Ethelbald, Kings of Wessex—William the Lion Stirling Penny of the Crescent and Pellet Type—Nero-Vigilans Triens AV of Lucullus; Gold Medal of the H.E.I.C. for the First Burmah War—Coorg Medal—"Tupper" Medal (All gilt)—and other War Medals and Decorations.

May be viewed. Catalogues may be had.

Nelsoniana.

ON WEDNESDAY, 17th inst., MESSRS. SOTHEBY will SELL, at their House, 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., a valuable COLLECTION of Admiral LORD NELSON'S AUTOGRAPH and other LETTERS, together with many of his well-known Companions-in-Arms, Connections, Friends, and Opponents, the Property of a COLLECTOR of long standing.

Catalogue Numbers 83 to 210.

Valuable Autograph Letters, the Property of a well-known Collector.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 17, at 1 o'clock precisely, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and DOCUMENTS, the Property of a well-known COLLECTOR, comprising Autograph Letters of Poets (Lots 1 to 81), including Hartley Coleridge, Sarah Coleridge, their Daughter Sarah, William Cowper, O. W. Holmes, Thomas Hood, Leigh Hunt, Charles Lamb, L. E. Landor, W. S. Landor, P. A. D. B. Metastasio, Thos. Moore, Alex. Pope, James Montgomery, William M. Rossetti, S. Rogers, Walter Scott, P. B. Shelley, R. Southey, A. C. Swinburne, Lord Alfred Tennyson, Dr. Isaac Watts, H. Kirke White, Wm. Wordsworth, and others—Admiral Lord Nelson, a fine Collection of 35 Letters, mostly Autograph Letters (Lots 82 to 116), the first dated from Nevis, November 14, 1785, and the last dated from the Victory, October 18, 1805, to Collingwood, three days before his death: the first of the last four or five Letters written by the great Admiral—Nelsoniana, consisting of a most interesting Collection of the great Admiral's Companions-in-Arms, Relations, Friends, and Adversaries (Lots 117 to 210), and many others—Civil Engineers associated with the Origin and Development of the Railways of the World, and others (Lots 211 to 226), including James Watt, John Smeaton, Thos. Telford, George Stephenson, Robert Stephenson, John Rennie, George Rennie, Thos. Brassey, Sir M. I. and I. K. Brunel, Locke, Watson, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

Engravings and Drawings, including the Collection of
F. CAPEL CURE, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on FRIDAY, May 19, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, valuable ENGRAVINGS, including the COLLECTION of F. CAPEL CURE, Esq., Badger Hall, Shropshire, comprising Mezzotint Portraits after the Great Masters of the English Schools—Engravings in Colours—a Series of Portraits of Racehorses in Colours in brilliant condition, the Property of a Baronet—an exceedingly fine Collection of Engravings of English Scenery by Lucas after Constable in the Earliest Proof States, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Library of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on MONDAY, May 22, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of JOHN GABBITAS, Esq., of Melbury Road, W., and Bournemouth, comprising Works Illustrated by John Leech, George Cruikshank, Phiz, &c.—the Writings of George Borrow, Coleridge, Dickens, and Thackeray—Historical Works of Freeman, Freude, Gibbon, Green, Grote, and other Standard Literature—Sporting Books—The Studio (a Set), and other Books of Prints—Editions de Luxe of Bulwer Lytton, Rudyard Kipling, and R. L. Stevenson; a COLLECTION of BOOKS, chiefly bound by the Guild of Women Binders and the Hampstead Bindery, consisting of some fine examples of Contemporary Artistic Bindings, several of which have been exhibited, and many are Extra-Illustrated; other Properties, including an unusual Collection of Books on Pugilism—Books with Coloured Plates—Surtees's Writings in the Original Parts—Trials—Cokayne's Peerage—Punch, 1841-87—Lottery Hills—Hamerton's Etching and Etchers, First Edition—Rogers's Italy and Poems, Extra-Illustrated—Books of Prints, Biography, Voyages, Travels, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

The Library of Works on Natural History, Sport, &c., the Property of EDWARD BIDWELL, Esq.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, May 24, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of BOOKS on NATURAL HISTORY, SPORT, &c., the Property of EDWARD BIDWELL, Esq., comprising Booth's Rough Notes on Birds—Buller's Birds of New Zealand—Bacon's Annals of Ipswich—Drummond's Ancient Scottish Weapons—Harvie-Brown and Buckley's Fauna of Scotland—The Ibis (complete set)—Latham's Falconry—Lord Lilford's Coloured Figures of British Birds, First Edition, and Birds of Northamptonshire—Maggillivray's British Birds—Martin's Thetford, with extra Illustrations—also County Natural Histories—Transactions of Natural History Societies—Pamphlets, &c.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

A valuable Collection of Books by or relating to Shakespeare.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their House, No. 13, Wellington Street, Strand, W.C., on THURSDAY, May 25, and Two Following Days, at 1 o'clock precisely, a valuable COLLECTION of BOOKS by or relating to SHAKESPEARE, His Works, Times, and Influence on subsequent Writers, including Early Editions of his Plays and of those of other Elizabethan Authors—rare sixteenth, seventeenth, and eighteenth Century Books, which contain direct allusions to the Poet—many volumes of importance which are known to have been used by the Dramatist in the compilation of his Plays, and others which show parallel passages.

May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

SALES by AUCTION, &c., continued on p. 580.

THE KING'S CLASSICS.

Under the General Editorship of Prof. GOLLANCZ.

Printed on antique laid paper, 16mo (6 by 4½ in.), and supplied in red cloth gilt, or quarter-bound antique grey bindings.
Also with vellum back and cloth sides, or limp lambskin, gilt.

"We note with pleasure that competent scholars in every case have supervised this series, which can therefore be received with confidence."—Athenæum.

SOME RECENT ADDITIONS TO THE SERIES:—

The VISION of PIERS the PLOWMAN. By William Langland. In Modern English by Prof.

SKEAT, Litt.D. The great classic of social problems in England during the critical times of the reign of Edward, dealing with the problems of Church, State, Labour and Social Problems generally, by the master mind of the age. An interesting reproduction from an old MS. forms the Frontispiece. 1s. 6d. net; quarter-bound vellum, 2s. 6d. net.
"Thousands may now read, estimate, and enjoy Langland's famous 'Vision' for one who has hitherto had the scholarship and patience to master it."—Scotsman.

MEDIÆVAL LORE. From Bartholomew Anglicus. Edited, with Notes, Index, and Glossary, by ROBERT STEELE. Also a Preface by the late WILLIAM MORRIS. The Frontispiece is a reproduction from an old illumination, representing Astrologers using Astrolabes. 1s. 6d. net; quarter-bound vellum, 2s. 6d. net.

"The beautiful addition to 'The King's Classics,' of which Prof. Gollancz is the general editor, is likely to prove of interest to students of science.....After studying the quaint and pleasant accounts of mediæval science, medicine, geography, and natural history that the book contains, the student will begin to realize that during the Middle Ages science was not stagnant, but by gradual development was making possible the rapid growth of scientific knowledge characteristic of the nineteenth century. The reprint deserves to be read widely."—Nature.

POLONIUS: a Collection of Wise Saws and Modern Instances. By Edward FitzGerald. With Portrait Frontispiece, Notes, and Index. Contains a Preface by EDWARD FITZGERALD, on Aphorisms generally. 1s. net; quarter-bound vellum, 2s. 6d. net.

"As lively and entertaining a book as wit and high thinking can produce. Moreover, FitzGerald always left the impress of his own character upon whatever he copied or translated; even his titles to other men's jokes or parables give them new force and vitality. 'Polonius' is therefore a welcome addition to 'The King's Classics.'"—Yorkshire Post.

The FALSTAFF LETTERS. By James White. With Notes, Introduction, and the Original

FRONTISPIECE. 1s. 6d. net; quarter-bound vellum, or limp lambskin, 2s. 6d. net.
"This delightful little book ought to be most cordially welcomed by all lovers of Charles Lamb, not only for the author's association with the god of their idolatry, but also for its own sake."—Academy.

The EARLY LIVES of DANTE. Comprising BOCCACCIO'S LIFE of DANTE, LIONARDO

BRUNI'S LIFE of DANTE, and other important contemporary Records. Translated and Edited by the Rev. PHILIP H. WICKSTEED. With Frontispiece, 1s. 6d. net; quarter-bound vellum, or limp lambskin, 2s. 6d. net.

"A neat little volume, 'The Early Lives of Dante,' translated by Philip H. Wicksteed. Of them all [the Lives] John Villani's chapter is probably the most really valuable, though Boccaccio has preserved for us the great fact of the identity of Beatrice, with regard to which no one on whose judgment any reliance can be placed has any doubt.....Mr. Wicksteed's translation is well executed, and will form a useful companion to Dr. Moore's 'Dante and his Early Biographers.'"—Athenæum.

The LIFE of MARGARET GODOLPHIN. By John Evelyn, the famous Diarist. Re-edited from the Edition of SAMUEL WILBERFORCE, Bishop of Oxford. With Portrait of Margaret Godolphin as Frontispiece, engraved on copper, 2s. 6d. net; quarter-bound vellum, or limp lambskin, 3s. 6d. net.

"In reading this life one is led to wonder if we have such marvels of perfection among us nowadays, or if we have, do they conceal their godliness, to be in the fashion? That this volume appears among the 'King's Classics' speaks for itself, for this series is too well known and appreciated to need any praise of mine. I gratefully place it among my books."—Academy and Literature.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES IN THE SERIES.

The LOVE of BOOKS. Being the 'Philobiblon' of Richard de Bury. 1s. net and 2s. 6d. net.

[Ninth Thousand.

SIX DRAMAS of CALDERON. Translated by Edward FitzGerald. Edited by H. Oelsner, M.A. Ph.D. 3s. 6d. net and 5s. net.

The CHRONICLE of JOCELIN of BRAKELOND. Edited by Sir Ernest Clarke, F.S.A. 2s. 6d. net and 3s. 6d. net.

[Fifth Thousand.

The LIFE of SIR THOMAS MORE, Knight. By William Roper. 1s. 6d. net and 3s. net.

[Sixth Thousand.

EIKON BASILIKE. Edited by Edward Almack, F.S.A. 2s. 6d. net and 3s. 6d. net.

KING'S LETTERS. I. Alfred to the Coming of the Tudors. II. The Early Tudors, with the Love Letters of Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn. Edited by ROBERT STEELE. Each volume 2s. 6d. net and 3s. 6d. net.

CHAUCEr for ENGLISH READERS. Modernized by Professor Skeat.

KNIGHT'S TALE; or, PALAMON and ARCITE. 1s. net and 2s. 6d. net.

MAN of LAW'S TALE, SQUIRE'S TALE, and NUN'S PRIEST'S TALE. 1s. net and 2s. 6d. net.

PRIORESS'S TALE, PARDONER'S TALE, CLERK'S TALE, and CANON'S YEOMAN'S TALE. 1s. 6d. net and 2s. 6d. net.

The ROMANCE of FULK FITZ WARINE. Translated by Alice Kemp-Welch. With an Introduction by Professor BRANDIN. 1s. 6d. net and 2s. 6d. net.

The STORY of CUPID and PSYCHE. From the 'Golden Ass' of Apuleius. Translated by W. Adlington (1566), and Selected and Edited by W. H. D. ROUSE, Litt.D. 1s. net and 2s. 6d. net.

THE KING'S POETS.

The Volumes of the Series named "THE KING'S POETS" are uniform in Size, Type, Paper, and Binding with those of "THE KING'S CLASSICS," of which "THE KING'S POETS" is a Section. The Volumes already Published are:—

WORDSWORTH'S PRELUDE. The Introduction and Notes have been Written by W. Basil

WORSFOLD, M.A., and the Frontispiece is taken from the Portrait of Wordsworth by H. W. PICKERSGILL, R.A., in the National Gallery. A Map of the Lake District is added. 3s. 6d. net; quarter-bound vellum or limp lambskin, 5s. net.

"There is to the real lover of books something of a physical joy as well as a mental in having old favourites thus admirably presented. Mr. Worsfold contributes an interesting and serviceable introduction to this reprint of the first edition of Wordsworth's great poem, and supplies many notes."—Observer.

The DEFENCE of GUENEVERE, and other Poems. By William Morris. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by ROBERT STEELE. With Frontispiece. 2s. 6d. net; quarter-bound vellum or limp lambskin, 3s. 6d. net.

"This is a delightful reprint of William Morris's first volume of poems, with a pleasant, simple binding, such as he liked himself, and a useful introduction by the editor upon that romantic movement in English poetry of which 'The Defence of Guenevere' is the most extreme and most inspired example."—Times Literary Supplement.

BROWNING'S MEN and WOMEN. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by W. Basil Worsfold,

M.A. 2 vols. with Frontispiece and Map, 5s. net; quarter-bound vellum, 7s. net.

"Mr. Basil Worsfold has provided an excellent introduction, notes, &c., to Browning's 'Men and Women' in the 'King's Poets.' Altogether an admirable addition to this admirable series. The most difficult bookman could not complain when type, paper, and binding are all so good. I often hear complaints of English 'bookmaking,' but can always refute them by pointing to the De La More volumes upon my shelves."—Academy and Literature.

SEND FOR COMPLETE CATALOGUE OF PUBLICATIONS.

ALEXANDER MORING, LIMITED, the De La More Press, 32, George Street, Hanover Square, London, W.

Sales by Auction.

Valuable Books, including the Library of the late R. WALKER Esq., of Bushey, Herts.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their Galleries, 47, Leicester Square, W.C., on MONDAY, May 15, and Following Day, at ten minutes past 1 o'clock precisely, Valuable BOOKS, including Shakespeare's Works, by Halliwell, 16 vols. folio—Goldsmith's Deserted Village and Enquiry into Polite Learning, First Editions—Sowerby's English Botany, 33 vols. Coloured Plates—Egan's Life in London, uncut—Warburton's Hunting Songs, 1834—Swift's Works, 20 vols.—Barham's Ingoldsby Legends, 3 vols. First Edition, Presentation Copy from the Author, with Autograph Letters inserted—Lytton's Falkland, First Edition, uncut—Queen Victoria, More Leaves, Presentation Copy—fine Specimens of Early French Printing—Ainsworth's Old St. Paul's, privately printed, 1842—Storer's Cathedral Churches, 4 vols. Large Paper—Pyne's Costume of Great Britain, Coloured Plates—Ravenscroft's Pinetum Britannicum, 3 vols. Coloured Plates—Roberts's Scotland Delineated, 12 parts, 1817—Dugdale's Antiquities of Coventry—Gambado's Annals of Horsemanship, 1796—Dennistoun's Dukes of Urbino, 3 vols. 1851—the Ibis, from 1865 to 1874—Blomefield's History of Norfolk, 11 vols. uncut—Quarterly Review, 144 vols.—Pepys and Evelyn's Diaries, Editions de Luxe—Pinkerton's Collection of Voyages, 17 vols.—Higgins's Anacalypsis, 1836—Cotton Mather's Magnalia Christi Americana, fine copy—Turner's Views of the Southern Coast, 2 vols. 1826—Plot's Staffordshire, 1686—Costume of Yorkshire, Coloured Plates—India Proof Impressions of Cruikshank's Plates to St. James's, The Miser's Daughter, and Windsor Castle, in 3 vols. morocco extra—Société d'Aquarellistes Français, 8 parts—Adami's Works in Architecture—Sandford's Coronation of James II.—Portraits of Ladies, after Lawrence, India Proofs—Books of Travel, many with Coloured Plates—a Series of Works on Art and Artists—Standard Editions of Modern Authors, &c.

A Portion of the valuable Collection of Pictures of W. G. THOMPSON, Esq., of Brookfield, Whalley Range, Manchester.

MESSRS. BRANCH & LEE will SELL by AUCTION, in the HANOVER GALLERY, 60, HANOVER STREET, LIVERPOOL, on MAY 18 and 19, at half-past 1 P.M., the valuable COLLECTION of OIL PAINTINGS, including several important Works by Sir Thomas Lawrence, P.R.A., John Constable, R.A., Thos. Gainsborough, R.A., E. J. Niemann, P. H. Calderon, R.A., P. T. Poole, R.A., A. L. Legg, R.A., Eugene Verboeckhoven, W. P. Frith, R.A., and others. The WATER-COLOUR DRAWINGS comprise Examples by Basil Bradley, R.W.S., William Hunt, David Cox, Wyke Bayliss, Geo. Cattermole, E. W. Cook, R.A., S. Prout, P. de Windt, &c.

To be viewed on WEDNESDAY, 17th inst., when Catalogues may be had in the Galleries.

JUST READY, crown 8vo, cloth, 320 pages, 3s. 6d. net; 3s. 10d. post free.

TRUTH IN CONFLICT WITH THE CREEDS.

Short Studies on the Revised Version of the Scriptures.

By JOHN A. BOWMAN.

The work is neither exegetical nor critical, nor a reflection of other men's opinions; but an argument, an evolution of thought, a growth, the roots of which are embedded in the Revised Version of the Scriptures.

Simpkin, Marshall & Co. 4, Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.

JUST PUBLISHED, 456 pages, 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

STRUCTURAL and FIELD GEOLOGY.

For Students of Pure and Applied Science.

By JAMES GEIKIE, LL.D. D.C.L. F.R.S., &c.,
Murchison Professor of Geology and Mineralogy in the University of Edinburgh, formerly of H.M. Geological Survey, Author of 'The Great Ice Age,' 'Prehistoric Europe,' 'Earth Sculpture,' &c.

Illustrated with 56 Full-Page Plates, and 146 Figures in the Text.

London: Gurney & Jackson. Edinburgh: Oliver & Boyd.

A MOST REMARKABLE NOVEL.
AT ALL LIBRARIES.

AN INSTINCTIVE CRIMINAL.

6s.

By the Hon. GILBERT COLERIDGE.

The Literary World says:—"A very interesting account of an experiment in marriage by a man of education with a woman of low origin and animal instincts."

A. Treherne & Co., Ltd., 12, York Buildings, Adelphi, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE TREASURES of 'THE IMITATION' of THOMAS A KEMPIS.

Being Selections alphabetically arranged, with a copious Index and Introductory Essay.

By JOHN F. CRUMP.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

Walsall, Robinson; London, Simpkin & Co.

ARCHITECTURE at the PARIS SALON; The Institute of Architects' Elections; Notes and Sketches in Southern Italy, IX.; Art Union of London; Residential Flats; Types of Concrete-Steel Structures (Student's Column); Illustrations of Staircase, Municipal Buildings, Walsall; Design for a House; "Frame-wood"—the Entrance Front; House at Enfield, &c.—See the BUILDER of May 13/04; by post, 4/6d.—Through any Newsagent; or direct from the Publisher of the Builder, Catherine Street, London, W.C.

MR. MURRAY'S NEW BOOKS.

SECOND IMPRESSION NOW READY.

MR. HORACE A. VACHELL'S
NEW NOVEL.

THE HILL. 6s.

"An inspiring book, which should be read by all boys, whether they are Harrovians or not; by men who were at public schools and who would like to be taken back to their schooldays for several brief entrancing hours, and by those who can appreciate a story full of optimism, vivid portraiture, humour, tenderness, and a knowledge of the human boy that is quite remarkable."—World.

ISOBEL FITZROY'S NEW NOVEL.

QUIXOTIC WOMAN. 6s.

"Agreeable to read and never dull, so that it should have no lack of readers."—Scotsman.

"The author arrests and holds the attention of the reader from the first."—World.

WITH RUSSIAN, JAPANESE, AND CHUNCHUSE.

The Experiences of an Englishman during the Russo-Japanese War. By ERNEST BRINDLE. With a Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.

A MOTHER OF CZARS.

A Sketch of the Life of Marie Feodorowna, Wife of Paul I. and Mother of Alexander I. and Nicholas I. By Mrs. COLQUHOUN GRANT, Author of 'The French Noblesse of the XVIII. Century.' Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

"Mrs. Colquhoun Grant has brought together much that is interesting in her volume, not only with regard to the character and influence of her subject, but also in the way of and about other people."—Daily Telegraph.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

LHASA AND ITS MYSTERIES.

A Record of the Expedition, 1903-1904. By L. AUSTINE WADDELL, LL.D. C.B. C.I.E. Lieut.-Colonel, Indian Medical Service. With 200 Illustrations and Maps. Demy 8vo, 25s. net.

OUR SUDAN.

By JOHN WARD, F.S.A., Author of 'The Sacred Beetle,' 'Greek Coins and their Parent Cities,' &c. Crown 4to, 720 Illustrations, including Maps and many Portraits, 21s. net.

"Mr. Ward's book is no tourist's work. It is a full and complete description of the Sudan, its inhabitants, its antiquities, its progress in civilization, its commerce, past, present, and to come. Any one who wishes to know the remarkable history of what will again be a great Empire, must go through Mr. Ward's book page by page, picture by picture. There will be little left for him to know about Sudan after that most enjoyable experience is ended."—Daily Graphic.

FROM THE CAPE TO THE ZAMBESI.

By G. T. HUTCHINSON. With Illustrations. Square demy 8vo, 9s. net.

"The whole book is really an enlightening one on South Africa, and is worthy of careful attention by statesmen, politicians, economists, and general readers."—Daily Telegraph.

FIVE YEARS IN A PERSIAN TOWN.

By the Rev. NAPIER MALCOLM. With Illustrations by MIRZA ABRU'L QASIMI YAZDI. Photographs and a Map. Square demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

MEMORIES

of Life at Oxford, on the Continent, in Greece, and Elsewhere. With Reminiscences of Newman, Manning, W. G. Ward, Gladstone, the late Lord Salisbury, Sir George Bowen, the Marquis of Lifford, Pius IX., A. H. Clough, Burdon, Jowett, Pusey, Stubbs, and many others. By the Rev. FREDERICK MEYRICK, M.A., Prebendary of Lincoln and Rector of Blickling. Demy 8vo, 12s. net.

[Ready next week.]

THE ROYAL ACADEMY AND ITS MEMBERS.

A History from 1768-1830. By the late J. E. HODGSON, R.A., and F. A. EATON, M.A., Secretary of the Royal Academy, With Portraits. Large demy 8vo, 21s. net.

"So entertaining and so useful that one only regrets that the book should stop at the year 1830."—Times.

"Of undoubted interest for all who find attraction in the study, pursuit, or literature of art."—Globe.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street, W.

MR. HEINEMANN'S NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY.

MISS ELIZABETH ROBINS' NEW NOVEL

ENTITLED

A DARK LANTERN. A DARK LANTERN.

Price 6s.

Author of

'THE MAGNETIC NORTH.'

'THE OPEN QUESTION,' &c.

"This is a very notable book; it is the best that Miss Robins has produced, which implies that it reaches the highest level of modern fiction.....For many years there has been no more sympathetically, yet relentlessly drawn character in fiction than that of Katharine."—Daily Mail.

THE WISE WOODS.

By Mrs. HENRY DUDENEY. 6s.

Author of 'The Story of Susan,' &c.

This is, so far, Mrs. Dudeney's most ambitious novel. She gives picturesque descriptions of gipsy life, and some clever studies of Suburbia which readers of her previous works will welcome as containing some of her most incisive writing.

TOLLA, THE COURTESAN.

By E. RODOCANACHI. 6s.

This book is a serious attempt to picture in a graphic way, by means of a series of letters, the daily life of Rome in the year 1700.

THE MACDONNELLS.

By LADY SYKES. 6s.

"Henry Macdonnell and his Calvinistic mother might have been conceived by Thackeray."—Morning Post.

THE STIGMA.

By J. L. HERBERTSON. 6s.

"A remarkable novel, touched with something akin to the Brontë fire, and its women have the intensity, and its men the brutality, that mark the characters in 'Jane Eyre.'"—Manchester Courier.

DUKE'S SON.

By COSMO HAMILTON. 6s.

"The Baron commends this book..... Having once taken it up the reader's attention will be held until the very end."—Punch.

THE CONFESSIONS OF AN AMBITIOUS MOTHER.

3s. 6d. net.

"A more thoroughly candid account of how an American woman succeeded in marrying her daughters I have never read."—World.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford St., W.C.

A SELECTION FROM MESSRS. CONSTABLE'S LIST.

The JAPANESE SPIRIT. By

OKAKURA-YOSHISABURO. With an Introduction by GEORGE MEREDITH. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Its author has mastered not only our language, but our modes of thought, so thoroughly, that in his pages, as Mr. George Meredith observes, 'We get nearer to the secret of this singular race than we have had the chance of doing before.'"—Times.

CATHERINE DE' MEDICI and the FRENCH REFORMATION. By EDITH SICHEL, Author of 'Women and Men of the French Renaissance,' 'The Household of the Lafayettes,' &amp;c. Demy 8vo, with 12 Illustrations, 15s. net.

"Miss Edith Sichel has done a fine and distinguished piece of work. She has written a brilliant and a scholarly book; a book it is both tempting and difficult to overpraise. For Miss Sichel is gifted with much of the rare projective vision of the born historian."—Times.

JOHN GRAHAM of CLAVER-

HOUSE, VISCOUNT of DUNDEE, 1648-1689. By C. SANFORD TERRY, M.A. Illustrated, demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"On the whole it does not seem too much to say that this book promises to be the definitive biography of a man whose character has been traduced by 'prejudice founded upon wilful neglect of evidence.'"—Morning Post.

The KING in EXILE (CHARLES II.).

By EVA SCOTT, Author of 'Rupert, Prince Palatine.' Demy 8vo, illustrated, 15s. net.

"Miss Scott is to be congratulated on a notable contribution to Stuart history. Not merely has she unravelled with skill the entanglements of a singularly intricate subject.....but she has sketched the characters of the banished Royalists with a living touch."

DORA GREENWELL MCCHESENEY, in the Daily Chronicle.The SUN and the SERPENT: a

Contribution to the History of Serpent Worship. By Brigade-Surgeon C. F. OLDHAM. Demy 8vo, with 33 Full-Page Illustrations, 10s. 6d. net.

"Dr. Oldham speaks from a well-informed mind, and utters his views with such moderation and clearness that they commend themselves to serious consideration."

Scotsman.SEXTI PROPERTI OPERA

OMNIA. With a Commentary by H. E. BUTLER, M.A., Fellow of New College, Oxford. Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

"No serious student of Propertius can in future afford to dispense with Mr. Butler's interesting and elucidating edition."—School Guardian.

PENTHESILEA: a Poem. By

LAURENCE BINYON, Author of 'The Death of Adam,' &amp;c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

"Mr. Laurence Binyon treats this exacting subject in blank verse of noticeable distinction, marked everywhere by an accomplished artistry in giving new cadences to this best of English measures, and by a proper classical calmness and dignity of feeling which, however, never leaves the work cold nor prevents it from being pathetic upon occasion. It is a beautiful poem, and will be read with interest and admiration by any lover of poetry."—Scotsman.

A REGISTER of NATIONAL

BIBLIOGRAPHY. By W. P. COURTNEY. 2 vols. demy 8vo, 31s. 6d. net.

"A veritable mine of usefulness to the student and the author. Now and in the future their thanks will go forth to Mr. Courtney, alike for undertaking a work which was needed and for the quality of his workmanship."

Daily Chronicle.The OLD ROAD. By Hilaire Belloc.

With numerous Photogravures and other Illustrations by WILLIAM HYDE. Maps and Plans. 31s. 6d. net.

"His style is admirable, a little elaborate, and often distinguished; and Mr. William Hyde's illustrations to this very handsome book are gems. He has the secret of getting at the spirit of landscape with a fine economy of means. So we have a model affair of its kind."—Athenæum.

WILLIAM COBBETT: a Study of his Life as shown in his Writings. By E. I. CARLYLE. Demy 8vo, illustrated, 7s. 6d. net.

"We have, we think, said enough to show that we have read this book with real enjoyment and interest, and to express our appreciation of the way in which the author has performed his difficult and laborious task."—Athenæum.

FREE OPINIONS.

BY

MARIE CORELLI.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"This book will, like others that have proceeded from the same pen, prove a great popular success."

Westminster Gazette.NEW AND FORTHCOMING
SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.WILL WARBURTON. By George

GISSING, Author of 'The Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft,' 'Veranilda,' &amp;c. [Shortly.

The OUTLET. By Andy Adams,

Author of 'The Log of a Cowboy,' &amp;c. Illustrated by E. BOYD SMITH. [Shortly.

The QUEEN'S MAN. By Eleanor

C. PRICE, Author of 'Angelot,' &amp;c. [Shortly.

ISIDRO. By Mary Austin, Author of 'The Land of Little Rain,' &amp;c. Illustrated by ERIC POPE. [Shortly.

JÖRN UHL. By Gustav Frenssen.

The most popular German Novel of Modern Times.

"The public is to be congratulated on the fact that this story was told, for we know of no finer in modern German fiction."—Westminster Gazette.

CRITTENDEN. By John Fox, Author of 'The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come,' &amp;c.

"Fresh, wholesome, and charming.....the characters excellently drawn.....will add to an already brilliant reputation."—Speaker.

A ROUGH REFORMER. By Ernest

GLANVILLE, Author of 'The Kloof Bride,' &amp;c.

"A story of absorbing interest, touching life at many points, and told with equal vigour and feeling."—Academy.

IN SEARCH of the UNKNOWN.

By R. W. CHAMBERS, Author of 'Cardigan,' &amp;c.

"A delightful web of convincing improbabilities."

Speaker.TALES of RYE TOWN. By Maud

STEPNEY RAWSON, Author of 'A Lady of the Regency,' &amp;c.

"The best book of short stories we have read for a year or two—one of the best we have ever read."

Morning Post.The STEPPING STONE. By Helen

HESTER COLVILL, Author of 'Our Wills and Fates,' &amp;c.

"It is a book which pleases and detains the reader throughout, both for the thought put into it, and its simple, but effective writing."—Times.

The FIRST ROMANOV (1613-1725).

A History of Moscovite Civilisation and the Rise of Modern Russia under Peter the Great and his Forerunners. By R. NISBET BAIN, Author of 'The Pupils of Peter the Great,' 'Peter III., Emperor of Russia,' &amp;c. With 8 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

[To-day.

The FAR EASTERN TROPICS:

Studies in the Administration of Tropical Dependencies. By ALLEANE IRELAND. With a Coloured Map. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

[Shortly.

The GARDEN of EDEN: Kempton

Park once upon a Time. By EDITH A. BARNETT, Author of 'Champion in the Seventies,' 'The Fetich of the Family,' &amp;c. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.

[To-day.

The SAYINGS of MUHAMMAD.

Arranged by A. L. SUHRAWADY. 16mo, 2s. 6d. Uniform with the 'Ingersoll Lectures.'

[To-day.

The CITIZEN: a Study of the Indi- vidual and the Government. By NATHANIEL SOUTHGATE SHALER, Professor of Geology in Harvard University and Dean of Lawrence Scientific School. Crown 8vo, pp. viii-346, 6s. net.

[Shortly.

JOHN of GAUNT. By S. Armitage-

SMITH. With Portraits and Maps. Demy 8vo, about 500 pp. 18s. net.

"No more important work on mediæval history has appeared during recent years."—Athenæum.

LITERARY PORTRAITS. By

CHARLES WHIBLEY, Author of 'A Book of Scoundrels,' &amp;c. Frontispiece. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

Contents:—Studies in Rabelais, Commynes, Burton, and several of the great Tudor translators.

"Mr. Whibley must be classed among the few discriminating critics of a day in which real sensitive criticism is as an oasis in the desert....The level of performance is here singularly even and singularly high, and the book is a book for the library shelf, not a mere volume of essays to be read, returned, and forgotten."—Athenæum.

GREAT ENGLISHMEN of the SIXTEENTH CENTURY. By SIDNEY LEE.

Illustrated with Portraits. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"This is quite the best work that Mr. Sidney Lee has given us, with the possible exception of his introduction to Elizabethan sonnets in 'An English Garner.'"

Academy and Literature.RECOLLECTIONS and LETTERS of GENERAL ROBERT E. LEE. By Capt.

R. E. LEE. Demy 8vo, illustrated with Portraits, 12s. 6d. net.

"The reading of such a work as this has something in it of encouragement and inspiration. 'The country which has given birth to men like him,' was the verdict of an English newspaper, 'may look the chivalry of Europe in the face without shame. For the Fatherlands of Sidney and Bayard never produced a nobler soldier, Christian, and gentleman than General Robert E. Lee.'"—Daily News.

INNER JERUSALEM. By Miss

GOODRICH FREER. Fully illustrated from Photographs. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d. net.

"Whatever may be true of other places, every one has an interest in Jerusalem. For the many who can never hope to visit it themselves, Miss Freer's book will be of real assistance, while those who do make the journey would probably do so with more profit if they could find room for this shapely volume in their luggage."—Outlook.

WANDERINGS in the GREAT

FORESTS of BORNEO. By Dr. ODOARDO

BECCARI. Revised and edited by F. H. H.

GUILLEMARD, M.A. With numerous illustrations. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

"Not since the appearance, a good many years ago, of Dr. A. R. Wallace's great work on the 'Malay Archipelago,' has there been such an attractive volume on natural history in that profuse region."—Morning Leader.

PLEASE WRITE FOR COMPLETE CATALOGUE AND ANNOUNCEMENT LIST AND PROSPECTUS OF ALL NEW BOOKS.

A. CONSTABLE &amp; CO., LIMITED, 16, James Street, Haymarket, S.W.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

LIFE, LETTERS, AND LITERARY REMAINS OF J. H. SHORTHOUSE.

Edited by his WIFE. In 2 vols. illustrated, extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

ILLUSTRATED POCKET CLASSICS.
NEW VOLUME.

JOHN INGLESANT.

By J. HENRY SHORTHOUSE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. net.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF ANDREW DICKSON WHITE, Formerly United States Ambassador at Berlin and St. Petersburg. With Portraits. In 2 vols. 8vo, 30s. net.

VOL. III. NOW READY.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLAND.

By HERBERT PAUL. In 5 vols. Vol. III. FROM the DEATH of LORD PALMERSTON in 1865 to 1876. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

Previously Published—Vols. I. and II. 8s. 6d. net each.

"We do not know where else to find so good a narrative of domestic politics from 1865 to 1876. We can honestly say that we have read his present volume with unflagging interest from the first page to the last, and that we look forward to its continuation with keen expectation."—Spectator.

1905 ISSUE NOW READY.

THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK.

Statistical and Historical Annual of the States of the World, for the Year 1905. Edited by J. SCOTT KELTIE, LL.D. With Maps. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL HANDBOOKS.—New Vol.

A GRAMMAR OF GREEK ART

By PERCY GARDNER, Litt.D., Lincoln and Merton Professor of Classical Archaeology in the University of Oxford. With Illustrations. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE PRINCIPLES OF ECONOMICS

A Fragment of a Treatise on the Industrial Mechanism of Society, and other Papers. By the late W. STANLEY JEVONS, LL.D. M.A. F.R.S. With a Preface by HENRY HIGGS. 8vo, 10s. net.

COMPATRIOTS' CLUB LECTURES.

First Series. Edited by the Committee of the Compatriots' Club. 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

SHAKESPEAREAN

TRAGEDY:

Lectures on Hamlet, Othello, King Lear, and Macbeth. By Prof. A. C. BRADLEY, LL.D. Litt.D. 8vo, 10s. net.

HIGHWAYS AND BYWAYS SERIES.
NEW VOLUME.

DERBYSHIRE.

By J. B. FIRTH. With Illustrations by NELLY ERICHSEN. Extra crown 8vo, gilt top, 6s.

MACMILLAN'S NEW NOVELS.

Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

FOND ADVENTURES.

Tales of the Youth of the World.

By MAURICE HEWLETT.

THE RED CRAVAT.

By A. T. SHEPPARD.

POCKET EDITIONS OF THE NOVELS OF SCOTT, DICKENS, & THACKERAY.

PRINTED ON INDIA PAPER.

Fcap. 8vo, limp cloth, gilt tops, 2s. net; limp leather, gilt tops, 3s. net each.

NOW READY.

WAVERLEY. With 12 Illustrations.

PICKWICK PAPERS. With 50 Illustrations.

VANITY FAIR. With 190 Illustrations.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

Messrs. HURST & BLACKETT beg to announce that the First Edition of Mr. PERCEVAL LANDON'S great work on Tibet, entitled LHASA, is now out of print. The SECOND EDITION READY IMMEDIATELY, in 2 vols., with all the original Illustrations, and the new Official Survey of Lhasa and Neighbourhood, price 2l. 2s. net.

Orders now sent for the Second Edition will be executed as soon as it is ready.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.
In 1 vol. crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

THE RUSSIAN NAVY IN THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

By Capt. N. KLADO,
Of the Imperial Russian Navy.

"An interesting book, and proof of its author's astuteness and ability."—Standard.

VOLUME II. of FRIEDBERGER
and FROHNER'S VETE-RINARY PATHOLOGY,
Translated by Capt. HAYES
and Edited by JOHN DUN-
STAN, M.R.C.V.S., will be
READY NEXT WEEK,
price 10s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVEL BY MADAME ALBANESI.
In 1 vol. 6s.

MARIAN SAX. By Madame Albanesi.

Author of 'Capricious Caroline,' 'Susannah and One Elder,' &c.

"This well-written story."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"This novel, like everything from the same pen, is admirably written and instinct with dramatic feeling."—Dundee Advertiser.

"The story is gracefully written and constructed."—Scotsman.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

A GENDARME of the KING. Being

the Experiences of the Laird of Lindourie with the Great Frederick in the Seven Years' War. By PHILIP L. STEVENSON.

"Narrated with plenty of movement and with a graphic picture of Frederick himself."—Times.

"Major Stevenson has managed to conjure up the real spirit of life in Frederick's Courts and camps."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW NOVEL BY EDMUND DOWNEY.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

DOROTHY TUKE; a Tale of the Sea.

By EDMUND DOWNEY, Author of 'Through Green Glasses,' &c.

NEW NOVEL BY ALICE M. DIEHL.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

BREAD UPON the WATERS. By

ALICE M. DIEHL, Author of 'The Garden of Eden,' &c. [May 22.]

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

DORRIEN of CRANSTON. By

BERTRAM MITFORD, Author of 'The Iuduna's Wife,' &c.

NEW SIXPENNY EDITIONS.

In medium 8vo, illustrated covers.

GOD'S PRISONER. By JOHN OXENHAM.

A KING'S WOMAN. By KATHERINE TYNAN.

HER OWN PEOPLE. By B. M. CROKER.

The MAN from DOWNING STREET. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX.

London: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED,
182, High Holborn, W.C.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

GARDEN COLOUR.

SPRING. By Mrs. C. W. Earle.

SUMMER. By E. V. B.

AUTUMN. By Rose Kingsley.

WINTER. By the Hon. Vicary Gibbs.

With 51 Water-Colour Sketches and Notes

By MARGARET WATERFIELD.

Demy 4to, 1l. 1s. net.

The ATHENÆUM says:—"The book is something more than a sumptuous feast of colour; it is a gardener's calendar, to which several hands contribute. That Miss Waterfield has good taste is everywhere made evident in this attractive volume."

The TIMES says:—"A delightful book, focussing attention on one side—perhaps the chief side—of horticulture."

The ACADEMY says:—"A notable addition to garden literature."

Write for a Prospectus.

AN ELIZABETHAN VIRGINAL BOOK.

By EDWARD W. NAYLOR, M.A. Mus.D.,
Organist and Lecturer of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, and Author of 'Shakespeare and Music,' &c.

A critical essay on the fine collection of clavier music in the Fitzwilliam Museum at Cambridge, and known as the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book; copious Musical Illustrations; a coloured Frontispiece of Queen Elizabeth's Virginal Book; a facsimile page from the Virginal Book, &c.

MASTER MUSICIANS.—New Vol.

SCHUBERT.

By E. DUNCAN.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d. net. Illustrated.

Chronicles

OF THE

CITY OF PERUGIA, 1492-1503.

Written by FRANCESCO MATARAZZO.

Translated by EDWARD STRACHAN MORGAN.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net.

This is a translation of Matarazzo's fascinating mediæval chronicle, giving a vivid contemporary account of the story of Perugia and the Baglioni (1492-1503). The chronicler is a story-teller of the first rank.

THE TEMPLE PRIMERS.

Cloth, pott 8vo, 1s. net.

NEARLY READY.

THE

WORKING CONSTITUTION of the United Kingdom.

By LEONARD COURTNEY.

DENT'S COMPLETE TOLSTOY.

Translated by Prof. WEINER.

The MORNING POST says:—"An excellent edition, well bound and clearly printed."

The PALL MALL GAZETTE says:—"The admirable edition of Count Tolstoy's works which Messrs. Dent are publishing is already nearly half completed."

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. net per Volume; each Volume sold separately, except where two or more Volumes go to make a complete Work. Also Large-Paper Edition.

VOLS. IX., X., and XI.

ANNA KARÉNIN.

In 3 vols. Illustrated.

Please write for Prospectus containing full particulars.

WAR and PEACE is published in 4 vols.

London: J. M. DENT & CO. 29, Bedford Street.

SATURDAY, MAY 13, 1905.

CONTENTS.

|   | PAGE    |
|---|---------|
| THE CAMBRIDGE MODERN HISTORY ... ..   | 553     |
| KING LEOPOLD II. AND THE CONGO STATE ... ..   | 584     |
| A FRENCH VIEW OF MRS. BROWNING ... ..   | 585     |
| THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ... ..   | 586     |
| NEW NOVELS (The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne; A Daughter of Kings; Hearts of Wales; A Vagrant Englishwoman; Seth of the Cross; The White Terror and the Red; The Manitoban; Jörn Uhl) ... ..  | 587-588 |
| ITALIAN LITERATURE ... ..   | 588     |
| SHORT STORIES ... ..  | 589     |
| OUR LIBRARY TABLE (Autobiography of A. D. White; Russia in Revolution; Church and State in England; Do We Believe? Maine's Ancient Law; F. W. Newman's The Soul; Dr. Grenfell's Parish; A Self-made Man's Wife; The Inventors' Guide to Patent Law; New Editions and Reprints) ... .. | 589-591 |
| LIST OF NEW BOOKS ... ..  | 591     |
| THE COMMITTEE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF THE PRESS IN LONDON; CROMWELL AND IRISH PRISONERS; LAMB'S LETTERS; WOMEN'S DEGREES AT DUBLIN; THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS ... ..  | 592-593 |
| LITERARY GOSSIP ... ..  | 591     |
| SCIENCE—HOWORTH'S ICE OR WATER; RESEARCH NOTES; TOTEMISM AND THE DOMESTICATION OF ANIMALS; SOCIETIES; MEETINGS NEXT WEEK; GOSSIP ... ..   | 595-593 |
| FINE ARTS—THE MONUMENTS OF ROME; THE NEW GALLERY; A NORTHAMPTONSHIRE CHURCH CHEST; SALES; GOSSIP ... ..   | 598-600 |
| MUSIC—RING DES NIBELUNGEN; DON PASQUALE; JOACHIM QUARTET; GOSSIP; PERFORMANCES NEXT WEEK ... ..   | 601-602 |
| DRAMA—BRADLEY ON SHAKESPEAREAN TRAGEDY; THE CREOLE; JASPER BRIGHT; EPICENE; BROTHER OFFICERS; SALOMÉ; GOSSIP ... ..   | 602-604 |

LITERATURE

The Cambridge Modern History.—Vol. III.
The Wars of Religion. (Cambridge, University Press.)

'LES GUERRES DE RELIGION' was the title chosen for the fifth volume of Lavissee and Rambaud's 'Histoire Générale,' covering the period 1559-1648. It serves less well to cover the period 1560-1610, treated in the third volume of 'The Cambridge Modern History.' But as all sub-titles for historic periods are in their nature mere make-shifts, there would be no temptation to carp at the one selected were it not somewhat indicative of the relations of two works which are in some sense rivals. The French volume takes a century to the Cambridge half-century, and though the new model has therefore the advantage in size and amount of detail, in most matters of editorial organization the archetype is superior. The more we read of the new, the more we wish that what was good in the French model had been retained. In outward form the French rival will always have the advantage, for the crowded line and unbroken page of the English text are as hard to read with pleasure as the French is easy. One volume of the series must now, of course, be like another in appearance, but as the Cambridge Press proposes to issue a companion mediæval history, the present may be a suitable moment to urge the desirability of a change of form when opportunity occurs.

The first chapter of the volume suffers by the method of presentation adopted. The massacre of St. Bartholomew, the murder of the Guises, and the conversion of Henry IV. are events to which subsequent writers must refer again and again, yet the theme of the fugue is obscured at the moment of its first rendering. The tale opens with the shedding of Huguenot blood at Vassy, but nothing is said to show the momentous nature of the event, to show why it meant to Condé, for instance, the crossing of the Rubicon. The editors have bidden Mr. Butler begin at this point, and that is enough. The reader is at once plunged into a sea of events, and left to guide himself as best he may. Eminent personalities glide past him like ships dimly descried on the distant horizon, too far off to be hailed and intercepted. Certain great persons appear as holders of high office, but it is by their office alone that they are made familiar to the reader. Even Gaspard de Coligny is simply an admiral who appeared on certain occasions with duly recorded dates. French history, full of memorable phrases, the utterances of great men, which stamp the men and the events upon the memory, is reduced by this means to a jejune and tedious narration, such as has long been banished from the French school, and need not now be offered to educated Englishmen. The events of August 24th, 1572, are described as a Massacre, the conventional capital being retained, but save for that indication the occasion might be merely another Vassy on a larger scale; we learn that the total number of victims has been variously estimated, but not why it is desirable to seek statistics of an event seemingly so little important. There is no attempt to discover the nature of the feeling that manifested itself in this murderous form, or to show how deeply the event affected France. Yet to other writers, as was to be expected, the Massacre appears as one of those memorable events which have good broad backs, capable of showing to advantage a large pattern of historic cause and result. Mr. Tilley, for instance, in his admirable chapter on French literature, writes: "French poetry cannot be said to have suffered from the Massacre to the same extent as French scholarship"; but as he does not develop either part of this thesis, we are clearly expected to turn back for aid to the first account of what happened. Dr. Brosch, again, writing on the Ottoman power, and generally anxious to find a European parallel for Turkish murders, contrasts the effect of the death of Mustafa with that of the Massacre, and traces the ruin of the Ottoman empire to the murder. If these passages show a tendency to exaggerate, Mr. Butler's account errs as much on the other side. The conversion of Henry IV. is briefly alluded to by Mr. Butler, and as briefly by Mr. Leathes, to whom falls the history of his reign. There seems to have been no editorial allotment of this important episode, which was better worth a paragraph than many of the minutiae here set down in detail. The rest of Mr. Leathes's chapter is excellent, and superior to his previous work for the 'History.' His bibliography shows his range, and is far better than the inadequate list offered for the reigns of Henry's predecessors.

The drab opening chapter contrasts curiously with the highly coloured picture of Spanish affairs drawn by Major Martin Hume. Here there is an attempt at effect, an attempt which we welcome; but it fails of complete success through want of due light and shade. We find, for instance, Alva "thundering" at the gates of Rome in 1557; if his artillery thunders when silent, one wonders what it will do when it roars. The definiteness of Major Hume's character-drawing clashes at times with the decisions of his fellow-writers. He ascribes to Philip II, for instance, unalterable tenacity of purpose, whereas Mr. Edmundson calls him, on the contrary, undecided. The truth may lie in Granvelle's complaint, not here recorded, that "he had formed the resolution to be perfectly irresolute." The weak places of the Spanish power are plainly shown, but not its sources of strength. Three times we learn that the Spanish fields lay untilled; but iteration does not enhance the effect of the statement, and there is the same want of artistic skill in depicting Philip's financial embarrassments as so bad at the beginning that they could not get worse. More impressive would have been a careful account of the nature of Spanish finance, such as Ranke has given in epitome. Mr. Edmundson obtains far better effect in dealing with the numerous heroic episodes of the war in the Netherlands; a crescendo is produced when needed by the use of an occasional piano. The story of the execution of Egmont and Horn is admirably told. Mr. Sidney Lee's description of the death of the queen in his chapter on the last years of Elizabeth should also be singled out for special praise.

The late Dr. Law's chapter, entitled 'Mary Stewart,' is drawn beautifully to scale, though the ground was crowded, as he had to treat of English affairs as well as of Scotch, of Elizabeth as well as Mary. Much he knew of both, but in a brief chapter he could give only the main outlines, deal out justice with an even hand, and view their works and ways as part of a larger theme. The Irish chapter, on the other hand, is completely out of scale. Mr. Dunlop is as deeply versed in his subject as was Dr. Law, but he has not the same sense of proportion and perception of the essential. Extremely diffuse on some points of subordinate importance, he gives less than enough for the understanding of Irish institutions and ideas. We learn that only "the tradition of a Christian belief still survived" among the Irish chieftains at the close of Henry VIII.'s reign, and that by the efforts of the Counter-Reformation Ireland was reconverted from a state approaching heathenism. This promises to be interesting, but when the time comes to describe the progress of the mission, it is dismissed in a few sentences. The bibliography is unreasonably diffuse; for instance, the local historians of particular Irish towns are named, when a reference to Dr. Gross's volume of municipal bibliography would have sufficed.

In these and other matters there seems to have been too little editorial severity and watchfulness. The Master of Peterhouse has contributed excellent chapters on the Empire, but deals more rigorously with himself than he does with other people. Mr. Lee's lengthy account of the dreary course of Essex's affairs, which, in a general history, do not call for minute narrative, might well have been cancelled, and, in any case, it was undesirable to include a second account of the Cadiz expedition, diverging somewhat from the first. Three times the main differences between the Spanish and English build of ships are described: twice by Prof. Laughton, and again by Major Hume. By pruning the superfluous matter, space might have been found for an adequate discussion of several themes which are left almost wholly untouched. The affairs of Denmark and Sweden, most important as illustrating the nature of the schemes to extend Catholic influence, and the close connexion between religion and politics, are omitted; perhaps they are supposed to be covered by a scanty outline included in a previous volume, where it was chronologically out of place, and, in any case, wholly insufficient when we come to close quarters with the second half of the century. Roumanian history is similarly passed over, though the conquest of Transylvania by Michael the Brave is a sufficiently conspicuous incident, and its points of contact with matters here treated are numerous and important. There is a good measure of Polish history, but the affairs of Muscovy and the account of Ivan the Terrible are for some reason withheld. The commercial history of the whole period, and the history of art and science, except for a few words from Mr. Armstrong, writing on Tuscany, obtain no place. The reform of the calendar is referred to, but, like the rest of the work of Gregory XIII., the details of its history are omitted. Count Balzani writes an interesting chapter entitled 'Rome under Sixtus V.,' and naturally treats only of matters which fall under that title. The chapter on 'The Church and Reform' having been given in a previous volume, reform movements in the Catholic Church within the second half of the century escape attention. It would have been better if each volume had been made to cover a definite term of years rather than an imperfect set of subjects. Under the present arrangement the first and second volumes include matter which chronologically belongs to the third. In this point, again, the French editors made the more practical choice. Careful dovetailing was perhaps rendered difficult by the nature of the original scheme, but the relegation to a separate and concluding chapter of the subject of 'Political Thought in the Sixteenth Century' seems scarcely to coincide with Lord Acton's view of the proper treatment of history. Immersed in minute narrative, and aware that "political thought" is to be treated separately, few of the writers embody in their account of political events any analysis of the thought that prompted the actions they narrate. The concluding chapter proves to be, what it ought to be, in the main an account of the political philosophy of specialists who wrote on that subject in the sixteenth century. Mr. Figgis, who has made himself thoroughly at home in the political philosophy of the next century, shows in the preceding period a somewhat less complete mastery. Amid much that is admirable we note some weak phrases, such as, "It was not for nothing that Luther burnt the Corpus Juris Canonici," and "The principles of civil authority were of universal import." If less space had been given to Luther—whose position was fully discussed in an earlier volume—and more to Althusius, whose greatness as a thinker is scarcely sufficiently brought out, the chapter would have been strengthened. The comparison of mediæval and modern statements of the Papal claims and the analysis of many of the sixteenth-century novelties in political thought are, however, masterly. "The very phrase 'reason of state' is fundamentally modern." "The modern mind is not disposed to admit the existence of any legal right or duty, either public or private, which cannot be enforced by compulsion." These and many other passages deserve quotation. There is also a residue of interesting but contentious matter; for instance, such obiter dicta as "it is finally to be observed that religious liberty is rightly to be described as the parent of political," which may be true of the sixteenth century, but is not equally true of all time.

In this notice we have offended ourselves against those canons of proportion which we have urged the editors to respect, inasmuch as our space has been given to criticism, and there remains over very much to praise. But the vintage of the 'Cambridge Modern History' is well known to be sound, and stands in no need of laudatory sentences for the purpose of advertisement. The index of the present volume is, we are glad to see, a great improvement on its predecessors.

---

King Leopold II.: his Rule in Belgium and the Congo. By John de Courcy MacDonnell. With 40 Full-page Plates, Genealogical Table, and Map. (Cassell & Co.)

A POLITICAL pamphlet, spun out to nearly four hundred pages, and made up of panegyrics and misrepresentations, is irksome reading, of a sort not generally calling for notice in our columns. The literary form of Mr. MacDonnell's book, however, and its assumption of official authority, make it proper that intending readers should be told something as to the nature of its contents. Though it has no prefatory or introductory note, a loose page of advertisement inserted in the volume is evidently intended to serve the purpose of one, and in this we are told that "Mr. MacDonnell is fortunate in having access to documents and departments which are closed to the ordinary historian"; that this is "a most valuable work, coming as it does from an absolutely authentic source, and showing the forces at work, and the ideals of the Belgian King as they have never been before"; and that "it may almost be called Belgium's apologia for the Congo administration." Unless King Leopold is willing to be held responsible for all the preposterous assertions of his apparent spokesman, a démenti ought promptly to be issued from Laeken.

In the genealogical table, "showing the descent of King Leopold II., and his relation to King Edward VII.," which is considered important enough to be mentioned on the title-page, two sons are assigned to King Leopold I. of Belgium besides the present Count of Flanders, one being "Prince Leopold, Duke of Brabant," the other "Leopold II., King of the Belgians, Sovereign of the Independent State of the Congo." This, of course, is merely a careless blunder, which, set right in the text, will deceive nobody, and may readily be excused. But it is indicative of the carelessness or worse of which there are numberless instances in the text.

Only two of Mr. MacDonnell's seventeen chapters are devoted to the King-Sovereign's "rule in Belgium" itself. In these there is no evidence of private documentary information, but there is at least a suggestion of royal inspiration, as to the way in which the theory that "in a constitutional monarchy the king's place is ever that of a ruler, and his first duty is to rule," has been so steadily and skilfully carried out during the past forty years that the Liberal party in Belgium has been used up and virtually got rid of. This has been done, with the assistance of a docile and devout majority, in the broadest sense of the term, by

"a Catholic Prince, whom none could accuse of anti-Catholicity, whose wise moderation led him at all times to curb the manifestation of violent party spirit in the Governments of the country, and the real Liberalism of whose views caused him to protect the freedom of the institutions of the country from whatever side it was attacked."

The main portion of the book is, we presume, the "apologia for the Congo administration," but it is led up to by a chapter on 'Belgium and the Foreign Powers,' which is more interesting and significant than any of the others.

Mr. MacDonnell's view is that the perpetual neutrality imposed on Belgium by the Great Powers in 1830 constituted her

"the Warden of the Peace of Europe, and in this noble position she is bound to maintain herself, by her treaties as well as in her own self-interest."

This obligation, it is held, has rendered it an international as well as a patriotic duty that Belgium should at all times be ready for war. The necessity for this has been increased by the greed or callousness of France, Germany, and other neighbours. Forced in the upholding of her interests to plot by turn for and against these neighbours, especially France and Germany, Belgium has more than held her own through three-quarters of a century, but in so doing has incurred the jealousy or fear of each in turn or all together, and the vast and solemn responsibilities she has taken upon herself are not lessened because,

"standing between the great nations of England, France, and Germany, and serving as a protection for each, she has, in our time, instead of a storm centre, become a peace centre of Europe."

But for her great services to the world Belgium receives no gratitude, and, worst of all, the nation she has always loved the most, and been of most service to, is now the most ungrateful. At length the time has fully come for Belgium to speak out—or, at any rate, as Mr. MacDonnell thinks, for him to speak out for her—and these are some of the threats and warnings he utters:—

"It would be well for every Power to pause before goading Belgium on, and well for some to consider in what direction their goading drives Belgium to turn. That Belgium is being goaded at the present time—goaded almost to the point at which endurance becomes neither virtuous nor possible, and that by the Power she looked upon as her greatest friend, and to which, from the first moment of her history, she gave continuous proofs of her fidelity and her affection—is, unhappily, too true. Whencever they arose, the attacks of England on Belgium have long since passed the bounds of reason and justice, and they have long since passed the bounds of English interest.....So unbridled are these attacks, and so fiercely does Belgium resent them, that the situation has already become a grave one; and the seeming ignorance of it in which English statesmen remain contrasts strangely with the eagerness with which it is grasped and the profit which is made of it by others, outside Belgium, who are not friendly to England.....It may, then, come with surprise to Englishmen to learn that an opportunity has been seized on in certain quarters on the Continent of fanning the flame of discord with England's abuse of Belgium."

It is from Germany, Mr. MacDonnell hints not darkly, that the danger of England's ruin chiefly comes, and it is to King Leopold, he plainly indicates, that England's salvation will be due, if it is secured at all.

But our ill-used benefactor's patience must not be too sorely tried:—

"King Leopold, confident at all times in his aim for his country's good, is, most fortunately, a ruler who pursues his course unswayed by praise or blame. He has inherited and continued the traditions, policy, and instincts of his father, who came to Belgium not as a German, but an English prince.....The friendship of King Leopold for the country of which his father was a citizen, and which a prince of his house reigns over, has up to the present prevented an open rupture in these relations from taking place; but every day Englishmen themselves make the King's task more difficult."

It is in the hope of rescuing the nation whose king is his nephew from the downfall which, we are expected to believe, is being courted by English critics of Congo rule, that the Sovereign of the Congo State has commissioned or assisted Mr. MacDonnell to write this book, and particularly its dozen chapters about the Congo. The writer's arguments, however, are not convincing, and we wish we could attribute their unreality to ignorance of the subject in hand. It cannot, for instance, have been from want of knowledge that Mr. MacDonnell, notwithstanding the diligence he shows in proving that King Leopold was the one and only founder, and is now the exclusive owner, of the Congo State, persistently refers to criticisms of King Leopold's Congo policy as attacks on Belgium or the Belgian people. The critics, from the British Government downwards, have, so far as we are aware, always strictly differentiated between the Congo Government, in which King Leopold has absolutely despotic powers, and the Belgian nation, of which he is constitutional monarch. In so doing they are in agreement with the numerous and growing body of Congolese critics and reformers in Belgium herself, who cannot forget that in 1884 King Leopold assigned to France a right of pre-emption as regards his Congo possessions, and that, although this right was surrendered in 1895 to the extent of not invalidating the king's bond to the Belgian Government empowering it to take over the Congo in 1900 unless the debt for which it was pawned was redeemed in the interval, the king in 1901 bluntly refused to give up either the money or the Congo, and still retains possession by virtue of a formal legalization of an arbitrary and unconstitutional arrangement. These are facts about which, as about a great many others, Mr. MacDonnell is discreetly silent.

Though it makes all the more absurd the scare which it is here attempted to raise as to the effect of protests against Congo wrongdoing on the international position of Belgium, Mr. MacDonnell's account of the origin and early history of the Congo State has been so compiled as to leave with King Leopold all the credit, such as it is, as well as all the responsibility for the achievement. Evidently to this intent exaggerated importance is attached to the unofficial Geographical Conference held in Brussels in 1876, from which its royal president claims that he received international warrant to appropriate for the International African Association that grew out of it mastery over all portions of Central Africa explored under its patronage; and there is corresponding minimizing of the authority of the official Conference held in Berlin in 1884 to settle some of the knotty questions that had arisen in the interval, especially concerning the Congo. The visionary but long-admitted rights of Portugal to the Congo district, as part of its African territories, are mentioned only to be scouted. French, German, and British proceedings are also misrepresented to their detriment; and the value of the proceedings of Stanley and other agents of King Leopold is, to their aggrandizement, yet more misrepresented. The validity of the so-called treaties with native chiefs which Stanley brought home, for instance, was certainly not "beyond question in international law," and, instead of "vesting the sovereignty of the whole of that great portion of Equatorial Africa which is now known as the Conventional Basin of the Congo, and of great districts outside of it, extending practically from sea to sea, in the International African Association," they merely assigned to Stanley and his nominees trading privileges on the banks of the Congo river along a few hundred miles from its mouth.

The statements made on nearly every page of this part of Mr. MacDonnell's book have been refuted over and over again, on official and other indisputable evidence, and deserve no further contradiction. Their reiteration here is an insult to the readers whom the writer wants to persuade. Especially so is, together with the perversion of the provisions of the Berlin and Brussels General Acts, the attempt to make out that the sole object and decisive result of Baron Dhanis's expedition against the Arab slave-traders in 1892 and the following years were suppression of slave-raiding and slavery in Central Africa. As a matter of fact, King Leopold's employment of Tippu Tippu and his partners was a main incentive to the Arab encroachments, which were only interfered with when and in so far as the Congo State was imperilled by them, and when and in so far as the State officials wanted, or were able, to establish a monopoly in their own improved methods of slavery and slave-raiding.

More than a third of the book is occupied with a demonstration of the splendid intentions and, as it is pretended, yet more splendid performances of the State and its emissaries and allies—heathen blacks as well as Christian whites—in civilizing the natives whom it employs, solely for their own good, in rubber-collecting and other light and well-paid-for labours. It is little more than a repetition of statements already made in wearisome abundance. But the statements have been brought up to date, and include mention of Consul Casement's report, our Government's dispatches thereon, and the Congo Government's appointment of the Commission of Inquiry which was sent out last September and returned to Brussels in March. It is unfortunate for Mr. MacDonnell that he did not delay the publication of, at any rate, these 146 pages of his book until he had seen the informal but well-vouched-for summaries, already issued, of the evidence which satisfied the Commissioners, and of which a full report has not yet appeared. At the end of his "apologia" he says:—

"From a commission so composed it is certain that a report will be received setting forth all the facts of the case fully and impartially. With the verdict of the commission on the condition of the natives it is to be hoped that the controversy in which so much has been disgraceful lying, and so much a skilful appeal to avaricious passion hypocritically cloaked as philanthropy, will cease, and that the Independent State will be allowed to continue its great work in the development of its territories, the improvement of its people, and the administration of justice, unhindered by the jealous clamourings of envious adventurers."

However inadequate the report may be as an exposure of evils alleged to be going on all over the Congo State's territory, as well as in the small area visited by the Commission, the critics of Leopoldian policy, whom Mr. MacDonnell so vigorously denounces, will probably agree with him in hoping that it will put a sufficient check on the avaricious passions that have been so plentiful of late. In that case the threatened abandonment of England by King Leopold to its continental foes may be averted.

---

La Vie et l'Œuvre de Elizabeth Barrett Browning. Par Germaine-Marie Merlette. (Paris, Armand Colin.)

WE had occasion recently to notice M. Fernand Henry's skilful version of Mrs. Browning's 'Sonnets from the Portuguese,' and now an elaborate monograph on the English poet comes to us also from Paris. Mlle. Merlette's careful study of the life and writings of Elizabeth Barrett Browning is cast in a form which reminds us of the theses which candidates for the Doctorate in the University of Paris are required to write and to publish. We observe that the author has received the degree of Doctor, and certainly her sound and scholarly appreciation of Mrs. Browning's work proves her worthy of it. She has made a thorough study of her subject, has visited the scenes in Italy and England which are most intimately connected with the poet's life, and has collected much information at first hand.

Since Mrs. Ritchie wrote her article on Mrs. Browning for the 'Dictionary of National Biography' many new facts and much new light on the character of the poet have been given to the world. Mlle. Merlette has made use of all available sources, and the result is a book which gives us by far the completest account of Mrs. Browning that is to be found in any language. It would have been less bulky, however, and would have lost nothing if the elaborate prose analysis of each poem could have been omitted.

Mlle. Merlette, as becomes a biographer who is also a critic, does not allow herself to be carried away by enthusiasm for her subject. She maintains her critical attitude throughout. But perhaps in her final estimate of the poetess she ranks her too high. Mrs. Browning won wider and more immediate recognition, but her fame will hardly be so enduring as that of Christina Rossetti. Her best work is excellent in a feminine and emotional way; it is full of inspiration, but it lacks the artistic self-restraint which Miss Rossetti shared with Sappho alone among women, as well as the intense concentration of passion and language which Sappho shared with none. Mlle. Merlette, however, places Mrs. Browning second to Sappho:—

"Trois grands poètes ont illustré la première partie du règne de Victoria. Tennyson est le plus grand artiste, Browning est à la fois le penseur le plus profond et le plus subtil analyste. C'est Elizabeth Barrett Browning qui a le mieux su faire entendre

Cette voix du cœur, qui seule au cœur arrive, lorsqu'elle a exprimé l'amour ou la pitié..... Avec moins art, nous trouvons une inspiration égale à celle de Sappho. Si nous songeons à l'élévation et à la pureté jointes chez Elizabeth à la profondeur du sentiment, nous pourrions dire: de même que Sappho est proclamée la première femme poète du monde antique et païen, Mrs. Browning est la première femme poète du monde moderne et chrétien."

Naturally the French critic, who believes with Buffon that "Bien écrire, c'est à la fois bien penser, bien sentir et bien rendre," is compelled to notice, again and again, Mrs. Browning's lack of art and disregard of form. With her, the artist was always inferior to the poet and thinker: "Elle ne possédait pas assez bien les secrets du métier, qui en poésie s'appelle l'art." Mlle. Merlette sees in the poem entitled 'A Dead Rose' a symbolical announcement that the poetess herself regarded beauty of form as a secondary object. However that may be, 'Aurora Leigh,' full of the raw material of poetry, and abounding in beautiful passages, is ruined by its diffuseness and lack of construction; violent mannerisms, obscurity, and lack of compression mar many other of Mrs. Browning's longer poems and some of her glowing and impetuous lyrics; and it was only when constrained within the bounds of the most severe metrical forms that she rose to her highest performance. The shortness and difficulty of the sonnet form rid her of the faults of diffuseness and carelessness, and roused to its utmost effort the artistic sense which was apt to lie dormant in her.

Mlle. Merlette's appreciation of the 'Sonnets' is excellent, and we shall be forgiven for quoting the following passage:—

"Les Sonnets forment un tout parfait, avec exposition, nœud et dénouement, et le mérite en est plus grand que ne serait celui d'autant de petits poèmes d'égale beauté, sans aucun lien entre eux. On peut les comparer à un collier de pierres précieuses, naturellement assorties, polies ensuite, et sorties par la même main habile. Ce collier aura plus de valeur que la somme de toutes les gemmes qui le composent, prises chacune à part. Mais nous devons convenir qu'on ne peut guère espérer de trouver ces diamants littéraires tous également de la plus belle eau, sans paille ni défauts d'aucune sorte. La critique trouverait encore, ça et là, quelques fautes de goût; des comparaisons qui étonnent, et détonnent, quelques métaphores incohérentes, ou bien des traces des anciens défauts de l'auteur, obscurité et subtilité."

With reference to the story of the publication of the 'Sonnets,' Mlle. Merlette records, on the authority of Miss Swanwick, "un mot expressif" of Browning. All the world knows that when the 'Sonnets from the Portuguese'—of which the 'Love Letters' were the prose version—were finished, Mrs. Browning thrust them into Browning's pocket and fled from the room, after begging him to burn them if he did not like them. Browning read them, and his verdict was that he could not keep them for himself alone. They were, he declared, "the most beautiful sonnets written in any language since Shakspeare," meaning, we presume, "the most beautiful sequence of love sonnets," for Milton and Wordsworth wrote sonnets after Shakspeare. Browning rightly insisted on publication. "I am the guardian of your genius," so, according to his own account of the matter given to Miss Swanwick, he argued with his wife, "and in that capacity I ought to insist on your consent to publish the 'Sonnets.'"

We have noticed a good many misprints and small misquotations, such as are likely to occur when printing a foreign tongue. Some of these are corrected in a list of errata, but some remain, as in the notes on pp. 65, 83, and 281. Dr. Bridge is now more correctly referred to as Sir Frederick Bridge. Mlle. Merlette deals judiciously with Mrs. Browning's system of rhyming, which, she maintained, was not careless, but which was certainly not successful, and which has damaged her perhaps more than she deserved in the ears of a generation which has brought the art of versification to so high an average of technical excellence. We are not inclined to defend Mrs. Browning's rhymes; Bion and undying, which Mlle. Merlette quotes, are indeed atrocious as rhymes, but it is only fair to say that though it is Bíon in Greek, we pronounce the name "Bíon" in English.

Mrs. Browning's best lyrics—as, for instance, 'The Cry of the Children' or 'A Musical Instrument'—sing themselves; in Lamartine's phrase, they "portent leur mélodie," and an original melody too. Mlle. Merlette makes an interesting point when she compares their musical quality with "tels de nos poètes contemporains qui veulent faire de la musique avant toute chose." Mrs. Browning also resembles Verlaine and his followers in the liberties which she takes with rhyme. In this "true genius, but true woman"—the words apply to Mrs. Browning as truly as to the George Sand to whom she addressed them—Mlle. Merlette has found a most congenial subject for the exercise of her critical talents, and in telling the story of the life she has done full justice to the woman who wrote verses from her infancy, and throughout her life maintained a cult of poetry "as an object to read, think, and live for," and to the poet who was always striving "to do better next time."

A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles.—Pargeter—Pennached. (Vol. VII.) By Dr. J. A. H. Murray. (Oxford, Clarendon Press.)

UNSCIENTIFIC readers of current English prose will get a clearer idea of the scope of this double section if "pariah" and "penmanship" be taken as the first and last items, though a post will be glad to note authority for substituting "pargeting" for "plaster-work." Many of the articles are exceptionally interesting and instructive, notwithstanding the paucity of Old English words, of which there are only nine certain examples, and of these only three—"parrock," "path," and "paxwax"—are Anglo-Saxon, as the Derbyshire "Peak," "Péaclond," may be British.

The pièce de résistance of the fare is the verb "pass," a differentiated doublet of the verb "pace," which occupies sixteen columns, and comprises "140 sense-groups." The study of this article affords an excellent introduction to the important subject of sense-development. With it must be consulted the articles on "passing" (participial adjective), in which under B adv. = "surpassingly," should be a reference to "pass," vb. vii. 19 (obsolete) = "to surpass"; "passed-master," an academic phrase confused by novelists with the masonic and civic term "past-master"; and "passable." Dr. Murray does not disdain the technical "pass" of poker, euchre, and football. The judicial "pass sentence" goes back through "pass criticism, an affront, a jest, compliments, censure, speeches," to "pass a sigh"; cf. ποῖόν σε ἔπος φύγεν ἕρκος ὀδόντων. Probably many persons would explain "I passed the night" as "I passed through the night" with some modern dictionaries, but Dr. Murray prefers "to cause or allow to pass or go by," comparing "pass away the time," "I will passe forth this day by little and little [paulatim hunc producam diem]" with sipping and drinking" (Baret, 'Alv.,' p. 158). Under § 32, the figurative sense "to undergo, experience, endure, suffer," we are told "now usually pass through." We think that, wrongly or rightly, modern speakers mean "I underwent night-long misery" by "I passed a miserable night," and that any qualification of time which implies suffering colours "pass" so that it now means "undergo." Another interesting pair of differentiated doublets is "patron," "pattern." In Ireland "pattern" means a dance on any holiday, through the development of "pattern" (patron saint) into the "pattern's" festival, and a dance on that occasion. The idle corruption of "patience" (herbalists' name for a kind of dock) into "passious" has been locally utilized to designate bistort (Polygonum bistorta). Again, "partner" is an alteration, by popular etymology more happy than usual, of "parcener," which survives in law, and is an Anglo-French form of the judicious French abbreviations of Late Latin partitionarius = "a partitioner."

De Quincey, unconsciously following Boyle in writing "parvanimity," gives a note: "I coin this word parvanimity as an adequate antithesis to magnanimity." Under "party" we find the French partie and parti more or less confused. Other interesting articles are those on "parliament," "part," "particle," "particular," "pass" (sb.<sup>2</sup>)—to which "pass" in the phrases "come to pass," "bring to pass," is rightly referred, having been placed hitherto under the verb—"pastime," "peculiar," "pedigree," "peel" (vb.<sup>1</sup>=pillage, strip), and "peer" (sb.).

The date c. 700, assigned to the Epinal Glossary under "parrock," is, in the opinion of the best authorities, a century too early. The form "parodos" for "parode" ("or entrance chant," Jebb, Soph. 'Electra,' 1870) should have been given, as scholars now seem to prefer the Greek form; thus Sir R. C. Jebb writes: "The Chorus chant the parodos," Soph. 'Electra,' p. xxv, 1894. Why the "par-" of "parhomologous" (Gadow) is to be pronounced with a long "a," as in English "far," and not like the "par-" of "parodistic," is not clear. The reformed pronunciation of "pari passu" seems to be intended to follow the usual practice, but the first vowel is wrongly marked as long. The latest quotation for "parœmiac" is dated 1803, and the explanation seems to limit its position to the end of an anapestic system; but Jebb (Soph. 'Electra,' p. 20, 1894) writes:—

"Two successive parœmiacs.....Synesius, the Bishop of Ptolemais, composed his fifth hymn wholly in these spondaic parœmiacs, a weighty and solemn measure."

References are wanted from "pauny" and "pawnee" to "brandy-pawnee," and from "parisia" to "parrhesia." Dr. Murray's etymology is generally so cautious that it is surprising he should venture to call "pastor" agent noun from pascere, or give under "pasture" (sb.) "past-, ppl. of pāsc-ere." Of course the "past-" forms serve as agent noun, participle, &c., to "pa-scere," but are probably from a root "pas," or "pās." The latest quotations for "pecuniary" (consisting of money) are dated 1766 and 1875, though common words are not freely illustrated from writings of the second half of the nineteenth century, and "pecuniary emolument" occurs in Macaulay's 'Essay on Bacon' (1837); while the illustrations of "pecuniarily" jump from 1734 to 1879, and those of "payment," 2, a sum of money paid, from 1722 to 1878. The only instance of "pas seul" is Miss Bridgman's (1870) pas de seul. For the ordinary sense of "patronize" there are eight quotations, the objects being persons in every case except the earliest (1587); yet we read in the essay already quoted that "philosophy has been munificently patronized by the powerful." The latest instance of "peculiar to" is dated 1766, though we are told it "now always denotes 'belonging exclusively to'; formerly it might denote 'belonging specially to.'" Surely "a small cloud 'passed over' the moon," "the troops 'passed over' the river," or some such phrases are current; yet the latest instance quoted is dated 1600, "passe ouer deepe rivers"; while, under figurative instances, we read: "Mod. A change passed over his countenance." In the prologue to Shelley's 'Peter Bell the Third' we find: "he who has O'er the grave been forced to pass To the other side," which is enough to show that there is a strange gap in Dr. Murray's quotations.

The excellent article on "parliament" deserves more than a passing mention, as it presents a compendious history with the latest results of expert study. Sense 1 is "talk," which still seriously embarrasses the institution; sense 7 is a kind of gingerbread named after the legislative chambers, popular throughout the nineteenth century; the reason for this use is not explained. Sense 2 is "a formal conference or council," an assembly of a great council, especially a great council summoned by the early French kings or the early Plantagenet kings of England, which passed without a break into sense 3, the great council of the nation, "viewed at first as a temporary assemblage of persons summoned by the sovereign":—

"This is, in its origin, merely a development of sense 2, corresponding to the gradual evolution of the modern parliament from the Great Council. Stubbs, 'Const. Hist.,' following the chroniclers, uses 'parliament' from 1242 onwards; but the 'parliaments' previous to 1275 belong rather to our sense 2, with progressive approaches to this sense. In this sense the word may be preceded by a or the, and have a plural; so we speak of a new parliament, or of the first, second, or third parliament of Edward I., or of Queen Victoria, and historians individualize many parliaments by distinctive appellations."

Of the "Unlearned Parliament," "convened by Henry IV. at Coventry, from which all lawyers were excluded," we read: "1782 PENNANT.....Stiled Parliamentum indoctorum; not that it consisted of more blockheads than parlements ordinarily do."

The phrases "peace at any price" and "peace with honour" were, it appears, used in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, but Palmerston brought the former into vogue by applying it to John Bright, and Beaconsfield the latter in 1878 after the Berlin Conference, unconscious, perhaps, that he was quoting Shakspeare. It is interesting to find that the slang "to peach" is of highly respectable lineage, being a docked form of "apeche," "appeach," and so related to "impeach." Southey seems to have coined the useful "peacemonger" to distinguish unpractical praters about peace from true peacemakers.

Mr. Craigie issued sixty-four pages of the letter R, vol. viii., on April 1st, ending with part of the verb "reign." His last previous instalment appeared July 1st, 1904. A portion of vol. vi., continuing the letter M, by Dr. Bradley, is announced for July 1st.

NEW NOVELS.

The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne. By William J. Locke. (Lane.)

MR. LOCKE's most prominent quality is a delicate emotionalism, which indeed comes at times near being feminine. He is a sensitive register of shades of feeling, and engages one's attention more by force of these subtle impressions than by any merit of plot or character. In his latest novel we find less plot than is usual with him, and hardly as much character. But what there is of the latter is true, except the character of the reformed rake, whom Mr. Locke seems to have dragged in at the close for the specific purpose of solving a difficulty in his plot. Sir Marcus Ordeyne, who tells his own story, is sufficiently realized, though narratives in the first person singular inevitably tend to stultification, to a dead level of character. The success of the book is the figure of the girl Carlotta, who, daughter of English parents, has nevertheless been brought up in an Eastern harem, and, escaping, finds herself alone and friendless in London. Of course, she is taken up by Sir Marcus, and the interest of the tale is in observing the conflict of Occidental life and manners with her Eastern prepossessions. It is done with not a little sense of humour and brightness, and with a pleasant cynicism. Unhappily, towards the end Mr. Locke's cynicism falls from him like an untied garment, and he stands forth as a naked sentimentalist. This is a pity, as the book up to that point is extremely engaging. However, it is clever throughout, despite the sentimentalism.

A Daughter of Kings. By Katharine Tynan. (Nash.)

MRS. HINKSON's splendid optimism, particularly as illustrated by the example now before us, might almost satisfy that tender-hearted little boy who would not listen to a story if any of the characters died, or were ill, or unhappy, or cruel. Roughly, every one is good and beautiful, and almost every one is either wealthy or high born, or both. Things make the merest pretence at going wrong that they may come the more conspicuously right, and everything is for the best in that best of all possible worlds to which we are here introduced. Even a typhus epidemic only serves as an opportunity to the heroine of rivalling Florence Nightingale in devotion, and to the hero of proving himself a second Monte Cristo in magnificent beneficence. It all makes agreeable reading, and the Irish portions of the book especially abound in traits of shrewd observation and humour which show how different a picture the author, if only she chose, might have given us.

Hearts of Wales. By Allen Raine. (Hutchinson & Co.)

THE author, already favourably known in the field of Welsh fiction, has made a departure from her previous works in selecting the dawn of the fifteenth century, the days of Owen Glendower, as the subject of illustration. She has succeeded in imparting a flavour of chivalry to the family feuds and marauders' raids of that unsettled time; but history is not touched at all, and the use of Welsh conversational tags, like nos da, fforwel, and ach y fi, does not imply much Celticism of thought. Yet Gwyther is very Cymric in his villainy, while Deraint and the fair Eleri of Garth are a gallant pair of lovers. The introduction of the Sin-Eater reminds us of Highland superstition, but the weirdness of the conception is much discounted by presenting Iestyn Mai as an impostor. On the whole, this is a very readable romance, though we do not think the most has been made of time and place.

A Vagrant Englishwoman. By Catherine I. Dodd. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THIS is a novel, if it can be called so, as vagrant as the Englishwoman of whom it treats. It purposely rambles on without any definite plan, it reaches no satisfactory resting-place at the journey's end, and thus it depends for its charm not on any interest of incident, but solely on its qualities of observation, humour, and individuality. Fortunately it can afford to do so. A little German university town of the old-fashioned type supplies plenty of material for entertaining sketches of persons and things, and the author—who has a light touch, a gift of quick perception, and an agreeable command of sound English—uses it to good advantage. Various characters—English, German, and American—are cleverly and amusingly presented, all with a certain easy inconsequence that is decidedly attractive, and the whole atmosphere of the place is well suggested. The Englishwoman also makes a jaunt down the Danube, and takes several literary snapshots of Hungary, Servia, and Roumania; her "Reisebilder" are fresh and vivid, for she has a keen eye for scenery, especially for colour, and she can write picturesquely without being affected. With all its brightness there is an undertone of ruefulness throughout the book: the Englishwoman is keenly conscious that her sisters have much to put up with, that men are unsatisfactory creatures on the whole, and that the world is an uneasy place in these days. The sentiment is not obtruded, and perhaps makes itself felt all the more forcibly in consequence.

Seth of the Cross. By Alphonse Courlander. (Nash.)

THE author of this book has set before him a high ideal, to bring to light the pathos and heroism that lie hidden in obscure lives; but the pathos must be free from sentimentality, the heroism must be fitly inspired. In the martyrdom of Seth Craddock neither condition is quite fulfilled. The son of a village road-mender, he is, we are continually assured, a very fine fellow, superior, in his literary tastes and enlightened views of life, to the country folk around him. But in reality he is the weak victim of a misguided sense of duty, and his mental qualities have to be taken solely on trust. The road-mender on his death-bed bequeaths to Seth the maintenance of brothers and sister. As, with one exception, these are perfectly able to support themselves, we feel sure that no hard-headed English rustic would exact such a pledge; nor ought his son to have undertaken a charge which compels him to break a promise to his betrothed wife. Seth, however, drifts dismally on, accepting every rebuff of fortune, and Isabel, whom he loves, also drifts into ruin. In the tragedy of the close we are called upon to admire the self-sacrifice of the hero, and are told pretty plainly that, if we do not, we are disloyal to the root-idea of Christianity. But voluntary suffering so disastrous in its consequences to other people, to say nothing of its effect on the sufferer, cannot be in harmony with any sane conception of life. Seth Craddock would surely have been a better man if he had kept his word, married Isabel, and exercised a little cheerful common sense all round. The description of the Wiltshire village community about the old stone cross is well done, and the book is thoughtfully written.

The White Terror and the Red. By A. Cahan. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THIS is a "novel of revolutionary Russia," in which the White Terror of the throne is brought face to face with the Red Terror of Nihilism. The author appears to have a grasp of his subject, and is evidently an enthusiast in the cause of the people. But the style has a curious impenetrability about it, which reminds one of a bad translation. Such sentences occur as "Rising in the background was the hostess Lydia Grigorievna Chertogova (Chertogoff) and her gorgeous crutches," while "upward tending frank features" and "luxurious side whiskers" distinguish the male characters. The story opens dramatically enough with the conversion of the hero, Prince Pavel Boulatoff, to the cause of Russian reform; and since this is partly due to the influence of a fair Jewess, we have all the elements of a successful romance. But as the action proceeds it becomes too involved. Conspirators, persecuted Jews, revolutionists of every type, throng the stage, and we find it difficult to obtain any clear insight into their proceedings, especially as a bewildering, impalpable mist of style clouds our vision. A lucid interval is afforded by the assassination of Alexander II., vividly described; then the medley begins again; asterisks stud the pages in rows, and the hero's fate is finally left in suspense. It is a book of contrasts, from the title to the end.

The Manitoban. By H. H. Bashford. (Lane.)

MR. BASHFORD, it is to be assumed, is a Canadian with an ardent faith in the virgin soil of his country, and the part which it is one day to play as the prop and support of what he describes as "our more decadent East." But whether his story be read as a parable or not, there is no denying the charm with which he tells it. It is the history of a son of the prairie, heir, as afterwards appears, to estates and a destiny in England, but disenchanted by a year's visit to the home of his race, and drawn back irresistibly to the ampler air in which he was born and bred. His character and that of the prairie girl whom he loves are well and effectively drawn; a more subtle treatment would be out of harmony with the atmosphere of the book. The other types also—the young English ne'er-do-well, the Canadian wheat farmer, the gentleman settler—are vigorously sketched.

There is a breath of fresh, keen air throughout, and if we cannot wholly accept the author's view of the bone-and-muscle empire of the future, we may at least recognize the share which the virility of his countrymen will doubtless take in moulding its destinies.

Jörn Uhl. By Gustav Frenssen. Translated by F. S. Delmer. (Constable & Co.)

MORE often than not the great public of Germany, like that of England, bestows its favour with a very small amount of discrimination, and it is therefore pleasant to find a case in which its enthusiasm for a work of art is justified. 'Jörn Uhl,' which made its appearance about three years ago, and immediately gained an extraordinary success, really is a fine novel and deserves to be taken seriously. It has its limitations, no doubt, and in the matter of construction it may leave something to be desired; but it is a thoroughly honest and sincere piece of work, and it gives a picture of peasant life in Schleswig-Holstein that is altogether admirable. The book is steeped in the atmosphere of meadow, moor, and marsh land; the country and its inhabitants are brought before us in all their truth, and yet the whole is mingled with a strain of poetry strangely fascinating and characteristic, for the author is no cold realist, and his imagination is at least as strong as his powers of observation. His insight into human character, too, is marvellously keen; he understands the men and women about whom he writes, penetrates into their intimate feelings, and gains our sympathy for their sufferings. The actual story of Jörn Uhl, the spendthrift farmer's son, who labours doggedly to save the family acres, and only attains to genuine happiness and peace of mind when they are lost, is simple enough, but has real depth, for Frenssen, who is a North German and a theologian to boot, naturally has a philosophy of life—it is, we may note, a very liberal and healthy one—and gives expression to it here. The present translation is good, but fails, we think, to reach the highest excellence. Mr. Delmer has evidently taken pains with his work, and his knowledge of German is fully adequate, yet the result is not always what it should be. A certain deficiency of taste, which shows itself in an excessive use of vulgar colloquialisms and slight but jarring interpolations, is chiefly to be regretted, as it lowers the tone of the original. But the book is an exceptionally difficult one to render satisfactorily, and, indeed, cannot be transplanted without losing much of its charm. The Scotch phraseology used to suggest the dialectic tinge of the original does not strike us as very happily conceived or executed.

ITALIAN BOOKS.

ITALIANS have always been great at anthologies, and Signora Eugenia Levi, in her Lirica Italiana Antica (Florence, Olschki), well maintains the tradition. To a pretty volume, illustrated with photographs of pictures and MSS., and one or two reproductions of early frontispieces, additional interest is given by the inclusion in some cases of the original music to which the poems were set, once or twice in the form of photographic reproduction from the MSS. As a rule, however, the scores are in modern handwriting, for the most part unfortunately diminished in reproduction to the point of illegibility. Before any real use could be made of them, they would need to be copied on a normal scale. The selection is wholly from poets of the thirteenth and two following centuries, and, so far as we have sampled it, could hardly have been better made. All our best friends are there, and one or two new ones; notably a really humorous little piece, in the form of dialogue between a somewhat sheepish wooer and a very unresponsive lady, who threatens, if he comes a step nearer, that "I will take a knife and run it through my heart, and say it was you; and then you will be hung." This is ascribed to an unknown Calabrian of the fourteenth century. The arrangement of the book is a little odd, being, as the judge recommended to the confused counsel, alphabetical. We begin with "Al cor gentil ripara sempre amore," and run out with "Zefiro torna, e il bel tempo rimena." This has at least the advantage that it becomes easy to see what is there and what is not; but arrangement by authors might have been more helpful to the student, and by subjects perhaps still more so. Our only quarrel with Signora Levi is that she has not taken quite enough pains about her texts. Thus, for the exquisite ode by Giacomino Pugliese "Morte, perche," she has been satisfied to follow the extremely uncritical text adopted by Valeriani in the 'Poeti del Primo Secolo,' when she might have used the verbatim reprint of the MS. given by SS. Satta and Egidi in their 'Libro di Romanze Volgari' or Prof. Monaci's 'Crestomazia.'

The same publisher sends us Da Dante a Leopardi, a collection, in one portly volume, of a number of what used to be called adversaria, little discussions on various literary and linguistic points, contributed, after the quaint Italian fashion, by as many scholars and men of letters, to celebrate the wedding of Prof. Michele Scherillo to Signorina Teresa Negri. A good proportion of them, as might be expected, deal with Dante, and afford further evidence of the Italian genius for laborious demonstration of the obvious. Thus Signor Manfredi Porena devotes three large pages to discussing the meaning of six as plain and straightforward lines as are to be found in the whole 'Commedia'—those in which Dante, meeting with his friend Forese, scarred out of all knowledge by the discipline of famine, recognizes him by his voice, and, having so recognized him, becomes able to discern the familiar lineaments in the marred visage. The discussion comes out all right in the end; but was it necessary to go such a long way (and, we venture to think, a wrong way, for we cannot accept the rendering of aspetto) round, to arrive there? Something might have been said about the curious Gallicism conquiso, or concerning Benvenuto's way of turning the difficulty by reading for in sè avea "suo m' avea." Signor Cesario has a note on an early map of Italy, stated to be mentioned by Flavius Blondus in his 'Italia Illustrata' as the work of Petrarch and his friend King Robert of Naples. We are unable to find the passage referred to in the only copy of Blondus's work that we have at hand—but that is a detail. The point discussed is whether the ascription of the map, which, apparently, is not now extant, to Petrarch is correct; and this is decided in the à priori fashion with which we are familiar in modern Italian literary controversies. If Petrarch had made the map, he would have mentioned it somewhere; he does not mention it—at least, in any of his extant writings; argal, he did not make it. The subsidiary argument that it would have more geographical knowledge than he possessed does not amount to much, unless we can say how much of such knowledge the map showed. After all, there were plenty of maps in existence from which he might have taken hints, even though there may not yet have been one confined to the geography of Italy. But to set aside the distinct statement of a writer who may have talked to men who had known Petrarch, on account of one's own views as to what "could" have happened, is not what in other regions is considered scholarly. However, one need not criticize the chips from the workshop too severely. Other Dantean contributions are Signor D'Ovidio's ten pages on the più fermo of 'Inf.' i.; and a discussion of similar length by Signor Parodi on the reasons which led Dante to relegate his revered and beloved friend Brunetto to an unsavoury district of the lower world. To both of which no reader endowed with the most elementary judgment in literary matters can say anything but "Oh, dear!" Signor Mazzoni has something to say about a forgotten quattrocento Petrarchist called Romanello. Signor Passerini sends a page from a sixteenth-century MS. of recipes for cosmetics. Signor Lisio comments on a rare booklet of 1546, the main interest of which consists in its containing two poems ascribed to Ariosto, otherwise it would appear unknown. Neither is very valuable, and one is more than un peu libre; but there seems no reason to doubt the word of the compiler of the tiny volume as to their genuineness. Such are a few samples of the seventy opuscula which Prof. Scherillo's friends have drawn forth—we presume from their note-books—to grace his nuptials. English readers will be glad to note that their country does not go unrepresented, for among the contributors appear the names of Mr. Warren Vernon and Dr. Paget Toynbee.

SHORT STORIES.

By Beach and Bogland. By Jane Barlow. (Fisher Unwin.)—Miss Barlow is the painter par excellence of the social and domestic aspects of Irish peasant life in all their pathos and their sweetness, and in these charming stories of the western coast she remains true to her vocation. She leaves on one side those complicated issues, political and theological, which can scarcely fail to have some bearing upon the lives of such men and women as those here presented. Their family affections, their dealings with their neighbours, their attitude towards the unseen, are the themes with which she is concerned. The humour is true and sympathetic as ever; the occasional tragedy sometimes sweet and appealing, as in the tale of a questionable ghost claimed by two bereaved women as the peculiar property of each; sometimes grimly sombre, as in 'The Wrong Turning,' a fierce story of jealousy, and 'For Company,' an essay in the supernatural which recalls Lytton's 'Haunters and Haunted.' No other author, perhaps, has been so successful as Miss Barlow in bringing home to her readers the unsuspected interest and variety with which the national temperament can invest even lives seemingly most monotonous, and this her latest work has the additional charm of breathing an atmosphere in which cheerfulness decidedly predominates.

The Arena. By Booth Tarkington. (Murray.)—Here is a collection of half a dozen stories, five of which deal with various aspects of political life in America. The material is ugly in every case except one; but the telling in each case is good. The last and slightest of the six is not political, but consists of the verdict pronounced by a countryman after seeing Sarah Bernhardt in 'L'Aiglon,' and his comparison of the story with a certain slice of real life as seen and understood by himself. This is the best thing in the book, and, though tragic enough, has none of the sordid ugliness which dominates this author's representation of political life. Heartless fraud and the basest kind of bribery and corruption are what the other five stories hinge upon, and the writer's object seems to have been, not to expose the corruptness of his country's politicians, or to show how very hard it is for the best meaning of Congressmen to be entirely honest, but rather to tell good tales of their lives, into which dishonesty and baseness must come incidentally, because as much a part of the life described as the language used by his characters or the air they breathe. It is depressing; but the thing is well done. Mr. Tarkington writes with force and feeling, and has respect for the literary virtue of restraint. His book is worth reading.

A Country Diary. By Mrs. Alfred Cock. (Allen.)—Mrs. Cock's three stories all touch a little on the supernatural, but not importantly. They relate to death—warnings, which can be, and have been, made impressive in fiction. Unfortunately, Mrs. Cock is but a tyro, and has not the gift of narrative or drama, so that these visitations leave us unaffected. The story from which the collection draws its title is the longest, and is cast in the form of a diary of a young lady whom the doctor has ordered into the country. She establishes herself in a pretty, sunny village bordering on the wild hills, and she recounts her innocent experiences with man and beast and flower. Love, however, intervenes, and upon love something else which invests the simple little tale with sympathy and pathos. Mrs. Cock's sympathy, indeed, is greater than her artistic powers, and she has but little sense of form or construction.

OUR LIBRARY TABLE.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. publish in two volumes The Autobiography of Andrew D. White, a well-known American. Every one has a deep respect for the character and the career of Mr. Andrew White; but in spite of his considerable abilities, which caused him to be appointed by successive Presidents to the highest posts in the gift of the American Government, he does not know how to write a book. The volumes are full of interest for the general reader, but so ill arranged that those may be repelled who by better construction would have been attracted. Autobiography stands at an advantage over other literary work in having a natural order, that of date and age; but Mr. White has altogether departed from the diary form, and has tried to group the incidents of his life under subjects. The best part of the work is the first portion of the second volume, relating his second long stay in St. Petersburg, after an interval of far more than a generation. If Mr. White should live to be a centenarian and should represent his country for a third time in the Russian Empire, he may become an accomplished writer, so greatly does the account of his second mission improve on that of his first. It is a striking fact that he records his attendance at an imperial funeral in the fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul in these words:—

"It was very impressive, almost as much so as the funeral of the Emperor Nicholas, which I had attended at the same place nearly forty years before."

Mr. White had the unusual honour and pleasure of remaining in St. Petersburg after the change of government in his country in 1893, when he had tendered his resignation to President Cleveland, who, however, personally pressed him to remain. Mr. White stayed on till November, 1891, and then was the author of his own retirement. One of the best things in the book, which is often in similar cases disappointing, is the account of the present Emperor of all the Russias:—

"His main characteristic was an absolute indifference to most persons and things about him..... He seemed to stand about listlessly, speaking in a good-natured way to this or that person when it was easier than not to do so; but, on the whole, indifferent to all which went on about him. Pity to say it, the European sovereign to whom Nicholas II. can be most fully compared is Charles IX. of France, under the influence of his family and men and women courtiers and priests, authorizing the massacre of St. Bartholomew. The punishment to be meted out to him and his house is sure."

This is hardly the diplomatic style, but it should be added that Mr. White was not accredited to the present Emperor. His account of the way in which he performed his duties makes him a model to the heads of missions: "It was a duty as well as a pleasure for me to keep up my acquaintance with persons worth knowing." It is to be regretted that etiquette sometimes prevents our representatives from following the same plan. When Castelar came into power in Spain he was not personally known to Sir Henry Layard. A more amusing statement concerns Mr. White's discovery among "the Nubians," who are the royal "pages" (in the Windsor sense), at St. Petersburg, of an American "darker," who patronized the representative of his country in language typical of his people in the Southern States. We are sorry to see that Mr. White charges our country with being guilty, in the case of the Seal Fishery in 1892, as afterwards in the Venezuela case, "of the sharpest of sharp practices." We should not feel hurt if the charge came from any one less correct in his international relations than Mr. White. There is little of interest in his account of England, of which he saw a good deal while he was first Minister and then Ambassador at Berlin, and on several other occasions; but a pleasant attempt to revive the language and style of Mr. Harker, sen., the City toastmaster, will remind many of an old friend, whose voice has never been equalled either by his son or other occupants of his or similar offices.

All through his career Mr. White suffered from the ambitions of his countrymen and countrywomen. He met with many "persons possessed of an insatiate and at times almost insane desire to be able, on their return, to say that they have talked with a crowned head."

The minister protected the kings to whom he was accredited, but, in one case, found that "some very good fellow-citizens of ours have seemed almost inclined to make this feeling of his Majesty a casus belli." Many wrote to Mr. White from home with regard to schools, music-masters, boarding-houses, imaginary fortunes, and their own genealogies, while he was occasionally asked to procure the signatures of the old Emperor William, the Empress, and Prince Bismarck to small squares of cotton cloth intended for quilts for American bazaars, once with the following postscript:—

"Tell them to be sure to write their names in the middle of the pieces, for fear that their autographs may get sewed in."

The stories of Lord Odo Russell are all old, except perhaps one, which states that Cavour was in his opinion a greater man than Bismarck. No wonder that Lord Odo, as a friend of Bismarck, thought and said so, inasmuch as Bismarck himself used the same language of Cavour, and, we may add, of President Kruger. A pleasant anecdote of Lord Methuen, then Col. Methuen, military attaché at Berlin, describes how this "tall, awkward man, kindly, genial, who always reminded me of Thackeray's 'Major Sugarplums,'" jumped into an icy stream to save a German working-man from suicide.

MR. G. H. PERRIS, in his Russia in Revolution (Chapman & Hall), is lively and interesting, but somewhat open to the charge that he fails to name a good many of his sources and some of his equally interesting rivals. The long lists of revolutionary martyrs, with their careers and portraits, which fill a portion of his volume, are, of course, very similar to those contained in well-known works reviewed by us within the last few years. The illustrations also are neither good nor new. Mr. Perris at his best shows real knowledge of the existing state of things in Russia, and expresses his opinions in forcible style, as, for example, when he calls the present Emperor "the titled chairman of an oligarchic board." Mr. Perris takes pains and knows his subject. One of the few trifling blunders which we have found is odd. On the first occasion when we met with the word "gendarmérie" we thought it a mere slip, but when we found five other examples (between pp. 46 and 86) of the same extraordinary spelling we ceased to be able to give this explanation. How those who "passed" the spelling pronounce the word we fail to understand.

The King in Exile. By Eva Scott. (Constable.)—In this somewhat formidable volume Miss Scott has dealt with the first part of her latest task—the story of the life of Charles II. from the day on which he left Jersey in 1646 to his restoration. The narrative is carried to the end of July, 1654, when he was, in Hyde's words, "as low as to human understanding he can be." Remembering that in Hoskins's 'Charles II. in the Channel Islands' we have a minute and exhaustive account of his residence there, we feel that when Miss Scott's second volume sees the light there will be little original material regarding the attractive scapegrace remaining to reward the labours of future investigators. Miss Scott's volume is a monument of careful industry. Her narrative is compiled entirely from original sources—the same sources, in the main, as those which enabled Dr. Airy to draw the outline sketch of the exile which occupies the first two chapters of his 'Charles II.' That was, however, admittedly written less from interest in the story of those years itself than because that story contains the explanation of Charles's character and outlook upon life when he became king. Miss Scott's labours have been of a very different kind. So exhaustive has been her work that no future investigator will need to spend his time in digging where she has digged. From a fairly intimate acquaintance with the authorities which she quotes, and to which, we are glad to see, she gives ample reference in the foot-notes, we can affirm without hesitation that the nuggets which might be extracted by further toil are too few and far between to justify the expenditure. The profit to be derived from further examination, for example, of the Clarendon MSS., or the Nicholas and Hatton Papers, or the Walker, Jaffray, and Livingstone journals, or Baillie's letters, or the memoirs of the Grande Mademoiselle and the Princess Sophia, must for the future consist in the delight of touching these most human records at first hand, without reference to a painstaking analysis of their contents, such as that so amply provided by Miss Scott. We can perhaps scarcely expect that the story of Charles's exile will attract a large number of readers. It is, in itself, a sorry tale, and—except to those who study it for the definite purpose of understanding Charles later—a depressing one, with much that is sordid and but little that is exhilarating. Being among such students, however, we give Miss Scott our warmest thanks. Her fearlessness, and her accuracy of detail, are in themselves of infinite value; her writing, even though it cannot claim to be picturesque, is at once sober and interesting, and her narrative is founded, not upon conjecture, but upon the passages which she quotes; her characterization appears to us thoroughly just; and, although matters of controversy are very few, she deals with them, when they do occur, in a manner entirely satisfactory. It is not a book which lends itself to quotation, since it is confessedly, in spite of its length, little more than a highly intelligent compilation; but the paragraph in which she summarizes the "Rake's Progress" up to 1654 is excellent:—

"His adherents, both at home and abroad, were oppressed with poverty and suffered every kind of want. The faithful band that clung to him in exile was so torn by faction and dissension that there were, as the spies exultantly asserted, 'Not three in all the council together, not even in common charity.' The King himself was jealous of his brother and estranged from his mother, and he had parted in anger from the cousin who was his best friend. Worse than all, he had sacrificed his own honour, conscience, and self-respect, and sacrificed them in vain..... The promising boy had become a reckless, dissolute man, who could with difficulty be roused from his habitual indifference to perform the duties required of him. Already the confidence of many had gone from him, and their eyes turned longingly to the younger brother, full of life, and energy, and hopefulness, whose word no one ever doubted, and who showed no signs of the elder's vices. Even the hearts of those loyal men, whose loyalty Charles himself could never kill, were sick within them, while they strove to lead their master in the right path, or to shield him when he swerved from it."

In addition to ample references there is a very satisfactory index. A few portraits—too few, we think—are inserted, of varying merit; that of Charles himself is an unnecessary calumny.

Church and State in England. By W. H. Abraham. (Longmans & Co.)—The latest volume of the "Oxford Library of Practical Theology" is more practical than theological; nor is it first-rate at that. It seems to us amazing that it should be worth any one's while to concoct this réchauffé of other men's opinions, among whom Dean Hook is quoted as an almost infallible authority. There is no evidence of original reading, and the writer, whose style is of the kind best characterized as "parochial," does not seem even aware of such books as Prof. Maitland's 'Canon Law in England,' while there is no use made of the Reformation volume of the 'Cambridge Modern History.' The point of view of the writer is that of the high-and-dry Anglican who does not really believe that the English Church was as much a part of the Papal organization in the Middle Ages as was the Gallican or Spanish. It is interesting to note that for him, as for others, the freedom of the Scotch Kirk seems to be the ideal. On the whole, we cannot commend this book; it ministers to prejudice rather than to tolerance, and its author cannot be said to be inspired by the spirit of true historical investigation.

THE main reflection that will occur to the reader of Do We Believe? (Hodder & Stoughton) is that the twentieth century is going to be the paradise of the half educated. The amazing thing is not that people should be so ignorant of the philosophy of religious belief, but that, being so ignorant, they should think their crude imaginings worthy of record. A correspondence at this moment proceeding elsewhere is expressive of the amazing intolerance of the orthodox; this correspondence is equally good evidence of the ignorance of many on the opposite side. There are crude enough documents on either side in this volume, and some of the utterances of the higher clergy speak but poorly for their intellectual equipment. But on the whole this is not so; the remarks of the archbishops and some of the bishops—Dr. Gore and Bishop Mylne—are evidence not merely of skillful advocacy, but also of minds in the highest sense cultivated. The better scientific agnostics did not intervene in this popular correspondence, so that it is not fair to compare the utterances of a trained thinker like the Dean of Westminster with most of those who wrote on the side of unbelief or doubt. The main conclusion, however, that will be drawn is that among laymen, whether in science or theology, there is a very insufficient knowledge of the foundations of their position, whether it be that of unbelief or faith. The practical dangers of an ill-educated and unreflecting clergy and a selfishly luxurious upper class are, however, well illustrated in this correspondence. It is more valuable in what it indicates than in anything it contains.

MR. MURRAY'S half-crown issue of Maine's Ancient Law is a triumph. Whatever may be, or has been, the fate of some of Maine's theories, his book remains one of the best examples in the world of the comparative method, and is more than any other likely to make the author's position secure. In addition to the charm of his lucid and flowing style, 'Ancient Law' is imbued with the spirit of historical inquiry. It is one of the few books of which it is more than complimentary nonsense to say that it is an education in itself not to read, but to study it.

F. W. NEWMAN'S once-famous work The Soul has been republished by Mr. Philip Green with an introduction and memoir by Mr. Charles Upton. Those who are interested in the fortunes of that wanderer among religions, who had so different a lot from his brother John, will find the perusal of this work of interest, although its intrinsic value is not great. Not merely is it inferior to the great 'Apologia,' but if it be compared with another book on the same side, Froude's 'Nemesis of Faith,' the opinion of Hort holds good that the latter book was as eminently readable as the former was the reverse. However, it cannot be ignored by the historian of thought, and it is well that it should be accessible.

Dr. Grenfell's Parish. By Norman Duncan. (Hodder & Stoughton.)—Its author explains at the outset that "this book pretends to no literary excellence; it has a far better reason for existence—a larger justification. Its purpose is to spread the knowledge of the work of Dr. Wilfrid T. Grenfell, of the Royal National Mission to Deep-Sea Fishermen, at work on the coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador."

Thus it will be seen that it is not fiction, and it has no claim upon literary criticism. Yet, as a fact, it is a better and a more interesting piece of work than either of its predecessors from the same pen. It is written frankly, naturally, and is devoid of various irritating mannerisms which marred the first book that reached us from Mr. Duncan. It is a straightforward account of the heroic work done by a missionary doctor upon a bleak, inhospitable coast, on which a very primitive people are engaged in unremitting warfare with those elements which surround them and yield their scanty living. It seems that before Dr. Grenfell's time the fisherfolk were unfortunate in their doctors, whom, in any case, they saw but seldom.

"A doctor of the Newfoundland outposts was once called to a little white cottage where three children lay sick of diphtheria. He was the family physician; that is to say, the fisherman paid him so much by the year for medical attendance. But the injection of toxin is a 'surgical operation,' and therefore not provided for by the annual fee. 'This,' said the doctor, 'will cost you two dollars an injection, John!'"

He knew that the fisherman had but four dollars. There were three patients. He had his system, and, deaf to the fisherman's appeals, pocketed his four dollars, saved two of the children, and allowed the third to die. Needless to say, Dr. Grenfell has changed all this. Since Mr. Duncan specifically insists upon the actual truth of his instances, their probability is not open to discussion, as in the case of incidents in a story. The reviewer would only say that, in the course of an experience which has brought him into contact with medical men at sea and in the remotest parts of four continents, he has hitherto been preserved from meeting a doctor of this sort. Dr. Grenfell's work is thus summarized:—

"In the spring of 1892 he set sail from Great Yarmouth harbour for Labrador in a ninety-ton schooner. Since then, in the face of hardship, peril, and prejudice, he has, with a light heart and a strong purpose, healed the sick, preached the Word, clothed the naked, fed the starving, given shelter to them that had no roof, championed the wronged—in all, devotedly fought evil, poverty, oppression, and disease; for he is bitterly intolerant of those things. And—"It's been jolly good fun"! says he."

The book is well worth reading, and has value as a picture of life in a part of the Empire known to few.

THERE would appear to be no end to the literature that coagulates about the self-made man who hails from Chicago. We have had his letters to his son in two series, and we have had his son's letters to him—by another hand. This same hand, who is Charles Eustace Merriman, has been encouraged to adventure again, and offers to us A Self-made Man's Wife (Putnam). This also is a set of letters, and, if we are to judge from them, the father, the son, and the wife are pretty much of a piece. They well become one another. We recognize that this is not, so to say, a legitimate wife, seeing that she has been tacked on to Mr. Lorrimer's creation by Mr. Merriman. But we are sure that she is as good a wife as the original and only self-made man had. We are informed by the publishers that this imposed wife "turns out to have been an amusing, lovable old lady, with a very neat wit and a substantial fund of old-fashioned common sense." This is not claiming too much for Mrs. Graham, whose wit at times almost rivals that of her husband, and who reels off stories quite as recklessly and debonairly as he. Possibly she has caught the trick from him, as she virtually admits; for who but old Gorgon Graham could flick off such cold-storage sentiments as "a man with a tin whistle obviously cannot draw away the crowd that is following a brass band"? We regret to see that Mrs. Graham sheds fresh and lurid light on the pork-packer's early career, which, as we suspected, was not too scrupulous. However, as she is writing to her son, he probably will keep the secret in the family. The mother has a good deal to say to her son regarding matrimony and Woman, for he is just married. She is full of worldly wisdom, and has no nonsensical ideas. So he is in safe hands, and he ought in time to "go one better" than his father.

WE noticed recently an excellent book by Mr. James Roberts on Patents, and may commend The Inventors' Guide to Patent Law and the New Practice (Murray), also from his pen. He is thoroughly skilled in the law of the subject, and all inventors will do well to study his lucid résumé of the present legislation in force concerning patents.

MR. T. P. O'CONNOR'S successful and combative life of Lord Beaconsfield has just been reissued by Mr. Fisher Unwin at half-a-crown. This is the eighth edition, and the prefatory matter added to previous editions up to the sixth reaches thirty-seven pages.

IN "The Red Letter Library" (Blackie) we have Vaughan's Silex Scintillans, with an introduction by Mr. W. A. L. Bettany, and Bacon's Essays, with introduction by Mr. Frederic Harrison, and notes by another hand. Mr. Bettany writes well, and has done real service to his subject. A useful appendix supplies parallels from 'The Temple' of Horbert. Mr. Harrison is brief, and not particularly happy. He has not taken the trouble, apparently, to read the notes by Mr. Blakeney, or he would be able to correct his strange assertion that Horace is not quoted by Bacon. We advise him to read again as far as the end of Essay II. We really think that one person at a time is enough to annotate a classic. The man who can write an introduction is quite capable of writing notes, and the latter business might supply a grasp of the subject which seems occasionally lacking in introducers.—Mr. E. K. Chambers has added a capital preface to King Richard III. in "The Red Letter Shakespeare" (same publisher), which he is editing. Here all is as it should be.

LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

ENGLISH.

Theology.

Chadwick (G. A.), The Intellect and the Heart, and other Sermons, cr. 8vo, 3/6 net.

Harper (F.), The Year of our Lord, cr. 8vo, 6/ net.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

British Isles depicted by Pen and Camera, Vol. 3, 21/ net.

Inglis (J.), Artistic Lighting, cr. 8vo, sewed, 2/6 net.

Ireland, painted by F. S. Walker and described by F. Mathew, 8vo, 20/ net.

West Indies, painted by A. S. Forest and described by J. Henderson, 8vo, 20/ net.

Poetry and the Drama.

Loring (A.), The Rhymer's Lexicon, cr. 8vo, 7/6 net.

Philosophy.

Read (C.), The Metaphysics of Nature, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Political Economy.

Cleveland (F. A.), The Bank and the Treasury, 7/6 net.

History and Biography.

Brindle (E.), With Russian, Japanese, and Chunchuse, extra crown 8vo, 6/ net.

Dix (C. C.), The World's Navies in the Boxer Rebellion, China, 1900, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Johnson (Admiral George), Autobiography and Memoir, 1809-1903, cr. 8vo, 2/6 net.

Lang (A.), John Knox and the Reformation, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Legge (James), Missionary and Scholar, by H. E. Legge, 3/6

M'Lauchlan (Dr. Thomas), by W. K. Leask, 5/ net.

Martineau (James), Theologian and Teacher, by J. E. Carpenter, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Perris (G. H.), Russia in Revolution, 8vo, 10/6 net.

Renan (Ernest), by W. Barry, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Geography and Travel.

Freer (A. Goodrich-), In a Syrian Saddle, 8vo, 7/6 net.

Gaskell (Lady C. M.), Spring in a Shropshire Abbey, 9/ net.

Melven (W.), A Commercial Gazetteer of the World, 7/6 net.

Sports and Pastimes.

Oates (W. C.), Wild Ducks, cr. 8vo, 4/6 net.

Education.

Lodge (Sir Oliver), School Teaching and School Reform, 3/

Philology.

Hartog (W. G.), Lectures Scientifiques, cr. 8vo, 5/

Janau (E.) and Ludwig (A.), The Public School French Grammar: Part 2, Syntax, cr. 8vo, 4/6

Science.

Beavan (A. H.), Animals I have Known, cr. 8vo, 5/

Kelly (H. A.), The Vermiform Appendix and its Diseases, roy. 8vo, 42/ net.

Mathot (R. E.), Gas-Engines and Producer-Gas Plants, 8vo, 12/ net.

Mining Manual, 1905, by W. R. Skinner, 8vo, 21/

General Literature.

Almond (J.), The Merchant and Ship-Master's Ready Calculator, narrow folio, 7/6

Castle (A. and E.), Rose of the World, cr. 8vo, 6/

Conrad (S.), The Second Mrs. Jim, cr. 8vo, 5/

Ferguson (D.), The King's Friend, cr. 8vo, 6/

Fleming (C.), The Fate of Ralph Erard, cr. 8vo, 6/

Hueffer (F. M.), The Soul of London, imp. 16mo, 5/ net.

Kernahan (C.), The Jackal, cr. 8vo, 6/

Maquaire (A.), The Dance of Olives, 12mo, leather, 4/ net.

Martin (H. R.), Tillie, a Mennonite Maid, cr. 8vo, 6/

Masterman (C. F. G.), In Peril of Change, cr. 8vo, 6/

Naval Annual, 1905, edited by T. A. Brassey, 15/ net.

Ovenden (C.), The Foundation of a Happy Life, cr. 8vo, 2/8

Rodonachi (E.), Tolla the Courtesan, translated by F. Lawton, cr. 8vo, 6/

Vesey (A.), A Cheque for Three Thousand, cr. 8vo, 3/6

Webster's Royal Red Book, 1905, May edition, 5/ net.

FOREIGN.

Theology.

Loofs (F.), Nestoriana, 15m.

Resch (G.), Das Aposteldecret nach seiner ausserkanonischen Textgestalt untersucht, 5m. 50.

Law.

Fauchille (P.), Le Conflit de Limites entre le Brésil et la Grande-Bretagne et la Sentence Arbitrale du Roi d'Italie, 4fr.

Heck (P.), Beiträge zur Geschichte der Stände im Mittelalter: II. Der Sachsenspiegel u. die Stände der Freien, 22m.

Fine Art and Archaeology.

Brunschwig (L.), Original des Pensées de Pascal, Facsimilé, Texte et Notes, 200fr.

Catalogues du Salon, 1905: Artistes Français, Société Nationale, each 3fr. 50.

Chantilly: le Cabinet des Livres imprimés antérieurs au milieu du XVI. Siècle, 40fr.
Horowitz (J.), Spuren griechischer Mimen im Orient, 2m. 40.

History and Biography.

Jaurès (J.), Histoire Socialiste: Vol. 6, 1789-1815, 7fr. 50.
Kraus (V. v.), Deutsche Geschichte im Ausgange des Mittelalters: Vol. 1, 1438-86, 8m.
Merlant (J.), Le Roman Personnel de Rousseau à Fromentin, 3fr. 50.
Sottas (J.), Histoire de la Compagnie Royale des Indes Orientales, 1664-1719, 10fr.
Taine (H.), sa Vie et sa Correspondance: Vol. 3, L'Historien, 1870-5, 3fr. 50.

Education.

Gœckler (L.), La Pédagogie de Herbart, Exposé et Discussion, 10fr.

Philology.

Breymann (H.), Calderon-Studien: Part 1, Die Calderon-Literatur, 10m.
Wiese (L.), Blondel de Nesle: Lieder, 12m.

Science.

Martin (R.), Die Inlandstämme der malayischen Halbinsel, 60m.

General Literature.

Boudon (C.), Le Double Destin, 3fr. 50.
Claretie (J.), Brichanteau Célèbre, 3fr. 50.
Daudet (Madame A.), Miroirs et Mirages, 3fr. 50.
Esparbès (G. d'), La Soldate, 3fr. 50.
Freycinet (C. de), La Question d'Égypte, 7fr. 50.
Malot (Madame H.), Cœurs d'Amoureuses, 3fr. 50.
Méthode Pilener: Cryptographie, 20fr.
Miraude (H.), Au Fil de l'Eau, 3fr. 50.
Provins (M.), Le Fond Secret, 3fr. 50.
Retté (A.), Virgile puni par l'Amour, 3fr. 50.
Rouvier (G.), La Nièce de M. Jacob Gaspard, 3fr. 50.
Villetard (P.), La Maison des Sourires, 3fr. 50.

THE COMMITTEE OF THE INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF THE PRESS IN LONDON.

THE Executive—or, to give its familiar French name, the Bureau Central—of the International Associations of the Congress of the Press has been on a week's visit to London, and for three days has held morning sittings at the Guildhall, by courtesy of the City Lands' Committee, and afternoon meetings at Stationers' Hall, by invitation of the Company.

It is five years since this International Committee, representing the press associations of all the countries of Europe, met in England as the guests of the British Section. Had the movement grown in strength and interest among us, as it has done on the Continent, the members of the British International Association of Journalists would have been proud to organize a Congress of the Press; but failing their ability to offer adequate hospitality to four hundred members of a Congress, they have tried to give a hearty reception to a dozen or so of the Bureau Central who gave themselves the trouble—in itself a compliment—to travel to London for their Easter deliberations.

The sittings, five in number, were, as usual, under the chairmanship of Herr Wilhelm Singer (Vienna), president of the united associations, and editor of the Neues Wiener Tagblatt; M. Victor Taunay (Paris) was general secretary; and the Council was completed by representatives from Germany, Sweden, Holland, Switzerland, and Belgium, Mr. D. A. Louis being the British member of the international board.

As the Tenth International Press Congress opens on July 24th next at Liège, Belgian affairs chiefly occupied the committee, and the allotment of places, the employment of time, and the distribution of expenses were carefully discussed. It is significant that the first International Press Congress was held at Antwerp in 1894, and after eleven years Belgium is again to gather the united associations in one of her most progressive cities, happily under the same president and secretary as on the initiatory occasion. This says a good deal both for the nation and the individuals concerned.

Among the achievements of these eleven years of its existence (through pressure of work two years passed without any Congress meeting) the international movement can boast of the arduous and important development of a professional tribunal for the settlement of international journalistic differences, which becomes a working force at once, under Herr Singer's jurisdiction. The carte d'identité, a useful introduction among stranger journalists and a guarantee of professional status, is beginning to be felt as a power, and will this year be required of all taking part in the Liège meeting.

Among the questions which were discussed at the recent sittings of the Committee, and which will occupy the attention of the Congress, may be cited the consideration of that absurd anachronism the press duel; of editorial responsibility with regard to confidential news; and the large problem of unremunerated or underpaid work. There are also several technical questions of postal and telegraphic reform in various stages of progress.

Our foreign colleagues were favoured throughout with fine weather, and saw London under pleasant springlike conditions. Among the items of their entertainment arranged by the Reception Committee of the British Section, special mention must be made of the visit to the Mansion House, where they were received by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs (always impressive figures to continental eyes and imaginations), and of the equally interesting exploration of the Guildhall under the able conduct of Mr. D. George Collins, C.C. This civic reception was arranged by the Board of Management of the City of London International Commercial Association and was a worthy prelude to the sittings in a Guildhall committee-room. A lunch followed at Stationers' Hall, where Sir George Truscott, on behalf of the Master of the Stationers' Company, unavoidably absent, gave the assembled visitors not only the heartiest of welcomes for the present, but also the promise of encouragement for the future should they ever see their way to holding a Congress in London. Among the excellent speakers at Stationers' Hall mention must be made of Dr. A. Osterreith (Berlin), the copyright expert, who showed himself acquainted with the dealings of Queen Elizabeth with the Worshipful Company, and surprised his hearers as much by his knowledge of the Company's history as by his command of eloquent English.

